BRITISH PERIODICALS.

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW (Con.)
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW (Whig.)
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW (Radical.)
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW (Free Church)
AND
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE (Tory.)

These foreign periodicals are regularly published by us in the same style as heretofore. Those who know them and who have long subscribed to them, need no reminder; those whom the civil war of the last few years has deprived of their once welcome supply of the best periodical literature, will be glad to have them again within their reach; and those who may never yet have met with them, will assuredly be well pleased to receive accredited reports of the progress of European science and literature.

TERMS FOR 1867.

For any one of the Reviews	$4 per annum
For any two of the Reviews	7 "
For any three of the Reviews	10 "
For all four of the Reviews	12 "

Who are both the agents and owners of this sheet.

☞ A man who wishes to be known in the country is certainly much in his own light who does not display his name in our advertising columns.

Our terms are precisely the same as those of other weekly newspapers in this city.

We have fewer advertisements than the secular papers, but what we have are read with that conscientious regard for everything that appears in a Christian paper which takes hold—in fact, too strong a hold—and holds the editor responsible for all the patent medicines, hardware, shoes, pork, flour, and even whisky, which may be set forth in its columns.

The terms of advertising are as follows:

THE HOME MONTHLY, New Orleans, for 1867.

The HOME MONTHLY will contain forty-eight pages of reading matter, printed upon fine paper and in clear type, and will, from time to time, be accompanied by elegant steel-plate engravings. The subscription price will remain $3 per annum, or $1.50 for six months, invariably in advance. In order to build up a still larger circulation, we have concluded to offer the following

Liberal Inducements to Agents.

To any person sending us three yearly subscriptions, with nine dollars, we will send the MONTHLY six months, or allow them, if they prefer, to retain One Dollar and Twenty-five Cents of the amount.

To any person sending us six subscriptions, with eighteen dollars, ($18,) we will send the MONTHLY one year, or allow them to retain Two Dollars and Fifty Cents of the amount.

On amounts for subscription less than nine dollars, agents will be allowed to retain ten per cent.

Ministers, it is hoped, will act as agents, not so much from pecuniary considerations as from a laudable desire to assist in building up a home literature worthy of a place among the families of the South and on the centre-tables of a Christian people.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING

STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as by means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

At Least Thirty per Cent, as Compared with any other Stove.

and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Rosster, generally knows as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. That meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus doubling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

For sale only by the undersigned.

In addition to the above, I also have a large and complete assortment of COOKING STOVES, comprising all of the leading Stoves of the day, equal to any offered in any other house in this city.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY, AT Greensboro, Alabama.

The next session of this Institution begins the first Wednesday in October, and is divided into two terms.

TUITION.

Academic Department, per term	$35 00
Preparatory Department, per term	30 00
Contingent fee, per term	2 50

A fee of $5 is charged those who attend the schools of Chem. and Nat. Phil.

Board, exclusive of washing and lights, $16 to $20 per month. By messing it can be obtained even cheaper than at these rates.

Sons of ministers of the Gospel in the regular work, and those studying for the ministry, are admitted free of tuition.

The whole expense for the scholastic year, including everything except books and clothing, will be $250, payable one-half at the opening of the session and the remainder on the 15th of February. If the student wishes to board in a private family it will be $280. This great reduction in the price of board and tuition will bring the advantages of the University within the reach of those whose limited means have heretofore placed the highest scholastic training beyond their reach, as well as secure the patronage of those who, on the score of economy, are sending their sons out of the State to be educated.

Especial attention is called to the fact that preparatory students are taught exclusively by the Faculty.

The Law School has been organized under the management of Hons. Judge Coleman and A. Benners.

NEW PATENT PIANOS.

RAVEN & BACON, (established in 1820.)

Warerooms, Nos. 611 and 616 Broadway,
NEW YORK.

Manufacturers of Piano Fortes, with the patent Combination Sounding-boards,

Patented August 11th, 1866.

This invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affects the sounding board, the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a pure liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. The sounding-board released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding-boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection, and its vibratory quality increased.

Our Pianos are first-class in every respect and purchasers will have not only our own guarantee as to their quality, but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument, obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

EAST ALABAMA MALE COLLEGE

AT AUBURN, ALA.

The Fall term of this Institution will open on the FIRST WEDNESDAY in SEPTEMBER next, and close on the 20th December. Besides the regular course of studies for graduation, large facilities are afforded for instruction in the Commercial and Agricultural branches. Separate schools for these branches, in connection with the College, were authorized at the last annual meeting of the Board of Trustees. A student not wishing to take either the regular or a partial literary course in the College, may confine himself to either of those Departments, and in a short time become qualified for business.

The Preparatory Department, with competent teachers, will be under the special supervision of the Faculty.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market has shown more animation since our last report, a fair amount of business having been done by wholesale dealers in dry goods, hardware, etc., and in the execution of country orders for groceries and other staple goods, and the movement in our leading staple being on a still more liberal scale, buyers for Great Britain and France having come forward with a good deal of spirit. In other prominent articles, however, there has been very little done, the sales of sugar having been confined to retail transactions, very little having been done in tobacco, and, notwithstanding more liberal receipts, operations in Western produce have been on a moderate scale, although holders have met the demand at lower prices.

We regret to notice a continuance of the previous showery weather, with a considerable fall of rain every day since our last report. The accounts from the interior are far more discouraging with regard to the cotton crop. The unfavorable news from country papers is even less discouraging than private correspondence. A cheerful letter is, in fact, exceptional. Nearly every planter and country merchant concurring in gloomy forebodings with regard to the ultimate result. Excessive rains, boll worms and army worms, and unsatisfactory picking are the subjects of general complaint, and many parties have already reduced their crop estimates.

The river remains about the same, being now twelve feet ten inches below high water mark.

Cotton.—Arrived since the 11th inst., of Louisiana and Mississippi, 4,407 bales; Mobile, 439; Texas, 31; together, 4,877 bales. Cleared since the 11th instant for New York, 2,288 bales.

We left the cotton market, at the time of our last report, ruling at 22½ to 23c. for Low Middling, 23¼ to 23½c. for Middling, and 24c. for Strict Middling, since which, under more liberal receipts and the marked decline at Liverpool and New York, prices have given way three-fourths of a cent, a part of which, however, was recovered on Tuesday. On Saturday, factors responding to the decline at New York and Liverpool by corresponding concessions, and the reduction in price enabling foreign buyers to come forward more freely, the demand, although not general, evinced a good deal of spirit, and 1,450 bales changed hands at a falling off of three-fourths of a cent from Friday's quotations, Low Middling ruling at 22 to 22¼c., and Middling at 22½ to 22¾c., buyers for Great Britain, France and the North participating in the business. On Monday the movement continued with increased animation, and although a further decline was reported at New York and Liverpool, yet, owing to the desire of shippers to execute their foreign orders without delay, many anticipating that rainy weather and the discouraging accounts received from the country would cause a favorable reaction, prices, which ruled at the opening at inside figures, closed decidedly stiffer, factors raising their pretensions as the demand was developed. The business, at the same time, was on a still more liberal scale, amounting to 2,150 bales. On Tuesday the market opened with an active demand, and although factors asked higher rates, and a decline in both foreign and domestic exchange combined with stiffer prices to check the movement, yet the sales summed up 2,300 bales, embracing nearly all offering, at an average improvement of one fourth of a cent.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 5,900 bales.

Referring to our remarks above, we now quote as follows:

Low	— to —

ELEVENTH SESSION.—TERMS REDUCED.

The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first-rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar, etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.

SPECIAL CAUTIONS.

Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health.

A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket-money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.

It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

Terms—Board and Tuition per session, $300.

Payments—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.

Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

From April 1 to close of June, 12 weeks	12 00

Incidental Fees—First session, $2 50; second session, $2; third session, $1 50. All payments in advance.

Indigent young men can have tuition free, but will be expected to pay the incidental fees.

Boarding can be had (including lodging, washing fires and lights) in the families of citizens at $5 per week.

Boys who have made some progress in Arithmetic, English Grammar and Geography can be received into the Preparatory Department. Terms, same as above named.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 22.—Commissioner Rollins has designated the store of William Marchant, 85 Front street, New York, as an export bonded warehouse for tobacco, under section seventy-three of the new tax law.

Surratt's counsel set forth amnesty in his defense, claiming safety for Surratt under that clause pardoning all who were not then under indictment for treason or felony in any court of the United States having competent jurisdiction. The counsel claim that Surratt, at that time, was under indictment at common law for murder, and not for treason or felony, and consequently entitled to the benefit of the proclamation. The prosecution demur and the argument is progressing.

A full cabinet present to day, except Browning.

Gen. Howard received a report of the Camilla riot, which he communicated to the Secretary of War. Subsequently Schofield had a prolonged interview with the President on the subject; details not transpired.

Butler yesterday filed papers in the House relative to the Kimberly suit, claiming that it was a breach of his privileges as a member of the House.

The special plea in the Surratt case was argued all day and will be resumed to-morrow.

Rollins was before the Committee on Retrenchment to day, explaining the hitch in the supervisorship.

OWEN'S SOUND, Canada, Sept. 22.—John Robinson, formerly of New Orleans, and four others, started for Cooper's Island ten days ago. One of the party was found dead on White Cloud Island. The fate of the others is unknown.

NEW YORK, Sept. 22.—The aldermen have voted a reception to Gen. McClellan, on the Governor's room, on his arrival.

COLUMBIA, S. C., Sept. 22.—The Senate to-day suspended for six months Senator Leslie, white, for alleged contempt. Leslie is Republican, but votes with the Democrats on questions of color.

ATLANTA, Sept. 22.—The House passed a bill, by 112 to 30, appointing the first Tuesday in November for the Congressional election.

GEORGIA

AUGUSTA, Ga., Sept. 21.—A fearful riot occurred at Camilla, the county seat of Mitchell county, Georgia, last Saturday. The following is the statement of the sheriff of Mitchell county, sworn to by himself and other prominent citizens It is addressed to the members of the Legislature: "On Saturday, 19th instant, it was made known to the citizens of Camilla that Jno. Murphy, of Albany, Georgia, had issued a circular, and secretly circulated some among colored men of this county, ordering them to bring their arms with them to a political meeting advertised for that day at this place; the information was corroborated by statements made by Robt. Cochran, sr.; Thos. Jones, and others, who came from the road in the direction of Albany, stating that armed negroes were assembling in large numbers at China Grove Church, waiting for the delegation from Albany, headed by said Murphy, and Pearce, candidate for Congress, who were to be the speakers for the occasion. At the request of the citizens, M. J. Poore, sheriff, with committee of six other citizens, went out to meet said procession, and to protest against armed negroes being marched in procession in our town, and to state to them distinctly that if they would put down their arms no objection would be made to their entering town and holding their political meeting. The sheriff delivered this message to Murphy and Pearce, leaders of the procession, and they replied that they had nothing to do with those armed men, the guns belonged to them, and they were in the habit of carrying them wherever they went. The sheriff replied that as a peace officer it was his duty under the law to forbid the assemblage of armed men at political meetings, and assured them that if they entered town with their music and banners, followed by armed men as they then were, that there would be a breach of the peace, and he would not be responsible for consequences.—Shortly afterward the column moved in town in regular order, headed by Pearce, candidate for Congress, and one Putney, white, in a buggy, armed with a double-barrel shot gun, a Spencer rifle and two pistols, with a quantity of ammunition, as was afterward ascertained; next a four-horse wagon containing a band and a number of armed negroes; next followed the column of negro men on foot, between three and four hundred, attended by about twenty mounted outsiders; at least one-half, if not two thirds, were armed with guns, and most of them with pistols; music playing, and the crowd noisy and threatening in their conduct; Murphy and one Philip Joiner, negro, in a buggy in the rear. As the head of the column approached the square one of our citizens, Jas. Johns, who was intoxicated, approached within a few feet of the column and ordered the music to stop, which was not obeyed. The column moved on, and when about twenty steps from Johns his gun was fired, whether intentionally or unintentionally is not known, but it was pointed in a different direction, and the contents struck the ground about twelve feet from him. The column thereupon fired a volley, some of the shots at Johns, but most of them in the direction of Maples' store, thirty or forty steps from the column, at which place there were a number of our citizens. Immediately about twenty of our citizens sprang to their arms and fired into the column, by which two negroes were killed and a number, unknown, wounded. The negroes immediately broke to a thick cluster of timber one hundred yards north of the court house. At this point there was an attempt made by Pearce to rally his routed forces. Our citizens, to the number of about thirty, part of them mounted, immediately made a charge and completely routed the whole force; Pearce fleeing through the woods and fields, and Murphy and Phil. Joiner escaping in a buggy up the road toward Albany. Seven negroes were killed. From the best information we have been able to procure, between thirty and forty were wounded, all of whom have been properly cared for."

It is a source of deep regret that the calamitous consequences of this affair fell exclusively upon the poor deluded negroes, led on by wicked white men, Murphy, Pearce and Putney, who made good their escape in the hour of danger with but little injury to themselves. This sad result is to be attributed more to the sharpness and shrewdness of those gallant leaders in effecting their escape than to want of intention on the part of our people. We hereby disavow any purpose or intent on the part of ourselves or our citizens to violate the law or peace of the State in what was done. We were willing, and so expressed ourselves to these leaders, for them to hold their political meeting at the court house in our town if the negroes were disarmed, but we did think and still think that it was our duty to obey orders of the sheriff as a civil officer of this State, in breaking up this unlawful assemblage. We felt that as their numbers vastly exceeded that of our citizens present, that if this meeting had taken place, that the lives of our wives and children would be at the mercy of an infuriated mob.

While the consequences are to be regretted, and we do not boast of what was done by our people, we feel that they have but discharged a painful duty imposed upon them by wicked and corrupt white men, now engaged in leading astray into acts of lawlessness the colored people of our country. We appeal to the law-making powers of Georgia, and the lawful authorities of the United States government to check the progress of these strolling criminals that are prowling about the homes and disturbing the peace and quiet of our war stricken people. The foregoing statements from military and civil authorities give full particulars of the riot. The Governor addressed a letter to the Legislature, recommending that the President be petitioned for troops. The matter is being considered to-day.

ATLANTA, Sept. 22.—The following report is from Judge Vason and Mr Johnson, who were requested by Maj. Gen. Howard, of the Freedmen's Bureau, to investigate the Camilla affair:

"To the Committee of the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Georgia:

"We left Camilla this day at noon; all was quiet, and no apprehension was felt of further trouble. The action of the citizens was under the orders of the sheriff. They acted as his posse in the whole affair. The negroes in the country are all quiet. No bad feeling exists between them and the whites growing out of the affair. But few negroes were present except those in the procession. No necessity exists for any additional force to protect white or black. The wounded negroes are well cared for, and have the sympathy of the whites.

"The whole difficulty originated in the right claimed by Murphy, Pearce and Putney to carry negroes into a political meeting with arms. The sheriff disputed the right, and insisted that under the proclamation of the Governor and the law, it was his duty as a civil officer to prevent it. No excitement exists in Albany.

"D. A. VASON.
"T. H. JOHNSON."

BOSTON, Sept. 18.—Hon. John Quincy Adams accepts the Democratic nomination for Governor.

Kentucky Conference of the M. E. Church South.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Sept. 16, 1868.

The Kentucky Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South commenced its forty-eighth annual session in the Hall of the House of Representatives, in the city of Frankfort, Kentucky, on the 9th inst., Bishop Pierce presiding. Rev. T. F. Vanmeter, secretary.

ALL ALIVE.

Not a single death has occurred among the ministers composing this Conference during the past year. It is rare that this record can be made, rarer yet that no case of illness or declining health is reported to require a previously effective man to be left without appointment or placed on the supernumerary or superannuated list. All, save a few who have been for years aged, and infirm or invalid, are ready to enter upon another year of effective labor.

THE ATTENDANCE.

The attendance of ministers is unusually large. Of the effective ministers all but one are present, and several of the aged superannuates are here, their venerable persons and gray hair reminding us of the times that are past, and of the host with whom they were associated in young manhood, that 'have crossed the flood,' and are with the saints.

There are also present a number of local preachers, men who have no pastoral charge or connection with the Conference, but serve the church as occasion requires in their respective neighborhoods, without fee or reward. Very many valuable men of this kind there are in Kentucky.

There are also present, as members of the Conference, a score or more of lay delegates.

Each presiding elder's district, of which there are seven in the Conference, is entitled to four delegates, elected from among the laity, one of whom may be a local preacher. This new feature of Southern Methodism seems to be generally regarded with favor. The lay delegation is composed of solid, substantial men, farmers, mechanics, lawyers, doctors, merchants, etc. They are generally quiet working men, and seem disinclined to participate in Conference discussions, though occasionally one is heard speaking with force and effect.

There are also present numerous lay visitors, men who feel an interest in Conference deliberations, and come up to spend a week or a few days on this occasion of annual interest in the church. Not a few of the visitors are ladies. Among those are a number of wives of ministers, who, after the cares and privations of a conference year, come with their husbands to enjoy the annual convocation—its social, ecclesiastical and spiritual interests.

Of clerical visitors from other Conferences there have been quite a number present. From the Louisville Conference Revs. J. H. Linn, W. H. Anderson, J. A. Henderson, A. H. Redford, J. F. Redford, D. S. Campbell, S. W. Speer, R. Deering, J. S. Malone, D Morton and J. W. Cunningham. From the Tennessee Conference Rev. R. A. Young, D. D., who came to attend to the interests of the Board of Domestic Missions, in the absence of Dr. McFerrin, its secretary. From the Georgia Conference we have Rev. L. Pierce, D. D., the father of Bishop Pierce. Dr. Pierce is eighty-four years old, and has been sixty-four years a minister of the Gospel, having joined the South Carolina Conference in Charleston, in 1804. He is a slender man, with white hair, erect form, unimpaired mind, and a clear, ringing voice, that may be heard as far and distinctly as that of the most perfect speaker in young manhood or mature years. There is such a strong resemblance between the bishop and his father, as preachers, that a person while hearing one is continually reminded of the other. The venerable preacher is now on his first visit to Kentucky. He has been somewhat an invalid during this visit to Frankfort, but has preached twice, to the delight of large audiences.

BUSINESS OF THE CONFERENCE.

The business of the Conference has been conducted with dispatch and harmony. Great good feeling has prevailed throughout the session. Pending the consideration of questions and reports introduced, spicy debates have occurred, which have added interest to the proceedings, alike to visitors and members.

A CLEAR RECORD.

The names of all the ministers were called, and their character examined and passed. No accusation affecting the ministerial character of any one was heard of.

LOCATED.

Only one who has retired from the Conference by location, viz: J. T. S. Smith, who was granted a location at his own request.

ADMITTED ON TRIAL.

The following has been received into the Conference on trial: D. G. B. Demaree.

READMITTED.

The following, who were formerly members of the Conference, but have for some time sustained a local relation, were readmitted to the Conference: E. F. Buckner and Morris Evans.

TRANSFERS.

The following have been received by transfer from other Conferences to the Kentucky Conference: J. W. Cunningham, from the Louisville Conference; G. L. Staley, from the Tennessee Conference; D. P. Simpson, from the North Carolina Conference; J. H. Bruner, from the Holston Conference.

The following were transferred to other Conferences:

E. P. Buckner, to West Virginia Conference; R. A. Holland, Baltimore Conference, and stationed at Trinity Church; R. Hargreve, transferred to Tennessee Conference; P. L. Henderson to Louisville Conference.

CLOSE OF SESSION.

The session closed on Tuesday night. Below is the list of appointments for the ensuing year:

Piggott; Pulaski Mission, to be supplied; Booneville and Proctor Mission, R. A. Holden.—Correspondence of the Cincinnati Enquirer.

MINISTERING SPIRITS.

Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?—HEB. i, 14.

Dr. Doddridge had once a remarkable dream, in which he saw spread out before him a series of pictures, in which he recognized his own past history. Many things which had before perplexed and surprised him were now made clear by the view he had of the ministering angels and their thousand offices of love to him; now breathing on his lips, when an infant, as the little life seemed just ebbing out; now bearing him up in their arms to break a dangerous fall, which would otherwise have cost him his life. Whatever origin the dream may have had, it dwelt on his mind with peculiar sweetness ever afterward, and was no doubt part of God's plan for development and growth in grace. Ah, what a comforting assurance, in times of trouble and danger, is the thought that "the angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them!"

ONIONS AND EPIDEMICS.—A correspondent of the Scientific American writes that paper: "In the spring of 1849 I was in charge of one hundred men on shipboard, with the cholera among the men. We had onions, which a number of the men ate freely. Those who did so were soon attacked, and nearly all died. As soon as I made this discovery their use was forbidden. After mature reflection I came to the conclusion that onions should never be eaten during the prevalence of epidemics, for the reason that they absorb the virus and communicate the disease, and that the proper use for them is sliced and placed in the sick-room, and replaced with fresh ones every few hours. It is a well established fact that onions will extract the poison of snakes; this I personally know. Some kinds of mud will do the same. After maintaining the foregoing opinion for eighteen years, I have found the following well attested: Onions placed in the room where there is small-pox will blister, and decomposo with great rapidity; not only so, but will prevent the spread of the disease. I think as a disinfectant they have no equal, when properly used; but keep them out of the stomach."

LOST TIME.—Let any man pass an evening in vacant idleness, or even in reading some silly tale, and compare the state of his mind when he goes to sleep, or gets up next morning, with its state some other day, when he has spent a few hours in going through the proofs, by facts and reasoning, of some of the great doctrines in natural science, learning truths wholly new to him, and satisfying himself, by careful examination, of the grounds on which known truths rest, so as to be not only acquainted with the doctrines themselves, but able to show why he believes them, and to prove before others that they are true, and he will find great difference between looking back upon time unprofitably wasted and time spent in self-improvement. He will feel, in one case, listless and dissatisfied; in the other case he will enjoy a proud consciousness of having, by his own exertions, become a wiser, and therefore a more exalted nature.—Brougham.

MARRIAGE IN DIFFERENT WALKS OF LIFE.—It is announced that in England, whilst the poor marry, the well-to-do avoid marriage to such an extent that two women in every five of the whole number of English women are unmarried, and the total of those unmarried amounts to the great number of 1,527,000. In London 41 per cent. of the women of marriageable age are spinsters, and in five English counties there are 45 per cent.

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

FRIDAY, Sept. 18, 1868.

CIVIL RIGHTS BILL.

The act "to protect all persons in their civil and public rights" was read by the secretary. The bill was adopted by sections and passed without amendments or debate, and now only requires the signature of the Governor to become a law. It reads as follows:

By R. H. Isabelle, of Orleans:

"An act to protect all persons in their civil and public rights.

"SEC. 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana, in General Assembly convened, That all persons, without regard to race, color or previous condition, shall enjoy equal rights and privileges in their traveling and being entertained upon any conveyance of a public character, or place of public resort, or any place of business where a license is required, in this State.

"SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons commanding any steam or sailing vessel or water craft, plying in this State, to make any distinction on board of any of the above mentioned vessels, to refuse accommodation on account of race or color.

"SEC. 3. Be it further enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons conducting or controlling any railroad company, stage line, or vehicles, to make any distinction, or refuse accommodation to any person or persons on account of race or color.

"SEC. 4. Be it further enacted, etc., That any person or persons violating the provisions of this act, on conviction thereof, shall be fined not less than one hundred ($100) dollars, and not exceeding five hundred ($500) dollars, recoverable before any competent tribunal in this State, or imprisoned not less than three (3) months, and not exceeding one (1) year.

"SEC. 5. Be it further enacted, etc., That all acts, parts of acts, and ordinances in force in this State, contrary to the provisions of this act, be and the same are hereby repealed and of non effect.

"SEC. 6. Be it further enacted, etc., That this act shall go into effect from and after its passage."

This bill was reported back to the Senate by the Judiciary Committee by a tie vote favorable and unfavorable.

Mr. Campbell (Rad.) called for the reading of the first section, and then moved its adoption.

Mr. Pollard (colored) seconded the motion.

Mr. Blackman called for the ayes and nays.

The following is the vote: Yeas—Messrs. Campbell, Darrell, Francois, (colored,) Kelso, (colored,) Pollard, (colored,) Lewis, Lynch, Monnettee, (colored,) Packard, Piachback, (colored,) Pollard, (colored,) Ray, Whitney, Wilcox and Williams—15.

Nays—Messrs. Bacon, Beares, (Rep.,) Blackman, Braughn, Day, Egan, Foute and Jewell, F. L.—8.

A close observer of faces would have noticed that the Senators of all classes were voting upon no ordinary subject. Those of the Democrats were flushed with indignation, and their eyes brightened occasionally with angry flashes; those of the Radicals bore a similar resemblance, but from a different cause, known only to themselves. Those of more moderate views became by turns red and pale—in some cases pale even to ghastliness. The features of one were almost purple during the whole time of the passage of the bill, and when he raised his eyes they had a singularly bright and lurid glow. The face of another (a Radical) appeared swollen, and was covered with large red blotches. Those of the colored members were the most composed of any, and beyond the fact that Mr. Pollard seconded every motion of Mr. Campbell in a firm voice, and all voted in a similar manner, with a brightening eye, nothing further could be observed.

The President (Mr. Dunn) acted precisely as on any other occasion. Once or twice he rose from his chair and walked to and fro upon the platform. But this he often does on the reading or action of any ordinary bill.

When the bill finally passed there was a loud murmur from and swaying of the masses in the closely packed lobbies, but no sign of any trouble whatever. Four-fifths, at least, of those there were colored. The murmuring and motion in the lobbies continuing, the President used his gavel and called for order, which he instantly obtained.

DON'T open your purse too hastily or too wide—or your mouth either.

CHRISTIAN UNION.

Jesus and his church are one:
Blessed, holy union!
Strangely, mystically wed;
They the members, he the Head.

How, then, should each Christian strive
Lovingly to act and live,
So that neither deed nor word
Grieve his dear and coming Lord!

Uniformity, we know,
Is not found in aught below;
Union should, however, prove
To the world Christ's law of love:

'Twas for this the Saviour pray'd,
Ere to cruel death betray'd;
This he gave us as the sign:
Men should own his truth divine:

Dearest Lord, thy people teach
Love and union each with each;
That no strivings vex their breast,
But the strife to serve thee best.

Whatsoever name they bear,
Shepherded beneath whose care,
Gather'd in whatever fold,
In what lesser name enroll'd;

If, blest Lord, they love but thee,
Each shall be most dear to me;
Nor shall differing thoughts impart
Strangeness to my hand or heart.

Ah! from thee we live too far—
Therefore so apart we are;
Sad confession! this is why
Christians feel unbrotherly.

Draw us nearer, every one,
Lord of love and union;
Nearer to thyself—then we
Nearer each to each shall be.

LETTERS FROM CALIFORNIA.

NUMBER FOUR.

Mr. Editor: Knowing that my farmer friends in the South are at present especially interested in this country, and being myself especially interested in them, I shall devote another letter to details pertaining to their particular calling.

The cost of living is a matter of importance. What of that? I kept house awhile in San Francisco, and am now doing the same in Stockton, living entirely from the market and grocery stores. In San Francisco house-rent is a heavy item of expense. Good houses, with from five to ten rooms, conveniently situated, can be rented at from $25 to $75 per month. A great many single persons and small families, and those who expect to remain in the city but a short time, rent rooms—one, two or three—ready furnished, and board at a restaurant, or keep house in their rooms. Rooms for this purpose can be had, all over the city, at from $10 to $15 a room. Table expenses, both in San Francisco and Stockton, are less than anywhere in Alabama. The very best flour is $8 a barrel, hams and lard the same as in Alabama, and vegetables very cheap. Fuel is cheaper than one would suppose—$10 a cord for wood, sawed as small as you please and brought to your door. Servants' hire is from $10 to $40 per month, according to the quality of the servant—the lowest price being for a Chinese boy, and the highest for an experienced cook and house servant. But Californians do not deal much in servants, and immigrants will soon learn the same lesson. I believe washing and ironing—in which business the Chinese have a monopoly, and do it beautifully—is the dearest thing I have found in California—from $1 50 to $3 per dozen. By the use of washing fluids, machines and patent wringers it is easy to save this expense, which California ladies do. In Stockton house-rent is much cheaper than in San Francisco, but other expenses are much the same.—Here good residences, with yard and garden, can be had for from $12 to $25 per month. But what of general merchandise expenses? Just a little cheaper, taken all in all, than in Alabama—only you must bear in mind that the currency here is gold and silver.

Let the farmer remember, however, that these expenses to the city resident are no expense, but profit, to him. What will be the cost of living to him in the country? I may reply: after the first year almost nothing. He raises everything, and in the most extreme abundance, with comparatively little labor—of what we have already spoken. Horses, hogs and cows cost almost nothing to keep and fatten. Such elegant blue milk and beautiful white butter as I used to eat in Alabama are unknown here. I have seen clover growing two feet high by the fence along the roadside, which becomes cured hay when the dry season sets in, and remains good all the summer. As soon as the rainy season begins the fresh green grasses come, and remain all winter. Of course the cows keep fat, and give milk quite naturally and kindly. Such beets and turnips and cabbages, such Irish potatoes, carrots, tomatoes, etc., to say nothing of the wonderful quantity of fruit, as I have seen here, growing in the natural soil. I never saw produced by the best gardeners in Alabama.

A gentleman took me through his garden, in which were Irish potatoes yielding a great quantity, corn growing as thick as millet, and various other vegetables well matured, and assured me that some of them had been worked but once, and the potatoes not at all, since they were planted. This peculiar and wonderful dry season obviates the necessity for frequent workings. But to all these vegetables, instead of work, you must give water. "Ah!" say my Alabama friends, "that is worse still." But the Californian does everything by machinery, and renders it easy. He puts down his bored well, from fifty to one hundred feet deep, in the highest spot of his garden, fixes his pump, erects his wind mill, opens little trenches, and the work is done. Every evening before sunset, while the pleasant sea breeze is coming in, he unchains his wind mill, and it waters all his yard and garden, while he looks after his stock.—The cost of these wells and mills I judge to be quite moderate, from the fact that they are on every lot—the poor as well as the rich have them—and some as many as three and four on a few acres. The supply of water is inexhaustible. Stockton is called the City of Wind Mills.

Another item of interest to the farmer is the cost of building and fencing. At this place, and I suppose at any wharf on the river, lumber is $15 a thousand, and shingles $5 a thousand. Houses are built in the new way, using very little heavy lumber, and with half the amount of carpenter work. All kinds of building is cheaper than in Alabama, as far as I am able to judge, and I have taken pains to find out.

As to fencing: My farmer friends must remember that in this valley the lands are level, and all suitable for cultivation. When a man purchases a tract he incloses it all in one fence, and has probably but one cross fence. As hogs are not allowed to run at large, fences are only made to keep off the cattle, and these are not jumpers, having no need to steal in order to get a good living. In the country, the fences I have seen were made of but three rails, the lower one placed one and a half or two feet from the ground. The rails are thick boards or slabs nailed to posts. In some districts fences are not used, as every farmer takes care of his own stock.

Fuel sometimes has to be hauled ten miles, but it is done in the summer, when the roads are hard, and, as they are level, immense loads are put on. Labor is worth from $2 to $3 a day, which seems very high. But think a moment. You pay a negro, in Alabama, fifty cents a day to plow with one mule, running one furrow. In California your hired man drives from four to six mules or horses, running as many furrows, or drawing a machine which harrows, sows and covers the seed all at once, or he labors at a machine which threshes and sacks one thousand bushels of wheat per day. Of course you can pay him well, and be well paid yourself. I have heard of nothing in California that is not done by machinery, and, what is more, these people have either invented their own machines or improved old ones.—Of all things, however, nothing has so interested me as the fine teams constantly passing my door. From ten to twenty mules, horses or oxen in one team, drawing three or four large wagons in a train, all conducted by one driver! Now how much wheat suppose you one of these trains carries to market? Remember that the country is level and the roads hard.—From forty to seventy thousand pounds! It is a daily occurrence at the Stockton wharf, for one large wagon to unload from sixteen to twenty-four thousand lbs. Think of three hundred bushels of wheat on one wagon! These are cheap California railroads.—Mules and horses used on farms are very cheap, bringing from $40 to $100 for the best native stock.

With such a soil, such a climate, and such facilities for agriculture, you can begin to understand how the farmers of California, though they constitute only about one-fifth of her population, can feed the entire population, with its constant increase by immigration, and then ship a surplus of ten millions of bushels, at rates cheap enough to compete with the New York and European markets, and supply, to a large extent, China, Chile, Australia, New Zealand, Central America, New York and England.

CONFERENCE LIFE INSURANCE.

IS IT RIGHT?—BEST PLAN.—OBJECTIONS.

Mr. Editor: The first question asked by a number of earnest, thinking men, when you present to an ecclesiastical body a modus operandi by which to secure a sum of money for any object, is: "Is it right?" Of Conference life assurance I very unhesitatingly say, it is. And not only right, but of such importance as to demand some very serious thinking, involving, as it does, the weal of those whom God has separated from the enriching pursuits of life, in order that they may go forth, unentangled with the cares of life, to preach his Gospel to a perishing world. Indeed, the time seems to me to have come when something of this sort must be done. Ministers must cease preaching, or bring, by neglecting the necessary provision for their families, that most unenviable curse upon themselves of being "worse than an infidel."

In order to understand this subject still further—to know whether it is right or not—it is simply necessary to ask whether or not there is something else answering to the end for which this is proposed. I answer, nothing.

1. Preachers' Aid Society.—This proposes to help them live, but not to take care of their families when they are dead. It could afford no greater help than by paying the fees of ministers in the proposed society as they became due.

2. The Conference Fund.—This is contingent on the crops, the state of religion, the collecting tact of the preacher, and the illiberality of the selfish nature to which you appeal. It does not mete out half a competency to its beneficiaries, and there is actual suffering among the women and children of deceased ministers on that account.

3. Endowment Societies.—These are supported by contributions, and as there is little or no return to the contributors, men only give to such enterprises "as they are moved by the Holy Ghost." Hence these cannot be worked successfully. Who is to keep up the endowment fund? All the objections above alleged are applicable here.

4. All other plans, not making it the interest of the donors to support them, are a mere farce, as observation has repeatedly demonstrated.

The primary design of life insurance companies was to benefit the assured, without enriching the stockholders.

Among the Parliamentary acts of England is one enacted in the reign of Queen Anne, from the preamble of which I make the following quotation: "It will be of singular use and relief to many families by providing for great numbers of widows and orphans who might probably be otherwise left wholly destitute of a maintainance by the death of those on whom they depend." This is a part of the charter of the oldest life insurance company in the world. It was organized A. D. 1706, and called the Perpetual Assurance Office. In this the fees were £5 per annum, and the maximum two thousand members. The £10,000 was annually divided among the nominees of the deceased members. The charter of this company further declared the society to have been gotten up "in order to provide for their wives, children and other relations, after a more easy, certain and advantageous method than any that hath hitherto been thought of;" and its success soon showed the importance of running the enterprise further than "hath hitherto been thought of," and it was followed up by the organization of the Royal Exchange Assurance Company, A. D. 1720, and this by the Equitable Society in 1762. Up to 1762 the object had been one of charity, but the Equitable Society made it one of profit by introducing the groundwork of the present system—mortality tables and proportionate fees. The principles of the Equitable are much preferable to the Perpetual, if we were able to run it. There is much more gain by it, i. e., to the stockholders, but no more to the assured. The Equitable took the benefits from the poor, and I now propose to give it back to them so improved as that the rich will admire it. "Is it right?" God has put his church in charge of the interests of his cause, that we may manage the affairs thereof discreetly. Do we clear our skirts of this high responsibility as long as we have one nerve unstrained? We cannot manage the church without means. This is God's plan. His plans are practical and expedient. He wills that we work all expedients when practical, and hence we argue that this is the will of the Lord, for it is a practical expedient. It is right.

Whether or not the plan proposed is the best plan remains to be seen. We say nothing of its legality. The Discipline gives to each Conference its own way about raising funds.

Having Class A, Class B, etc., the maximum in each to be $5,000, or A $1,000, B $2,000, etc., up to $5,000 in Class E, the expenses will be counted up from the "Carlisle table of mortality" at one per cent., or one death every year out of one hundred persons assured. Thus, 1,000, less 10, yearly: $1 x 10 = 10, $10 x ¼ = 2 50, and 10 = $12 50 per annum on each $1,000 assured. On 5,000, $62 50 per annum will cover the expenses, or nearly so.

Any man can afford $62 50 per annum to secure the certainty of leaving his wife and children in possession of $5,000 when he is dead. Half of us pay that much for tobacco, cigars, etc. The payments can be made, and made easily. Very respectfully,

J. A. Parker.

Milton, September 8, 1868.

What Luther Loved.—Luther, when studying, always had his dog lying at his feet—a dog he had brought from Wartburg, and of which he was very fond. An ivory crucifix stood on the table before him. He worked at his desk for days together, without going out; but when fatigued, and the ideas began to stagnate, he took his guitar with him to the porch, and there executed some musical fantasy, (for he was a skillful musician,) when the ideas would flow upon him as fresh as flowers after a summer's rain. Music was his invariable solace at such times. Indeed, Luther did not hesitate to say that, after theology, music was the first of arts. "Music," said he, "is the art of the prophets; it is the only other art which, like theology, can calm the agitation of the soul, and put the devil to flight." Next to music, if not before it, Luther loved children and flowers. That great, gnarled man had a heart tender as a woman's.

BROOKHAVEN DIST. MEETING.

Mr. Editor: The district meeting of Brookhaven district, Mississippi Conference, was held August 27th, 28th and 29th, at Crystal Springs. No bishop being present, and in the absence of the presiding elder, who was sick, Rev. B. Jones was chosen president. Rev. J. W. McNeil was appointed secretary.

The following committees were appointed: 1. Finance. 2. State of the Church. 3. Education. 4. Religious Interest of the Colored People. 5. Sunday Schools. 6. Camp Meetings. Two plans on finance were submitted—one for the benefit of widows and orphans of deceased preachers, the other to insure a competency for the ministry in the regular work. As both these plans are of great importance to the church at this time, and as you have published the former, which is the same adopted at the Jackson district meeting, presented by J. C. Kitrell, I ask of you to publish the other also, hoping that, even if neither of them are adopted, they may be at least suggestive of some plan or plans which may meet the objects in view.

The following is the plan and a brief synopsis of the resolutions recommended by the various committees and adopted by the meeting:

The following plan of finance was adopted by the Brookhaven district meeting, to be reported to the ensuing session of the Mississippi Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South:

Whereas, The Mississippi Conference, at its last session, requested the several district meetings, to be held within its bounds, to draft a financial plan to be reported to the next session of said Conference; and

Whereas, The object contemplated by said Conference is the equitable administration of the law of the church, as contained in our excellent Book of Discipline, pp. 248-9, which makes it the duty of the boards of stewards of the stations, circuits and missions respectively to estimate the salaries of those appointed to labor among them; provided that said boards of stewards shall feel themselves bound to afford them a competent support; therefore

Resolved, That the stewardship of the church be and they are hereby advised that a competency implies not only the bread and meat question, or how much is necessary to sustain animal life, but also the means of keeping up a suitable outfit for the work and social positions to which they—the preachers and their families—are divinely appointed, and of educating their children up to the standard of respectability and usefulness in the church and in the world.

Resolved, That the membership of the church be and they are hereby advised that, in voluntarily becoming such, they assumed all the moral obligations of that relation, and that to ignore them afterwards is to forfeit their rights to church privileges.

Resolved, That it shall be the duty of the boards of stewards, respectively, not only to estimate the sums necessary to defray expenses, but also obtain a list of the names of the entire membership within their respective divisions of the work, and assess each one according to his or her known ability to meet the demand; and subsequently to present said assessment for acceptance, modification or rejection, as the case may be, requiring, however, of those, if any, who ignore the obligation, their reason or reasons for so doing.

Resolved, That the stewards shall further be required to collect one-fourth of the amount stipulated, and pay over the same to the respective claimants at the beginning of each quarter, or as soon there-after as practicable, so that they may go about their work without embarrassment, or having to cast about for the means of a bare subsistence.

Resolved, That delinquency on the part of the stewards, or refusal on the part of the membership, without good and sufficient reasons, shall be considered ground of censure, no man having a right to ignore moral obligation without forfeiture.

Resolved, That in the event the above plan is not carried into effect within a reasonable time after the preachers reach their respective stations, they shall be at liberty to and justifiable in devoting whatever proportion of their time may be requisite to supply the church's lack of service toward them.

Respectfully submitted.

B. B. Whittington.
H. F. Johnson.

The Committee on Education offered a resolution, recommending that we both patronize and give of our means to free Whitworth College from debt and supply it with useful apparatus.

Revs. B. Jones and H. F. Johnson were appointed a committee to collect information, by correspondence and otherwise, in reference to establishing an agricultural and horticultural school within the bounds of this district.

Revs. L. R. Redding, B. Jones and H. F. Johnson were appointed a committee to receive donations, collections, etc., and to examine applicants as to their call to the ministry, and to make such appropriations to the education of young men for the ministry as they may judge proper.

Revs. A. B. Nicholson and G. F. Thomson were appointed agents to collect money for the ministerial fund in this district.

The Committee on the State of the Church presented a resolution requesting that the ministry and lay members of this district meeting will at once gird on their armor, make proof of our ministry, enter zealously upon the work of God, and pray for a mighty outpouring of the Spirit, and a revival of God's work and word throughout this district.

From the report on Sunday Schools: It was resolved that, in order to awaken a deeper feeling in this interest of the church, each preacher be requested to organize Sabbath schools at each of his appointments, and to preach at least once every six months upon the importance of Sunday schools and the religious training of children.

It was resolved that the plan of collecting twenty-five cents from each member for the purpose of paying for the publication of the Conference minutes be adopted.

Hazlehurst was appointed as the place to hold a conference for the colored people this year.

It was resolved that this district meeting unanimously request that there be no change in the time of holding the Mississippi Conference.

It was agreed upon that our next district meeting be held at the time and place appointed by the presiding elder of the district.

Earnest Preaching.—I have been reading an article on the Eloquence of the Pulpit, in Montauban Revue Theologique, written by Adolphe Monod. It is one of the best things I ever read on the subject. He makes elocution to depend on the inward conception and feeling. The work must begin from within.

The great reason why we have so little good preaching is that we have so little piety. To be eloquent one must be earnest; he must not only act as if he were in earnest, or try to be in earnest, but be in earnest, or he cannot be effective.

We have loud and vehement, we have smooth and graceful, we have splendid and elaborate preaching, but very little that is earnest. One man who so feels for the souls of his hearers as to be ready to weep over them, will assuredly make himself felt. This is what makes him effective—he really feels what he says. This made Cookman eloquent. This especially was the charm of Summerfield, above all men I ever heard. We must aim, therefore, at high degrees of warmth in our religious exercises, if we would make an impression upon the public mind. Oh! that the preachers we have were inspired with greater zeal! Without any increase of numbers, the very men we now have, if actuated with burning zeal for God, might work a mighty reformation in our country.—J. W. Alexander.

To hear, to understand and to bring forth fruit, are the three grand evidences of a genuine believer.—Dr. A. Clarke.

MEEKNESS.

When, for some little insult given,
My angry passions rise,
I'll think how Jesus came from heaven
And bore his injuries.

He was insulted every day,
Though all his words were kind;
But nothing men could do or say
Disturbed his heavenly mind.

Not all the wicked scoffs he heard
Against the truths he taught,
Excited one reviling word,
Or one revengeful thought.

And when upon the cross he bled,
With all his foes in view,
"Father, forgive them," Jesus said,
"They know not what they do."

Dear Saviour, may I learn of thee
My temper to amend;
But speak that pardoning word for me
Whenever I offend.

MY GUIDE.

I know not the way I am going,
But well do I know my Guide!
With a childlike trust do I give my hand
To the mighty Friend by my side;
And she only thing that I say to him,
As he takes it, is—"Hold it fast;
Suffer me not to lose the way,
And lead me home at last."

As when some helpless wanderer,
Alone in some unknown land,
Tells the guide his destined place of rest,
And leaves all else in his hand;
'Tis home, 'tis home that I wish to reach,
He who guides me may choose the way,
And little I care what path I take,
When nearer home each day.

WOODVILLE FEMALE SEMINARY.

NATCHEZ, Miss., Aug. 12, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: I believe it has grown into a custom, fixed as law, for committees appointed by Conference to attend examinations in the institutions of learning, in any way connected with the church, to report to the public through one of the journals, and I abide by the custom.

It was made my duty to attend the examination of the Woodville Seminary, at Woodville, Wilkinson county, Mississippi. This institution has been for several years under the control of Rev. W. T. J. Sullivan—has struggled and has lived. The design of building up an educational establishment in that retired and healthful village is not new to its cultivated and hospitable people. More than thirty years ago a school for female education, intended to take rank with any in the land, was inaugurated, and did a noble work. With many it was paroxysmal, and the few who steadily determined to sustain it for a time gave way.

Fortunately the great moving spirit of the enterprise has been spared beyond his four score years, and his princely Christian generosity has never abandoned the long-cherished desire to build and sustain a school worthy of the patronage of the public. Such is the Woodville Seminary.

The public quickly estimate the worth of a school by the general appearance of the pupils, and the mutual bearing of teachers and pupils. Schools are prepared for examination, and on extraordinary occasions the best appearances are expected. But art finds itself baffled in an attempt to reverse the order of a year's discipline by the industrious manipulations of a day. There will be constraint—a something unnatural. One feature of the exhibition struck me with great force—the pupils seemed at home and had some one to care for them. Whether this came of home influences, or is attributable to the discipline of the institution, I cannot say. But I had never seen it so signally displayed as here. The examinations—the compositions, the performances in music—gave signs of interest, culture and improvement.

There were two graduates, Miss Wailes and Miss Sims. Their examinations were very thorough, embracing a course of study as complete as will be found anywhere in the country; and although somewhat accustomed to these examinations, I never witnessed one which seemed to be conducted so entirely without special preparation, nor one which exhibited more of individuality in the pupil. There was an independence of thought, a force and distinctness of explanation I have never seen surpassed.

Butler's Analogy came in the course of study. They had studied it. They were examined without set questions, and the large and intelligent audience did not conceal its delight as the answers were given, each in her own language, and the processes of reasoning were followed out with an accuracy and thoroughness which demonstrated perfect familiarity with the thought of that profound work.

The compositions were in good style and good taste—clearly thought and elegantly written.

I can safely recommend this school to those having daughters or wards to be educated. Dr. Sullivan is assisted by teachers of long experience, alive to their work, and conscientious in its performance.

The location, buildings and appliances offer inducements, and the character of Dr. Sullivan and the board of trustees is an ample guarantee that pupils sent to Woodville Seminary shall be educated.

JACKSONVILLE DIST. MEETING.

MR. EDITOR: The Jacksonville district meeting, Montgomery Conference, was held at Oxford, Alabama, on the 28th of August, 1868. The attendance was full, and all the stations, circuits and missions were represented by the preachers in charge, except one, who was detained by affliction. The churches were well represented by lay delegates.

The meeting was opened with appropriate religious services by Rev. F. T. J. Brandon. Rev. L. M. Wilson, presiding elder, occupied the chair. William H. Thornton and Rev. Brace Hamp were appointed secretaries. The meeting proceeded to the appointment of committees on the following subjects of interest to the church:

1. The Spiritual Condition of the Church. 2. Sabbath Schools. 3. Support of the Ministry. 4. Missions. 5. The Relation of the Colored People to the Church. 6. The Literature of the Church. 7. Temperance. 8. The Condition of Church Property and Church Extension. 9. The Bible Cause. 10. Revivals. 11. Family Religion. 12. Church Music. 13. Education.

The reports of all the committees were full of interest and Christian spirit. We can only notice them briefly:

STATE OF THE CHURCH.

The committee reports the churches in a state of peace and good order, with evidences of spiritual improvement, and deplores the prevailing neglect of class meetings. Accompanying the report was a resolution, recommending that every means be used to encourage our members to attend punctually the class and other social meetings of the church, and pray earnestly around the family altar for an increase of spiritual influence.

SABBATH SCHOOLS.

The committee reports an increased interest in this cause, and the people are becoming alive to the importance of Sabbath schools.

SUPPORT OF THE MINISTRY.

The report shows a deficiency in this important duty, and urges a greater effort on the part of stewards and members.

MISSIONS.

A greater interest is taken in this cause, and more money is being raised for it.

RELATION OF COLORED PEOPLE.

This report says that our interests, in a measure, and their temporal and eternal welfare, in a still greater degree, depend upon our efforts to enlighten and instruct them. It suggests that we should not relax our efforts, but rather increase our labor for their salvation.

CHURCH LITERATURE.

The committee recommends the circulating and reading of our books and periodicals, and that every family take one of our church papers.

TEMPERANCE.

The committee regret to find a disposition in different sections to convert fruit into brandy. They presented the following resolutions:

1. That we will discourage, by precept and example, the distillation, sale and use of spirituous liquors as a beverage.

2. That the preachers be requested to preach to their congregations on the evils of intemperance.

3. That we regard the distillation and vending of ardent spirits, save for medical and mechanical purposes, as standing in the same category as the use of it as a beverage, and that pastors be required to exercise discipline on this point.

CHURCH PROPERTY.

The property of the church is well secured and in good condition.

THE BIBLE.

There are four well organized Bible societies within the bounds of the district. The preachers and pastors are requested to take up collections for the benefit of these societies.

REVIVALS.

There are evidences of a revival of God's work in many parts of the district, and great reason to hope that there will be a larger measure of revival influence poured out upon the church before the close of the year.

FAMILY RELIGION.

There is great neglect of this duty, and many in the church who do not pray in their families nor converse with and advise their children upon the subject of religion, but indulge them in playing drafts, dominoes, cards, dancing, etc. The committee recommended the adoption of the following resolutions:

1. That we do not tolerate the indulgence of any member of our church engaging in any games, such as playing at billiards, cards, dice, dominoes, and attending dancing parties, circuses and theaters.

2. That we earnestly recommend all the heads of families in our church to have prayers in the family, night and morning, and never neglect secret prayer, at least three times a day.

3. That we insist on all the preachers in the district, local and traveling, to recommend and preach on the subject of family religion often.

CHURCH MUSIC.

The report deplores the want of interest in this subject, and insists that our people cultivate vocal music.

EDUCATION.

The committee reports an increased interest in the education of the children throughout the district, and recommends that our people educate their children as far as possible.

The meeting was one of great interest and profit to all. It was characterized by great harmony and good feeling, and left a protracted meeting there of much interest and promise. Many mourners were at the altar, and there were some accessions to the church.

Resolutions of thanks to the citizens of Oxford and vicinity, for their kindness and hospitality, were adopted. Mumford is the place appointed for holding the next meeting.

WM. H. THORNTON, Secretary.

Baptist Fellowship in England.

"A Baptist minister" thus writes to the London Spectator:

"In your impression of last Saturday you ask, 'Is it, or is it not, true, that while Mr. Spurgeon could ask the Dean [of Canterbury] to preach in the Tabernacle, he could not give him the sacrament under pain of instant expulsion?' I am happy in being able to reply, in terms of your question, that 'it is not true.' The communion table at the Tabernacle, and in a multitude of Baptist churches besides, would be as open to the dean as the pulpit; and there is no authority, either secular or sacred, that would dream of visiting with 'expulsion' the Baptist minister who might so construe the rule of Christian brotherhood.

"It is not to be denied, of course, that many Baptists still hold the ritualistic theory of the necessity of baptism (by immersion on a profession of faith) as a preliminary to communion at the Lord's table; but the chief culture, intelligence and influence of the body—probably the numerical superiority—are on the other side, the belief being constantly avowed and acted upon that nothing should be imposed as a term of communion which is not also a term of salvation, and that the man who is good enough for Christ is good enough for Christ's church.

"That such opinions and practice are not incompatible with the legal status of Baptist churches was decided some years ago in the Vice Chancellor's Court, (re St. Mary's Chapel, Norwich,) and there are not many congregations (though Mr. Spurgeon's does not go so far) in which, while Baptist teaching is maintained, a credible profession of faith in Christ, quite irrespective of baptismal views, admits, not to the sacramental table only, but to all the rights of membership. In other words, the 'Baptist' community becomes purely and simply 'congregational;' so conforming most nearly, as some of us take leave to think, to the ideal of the holy Catholic church.

"I venture, without Mr. Spurgeon's knowledge, to trouble you with this explanation, as in the coming ecclesiastical discussions it is right that the position of every Christian community should be accurately defined and understood, and have the honor to remain, sir, etc."

NEEDLES.—Needles were first made in London by a negro from Spain, in the reign of Queen Mary. He died without imparting the secret of his art. The art was recovered in 1565. Elias Growse first taught the English to make needles, but the art was again recovered by Christopher Greening, who settled at Long Crendon, in Buckinghamshire. Needles are now chiefly made at Redditch, in Worcestershire, in Derbyshire, and in and near Birmingham.

LIFE IN JAPAN.

Japanese books are printed from wooden blocks, metal type being unknown, on thin paper, one side of the sheet only being used. The leaf is double and the edges uncut; and the letters are arranged in vertical columns, beginning, like Hebrew, at the right hand side of the page, and, as we should call it, at the end of the book. The covers are generally very plain, made of dark colored paper, somewhat thicker than the interior sheets; and the gilding which is put on the outside, on the edges of our books, generally adorns the inside of the cover, and what may be termed the fly-leaves, in regular patches. The origin of the art of printing is lost in the obscurity of distant ages; it has been handed down from one generation to another without any trustworthy record of its discovery being preserved.

Cheap common books are often badly printed, the characters being indistinct and blurred, a defect frequently arising unless special care is taken when printing from wooden blocks. Mind your stops, an injunction so often enforced on English juveniles, cannot be needed in Japan, where punctuation is rarely used. A simple alphabet is also wanting, various systems being in use, according to the style of literature. For instance, ordinary works, romances, histories, etc., are written in characters of a comparatively easy nature, representing syllables. Songs and popular poems have these easy syllabic characters mingled with others of a more complex kind. Works of science, religious treatises, some dictionaries and prefaces, are written in ideographic characters, i. e., characters representing ideas, not sounds, derived from the Chinese alphabet; and in many cases these are easily read and understood by educated Chinamen. In others only the roots of the words are given in ideographic signs, the Japanese inflections being written in the syllabic character, and the Japanese arrangement of words followed, which renders such sentences almost unintelligible to one who has studied Chinese only. When the pure Chinese character, or a modification of it, is made use of, this has often a running commentary at the side in Japanese cursive writing as an explanation of the text. There is also a system made use of only by the priests, called Bou-zi. Inscriptions on tombs and altars are engraved in these characters. Signatures and seal inscriptions are frequently written in a peculiar style of Chinese writing. All these diversities of method create difficulty and confusion, and render the printed literature very puzzling to a learner, whether native or foreign. They result chiefly from the adoption of a foreign system adapted to a language that admits of few changes or inflections, and the incorporation of it with one which possesses many grammatical variations.

The Japanese dictionaries contain more than 38,000 characters, each of which has a name derived from the corrupted pronunciation of the original Chinese; this is of one syllable, in accordance with the spirit of the Chinese language, and to this is added several words of Japanese origin which translate it into the vernacular.

Pictures cut in wood have been also used to illustrate the text for many centuries; and printing in colors, an art of late development in Europe, has been practiced in Japan during many ages. Specimens of printing in colors have been brought to England, and the colors are brilliant without being gaudy, the drawing is somewhat rude and conventional, and the perspective imperfect; but there is a certain life and animation in the figures and scenes which redeem them from being mere caricatures.

Periodicals are issued at certain intervals, giving tales and narratives in parts. As yet this system has not been extended to works of instruction or to newspapers. The power of the press is entirely undeveloped, public opinion being formed only by the interchange of ideas at the baths and other places frequented by the common people. Books and pictures are inexpensive, and booksellers' shops numerous; they appear to have plenty of customers.

Of late the habits and manners of foreigners have afforded a fertile topic for the native artist and author. Pictures of ladies in bright colored dresses, with largely developed crinolines, carrying parasols, may be seen in the shop windows; and naval captains in bright uniforms and gilt buttons are favorite subjects for representation. Sewing machines and pianos, christening, wedding and dinner parties, children playing at tip-cap and hoop, and everything European, at all strange or new, are seized upon and depicted with sufficient accuracy to render them recognizable.

Japanese writing is very free and flowing, and well deserves the term "cursive," which is usually applied to it. Like printing, it is in vertical columns, commencing at the right hand side of the page. Although this method of writing does not appear to admit of so much variety in the shape of the letters as the horizontal system, it is very rapidly done, and looks very characteristic. It is difficult for a student to decipher, as a very curious style is adopted, and the variations of handwriting always cause written characters to be less easily intelligible than printed matter. Pens and ink are, of course, not used; a brush, consisting of a nicely arranged bunch of hair, finely pointed, in a bamboo handle, is passed along a stone, on which some Indian ink has been rubbed down with water. The writing paper is porous, and easily receives and retains the character lightly and rapidly painted on it by the writer.

That which renders it difficult to speak and write Japanese correctly is, that the phraseology varies according to the position in life and relationship of the person addressed. A Japanese lady, when conversing with her female relatives, uses a different choice of words from what she would do were she speaking either to her male relatives or to her servants. To fail or to misplace these expressions betrays a want of refinement and education which is instantly discoverable by the practiced ear; and thus one may be well acquainted with the colloquial language of the common people, and yet be unable to address those of higher rank.

In reference to writing, it may be mentioned that post offices exist in all Japanese towns and cities, except Jeddo, the capital of the Tycoon. The postage of a letter from Simonosaki to Jeddo (for letters are received there, though there is no public office whence they can be dispatched) is five tempos (about seven pence half-penny.) The distance is over two hundred miles; therefore the tariff is not much higher than what our fathers used to pay. In a country where money is worth so much as it is in Japan, it is sufficiently high to prevent a very large correspondence being carried on, but this means of communication is always available.—Leisure Hours.

"The Horrors of Andersonville."

EVIDENCE SHOWING GRANT HIMSELF RESPONSIBLE FOR THEM.

We have for a few days past been making faithful inquiry into the question as to who originated and enforced the policy of leaving Federal soldiers, taken by the enemy, to starve and rot in rebel prison pens, and have at last struck upon evidence that appears to remove all doubt. The evidence, we are glad to say, is of a character and comes from a source that at once carries conviction and relieves us of any liability to suspicion of unfairness that might otherwise be entertained by our Republican friends. We find it in the documentary evidence of the immaculate authority, the "Committee on the Conduct of the War," in a report made to that body by the chief of the impeachment managers, Maj. Gen. B. F. Butler. The position occupied by Gen. Butler at this time, in the eyes of the Radical party of the country, especially adds great weight to his testimony and serves to give additional importance and interest to the subject under consideration.

In his report Gen. Butler recites the facts concerning the disagreement about the exchange of prisoners existing when he was intrusted with the duties of commissioner by the Secretary of War, in December, 1863. He succeeded during the following three months, after much trouble, in arranging a basis of exchange, man for man and officer for officer, with the rebel commissioner, Mr. Ould, with whom he held conference at Fortress Monroe. He then says:

"Mr. Ould left on the 31st of March with the understanding that I would get authority and information from my government, by which all disputed points possible could be adjusted, and would then confer with him further, either meeting him at City Point or elsewhere for that purpose. In the meantime the exchanges of sick and wounded and special exchanges should go on.

"Lieut. Gen. Grant visited Fortress Monroe on the 1st of April, being the first time I had ever met him.

"To him the state of the negotiations as to exchange was verbally communicated, and most emphatic verbal directions were received from the lieutenant general not to take any step by which another able-bodied man should be exchanged until further orders from him."

On the 14th of April Gen. Butler received a telegram from Gen. Grant at Washington, stating that the whole subject of exchange of prisoners had been referred to him, as follows:

WASHINGTON, April 4, 1864—11 P. M.

MAJ. GEN. BUTLER: Your report respecting negotiations with Commissioner Ould for the exchange of prisoners of war has been referred to me by my orders.

Until examined by me, and my orders thereon are received by you, decline all further demonstrations.

U. S. GRANT, Lieut. Gen.

Six days later, after Gen. Grant had "examined," he sent a long telegram to Gen. Butler, stating that he had been empowered to "give such instructions, as I may deem proper," and he gave instructions, of which Gen. Butler says:

"Of course these instructions, in the then state of negotiations, rendered any further exchange impossible, and retaliation useless."

General Butler says he then made an effort to have the sick and wounded excepted, so that they might be exchanged, and he received the following telegram in reply:

WASHINGTON, 2.30 P. M., April 30, 1864.

MAJ. GEN. B. F. BUTLER: Receive all the sick and wounded the Confederate authorities will send you, but send no more in exchange.

U. S. GRANT, Lieut. Gen.

Upon this extraordinary "instruction" General Butler remarks as follows:

"To obtain delivery of even sick and wounded prisoners without any return would be a somewhat difficult operation, save that the enemy, by giving us our sick and wounded in their hands, we retained all the rebel sick and wounded in ours, burdened us with care and cost of all the sick and wounded on both sides—an operation of which it is difficult to see the strategic value, and only to be defended because of its humanity in rescuing our wounded from the destitution and suffering permitted to them by the Confederates.

"In August the question of exchanging prisoners was again up, the rebel commissioners having renewed the offer to give up man for man and officer for officer. But General Grant, interposed, and in a telegram to General Butler, dated City Point, August 18, 1864, says:

"On the subject of exchange I differ with Gen. Hitchcock; it is hard on our men held in Southern prisons not to exchange them, but it is humanity to those left in the ranks to fight our battles. Every man released on parole or otherwise becomes an active soldier against us, directly or indirectly. If we commence a system of exchange which liberates all prisoners taken, we will have to fight on until the whole South is exterminated. If we hold those men caught, they amount to no more than dead men. At this particular time, to release all rebel prisoners North would insure Sherman's defeat, and would compromise our safety here."

Here we have a full and free avowal that the leaving of tens of thousands of poor Federal soldiers, whose patriotism and bravery carried them to the front of battle, to starve and rot and die in rebel prison pens, was a matter of studied policy—a part of the tactics by which Gen. Grant made war upon the rebellion. And the people will remember that while this inhuman policy was being mercilessly carried out they were told by the government and by the organs of the administration that the whole difficulty about the exchange was on the part of the rebels—that our government was willing and anxious to get our poor fellows out of the jaws of the terrible death that awaited them in the rebel prisons, but could not. The duplicity was in keeping with the worse than barbarity.

Gen. Butler concludes his report in these words:

"The great importance of the questions, the fearful responsibility for the many thousand lives which, by the refusal to exchange, were sacrificed by the most cruel forms of death, from cold, starvation and pestilence, of the prison pens of Raleigh and Andersonville, being more than all the British soldiers killed in the wars of Napoleon; the anxiety of fathers, brothers, sisters, mothers, wives, to know the exigency which this terrible, and perhaps, as it may have seemed to them, useless and unnecessary destruction of those dear to them, by horrible deaths, each and all have compelled me to this exposition, so that it may be seen that these lives were spent as a part of the system of attack upon the rebellion, devised by the wisdom of the general-in-chief of the armies to depletion, depending upon our superior numbers to win the victory at last."

The loyal mourners will doubtless derive solace from this fact, and appreciate all the more highly the genius which conceived the plan and the success won at so great a cost.

It is Gen. Butler, chief manager of impeachment and leader of the Radical party, now supporting Gen. Grant for the Presidency, who states these facts and makes this criticism upon the originator and executor of the policy of sacrificing, uselessly and unnecessarily, more lives than the British lost in all their wars with Napoleon. We have nothing to add.—Rochester Union.

REVIVALS.

By a letter from Rev. T. Cameron we learn that the Lord is blessing his people and converting sinners on Green circuit, Mobile Conference. "About one hundred have professed religion during the present year."

Dr. Parker has just concluded an excellent meeting at Felicity street church, in this city, at which some thirty persons have professed religion. A large class meeting has been formed out of these new members, which meets in force every Monday evening, and is led by the pastor himself. Some of the members of the church have been greatly strengthened, and some soundly converted during the progress of the meeting.

Centenary College of Louisiana.

On the first Monday of October this institute begins its fall session. A letter from the president, Dr. Watkins, written half a month since, has just come to hand, and calls our attention to the fact. The promise of a fair crop is cheering up all the institutions of our church. We believe that the long night is about to break. Send the boys forward; tell them that the money may give out any day, and long before the year ends they may have to come home. We'll engage for it, the boy who lives but a day at a time will improve his college hours. Send them forward.

THE COLLECTIONS OF THE YEAR.

The Annual Conferences are at hand. With them the financial year of the circuit closes—so says the Discipline. It may be that the annual sheaf, which we have been making up, has not yet been laid upon the altar; before binding it we have been waiting to see what sort of a corn crop, or cotton, or sugar we shall be blessed with. This holding back in order to see what the Lord is going to do may be returned upon us by the "Lord of the harvest." He may hold back until it can be seen what we are going to do. If we were to gauge our offerings by our sins, rather than by our crops, the income of the church could be counted on with much more certainty. Unfortunately, neither the amount of our crops nor of our sins are taken as the measure of our annual tribute; but the extent of our gratitude.

And this, one would think, a very safe basis for expecting a large income to God's house. Very little may have been gathered from the field, and the flock may have yielded a small increase, but in every other direction God's mercy may have been abundant. A dear child may have escaped the jaws of death by restored health, or experienced a still greater deliverance in the pardon of sin; or the Holy Spirit may have enriched us forever, and by one life-creating touch opened in our own hearts a fountain of perpetual joy. The greatest year of a man's life may be the leanest one in his temporal affairs—his dealings with man the very opposite of his dealings with God. To have made the acquaintance of a good man, to have had an old enmity healed, to have confidence fully restored when it has been disturbed, the triumphant death of a friend, or the birth of a welcome babe—these are to be reckoned as the substantial benefits of the year, more than "the increase of corn and wine."

It must have been some such extended view of the mercies of God that moved the poor widow to "cast in all that she had." She had no glowing field of rich grain, no suddenly increased merchandise, nor secure hoard for the time of the winter. It was not for showers, or sunshine, or spring, or reaper, that she presented her gift, but for love, and faith and grace. These made her passing rich; and she sought only for some adequate method of acknowledgment. Any other harvest than that of grace is a very poor reliance for a collection. The floods of gold which wave in the valleys yield oftentimes not one drop to God. Revivals avail more than the fruits of the earth in unlocking the grasp of selfishness. The mighty Spirit of him who "gave himself," who, "though rich, became poor," can alone open the covetous bosom.

Our church has fallen into a bad habit of regulating her charities after the seasons. Every claim is pressed upon the attention and conscience, nearly at one and the same time. The missionary enterprise, the support of widows, orphans and superannuated preachers, the Bible cause—these are urged at the very time when extra efforts should be made to pay our bishops and the preachers. We have plenty of wisdom in every other direction but in that of church finances. There we are as simple as children!—"ever learning and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth"—a very Jannes and Jambres. Well, so be it, if our people will so have it; only let the preacher bring these collections all in, the great and the small, the foreign and the domestic, not forgetting, at the peril of a good conscience, the widows and orphans of those who have died in the work.

This year may determine the future ministerial career of many a good man. Worn down by his struggles for subsistence, made necessary by the events and circumstances of the past two years, it will largely depend on the stewards of the circuit whether he can ever take another appointment at the hands of the bishop. Let all the people come up to the help of the Lord, to the support of a self-sacrificing ministry!

FEARS FOR THE NEGRO.

The most intense disturbers of the country that we know of are the religious organs of the Republican party. The Advocates, as a matter of course, deprecate the terrible result which they are hourly trying to depict and secure. They give notice of the highly inflammatory condition of the South, and predict war, a return of rebellion, and the restoration of slavery!—if the Democratic party comes into power. The New York Methodist hends a startling editorial with Rebellion Resurgent. "What," exclaims the editor, "would be the effect of restoration of power to the leaders of the late rebellion? We answer promptly: 'In substance, slavery.'"

We think the brother should take breath after that labored opinion. A man must be driven to extremity, indeed, who finds it necessary to announce so great an absurdity. The truth is that, for political changes, he sadly misses the old issue. Alas! the negro is really free. "Free"—indeed! He is a judge, a legislator, a governor, a senator! This freedman, whom the Methodist thinks will go back into the Dred. Scott and Uncle Tom condition, has found his summit level in an elevation which makes one negro politically equal to ten white men. The four millions of blacks in the Southern States elect twenty United States Senators; the four millions of white people in the State of New York elect two. And yet here is a white citizen of that State professing alarm lest the negro should be reenslaved! It occurs to us that his own present political enslavement should have his first concern. He can afford to bewail the possible future of the negro hereafter.

The negro is now free. Let us rest on that awhile. So tremendous a success should rejoice in a long transport. Why mar the joy of ages with dismal forebodings of the possible or the impossible? So is it with unhappy mortals, whose fate is never to realize a present good. The long howl of the Abolitionist finally overtook its prey, and was quieted in long draughts of the blood of the slaveholder. This huge triumph of pure liberty over the "sum of all villainies" was made doubly sure in the death, North and South, of five hundred thousand white men. For every negro enfranchised one white man has perished on the field or in the hospital. Is that negro now still insecure, and is the price of his freedom so dear that the world, to secure it, is again about to lay down the precious life of another white man? We can assure the Methodist that the South will never spill another drop of her blood in any other interest than that of the freedom of her own sons. Negroes have become to her what we believe they have to the masses of the white men of the North—important only as they disturb and prevent the peace of the country.

The cry that the liberty of the negro is in danger will no longer rally the taxpayers of this country. Twenty-six hundred millions of dollars, the calamity of unborn generations of white men, is full enough to have paid for that boon. That much will never be paid again—no, not if it were to free all Africa. The Abolition fanatic may make the most of this triumph. Neither South nor North will ever afford him another. No amount of philanthropic alarm, pretended or real, will ever again rally the masses to bankrupt themselves for the benefit of the black man. Even New England could scarcely afford to sacrifice the bonds she has to secure any more liberty to any living thing.

We think, therefore, that the cry of this Radical editor will find little response in the people of the North. They are prepared to hear with comparative indifference, if not with approval, that the negroes have been ousted from the legislative halls of Georgia; that they have been quelled in their armed gatherings in Louisiana; and that white men are asserting, throughout the South, that pre-eminence over the black in the control of their own affairs which of right belongs to them. The great body of voting white men in the United States have fully learnt what allowance to make for the various cries of the fanatic—that he regorges his spleen daily with the two words, rebellion and slavery.

THE DEMOCRATIC DISPLAY OF WEDNESDAY NIGHT.

This grand welcome to the St. Louis delegation was sublime in its expression. It presented a living line of fire as far as the eye could reach. If the working power of these clubs bears any proportion to their numbers, or the gorgeousness of their processions, there can be but one opinion as to the vote of Louisiana in November. The Picayune gives an excellent notice of the affair, from which we take the following:

About seven o'clock a bomb was fired from the Clay Statue, which was the signal for the clubs to light their torches. They had previously assumed their respective positions without lights. At eight o'clock, or a little after, the signal for the advance was given, and the clubs began to wheel into line, forming as they advanced—a spectacle whose brilliancy was only equaled by the splendid display of the 29th ult.

Innumerable torchlights, blazing in the air, and casting far over street and housetop a gorgeous illumination, appeared to the unaccustomed observer a line of fire, extending as far as the eye could reach. Houses wreathed and hung with flowers, their porticos and galleries flashing with jets of gas flame, formed into many a curious design, added a picturesque effect to a pageant unsurpassed by any previous demonstration. Lighted by this illumination, club after club filed past in a line fully five miles in length. On banquette and gallery, from every available point of observation, multitudes of people watched the splendid array and cheered them as they passed. As on a former occasion, the population of the city was literally out of doors.

Every one had friends, every family a representative in that long line. A feeling, too, of patriotism was dominant among them. They recognized in this display the kindly feelings of a sister city stretching forth a hand of encouragement to a people long suffering and oppressed.

Every generous impulse of their hearts responded to it; and thus, with handkerchiefs waving and the bright smiles of the beautiful and good to cheer them, the procession commenced its march. It was such an one as did honor to the occasion, as made a fitting welcome to the representatives of their great sister city. Composed, as it was, of every organized Democratic club in our municipal limits, and exceeding one hundred and twenty five in number, white and colored, it reflected the popular sentiments and actual politics of our people.

CAPE COD AND ALL ALONG SHORE STORIES. By Charles Nordhoff. New York: Harper & Bros., 1868; 12mo., pp. 235.

One of the worst attempts at story-telling we have met with. The style is vulgar and blustering. The author affects to be humorous, and presents the public—to use one of his own elegancies—"a small basket of stale eggs"—in fact, a collection of several poor pieces from Harper's Magazine. For sale by G. W. Ellis, No. 7 Old Levee street, New Orleans.

SET RIGHT.

MILTON, September 7, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: Please correct two errors in the plan for a "CONFERENCE LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY," published in the ADVOCATE of September 5th:

At the end of Art. 5, Sec. 2, for "Art. 6, Sec. 2," insert "Art. 7, Sec. 1."

In the third paragraph from bottom, read "The maximum should be five thousand members," not five thousand dollars.

The week of prayer resulted in a considerable revival in the church.

Your's truly,

J. A. PARKER.

THE sinner can do many things which the Christian does, while the Christian does some things which the sinner cannot do.

EGOTISM is a mere burning of personal incense, in which the egotist is at once altar, priest, censor and divinity.

IT were better to perish by a violent death than to live so as to cause one of Christ's little ones to stumble.

THE CALDRON.

The Opelousas Journal of the 19th brings a detailed statement of the alarm in St. Landry parish:

On Sunday last greater excitement prevailed in Opelousas, and several miles around, than at any time since the war. This was the day fixed by the negroes for a meeting at Washington, six miles from here. Several hundred of them, many being armed with revolvers, formed in procession here and moved toward Washington. In this procession was one or two wagons loaded with guns. We have heard it stated that they had a large number of axes and hatchets, freshly ground and sharpened for the occasion. About 11 o'clock, while our citizens were quietly at church, a report was circulated in town that the negroes and citizens of Washington were fighting at the bridge which crosses the Bayou Carron into that place.

Considering the threats and incendiary speeches that had been made by the negroes at a meeting here the preceding Sunday, and the fact of their taking a wagon or two of guns and axes with them, it was thought this report might be true, especially as it was made by a Radical negro who went out with the crowd and had hastily returned. The churches were immediately deserted, the timid among the females frightened, and negro women sought protection from their friends among the whites. Those who were not armed immediately armed themselves, and the town was soon ready to defend itself and render assistance to Washington. The report subsequently proved to be incorrect.

During the afternoon organized bodies of armed whites arrived in town from the south, and by the close of the day the whole country for many miles south and west of Opelousas was armed and in motion. The day passed away without the shedding of blood, but we confidently believe that, owing to the excitement which prevailed, had a shot been fired by either party, it would have been the bloodiest in the history of St. Landry.

The negroes went to Washington with the evident intention of bullying and insulting the citizens of that place. Radicalism had been declining there and many negroes turned Democrats. By this meeting of five or six hundred armed men they expected to recover their lost sheep by operating on their fears, and to insult and intimidate the whites. In this large body of negroes, Republicans so-called, there was but one solitary white man—Emmerson Bently, editor of the St. Landry Progress.

That the negroes failed to bring about a conflict, and wind up their course in blood, was owing to the prudence and determination of the whites not to have a collision with them, except in self-defence. But where two races are living together, and one is eternally threatening to destroy the lives and property of the other, and is actually taking steps to execute these threats, it cannot be expected that peace will last forever.

The events of last Sunday have had one good effect: the whites who were not armed before are armed now.

For eight full years—yes, for twelve of them—an immense body of people have been exhorting, entreating, inciting and leading the negroes of the South to imbrue their hands in the murder of men, women and children. In this, attempt John Brown and Helper were backed by sixty Congressmen, but each failed. Afterward the policy was adopted as a war measure, and Gens. Sherman and Sheridan showed the negroes, by example, how it ought to be done. But the good sense and the good nature of these people prevailed over evil counsel, though it was presented and urged on them as the price of their freedom. During the entire war no body of slaves was to be found who ran against their master or mistress or the little children. The colored man had been too well instructed in Christianity and was by far too enlightened to be capable of such fiend-like conduct. Every principle of virtue forbade it. This persistent resistance to that unnatural hate which immersed the whole land in ruin and blood was rewarded, as it deserved to be, by a just Providence: the colored man found himself free—free without one wrong blow of his own.

Ever since the war the same demoniac counsels have pursued the freedman. He has been organized, armed, drilled and sworn in. Midnight conclaves and incendiary addresses, from the vilest creatures that could be supposed to spring from war's refuse, have added their force to excite him to some dreadful fulfillment of the long prophesied vengeance. Amid the ravings of the emissary of the Radicals the colored man has brandished his weapon, sung "John Brown," and looked wolfish; but as soon as the coast was clear he has returned to the old place, to his 'possum and his banjo—a philosopher worthy of the school of Talleyrand. We must not forget all this in our estimate of the present. The negro says more than he means, because the party in power expects him to say something, and he is too wise a politician not to catch the breeze.

It does look all around the horizon as if even the good-natured negro was about to take fire of incendiary white men. But the distress of the Radical party, just now, is immense. Something must be done, either in Tennessee, Arkansas, Georgia, the Carolinas or Louisiana, or the fire of the conflict between North and South will go out. It, therefore, stirs the caldron and heaps up the fuel. Let us, therefore, be patient toward the race which these bad men would make victims in order to retain power. Let them march and hurrah, but watch their wiley white instigators of arson and murder. The South has no quarrel with the negro. She neither despises nor blames him. She has declared him forever free, and means all that she says.

CITY NEWS.—RIOT.

About half past ten o'clock last evening a Radical negro procession moved past the confectionery at the corner of Bourbon and Canal streets. Some of the negroes in the rear took offense at the looks or remarks made by some one in the confectionery, and, regardless of the presence of ladies, rushed in. The gentlemen present and those on the gallery of course at once started to clear the store. The negroes received reinforcements, and the cry of riot was started. In the meantime the Steedman Guards and Blair Zouaves were standing in front of the St. Charles Hotel, listening to an address by the Hon. M. A. Foute. As soon as they heard the cry of negro riot, these clubs started for the scene of action, though, as afterwards proven, there was not a pistol or a knife in the whole crowd.

As they moved down Canal street a mulatto policeman, standing on the neutral ground, raised his pistol and fired two shots into the Steedman Guards. These were, we understand, the first shots fired. The Steedman Guards and Blair Zouaves then, with the sticks of their torches, attacked and drove off the negroes, many of whom were armed with knives and pistols. One negro was killed and several wounded. Two members of the Steedman Guards and several other white men were also severely wounded, but the negroes soon ran off, and the police arrived on the ground to find all quiet.

Owing to the lateness of the hour we were unable to ascertain the names of the killed and wounded.—New Orleans Commercial Bulletin.

ST. MARTIN'S PARISH.

A telegraphic dispatch to the Hon. E. L. Jewell, editor of the Evening Delta, dated St. Martinsville, September 20th, via New Iberia, September 21st, which was received last evening, contains the following exciting intelligence:

St. Martinsville was to-day very near becoming the scene of a bloody conflict in consequence of the outrageous conduct of a gathering of negroes toward the white inhabitants. About a thousand of them from various parts of the parish of St. Martin, and adjacent, had assembled for the purpose of holding a meeting. They were not interfered with, and held their meeting without interference, although most violent and incendiary speeches were made by those who addressed them.

After the meeting was over they nevertheless charged on horseback, and fully armed, through the town, discharging their firearms, yelling, insulting the citizens, and threatening to burn the town down to the ground. So great was the danger felt to be that they would massacre citizens and carry out their incendiary threats, that the mayor caused the citizens to assemble and arm themselves, and placing himself at their head, forced the infuriated mob to disperse.

As the negroes left the town they declared that they would go and get more ammunition, with which they would come back in increased numbers, overcome the citizens, and burn the town to ashes.

Under these threats the citizens remain still armed and on the watch. A heavy patrol is constantly maintained. The greatest anxiety is felt as to the result.—New Orleans Commercial Bulletin.

SPAIN.

LONDON, Sept. 23.—Interesting news from Spain continues to come in. The Provinces of Corunna, Lugo, Orenz, Pontevedra, Murcia, Albocete, Huesca, Zorajaca and Ternel have pronounced for the revolutionists and appeal to the nation. The sovereignty of the people is the war cry of the insurgents. The rebels occupied Cadiz on Sunday. Seville is the headquarters of rebellion.

Prim sailed from Paris. Prim met the exiled gents at Cadiz. Malcompo, of the iron-clad Saragossa, brought his guns to bear on Cadiz barracks, compelling the loyal troops to surrender, and Cadiz declared for the rebellion. Each general then sailed to prearranged points on the coast, where each raised the standard of insurrection, and set movements on foot in his appointed theatre of operations.

THE joy, the happiness of home is won by love, and love is gained by kind words.

MARRIED.

On the 2d of September, 1868, by the Rev. B. F. Alexander, Maj. J. B. THOMPSON to Mrs. L. B. RANDLE, both of Caddo parish, Louisiana.

OBITUARIES.

JAMES GONROLT was born December, 1780, in Marion District, South Carolina At an early age he emigrated to Mississippi, and began a long and useful life in the county of Adams. He came with and was a true representative of that class of stout and stelwart men who had energy and buoyancy of soul to subdue and overcome every obstacle, physically and mentally, which opposed and depressed in the primitive days of this State. He was the last one of that industrious, fearless generation of men who filled the forests, conquered all foes, and laid the foundations of civilization, and opened the path for Christianity in the State of Mississippi. Inspired by the hope and liveliness of a warm and generous heart, they lived in the enjoyment and exercise of a large hospitality. His youthful days were spent in the companionship of the Gibsons and the Fosters, of Pine Ridge, Adams county. From these, and others of like character, he imbibed a pure and exalted idea of a profession of Christianity, and at an early day embraced it with all his soul. His repentance was genuine and true—separating life from sin—and with uncompromising zeal entering upon a war against vice.

His conversion was of the genuine Methodist stamp in primitive times. The Holy Ghost fell upon his broken and humbled soul and filled it with inexpressible joy, and shouts of praise rang from his lips and proclaimed it to all. He was born a shouting, stormy Christian—lived and died the same.

Tender-hearted, full of affection and sympathy, his heart was ever beating high in the interest of others, and longed to see men brought to a knowledge and power of that faith that enlivened and cheered his own nature. He was indeed the "salt of the earth," the "light of the world," in the circle in which he moved and acted. He removed to Franklin county, and settled upon the banks of the Homochitto river, where he brought up a large family of children, most of whom are earnestly pious and active in the service of God. He lived near Right's Church and Camp Ground, and was a chief actor in the scenes and occurrences now so sacred in the memory of hundreds living, and thousands who are dead.

His hospitality and liberality were widely known. His house was the home of all, and ever open for the entertainment of those who came to the place of worship. He fed men with physical food, while he longed for and administered to their spiritual wants. In his old age his theme was love and kindness.

Being a useful and very energetic man, he felt no sympathy for inaction and lethargy in life—placed no estimate upon a mere organization without action, and was therefore tempted to repine at his own feebleness and worn-out condition. But inspired by his warm heart, he at last overcame this with the feeling that to live to say, "children, love one another," was mission enough. This was the sentiment that filled his nature in declining years. A member of the Methodist Episcopal Church for over sixty years, a model class leader and exhorter during most of the time, his labors had been greatly blessed. He went down to his grave full of delightful anticipation and joy in the fullness of a Christian grace. He had long waited for the voice of his Master, and the summons came to a glad and willing heart.

He has left an aged and pious companion, who in a few years will rejoin him in a more delightful land, never more to be separated by death. May his children remember his admonitions and example, and follow on to the same glorious end. His memory will ever be associated with zeal and piety, love and tenderness, among men. "Mark the perfect man; consider the upright, for the end of that man is peace." He died March 1, 1868.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

To the Brethren of the Mississippi Conference.

Opposite the words "No. of Local Preachers," on your blank statistical reports, enter the figure indicating the number of unordained local preachers; and on the same line the number of local deacons and the number of local elders, distinguishing them respectively by the letters D. and E. Thus: supposing you have 3 licentiates, 2 deacons, and 2 elders, the returns will be: "No. of Local Preachers," 3 and 2 D., and 2 E.

NATCHEZ DISTRICT MEETING.

The Natchez District Meeting will be held at Midway, Wilkinson county, Mississippi, and will convene on Thursday, the 1st, and continue until the 4th of October next. Brethren attending the meeting will please call at Mr. Chapman's, in Centreville, who will direct them to their homes during the session.

Brethren from a distance would do well to reach Centreville on Wednesday evening, as the meeting will organize at eleven o'clock on Thursday.

Pastors will please prepare full written reports of all matters pertaining to the church in their several charges.

JAS. A. GODFREY, P. E.

Vicksburg Dist., Mississippi Conference.

To the Pastors and Official Members:

DEAR BRETHREN—A letter just received from Bishop Paine requests me "to act as presiding elder" on this district until other arrangements are made at Conference My age and bodily infirmities will make the task heavy indeed, but, by the help of God, my mind is made up to undertake it. The Conference year is so far advanced I can only make one round, in connection with some previously-made appointments which I cannot recall. As soon as you see this notice please inform me by letter, directed to Fayette, Mississippi, at what places your quarterly meetings will be held. I earnestly request the attendance of all the official members, that we may finish our work handsomely for Conference. According to my usual plan, when out on the district, I will be glad to have a few intervening appointments in the day time at convenient places. The preaching does not oppress me; traveling and exposure to inclement weather do. Subjoined you have the time of the appointments:

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

THE GREAT PACIFIC RAILROAD,

RECEIVING THE AID AND SUpervision of the Government, and carried forward by the extraordinary resources and energy of the powerful corporations to whom it was entrusted, is rapidly approaching completion, and it is safe to say that New York and San Francisco will be connected by rail by the FOURTH OF JULY NEXT.

More than two thirds of the Through Line and Branches between the Missouri River and the Pacific Ocean are constructed, at a cost of nearly

ONE HUNDRED MILLIONS,

and the remainder is being pushed forward with unparalleled vigor. The

CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY,

to whom belongs the Western and principal portion of the Main Stem Line, receive from the United States Government:

1. The right of way through the Territories, with the use of timber and materials along the route.

2. An absolute grant of twenty sections per mile (12,800 acres) of the Public Lands on the line, the minimum value of which is now fixed at $2 50 per acre.

3. A special issue of United States Six per cent. Bonds, at the average rate of $35,000 per mile, delivered as the work progresses; which the Company are allowed to repay within thirty years, mainly by transportation services.

4. Authority to issue their own First Mortgage Bonds to the same amount, having the preferred lien—superior to that of the Government.

5. It receives, in addition, donations and subsidies from the State and Cities of California amounting to more than $3,000,000 in gold;

Or an aggregate of Cash Resources for construction of more than Sixty Millions upon 725 miles, independent of the ten millions of acres of public lands, and further subscriptions to the Capital Stock. The early completion of the enterprise is therefore beyond all doubt.

This Company have already carried their road successfully across the Sierra Nevada Mountains, and are rapidly extending the track across the Salt Lake Plains, and have already a valuable way traffic thereon. Besides a mileage upon all through business, this road, having the best lands for settlement, the most productive mines, the nearest markets, and being exempt from competition, will always command large revenues. The net earnings upon the completed portion are more than double the total annual interest liabilities to be assumed thereupon.

The undersigned offer for sale, and recommend to investors, the

FIRST MORTGAGE 30-YEAR GOLD BONDS

OF THE

Central Pacific Railroad Company,

bearing six per cent. per annum interest, both principal and interest payable in "United States gold coin." These Bonds are the first lien upon one of the most productive and valuable railroad lines in the world—a line which will be finished within twelve months, and which is already earning, after paying operating expenses, more than twice the annual charge of its Bonded debt. They are already widely known and esteemed in this country and Europe, and it is believed the remainder of the Loan will speedily be taken.

A limited amount will be disposed of at

103 Per Cent. and Accrued Interest,

IN CURRENCY.

The Bonds are of $1,000 each, with semi-annual gold coupons attached, payable in July and January.

☞ The Company reserve the right to advance the price at any time; but all orders actually in transitu at the time of any such advance will be filled at the present price. At this time they pay

More than Eight Per Cent. upon the Investment,

and have, from National and State laws, guarantees superior to any other corporate securities now offered.

We receive all classes of Government Bonds, at their full market rates, in exchange for the Central Pacific Railroad Bonds, thus enabling the holders to realize from five to ten per cent. profit and keep the principal of their investments equally secure.

Orders and inquiries will receive prompt attention. Information, descriptive pamphlets, etc., giving a full account of the organization, progress, business and prospects of the enterprise, furnished on application. Bonds sent by return Express at our cost.

Subscriptions Received by Banks and Bankers, Agents for the Loan.

☞ All descriptions of GOVERNMENT SECURITIES bought, sold or exchanged, at our office, and by mail and telegraph, at market rates.

Accounts of Banks, Bankers and others received, and favorable arrangements made for desirable accounts.

RECOLLECTIONS OF REV. JOHN JOHNSON AND HIS HOME.

An Autobiography, by Mrs. SUSANNAH JOHNSON. Edited by Rev. ADAM C. JOHNSON, M. D.

The above book will be published at Nashville, September 15th, in one 12mo. volume of 310 pages. It records the varied experiences of a pioneer Methodist preacher of no small celebrity, as well as the toils and privations of his family, and forms a most entertaining and affecting biography. It contains no chapter that can be read without emotion. In short, it is a faithful picture of the men and manners of early times, and as such will have an interest far beyond the sphere of Mr. Johnson's labors, extensive as they were.

It may be ordered from

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

TEMPTATION.

BY MRS. A. M. WELLS.

Linnet, Bird Linnet? What, not stop a minute?
Whither so fast away?
Come to the garden, dear; cherries are plenty here,
Cherries red-ripe this day.

Come, let me hear you sing; come, dip your glossy wing
Where the cool water brooks run;
Stoop for the clover seed; light on the mullen weed;
Chase the gay flies in the sun.

"No; 'neath the sunny sky, gauzy-winged dragon fly,
I cannot wait to make mine
Sport I no longer seek, nor may I dip my beak
In the red cherry's sweet wine.

"I may not stay to look ev'n at the water brook:
Yonder, my little ones three,
They whom I love the best, look from their leafy nest,
Hungry and waiting for me."

Ah, but you should not miss pleasure so great as this,
Ready and ripe for you here;
Though, from the heavy bough, hang they in plenty now,
Cherries don't last all the year.

Far away speedeth he, taking no heed of me,
Caring not here to alight;
Dear voices call to him, they who are all to him,
Why should I hinder his flight?

Go, Linnet; soar away, duty and love obey;
If to the right we hold fast
We shall find everywhere something that's good and fair,
Even though cherry time's past.

THE SHEPHERD AND HIS FLOCK.

When taking a country walk it is very pleasant to see a shepherd sitting under the shadow of a tree, while his flock are feeding in the green meadow before him. It is hoped there are many kind shepherds in our land, though it is said those who keep sheep in some parts of the world are more tender with their flocks and watch over them with greater care than we do. This you know is needed, as the helpless sheep may be attacked by the wild beasts, which are not found in our country.

Some years ago a gentleman was traveling through a part of Greece, where many shepherds live. As he was on his journey he came to a place where he saw three men with their flocks. One had about six hundred sheep, another seven hundred, and a third seven hundred and fifty. These large flocks were spread all over the green valley, and were all mingled. But every shepherd knew his own sheep; and as he gave names to all, when the night came he called them together. Each flock then left the others, and followed their own shepherd, but a strange shepherd they would not follow. If called to come or go they obeyed him, for they knew his voice. When a sheep was going into a wrong place he called to it, and it came back at once. If the way was narrow or rough, he went before the sheep, and they quietly followed after him.

It was a very cold day when the gentleman saw these three flocks. Some of the lambs were quite strong and full of play; but others were very young and feeble. The cold chilled them, and they could not walk. Each shepherd wore a kind of large cloak, tied round his neck, and also fastened about his waist, while the part round his bosom was full and loose. So he took up some of the little feeble lambs, and put them in the loose part of his robe—near the bosom. He did not quite wrap them up, but let their little heads appear, so that they could breathe well. But he kept them snug and warm. It was a pleasant sight to see a kind shepherd, with his bosom filled with lambs.

Among the large number of sheep there were some old and feeble ones. They could not well get along the road when they returned home at night. A part of the way was steep and full of stones, and another part was miry and uneven. So the shepherds put their crooks just behind the sheep to help them along. This was done very gently and kindly.

We are also told by other travelers that a shepherd will take great care in finding nice green pastures to which he may lead his flocks. And should any robber or wild beast attack the sheep, the keeper will bravely defend them with his life.

Now, we will know of whom this account may remind us. It is so much like what we read in the Bible that our thoughts are at once led to Jesus. Yes; he indeed is the "Good Shepherd"—the "Chief Shepherd"—the "Great Shepherd." "The sheep hear his voice, and he calleth his own sheep by name, and he leadeth them out. He goeth before them, and the sheep follow him. And a stranger will they not follow, but will flee from him; for they know not the voice of strangers." He "gathers the lambs in his arms, and carries them in his bosom." "His rod and his staff they comfort" or help the weary and aged among the flock. If you read the tenth chapter of the Gospel by St. John, the twenty-third Psalm, and a part of the fortieth chapter of Isaiah, you will see how the Scriptures speak of our Lord Jesus Christ as a shepherd. You will also learn from other parts of the Bible how he "came to seek and to save those that are lost;" and that he "gave his life for the sheep." He so loved them as to die for them on the cross.

But who are his sheep? who are his lambs? We know that "all we, like sheep, have gone astray." Who then belong to Christ's "little flock?" What are the marks by which they are known? They are those who love the Shepherd, and who follow him. They keep near to him, that he may feed and protect them. They feel how weak they are, and look to him, that he may guide them. They know that he so loved them as to lay down his life for them—for the lambs as well as the sheep. They have faith in him as their only Shepherd and Saviour. They desire to be found in his fold on earth, and then to dwell with him for ever in heaven. Young reader, have you these marks of being one of Christ's lambs? This is a serious question; will you think of it?

Lord, may it be my chief delight
To yield to thee my early days;
Let every morning, noon and night,
Bear witness to my grateful praise.

A PEEP INTO A SCHOOL ROOM.

Which would cause the most surprise—for a number of little Arab boys to see a nice English school room, with the children clean and well dressed, learning their useful lessons, or for some English children to take a peep into one of the noisy schools of the olive-colored children of the East? When an Arab or a Turk hears of the care and pains given to teach the young in England, he looks on the account as one of his Eastern tales—as nothing better than a fable. He cannot make out why such care should be shown to children.

Suppose we peep into an Arab school in a village near Damascus. I need not point it out to you among those low-roofed houses, for the noise that already reaches us tells plainly what is going on within. Those openings in the old mud wall let in the hot winds of summer and the cold winds of winter. But let us step in, and see if the inside presents a better picture. At the door is a pile of old, odd-looking shoes, or slippers, which are put off by the scholars as they enter; they then sit bare-legged on the rough floor. The teacher now rises, and directs us to be seated on a mat. The noise has stopped a little, and eyes which should be on their books are gazing on our English dress. But the teacher wishes to show himself before the visitors, and begins to deal heavy blows on the young heads and shoulders around him. Good and bad share alike. The idlers now make up in noise for what they have lost in time; those reading aloud read louder, and those who have no book to read bawl with all their might, to imitate the others. There are no classes. No two boys have the same lesson; few the same book; many only part of a book, and some none at all. The scholar repeats, perhaps, the same lesson day after day. He can read a lesson in his own book; but give him the same lesson on the opposite page, in another book, and he cannot make out a line.

See the master—as he looks through his spectacles on the page a boy is reading, while his hand is thrusting at random among the scholars a cane which reaches half across the room. The idle watch the strange turns of the long cane and shun the stroke; while the poor boy, so intent on his book that he did not see it, gets a blow for his pains. There are some of the scholars learning to write, but they have neither copy books, pens, nor ink; they mark the letters with their fingers on sand spread on the floor. If they do not make less noise they will be thrown on their backs, and the soles of their feet beaten with a large stick.

But let us look into the next room. See those three girls huddled up in a corner, their faces and hands unwashed, their hair all loose and uncombed. The eldest holds in one hand the strange letters written for her on a board, while her other hand gathers up the rents of her ragged dress. It is not often that you see girls in an Arab school. What has brought these three to this place? Perhaps a mother, who feels her own dark state, has sent them. Or it may be a strong desire of the girls themselves, before they are driven out to work. Poor things! The master would think it time thrown away to take pains with them. They are left to do the best they can for themselves. No pleasant look, or kind word to cheer them, but frowns meet them on every side. They feel they are looked on with scorn and hatred. They will soon grow tired, and give up all attempts at learning. Still let us hope that their presence in this school is the dawn of better days for the poor girls of Arabia and Turkey.

What a contrast to this scene is an English Sunday school! See the children coming up the green lanes and over the fields, or from the street of the city, on their way to be taught. We hope they meet their teachers with happy hearts, and with clean faces and tidy dresses. There is no long cane to shake over their heads; no large stick to beat the soles of their feet. The same kind care is shown for the girls as the boys. They have little books with pictures, written for them. And then they have that book which makes a great difference between their condition and that of children in heathen and other lands. Without the Bible their state would be as dark and sad as that of the young Arabs. Blessed indeed are they if they believe in the Saviour it reveals, who loves them—who died on the cross that they might live in heaven. Are the young readers Sabbath school children? Let them, then, with all their hearts, praise God for their mercies and privileges in a Christian land. Or if they are not, may they know how to value the mercies of their homes—and the house of God.

While taught to read the words of truth,
May they that word receive;
And when they hear of Jesus' name,
In that blest name believe.

Letter from Daniel Webster to His Son.

A correspondent of the Boston Traveler, writing from Exeter, New Hampshire, gives extracts from a letter written by Daniel Webster to his son Edward, about the time the latter commenced his studies at Philips' Exeter Academy, which school he himself at one time attended:

WASHINGTON, June 23, 1834.

MY DEAR SON: Fletcher wrote me from Exeter the next day after your arrival, and informed me that you had been so fortunate as to be received at Col. Chadwick's, and was commencing your studies. I am glad you are so well situated, and I trust you will make progress in your studies. You are at a most important period of life, my dear son, soon growing up to be a young man, and a boy no longer, and I feel great anxiety for your success. I beseech you to be attentive to all your duties, and to fulfill every obligation with cheerfulness and punctuality. Above all, remember your moral and religious concerns. Be constant at church and prayer and every appointment for worship. There can be no solid character and no happiness which are not founded on a sense of religious duty. Avoid all evil company, and every temptation, and consider that you have now left your father's house and gone forth to improve your own character, and prepare your mind for the part you are to act in life. All that can be done for you by others will amount to nothing, unless you do much for yourself. Cherish all the good counsel which your dear mother used to give you, and let those of us who are yet alive have the pleasure of seeing you come forward as one who gives promise of virtue, usefulness and distinction. I fervently commend you to the blessings of our heavenly Father.

Your affectionate father,
DANL. WEBSTER.

EDWARD WEBSTER.

P. S.—Since writing this I have received your letter. I remember the great tree, and know exactly where your room is.

A WIFE'S INFLUENCE.—A Christian woman gave her hand to the man on whom she had already placed her tenderest affection. He possessed almost every grace, but was destitute of the grace of God. By spending the early part of his life in a foreign land, and associating with those who had the reputation of gentlemen, he had imbibed the fashionable habit in that place of using God's name in vain in common conversation. His new and much loved wife sought to reclaim him. She knew the only way to his heart. She took advantage of his love for her to win him to Christ, and she effectually succeeded.

One day as she was standing before him, in company with a few friends who were listening to his conversation, in order to give additional interest, as he supposed, to what he was relating, he added the name of Christ. He looked at his wife, and saw her in tears. He was confused. She raised her hand, and gently pressed his chin. 'O,' said she, 'if you knew how much I love that dear name you would never again pain my heart by trifling with it.'

His heart was touched. He was unable to proceed. He asked her forgiveness, and soon left the room. In this way he was saved from ruin, and is now an eminent example of piety.

TRUE courage ever dares to do right, and ever fears to do wrong.

FARM AND GARDEN.

WORK FOR THE MONTH.

In the 'olden time' picking cotton was the work of this month. To a very great extent, it will doubtless still continue to be the chief occupation of the Southern farmer during September. Cotton and money are so nearly synonymous with our people, it is hardly necessary for us to spur them up on the subject of cotton picking. Everybody knows that the fields should be picked over rapidly, to keep the lint from becoming trashy and stained by rain. Where the cotton opens rapidly, hire as many extra hands as you can work to advantage—'twill be true economy in the end. American cotton is sought after for its good quality; other countries can produce inferior cottons cheaper than we can. Let every attention, therefore, be given to gathering the crop and preparing it for market in the best style. Sun well all that is damp. Buy a good gin, if you have not one, and do not spare bagging in making neat, well covered bales. Do not throw your cotton seed out of doors to rot and lose half of their value as manure. Keep them under shelter until you are ready to plow them in, (which can be done at any time in fall or winter, without danger of their germinating,) or until you are ready to kill them, in some one of the many ways suggested by articles which we have already published.

But whilst looking well after the cotton crop, let us not forget that there are other things which claim attention. Fall oats should be put in this month. Sown now, they are not apt to be 'winter-killed'—are not so liable to rust as spring oats, and will largely exceed the latter in productiveness. We would strongly urge upon our readers to devote all the land they can to this crop; if from any cause they should fail, the fact will be known soon enough next spring to allow the land to be planted in corn or some other crop. Are not two chances better than one? This also, it will be remembered, is the time for sowing grass and clover, when not mixed with a small grain crop. Plow and harrow the land well, sow seed and cover with a roller or brush. Barley, rye or oat lots should be seeded down now, to furnish winter grazing. Remember that the retarding effect upon growth of the winter cold can only be counteracted by having the ground exceedingly rich; and that no labor or expenditure pays the farmer better than such lots properly prepared.

Save all the hay you can, whether grass, pea vine or clover. Our people never have forage enough to winter stock properly. Let the picture of the poor, starved, tottering cattle to be seen every spring awaken your sympathy and stir you up 'making hay while the sun shines.' As opportunity offers, gather in corn. The sooner this is done after it is dry the better; and if you are building a crib this year, be sure to set it some distance above ground, and cover the posts on which it rests with old tin or sheet iron, upon which rats cannot climb, and see to it that there are no projections about the tops of these posts, or the lower part of the crib, upon which a rat could stand.—Southern Cultivator.

AIR WANTED.

The air we breathe is as needful to our plants as to ourselves. When we drown, it is not so much from too much water, as too little air; and so it is with the plants. Give the air free course, as well to the roots as the leaves, and much or little water need not trouble us.

An experienced drainer, John Johnston we believe, the Scotch farmer of western New York, asked permission of a neighbor to allow him to cut a drain through a piece of bottom land, as an outlet for his surplus water. The neighbor refused, on the ground that if the water were taken away from his meadow land it would burn up in the heats of summer. It ended in the other buying the land and draining, and the result of his first year's cropping paid for land and drainage.

This idea as to land suffering in the way suggested, is not, perhaps, an uncommon one, and it is well to have it understood how draining really works in this respect, and that well drained grounds are really better supplied with available moisture in the dryest weather than those which are undrained.

Soils have in various degrees the power of retaining water. Sands have the least power in this respect. A compact loam holds twice as much as sand; a stiff clay, three times as much. If a soil is supplied with water beyond its power of retention, as in long continued rains, the excess flows off, if no obstruction exists. It is left saturated to the extent of its capacity. When this excess has passed away, it is in its proper sound condition, not wet, solid under foot, and not liable to be poached by the treading of cattle.

During the time that the soil is full of water, as after a long rain, the air is pressed out, and then, as fast as the excess of water flows out, fresh air flows in, and fills its place. All the intervening spaces between the particles of earth give circulation to fresh air. And this makes the difference between drained and undrained land. If undrained, the excess of water remains and becomes stagnant, and poisonous to many plants; if drained, sweet, fresh air, as necessary to cultivated plants as to man, takes its place. But this air always contains more or less watery vapor, averaging, perhaps, one per cent., but capable of holding more, the more it is heated, so that it is more charged with vapor in the hottest drought than in cooler weather. When it is suddenly cooled it gives up a portion of its water to any object it comes in contact with. This we see illustrated very familiarly on the outside of a glass or pitcher of cold water in hot weather. The heated air from outside comes in, charged with vapor, and, striking the cold surface, is suddenly cooled, and deposits a portion of its water which accumulates there in great drops of sweat. The same process takes place in the soil if the air be allowed to pass freely into it. The hotter it is the more moisture it contains; when this vapor comes into contact with the cool soil below the surface it is condensed and deposited there.—That this deposit is sufficient to make a very material difference in the quantity is attested by all who see the results of their labors in drained and well plowed land during our summer droughts. Their capacity for resisting the influence of dry weather is proportioned to the freedom with which the air is allowed access to the subsoil.—American Farmer.

A MINISTER'S WIFE.

The English Independent discourses feelingly and sensibly on a topic that both ministers and their wives will appreciate:

"Must a minister never lose his heart to a bright eyed woman whose goodness and sense, and humor and grace take his fancy? Must he always inquire, first, whether she is clever at managing a Dorcas society, and can hold her own in a committee? Must he ask her to spend a month on trial among his people, and get a 'majority of two-thirds' of the ladies in her favor, before he ventures to propose? He may cordially admire and honor women who have the special faculty, as well as the religious earnestness for taking the lead in every kind of Christian work; but is he unfaithful to the church and to his Master if he take for a wife a woman of a shy and timid spirit, who would be ill for a month if she had to 'take the chair' at a ladies' meeting, but who knows how to charm him into oblivions of his anxieties, can win his wearied mind away from incessant thought about his work, and can wander with him in the pleasant path of reading and speculation, which refresh and regenerate the exhausted strength? A doctor's wife owes no duties to her husband's patients; a lawyer's wife owes no duties to her husband's clients; but a minister's wife is regarded as a kind of lady bishop, or, at least, inordinate curate, who, by virtue of her position, is bound to discharge innumerable services to the congregation. She may be a young girl, with no experience of human life and church business; but is expected to become the active president of all the benevolent institutions supported by the ladies of her husband's charge. She may have three or four little children, whom she has to teach herself, and whose dresses must be made and mended by her own hands; but she is expected to visit all the sick and poor. She has her natural sympathies, and, however warm her heart may be toward every one who likes her husband's preaching, she cannot be the intimate and confidential friend of every lady that belongs to the church; but people who themselves are far from being distinguished for universal charity are indignant if she finds one house pleasanter than another, and if she naturally associates with ladies of her own age and with kindred tastes."

THE Times, remarking upon the Married Woman's Property Bill, says: "This is practically a poor woman's question, though theoretically it has a larger import; for undoubtedly anything which tends to raise the functions of women, and to call forth their judgment and their self-reliance by means of responsibility, must tend to the elevation of the community."

I PREACH less and less about people's frames, and feelings, and troubles; I preach more and more about Christ. That is what all people want; they want Christ.

THERE cannot be a pleasant smile upon the face of the hopeless. The blow which crushes the life will shatter the smile.

WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTITUTE, Staunton, Virginia.

The next session begins on the 21st day of SEPTEMBER, 1868, and closes on the 24th of June, 1869.

Rev William A. Harris, President, with a Faculty of twelve professors, teachers and matrons.

This is a Female College of the first rank; one of the most flourishing in the South; young ladies here from nearly all sections of Virginia, and various Southern States. Method of teaching like that pursued in the University of Virginia. Health and comfort of pupils unsurpassed. Those from the Gulf States, especially, have greatly improved in health. No social disquietude. The population of this great Valley is nearly all white. This institution is an educational home for the daughters of the South.

Charges for the entire scholastic year, board and tuition, in collegiate course, embracing

Ancient Languages	$215 00
Music	50 00
French or one Modern Language	20 00

TENNESSEE FEMALE COLLEGE, Franklin, Tennessee, situated on the Nashville and Decatur Railroad, eighteen miles south of Nashville, in a most beautiful and healthful portion of the State, with ample buildings, thoroughly refitted and refurnished, and supplied with the modern improvements for heating, ventilation and bathing. This institution, with a full Faculty, will begin its Fall Session on Monday, September 7, 1868.

In the Literary Curriculum both Latin and French are thoroughly taught, without extra charge. This Curriculum must be completed for a degree in the College; yet young ladies may pursue an eclectic course, and receive diplomas in special departments.

For Music and Painting skilled instruction and the best facilities provided.

Boarders will find a home in the College with the family of the Principal.

Prices throughout very low for the grade of the institution. The entire charges for board and the full Literary Course will not exceed $25 per month.

The climate is specially favorable to study, and hence our scholastic year is one month longer than in the Gulf States.

CENTENARY COLLEGE, Jackson, Louisiana,

was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war; but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually, in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month.

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution the Southern States.

The past history of the College is the pledge its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the Institution, are requested to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

W. H. WATKINS, President.

THE HOME MONTHLY, New Orleans, for 1867.

The HOME MONTHLY will contain forty eight pages of reading matter, printed upon fine paper and in clear type, and will, from time to time, be accompanied by elegant steel-plate engravings. The subscription price will remain $3 per annum, or $1.50 for six months, invariably in advance. In order to build up a still larger circulation, we have concluded to offer the following

Liberal Inducements to Agents,

To any person sending us three yearly subscriptions, with nine dollars, we will send the MONTHLY six months, or allow them, if they prefer, to retain One Dollar and Twenty-five Cents of the amount.

To any person sending us six subscriptions, with eighteen dollars, ($18,) we will send the MONTHLY one year, or allow them to retain Two Dollars and Fifty Cents of the amount.

On amounts for subscription less than nine dollars, agents will be allowed to retain ten per cent.

Ministers, it is hoped, will act as agents, not so much from pecuniary considerations as from a laudable desire to assist in building up a home literature worthy of a place among the families of the South and on the counter-tables of a Christian people.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING

STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as by means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

At Least Thirty per Cent. as Compared with any other Stove.

and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally known as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. That meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

For sale only by the undersigned.

In addition to the above, I also have a large and complete assortment of COOKING STOVES, comprising all of the leading Stoves of the day, equal to any offered in any other house in this city.

THE HOME MONTHLY, New Orleans, for 1867.

The HOME MONTHLY will contain forty eight pages of reading matter, printed upon fine paper and in clear type, and will, from time to time, be accompanied by elegant steel-plate engravings. The subscription price will remain $3 per annum, or $1.50 for six months, invariably in advance. In order to build up a still larger circulation, we have concluded to offer the following

Liberal Inducements to Agents,

To any person sending us three yearly subscriptions, with nine dollars, we will send the MONTHLY six months, or allow them, if they prefer, to retain One Dollar and Twenty-five Cents of the amount.

To any person sending us six subscriptions, with eighteen dollars, ($18,) we will send the MONTHLY one year, or allow them to retain Two Dollars and Fifty Cents of the amount.

On amounts for subscription less than nine dollars, agents will be allowed to retain ten per cent.

Ministers, it is hoped, will act as agents, not so much from pecuniary considerations as from a laudable desire to assist in building up a home literature worthy of a place among the families of the South and on the counter-tables of a Christian people.

All communications on business should be addressed to

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING

STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as by means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

At Least Thirty per Cent. as Compared with any other Stove.

and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally known as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. That meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

For sale only by the undersigned.

In addition to the above, I also have a large and complete assortment of COOKING STOVES, comprising all of the leading Stoves of the day, equal to any offered in any other house in this city.

T. K. PRICE, ESQ., Vendor of "Price's Patent Texas Tonic," or Vegetable Medicine:

DEAR SIR—After a fair and deliberate use and experiment of your Vegetable Medicine, known as PRICE'S PATENT TEXAS TONIC, we give it as our decided opinion, that it is the best recipe that we have ever known, for Indigestion, Torpor of the Liver, Constipation of the Bowels and Dyspepsia. We consider your Vegetables Medicine worthy of all commendation, and therfore feel no hesitation in recommending its use to all our friends, as well as the public at large, and that in doing so we are contributing to all the afflicted. Many of us have been suffering from these evils from ten to fifteen years, and have been greatly benefitted.

Wishing you great success in introducing this valuable medicine,

We remain yours truly,

DOLBEAR COMMERCIAL COLLEGE

On the corner of Camp and Common sts.

(In the Spacious and Elegant Story Building,)

is constantly in session under able Professors. It was founded in 1832, and is chartered by the State. Its former students may be found as Principals or Book-keepers in a large portion of the old houses of this city and over the Southern States. Ladies or gentlemen can attend the COMMERCIAL COURSE; or Book-keeping, Penmanship, Mathematics, English, French or Spanish, separately. A business education, that enables one to earn $1000; $2000, or $3000 annually, is the best fortune parents can give their sons. A DIPLOMA from this College is a passport in all Commercial communities. Ladies and Gentlemen are invited to call. We have ample arrangements for 1000 students this present year. Liberal arrangements made for Clergymen or their sons and crippled soldiers. Catalogues sent to all who desire them.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY, AT Greensboro, Alabama.

The next session of this Institution begins the first Wednesday in October, and is divided into two terms.

TUITION.

Academic Department, per term	$35 00
Preparatory Department, per term	30 00
Contingent fee, per term	2 50

A fee of $5 is charged those who attend the schools of Chem. and Nat. Phil.

Board, exclusive of washing and lights, $16 to $20 per month. By messing it can be obtained even cheaper than at these rates.

Sons of ministers of the Gospel in the regular work, and those studying for the ministry, are admitted free of tuition.

The whole expense for the scholastic year, including everything except books and clothing, will be $250, payable one-half at the opening of the session and the remainder on the 15th of February. If the student wishes to board in a private family it will be $280. This great reduction in the price of board and tuition will bring the advantages of the University within the reach of those whose limited means have heretofore placed the highest scholastic training beyond their reach, as well as secure the patronage of those who, on the score of economy, are sending their sons out of the State to be educated.

Especial attention is called to the fact that preparatory students are taught exclusively by the Faculty.

The Law School has been organized under the management of Hons. Judge Colemon and A. Henners.

NEW PATENT PIANOS.

RAVEN & BACON, (established in 1829.)

Warerooms, Nos. 611 and 616 Broadway,

NEW YORK.

Manufacturers of Piano Fortes, with the patent Combination Sounding-boards,

Patented August 14th, 1866.

This invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affects the sounding-board, the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a pure liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. The sounding-board, released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding-boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection, and its vibratory quality increased.

Our Pianos are first-class in every respect, and purchasers will have not only our own guarantee as to their quality, but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument, obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

EAST ALABAMA MALE COLLEGE

AT AUBURN, ALA.

The Fall term of this Institution will open on the FIRST WEDNESDAY in SEPTEMBER next, and close on the 20th December. Besides the regular course of studies for graduation, large facilities are afforded for instruction in the Commercial and Agricultural branches. Separate schools for these branches, in connection with the College, were authorized at the last annual meeting of the Board of Trustees. A student not wishing to take either the regular or a partial literary course in the College, may confine himself to either of these Departments, and in a short time become qualified for business.

The Preparatory Department, with competent teachers, will be under the special supervision of the Faculty.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

We have again to notice a fair degree of animation in the general market, particularly in the supply of the country demand for dry goods, boots and shoes, hardware and other staple goods. The movement in our leading staple has shown some irregularity, having been quite animated on Saturday, extremely dull on Monday and rather more active on Tuesday. Only a limited business has been done in tobacco, and nothing of any moment in sugar and molasses, while operations in Western produce have been of about the usual extent, without any marked variations in prices.

The weather has continued clear and pleasant. The accounts from the interior are still conflicting in their tenor, but generally more favorable, and inspire renewed hopes of a yield not much, if any, below the estimates in our cotton circles at the commencement of the year. The worm, we presume, has now completed its ravages, and everything depends upon the weather and the efficiency of the laborers. We apprehend, however, that a large amount will be wasted from negligent picking, even where the freedmen have an interest in the crop. The sugar accounts continue to be highly encouraging.

The river remains about the same, being now twelve feet ten inches below high water mark.

Cotton.—The following are the arrivals since the 18th instant:

Louisiana and Missis-ippi.....bales..	6643
Mobile:	254
Texas	32
Total	6929

We left the market, at the time of our last report, ruling at 22 to 23c. for Good Ordinary, 23¼ to 23½c. for Low Middling, 23¾ to 24c. for Middling, 24¼ to 24½c. for Strict Middling, and — to 25c. for Good Middling, since which, under a falling off in the foreign demand, a material decline in foreign exchange, and unfavorable accounts from Liverpool, prices have given way 1c. per lb. On Saturday, however, the demand was quite animated, and although there was only a moderate supply on sale, and the course of foreign exchange was calculated to check the movement, yet as there was a general desire among buyers to complete pending orders, the sales summed up 1,750 bales, which was a full business in proportion to the stock offering. On Monday the supply being limited, while foreign exchange ruled decidedly lower, many of the previous buyers withdrew, or came forward for those small lots only which factors were willing to sell at lower rates, and the sales were confined to 800 bales, at figures showing an irregular decline of one fourth and one-half cent, prices closing so unsettled as to prevent regular quotations, but Low Middling ruling at 23c., with sales to some extent at 22¾c. On Tuesday the market opened under the depressing influence of discouraging telegrams from New York and Liverpool, and there was a material increase in the supply, while the demand was languid, and foreign exchange had further declined one to one and a half per cent., factors were compelled to submit to an additional concession of one-half cent, Low Middling closing at 22¼ to 22½c., and the sales amounting to barely 1,650 bales.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 4,200 bales.

Referring to our remarks above, we now quote as follows:

Low	— to —
Ordinary	— to —
Good Ordinary	21 to 22
Low Middling	22½ to 22¾
Middling	22¾ to 23
Strict Middling	— to 23½

Sugar.—The sales are mostly confined to job lots of Cuba sugar, taken for the city trade and for shipment, at the following rates: Nos. 11 and 12, 12 to 12½c.; Nos. 13 and 14, 13 to 13½c.; Nos. 15 and 16, 14½ to 15½c.; Nos. 17 to 20, 15¾ to 16c. per pound. There is some little Louisiana sugar in market, which is retailing at 13½ to 15½c. per pound for fair to prime.

Molasses.—Cuba molasses is in good supply, but there is no demand, and in the absence of sales of any importance for some time we omit quotations.

Flour.—The market has not shown much activity since our last review, although there has been a moderately fair demand for the trade and for shipment at about previous prices.

ELEVENTH SESSION.—TERMS REDUCED

The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first-rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar, etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.

SPECIAL CAUTIONS.

Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health.

A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.

It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

Terms—Board and Tuition per session, $360.

Payments—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.

Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

SPANISH REVOLUTION.

LONDON, Sept. 27.—No official advices from Madrid since Friday. The following is from other sources:

The fleet joined in the revolution in consequence of having received no pay. The greater part of the army did likewise, becoming indignant because of the exile of their favorite general.

The church, bound by every tie to the Queen, resists the revolution and holds the masses in check.

The insurrection extends throughout Cadiz, Sevilla, Cordova, Huehra, Gransda, Valencia, Alicante, Algizras, Malaga, Vigo, Ferral, Corruna, Logrono, Almera and Oviedo.

Many armed hands appeared in Huesca, Saragossa, Terule and Navarra.

Gen. Prim arrived in the vicinity of Cordova, but his troops deserting him, he was compelled to halt for reinforcements.

The Province of Biscay sent troops to San Sebastian for the Queen's protection.

The journals of Paris discourage the movement, but it is generally believed that the revolution will be successful, and result in the expulsion of the Bourbons from Spain.

A dispatch from Paris says Prim, with a fleet of gunboats, was expected at Barcelona yesterday.

NEW YORK, Sept. 27.—Cable special to the Herald says the Madrid Gazette confirms the report that insurgents have appeared in the provinces of Alicante, Leon and Asturias, and that the provinces of Malaca, Bejar and Alcoy have pronounced in favor of the revolution. Insurgents have again occupied Cordova and destroyed the bridge over Guadalaquiver and cut the road. Natchlicbez had arrived within fifteen miles of Cordova and sent for reinforcements. The officers of the navy have sworn to accept no reward for serving in the revolution, declaring that they have risen to free the country of oppression and a corrupt dynasty. It is rumored that the Baleric Islands have pronounced in favor of the revolutionists.

LONDON, Sept. 28.—The Spanish revolution gains strength. Valladolid and both Castilea have revolted. The royal forces have been recalled from Santander to protect Madrid.

PARIS, Sept. 28.—The city of Alcoy has revolted, and three ships, supposed to be part of Prim's fleet, appeared off Carthagena yesterday. It is stated that the town of Leon has pronounced for the revolutionists. It is also reported that Saragoss had rebelled, and that Comite Cheate had been killed.

PARIS, Sept. 29.—Isabella remains at San Sebastian. Both the Conchas have resigned, and their resignations have been accepted. They both say the refusal of the Queen to return to Madrid destroys all hopes. The Queen has sent for the Count of Cheate to form a new cabinet and summons the Council of State at San Sebastian.

LONDON, Sept. 29.—Espartero is sick. Gen. Prim, with the ironclads, expected at Barcelona. It is said that the insurrection has broken out in Madrid and that the Queen has left Spain.

The bark Tupper, from Leghorn for Boston, was abandoned. Crew safe.

NEW YORK, Sept. 28.—The Herald says, editorially: The Governor of Alabama is certainly not far wrong in his notion that more national troops are unnecessary in that State. The presence of 50,000 soldiers in Alabama would not be so effective in keeping the peace as the Camilla fight will prove. Now that the whole history of that event is seen, it is undoniably clear that the negroes provoked the disturbance. They marched with their Radical leaders, with music and arms, into a quiet town, comporting themselves in an offensive manner, making a bullying expedition, and the menace of their conduct was met as if it were real. Niggers will see by this example that it is not yet safe to bully white men, and that will prevent collisions.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 30.—A political row occurred at Lancaster, Pa., which lasted several hours. People closed their stores; many persons were hurt.

The Catholic diocese of New York prohibits church picnics, spiritualism and animal-magnetism.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 30.—The following indorsement was made on the Alabama memorial and resolutions: By the President—"Referred to honorable Secretary of War for consideration and action." By Schofield — "Respectfully referred to Gen. Meade for his action under instructions of August 25."

"It was the purpose of these instructions to confer upon department commanders all the powers which the laws allow, and it is the President's wish that within the limits of his lawful authority Gen. Meade exercise full discretion in his action to the end that in any event the peace may be preserved. By the Adjutant General." "Respectfully transmitted to Gen. Meade for his guidance. By command of Gen. Grant."

There are 1,500 Federal troops in Virginia.

Further proceedings in the Surratt case depend upon the action of the grand jury. Further proceedings against him are improbable.

Gen. Blair is here and declines any demonstration. He departs westward to-morrow.

URBANA, Ohio, Sept. 30.—Ten cars were burned by the explosion of a car supposed to contain nitro glycerine. A house a quarter of a mile from the wreck was demolished by the concussion.

LONDON, Sept 30.—Jose and Manuel Concha have pronounced for revolution. The people of Madrid and the garrison followed. The Queen's statue was dragged through Madrid by the rebels.

The following has been received here: Paivis, of the royal army, has been utterly defeated by the insurgents in the province of Cuidad Real. His army is dispersed and he himself is a fugitive. Marshal Serrano, of the rebel army, is marching on the capital unopposed. Girgenti has been captured by the insurgents. A provisional junta has been formed and order prevails everywhere among the insurgents.

THE KENTUCKY CONFERENCE.

This body held its session September 9—14, Bishop Pierce presiding. The session was well attended — pleasant and profitable. Dr. Pierce was welcomed to the Conference by a suitable resolution. On being introduced he spoke in substance as follows:

"I am more than happy to meet you, my brethren. My condition is such as to make me an invalid at present. I have not felt able to enter the Conference room till this morning, and come now with great effort. Among all the friends I have in the world, I have none who have so often and earnestly solicited a visitation from me, in these my latter days. I have long desired to gratify myself and you in making this visitation, and am glad to be able now to make it. I have been in the habit of attending Conferences since 1804, when I had the happiness to be admitted in the city of Charleston, South Carolina. I have never been so much delighted as when with a Conference of Methodist preachers. My life has been a remarkable one. My health, voice and powers of endurance have been wonderfully preserved. I have had influenza of late, and preached considerably. I have been moving during the summer till now, but have suffered the past few days from the oppressive, sultry weather. I would like to say much to you, but will not occupy your time at present. I am able to preach a little yet, and if at any time during my stay with you, you should check upon me, I will, by the help of God, respond to your call."

These remarks were handsomely responded to by Dr. Ralston, in behalf of the Conference.

Dr. A. H. Redford, agent of the Publishing House at Nashville, presented his annual exhibit, showing the profits of the Publishing House the past year to be eighteen thousand dollars, and that the debt of the establishment has been reduced from $89,000 to $49,000.

Of the brethren transferred from South Carolina, Rev. C. Taylor remains at Kentucky Wesleyan University, Rev. H. A. C. Walker is at Carrollton and Rev. J. W. Wightman is at Cynthiana. Rev. R. A. Holland goes to Baltimore and is stationed at Trinity church.— Southern Christian Advocate.

THE following, quoted by an official authority from a semi-official statement, is the French bill of cost for war since the accession of the present Emperor:

Crimean war	£53,920,000
Italian war	13,800,000
Chinese war	6,610,000
Occupation of Rome	2,000,000
Occupation of Syria	1,120,000
Supplementary expenses	3,560,000
Total	£81,040,000

There is a trifle of £24,000,000 for the Mexican expedition not included in this statement, which raises the total to about 105 millions sterling.

Assassination of General Hindman.

ARREST OF THE ALLEGED MURDERER.

The Memphis Avalanche of the 29th gives the following details of this cold-blooded murder:

A most atrocious murder has been committed on one of the noblest and bravest men of the whole South, who, in the deadliest of the fight, showing his prowess in battle, and his fearlessness in his devotion to the Southern cause, had none to excel him. We allude to the gallant Gen. Thomas C. Hindman, of Helena, Arkansas, who on Sunday night fell by the hand of the assassin. All the particulars to be obtained are embraced in the following special dispatch, received at this office last night:

HELENA, Arkansas, Sept. 28.—Gen Thomas C. Hindman was assassinated at his residence, in the midst of his family, at ten o'clock last night. He was shot through a window, near which he was sitting, with a musket loaded with buck and ball. He was smoking at the time. The left hand, in which he held his pipe, was carried away, and two balls, passed through his neck, severing the windpipe and producing copious internal bleeding. He lived eight hours, and died with sublime courage and resignation. A deep gloom has been cast upon the community.

He was a formidable enemy of Radicalism, and suspicions exist that his assassination was procured through political causes. All quiet here to-day.

Yesterday Deputy Sheriff Maxey was killed, and two of his posse wounded in attempting to arrest the notorious murderer, Lee Morsen, colored. Morsen was afterward captured and hung, whites and blacks present sanctioning it. General Hindman had no connection whatever with the affair.

M. T. SANDERS,
Editor Clarion.

Between twelve and one o'clock yesterday a dispatch was received at police headquarters announcing the murder. It also contained a description of a man named Robertson, who, it is said, left for St. Louis on the steamer H. M. Shreve, an hour and a half after the tragedy.

The Shreve passed up at noon. Upon reaching the levee, with Detective McCune, Col. Beaumont found the tug Nettie Jones, Capt. Ford, whose services were at once secured. She steamed away after the Shreve, overhauling her above the island, and by signaling bringing her to a halt. Once aboard, a search was instituted for Robertson, who was readily identified by the description. With him were his family and household furniture, all en route, he said, to Springfield, Missouri, where he resided.

He received his arrest with the utmost composure, and not only stoutly denied any knowledge of the horrid crime with which he stood charged, but feigned ignorance of it having been committed, although the fact was well known to everybody else aboard, and had naturally been the subject of much comment. From his own statements to the officers, he has been about Helena for the past six months, although old residents of the place, with whom we conversed last night, know nothing of him. He is pale, has black hair, is about thirty-two years old, and five feet five inches high. When arrested he had a rusty repeater, three of whose chambers contained balls. The tug returned with the prisoner, and his wife and child, about four o'clock. They were placed on the Luminary and sent back to Helena.

ARRIVAL OF BISHOP MARVIN.

Bishop Marvin arrived by the steamer Constitution on Wednesday evening. We are glad to announce that his health is good. He will occupy the pulpit of the Minna street church next Sabbath, when our people will have the opportunity of enjoying the ministrations of one of the ablest and most eloquent preachers in Christendom.

The bishop reports the church in the East in a prosperous condition. His presence, and the good news he brings, will cheer our people under their trials and discouragements, while we trust his labors will result in the salvation of many souls on the Pacific coast.— San Francisco Spectator.

NEGROES PUT IN.—WHITE MEN PUT OUT.

The following, from the Crescent of Oct. 1, will give some idea of what it is costing a man to be loyal in Louisiana:

Our model Legislature did another neat thing yesterday. In the election last April Messrs. Chaney and Huguet, two Democrats, were elected to seats in the House from the parish of East Baton Rouge. Two mulattoes, brothers, named Lange, contested the election, and the case was referred to the House elections committee. Yesterday the committee reported. The majority recommended that as Messrs. Huguet and Chaney had each been elected by a majority of over seven hundred votes, and as the two charges brought against them by their opponents of ineligibility and fraud in the conduct of the election had not been substantiated, they be confirmed in their seats. Two darkies on the committee dissented from this and recommended to the House that they unseat the Democrats and seat the mulattoes, as fraud had been allowed in the balloting, while yet another negro of the committee, Burrell, asked the House to order a new election. Now what would any reasonable man expect the House to do but to sustain the action of the majority of their committee, who after ample investigation, running over three months, had declared the charges against the Democrats unfounded? The House, by a vote of 30 to 22, adopted the report of the two darky committee men, and decided that the mulatto contestants who had been beaten, should take the seats of the men who had beaten them.

In vain McMillan, one of the shrewdest of all the members, urged them to recall their foolish action; in vain he pointed out to them the folly and criminality of their course, and showed in the strongest lights the impolicy and wickedness of thus blindly disregarding everything but temporary party expediency. "Whom the gods wish to destroy they first make mad," and turning a deaf ear to McMillan's exhortations, refusing to listen to anything but the plea of the contestants that the party must be sustained, refusing to see anything but that the gentlemen elected were white men and Democrats, and the men wanting their seats were mulattoes and Radicals, the House expelled Messrs. Huguet and Chaney, and in five minutes afterward swore in the two colored men!

Serious Disturbance in Opelousas.

NEW IBERIA, Sept. 30.—On the 28th inst., at two o'clock P. M., a riot occurred at Opelousas.

Mr. Dunbar, postmaster at Grand Coteau, arrived last night and reports that the riot was caused by a personal difficulty between two white men.

The negroes threatened to burn the town, when the whites armed themselves and sent a party of nine to search a house near the town where arms and ammunition were reported to be stored.

They were allowed to search peaceably, and when they had finished, mounted their horses to return, when they were fired upon by negroes ambushed near by.

One white man was killed and four wounded. The whites returned the fire, dispersing the negroes.

Twelve M.—A dispatch just received here from Opelousas says the rioters were dispersed yesterday morning.

The number of colored dead is unknown.

After their rout the subordinate officers of the negroes claimed protection of the whites, which was granted.

The whites had one killed; number of wounded unknown.

The above is the most reliable information we can obtain.

THE DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION.—This assembly met yesterday in the hall of the Deutsche Company, corner of Bienvillo street and Exchange alley. The attendance was large and the personnel most impressive. There were the representative men of the old Whig and Democratic parties in their palmy days. Many, whose faces were familiar in the councils and high offices of the State years ago, but who have not been seen in any public assembly since the war, were present to give the benefit of their counsel, their example and experience to the conservative party of the State in the present great crisis of our affairs.— New Orleans Times.

BISHOP ANDREW.

Since our last issue we have received a letter from Bishop Andrew, dated Summerfield, September 8: "I am here, by God's mercy, in feebleness of age; but still able to do a little in my Master's vineyard. I trust my gracious Saviour will accept the imperfect offering. I have attended during the summer seven district meetings, and shall, if God permit, visit another during this month. If I am able I want to visit my old friends in Nashville once more—perhaps this winter." It is needless to say that the bishop's numerous friends in Tennessee would be delighted with a visit from him. The following letter from the venerable bishop, dated August 26, and published in the Southern Christian Advocate of September 11, will be read with interest:

Immediately after our commencement at Summerfield I left for a trip through some portion of Georgia. I went first to Columbus, where I spent the Sabbath, and endeavored to preach twice—once in each of the churches. I sat in both cases. On Monday I left for Macon, and was there in time for the services of the Wesleyan Female College commencement. I had not, for many years, attended on a similar occasion there—I believe never since my removal to Alabama. It was a pleasant visit to me. I was warmly greeted by scores of old friends, and had, besides, the pleasure of witnessing one of the best exhibitions that I have ever witnessed anywhere. In the earlier days of the history of this institution I had witnessed with deep solicitude its struggles for existence, and had sympathized with its friends in their alternations of hope and fear. I recollect, on one occasion, during our dark days, when it seemed that we must, of necessity, be driven to the wall, I was walking, one evening, in company with the beloved Hodges, when I said to him, "Hodges, I can't see how we are ever to save this college; we have so much debt to pay and so little prospect of ever being able to pay it." I shall never forget his calm reply: "I have concluded not to distress myself any more about it. When we built this college we gave it to God, and now," said he, "it is God's property, and we must let him manage its affairs." Upon that principle we acted, and God has managed it well. The college has lived through all its dark days, and is now prospering, dispensing its blessings to hundreds of the daughters of the church, and sending out annually into society large classes of well-educated and pious young women, who are dispensing light and godly influence throughout all the land. May it continue its godly work to the end of time! —Nashville Christian Advocate.

BISHOP EARLY.

The Richmond Christian Advocate, of September 10, says: "Bishop Early was in attendance at the meeting of the Committee of Elections for Randolph Macon College. He was in comfortable health, and showed a deep interest in behalf of the college at its new location. He was emphatic in his opinions as to the great advantages to be secured by this movement. He left the city for the Danville district conference, where he will direct the deliberations of that body." The Lynchburg Virginian, of September 11, says that the bishop held the Danville Conference — an harmonious session.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

BISHOP PAINE.

Bishop Paine writes us that his health continues to improve, though he regains his strength but slowly. He expects, however, to hold the North Georgia Conference, which meets at Griffin, December 2, and the South Georgia, which meets at Albany, December 16. He expects Bishop Wightman, as arranged by the bishops, to preside at the Holston Conference, which meets at Knoxville, October 21.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

OLD VIRGINIA TO VOTE.—The Radicals, who are now much exercised over the letter of Mr. Pendleton to the Texans, respecting the exercise of their constitutional privilege in voting for President, will howl when they know the Virginians will vote; that election arrangements have already been perfected with that view, and that the Old Dominion will cast her ten electoral votes for Seymour and Blair.

WE go up the hill of life like a boy with his sled after him, and go down it like a boy with his sled under him.

NOTICE.

COLORED CONFERENCE OF THE M. E. CHURCH SOUTH.

The Rev. Thos. Taylor, the superintendent of the colored work in the bounds of the Louisiana and Mississippi Conferences, gives notice that there will be a Conference of all colored preachers belonging to our church in these bounds, to be held at Hazlehurst on the 18th of December—to be presided over by one of the bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

A letter just received from him requests this notice to be given. The plan adopted by the last General Conference of our church, of setting the colored preachers off in Conferences to themselves, has worked well in Tennessee under the supervision of Bishop Paine. We hope that the colored people of the South may be rescued from the hands of men who are strangers to them, and be led back into those religious associations which were instrumental in first bringing them to God. The welfare of the South and of the colored man are to be equally advanced by the formation of such a Conference.

ILLINOIS.

Mr. William E. Shutt, mayor of Springfield, Illinois, and chairman of the Committee on Invitation, has our hearty acknowledgment for an invitation to attend the laying of the corner stone of the new State House of Illinois, to take place on the 5th of October next.

The Late Rev. W. P. Ratcliffe.

The Arkansas Christian Advocate says:

The unexpected decease of this lamented co-laborer was recently announced by us. He fell with his harness on, suddenly summoned, but graciously prepared for the exchange of worlds. A faithful co-laborer, held in high repute by all who knew him, we mourn his loss. The following extract from a letter of his son, Mr. W. C. Ratcliffe, of Little Rock, will be read with tender interest:

My father died at his post. He seemed to be impressed deeply with a sense of his approaching end. He had felt for several weeks that his labor was too much for him, and anticipated giving it up after completing his trip then in progress. When about fifty miles from the place where he died, he felt unwell, and was asked not to proceed. He remarked that it was his duty to go, and if he thought that death awaited him there he would mount his horse and ride to it, without the least fear but that all would be well. He talked of dying frequently during the trip. Sunday evening he preached his last sermon; he was taken sick immediately afterwards, and died in a few days. His text was appropriate: 'For we know, that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.' To those who knew him personally, have witnessed his faith in God in all circumstances, and seen his every action begun and ended in prayer, there is presented something more than an accidental circumstance in his selecting the above text.—Bible Society Record.

THE Pall Mall Gazette believes a general European war will be inaugurated this fall. Of the two French official papers, one talks peace, and the other, inspired from the same imperial source, prophesies war. Napoleon seems bent on extending his eastern frontier, to balance the increased power of Prussia—or, rather, of Germany, which Prussia now represents. He may have an eye also to Belgium, at least eventually. It is most unfortunate for this latter country that the only son of the king is ill beyond, we believe, all hope of recovery. The king's brother has also no heir, and the dynasty is threatened with extinction.

RECENT letters received from the northern and southern stations of Greenland, dated the last days in March, report that the missionaries and their families are well, but that much sickness prevails among the Greenlanders. The winter had been severe and stormy, and the catch of seals, etc., small. The attendance at church and school had been good, LIFE LEAVES.

The following poem is touchingly beautiful. Many an eye will be dimmed by a tear as it reads these lines, and the thoughts go wandering away to "memory's wildwood."

The day, with its sandals dipped in dew,
Has passed through the evening's golden gates;
And a single star in the cloudless blue
For the rising moon in silence waits.
While the winds that sigh to the languid hours
A lullaby breathe o'er the folded flowers.

The lilies nod to the sound of the stream
That winds along with lulling flow;
And either awake, or half adream,
I passed through the realms of Long Ago;
While faces peer with many a smile
From the bowers of Memory's magical isle.

There are joys and sunshine, sorrows and tears,
That check the path of life's April hours;
And a long wish for the coming years,
That hope ever wreaths with the fairest flowers;
There are friendships guileless—love as bright
And pure as stars in the halls of night.

There are ashen memories, bitter pain,
And buried hopes and a broken vow,
And an aching heart by the reckless main,
And the sea breeze fanning a pallid brow;
And a wanderer on the shell-lined shore
Listening for voices that speak no more.

There are passions strong and ambition wild,
And the fierce desire to stand in the van
Of the battle of life—and the heart of the child
Is crushed in the breast of the struggling man;
But short are the regrets and few are the tears
That fall at the tomb of the banished years.

There is a quiet, and peace, and domestic love,
And joys arising from faith and truth,
And a truth unquestioning, far above
The passionate dreamings of ardent youth;
And kisses of children on lip and cheek,
And the parent's bliss which no tongue can speak.

There are loved ones lost! There are little graves
In the distant dell 'neath protecting trees,
Where the streamlet winds and the violet waves,
And the grasses sway to the sighing breeze;
And we mourn for pressure of tender lips,
And the light of eyes darkened in death's eclipse.

And thus, as the glow of the daylight dies,
And the night's first look to the earth is cast,
I gaze 'neath those beautiful summer skies,
At the pictures that hang in the halls of the past.
Oh, Sorrow and Joy, chant a mingled lay
When to memory's wildwood we wander away.

THE PASTORAL OFFICE.

MR. EDITOR: At a district meeting of the Mobile Conference, held at Dayton on the 7th of September, 1868, the accompanying report on the subject of "The Pastoral Office and Duties," presented by the Rev. Josiah Barker, was adopted and ordered to be published in the ADVOCATE:

"Every true pastor receives his vocation from the great Shepherd and Bishop of Souls; and he himself has declared that he who climbs to this high office in any other way is 'a thief and a robber.' He who appoints the shepherd of the flock designs him his place in it. 'He goeth before the sheep, calling them by name.' Being well acquainted with every member of the flock, he becomes their exemplar, as well as their guide and defender. Hence it will be conceded at once that no one should dare to take upon him this 'office and ministry' who is not versed in the deep things of God.

"Jeremiah, speaking of Gospel days, says, in the name of Jehovah: 'I will give you pastors according to my heart, which shall feed you with knowledge and understanding.'—Jere. iii, 15.

"The ministers of the word should, then, be godly men, taking the oversight of the flock not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind; neither as being lords over God's heritage, but being ensamples to their flocks.

"But as it is declared to be the duty of the pastors not only to go before the sheep as exemplars, but also to 'feed them with knowledge and understanding,' it becomes a question of vital interest how he shall divide his time between the duties of study and pastoral visitation. 'The priest's lips must keep knowledge;' and he who neglects the cultivation of his intellectual powers has no right to expect that his two talents will gain other two. He who would have the approval of heaven must be 'a minister that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth, that he may give to every man his portion in due season.' The days prophesied of are upon us when 'men run to and fro, and knowledge is increased.' And here we put in a plea, in mitigation of complaint and damages, in favor of some of the pastors and preachers of our own church.—The mantle of Elijah has fallen upon many an Elisha while he was plowing with oxen in the field. Some of our Levis, sitting at the receipt of custom, have heard the voice of the Redeemer saying: 'Follow me.' Not a few of our Simon Peters have gone into the ministry immediately from mending their nets, 'for they were fishers.' These have received no supernatural or miraculous endowment qualifying them for the ministry of the word, and they have sadly lamented their want of qualification for the high office to which they had been called. It is not surprising that these should be admonished by St. Paul to 'give attention to reading.' Nor can we fully defend the indiscriminate censure which has been visited upon this class of our ministers, especially when we remember how difficult it is for uneducated adults to acquire the habit of successful application to study. The church, however, is awakening, to some extent, to its duty in this respect, and the opportunities of education are offered to our young ministers more freely now than in former years. The economy of our church recognizes an order of sub pastors, who in former times made up, in a great measure, the lack of pastoral service of our regular ministry, who were overtaxed by study or the numerous calls from the destitute places for the bread of life. It is to be greatly lamented that in many places we may say of the class leader: his 'occupation's gone.' In this particular it would be well for us to 'stand in the way, and see and inquire for the old paths, that we may walk therein.'

"But another deficiency in pastoral service arises from the fact that so many of our ministers feel authorized to add to the scanty subsistence afforded by the church by a partial resort to secular vocations. Perhaps no class of ministers have acquired the virtue of economy to the same extent as the ministers of our church, and certainly none have had more urgent necessity for its practice. And yet it would become us, in more distressful hours than have yet fallen upon us, to maintain an unfaltering trust in God, and cherish an abiding confidence in the devout, successful men of the church, remembering what is written in the sixth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles: 'Then the twelve called the multitude of the disciples unto them, and said, it is not reason that we should leave the word of God and serve tables; wherefore, brethren, look ye out among you seven men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom, whom we may appoint over this business. But we will give ourselves continually to prayer and to the ministry of the word.' We are more and more assured, by each year's experience, that the man whom God has appointed embassador for Christ should do the work that heaven assigns him, and no other. 'Fervent piety is the life and soul of the pastoral work;' and this cannot well be maintained by those who, in the pulpit, preach faith in God and in his providence, and distrust of God in their daily avocations. Our Master multiplied the loaves and fishes for the famishing multitude, and paid his taxes with money taken from the fish's mouth; and these acts of his were sermons which he intended we should repeat to ourselves as long as the church needs its ministry.

"The church of the present day would require a great accession of piety and zeal before it could endure a pastor after the apostolic model. Yet we venture to hold up the example of the greatest Apostle for our imitation, however much we may fall short of that illustrious model. Happy that pastor who, when leaving his charge, can use the language or appropriate the sentiment of St. Paul's farewell address to the Ephesian elders: 'Ye know, from the first day that I came into Asia, after what manner I have been with you at all seasons, serving the Lord with all humility of mind, and with many tears and temptations which befell me: and how I kept back nothing that was profitable to you, but have showed you, and have taught you publicly, and from house to house. Therefore, watch and remember, that by the space of three years I ceased not to warn every one of you, night and day, with tears.' Surely we may say, most solemnly, what so often we have sung unthinkingly:

"'Tis not a cause of small import
The pastor's care demands;
But what might fill an angel's heart,
And filled a Saviour's hands."

Truly yours,

LEVI W. REEVES,
Secretary.

CHINA GROVE CAMP MEETING.

MR. EDITOR: This camp ground is located in Dale county, Alabama, near the China Grove Academy, and was built by the united effort of the Geneva and Haw Ridge circuits, in the Marianna district. These two circuits are entitled to much credit for the energy displayed in erecting so large and commodious a camp ground. Everything was done upon a substantial and broad basis. The meeting commenced on Friday night, September 11th, and closed on Wednesday morning, at sunrise, September 16th. The attendance was immense, there being over three thousand persons on the ground on Sunday. Not only were all the tents on the square full—and they were large—but the cloth and wagon tents, numbering over one hundred, were also full. Although the attendance was so large, the order of the people was according to the highest rules of decorum, for there was neither drunkenness nor disorder seen. The people came to hear the Gospel preached and to worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness; and they had the gospel of the grace of God preached in purity and great power. The first sermon was preached, in the true spirit of the blessed Jesus, by the Rev. E. J. Hamill, agent of the Auburn Male College. The next day, at eleven o'clock, Bishop Wightman preached one of his master sermons. At three P. M. Dr. Ellison, of Clayton, gave us one of his spirited, stirring sermons. On Sunday, at eleven A. M., the bishop held the immense audience completely in hand for one hour and ten minutes, and closed amid the profoundest feelings, expressed by "amens" from hundreds of joyful lips, intermingled with the exultant "glory be to God," and sobs and sighs from many convicted hearts. Thus I might go on, and even return upon the preaching at this camp meeting, and speak in praise of every effort, from the first to the last; but this would occupy too much time, and might worry the patience of some. Suffice it to say that every sermon was the pure Gospel, and was accompanied by the power of the Holy Ghost; consequently the church was built up in the faith that works by love, and purifies the heart. The last night of the meeting the sacrament of the Lord's supper was administered to about one hundred and fifty communicants. As yet I have not learned how many conversions there were, though I think between forty and fifty, for I counted fifteen the last night.

In conclusion, allow me to say, particularly and emphatically, that the tour of Bish. Wightman through this portion of the State has already told out decidedly, upon the Methodist church in particular, and the country in general, for great good. In this section his labors were highly appreciated and abundantly fruitful, and the whole country would hail with inexpressible delight another such visit.

Another camp meeting will be held at the same place, embracing the second Sabbath in September next.

VICKSBURG DISTRICT MEETING.

FAYETTE, Miss., Sept. 19, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: This district meeting assembled at Fayette, on Thursday, September 17th. J. G. Jones, presiding elder ad interim, acted as chairman, and Thomas Reed as secretary. The meeting, in committee of the whole, amply discussed the various church interests which came before it, and requested the chairman and secretary to prepare a brief synopsis of their decisions for publication in our official ADVOCATE, which is submitted, as follows:

1. In regard to the spiritual state of the church. While with thankful hearts we saw many indications of sincere and fervent piety to encourage us, we were nevertheless compelled to acknowledge a great want of spirituality in too many of our members as manifested by their neglect of family prayer, the social meetings of the church, and too often the more public means of grace. They should everywhere be earnestly exhorted to return to the "old paths."

2. Sabbath schools are indispensable auxiliaries in the religious training of our children, but were never intended to supersede parental instruction at home, nor to interfere with the attendance of the children on the regular public preaching of the Gospel. While it was admitted that there may be some neglect of our Sabbath school interests on the part of [illegible] pastors, the greatest hindrance is not in the want of children willing to attend, or in procuring suitable books, but in securing the services of the laity as regular officers and teachers in our Sabbath schools. The Sunday School Visitor was declared to be in every way worthy of our patronage, and we should place it in the hands of every Sabbath school scholar.

3. In the judgment of the meeting our church periodicals are not as much patronized in this district as their intrinsic merits and importance demand. While it was, with unanimity, affirmed that our members may be edified by reading any of our church periodicals, yet they were recommended, first of all, to take the New Orleans and Nashville Christian Advocates, not only on account of their high merit, but also on account of their official relation to our Conference. The Home Monthly, as a pure and elevated family magazine, was most highly commended by the few who read it in our district, and its speedy introduction into every Methodist family recommended.

4. As our Annual Conference had requested each district meeting to report a plan of finance for the better support of the ministry, Brother R. D. Howe, of Vicksburg, who had been previously appointed for that purpose, presented a plan which, after full discussion, was unanimously adopted, and its publication in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE requested. It is herewith submitted for publication.

5. The subject of education was amply discussed in committee of the whole—Rev. W. H. Watkins, president of Centenary College, and Rev. H. F. Johnson, president of Whitworth Female College, taking an active part therein. It was decided that, in view of the continued predominance and usefulness of our race over inferior races, we should aspire to a high standard of intellectual culture; that we should, both by our money and patronage, sustain our denominational institutions, and that we in this district should especially turn our favorable attention to Centenary College, Whitworth Female College, and the Port Gibson Female Collegiate Institute, on account of their proximity to this district, as well as their high merit. In connection with the subject of education it was also decided that, in view of the advanced and continually advancing literary culture of the age, our young men preparing for the ministry should be required to take a corresponding literary elevation; and that our Annual Conference should inaugurate some efficient plan to aid them in this matter.

The subject of missions was thought to be sufficiently provided for in the Discipline.

A resolution was passed requesting our ministers to preach more distinctly and frequently the doctrines of our church, and to expose those of an opposite character.

The presiding elder of the district, after consultation with the official members, is to appoint the time and place of our next meeting.

The following lay delegates, with their alternates, were elected: R. D. Howe; alternate, Thomas Hackett; George Barnes; alternate, Alexander Cameron; Wm. J. Lum; alternate, Samuel McClellan; Thos. Reed; alternate, E. S. Drake.

LETTER FROM SELMA.

SELMA, Ala., Sept. 15, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: Enclosed I send you some resolutions, which you will please publish. We have completed our church-house. Our good friends here at home opened their great hearts, and gave us all the money necessary—$650. We have many liberal hearts in our midst. I must mention the names of Professor Chapman, a Northern gentleman, and Major C. G. Thomas, a Southerner, and the efficient superintendent of our Sunday school, as exemplars of liberality. The former, assisted by the latter, gave a course of lessons in the famous Spencerian system of writing, the proceeds of which amounted to $400. They gave $350 of this to our church. May they live long to do good, and wear the unfading crown above.

The house is very comfortable, and evidences skill and taste on the part of Brother R., the faithful workman, who is not a bit behind the most cheerful givers. If you ever pass this way, stop, look and preach. Brother Thrash is still looking heavenward—almost home. He says he sold you the first horse you ever rode, as a "circuit rider," in the cane-brake regions in this State.

There is some prosperity in the church this year. The Sunday school is doing well. The people everywhere are taking more interest in this great cause than ever before, it seems. I will never forget the remark of our dear venerable senior Bishop Andrew, in his short, sweet talk to the little folks here, last spring. The people, said he, seem to have a kind of a Sunday school mania. We regard this as a sign of better times spiritually. O, for a revival like the one the Wesleys set in motion in 1739. Let the church pray for it, for the man's hand cloud is seen by the servants while the Elijahs are praying. May Jesus be in it, and expand it rapidly, and pour it upon the land.

The weather is quite warm.—There is much sickness everywhere. The crops are good in some sections—very short in others.—Enough will be made to keep the people alive.

R. E. CARY.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE WATER STREET METHODIST CHURCH, SELMA.

SELMA, September 13, 1868.

WHEREAS, An all-wise Providence has seen proper, in his wisdom and mercy, to take from our midst, on last night, at eleven o'clock, our dearly loved Sabbath school scholar, George Burdick, in his twelfth year; therefore

Resolved, That while we willingly submit to this righteous dispensation of God's providence, we deeply mourn the loss of little George.

Resolved, That in his death this school has lost one of its most devoted members—a model of youthful piety.

Resolved, That we prepare to meet him in heaven.

Resolved, That we attend the funeral this evening, at three o'clock.

Resolved, That we extend the hand of sympathy to the greatly bereaved family, and furnish them with a copy of these resolutions.

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the journal of the Sabbath school, and published in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and Selma Times.

THE woman who fails to reform a man of the habit of drinking while engaged to him, will have a mighty task to do so after marriage. Think of this, young women. Better remain single than marry a man that loves liquor.

LETTER FROM A VETERAN OF 1812

PARISH OF OUACHITA, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: I do expect and think I am the oldest man that is a subscriber to and for your useful paper. I have been a reader of the paper from its first existence, and I hope to be a reader of it as long as my eyes will see to read any paper. I admire its doctrine, and for the first time I ask you to put anything into your paper.

My brother, I am eighty-four years old. I was one of the veterans that helped the British army from our coast—yea, from New Orleans. I am one who yet lives that helped to disappoint them of their hopes to take New Orleans. I helped to fight from the 23d of December, 1814, to January, 1815; and on the 7th of January, 1815, I got a severe wound in my thigh, getting it torn and shattered almost to shreds. In consequence I have been a cripple ever since. Notwithstanding, I made out to procure, by the blessing of God, a plentiful living, for I ascribe all things as coming from him, as all is his, and he bestows on whom he pleases, for weal or for woe.

Now, my brother, I think I see an act of the Congress of the United States granting pensions quite liberally; also by the Legislature of the State of Louisiana. I ask you to observe and see if the enactments of either will reach my case, or meet it for good. The veterans of the war of 1812 are now but few. If either of the acts of Congress or of the Legislature of the State, of which I was once proud to be a citizen, can be beneficial to me, I would like to know it. I hope the pension laws will be made plain and easy to be understood. Inserting them in the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE will not have a tendency to decrease the circulation of your paper.

I hope you will make a large allowance for poor writing. Once, in days long since gone, I was quite a fair scribe. But those days are gone.

It may be you are curious to know my age, as I was one of the veterans who fought the British on the plains of Chalmette. I am eighty-four years of age. I have been in Louisiana sixty years last March. I have been a member of the Methodist Church sixty-nine years. I became awakened, and, I believe, converted at a camp meeting in Marlborough District, South Carolina, in my seventeenth year. I do pray the good Lord to interfere and give us better times.

Prior to the late war I had plenty, and some to spare. But during the war the acts of both parties pressed on me, and the end of the war found me penniless and dependent. But I claim to be an heir to a rich Father, who has in store for me plenty. When I get home I hope to enjoy it. I thank my God and Father that his heirs do not have to wait for his death to enter into the possession of that exhaustless fortune which is in store for you and me. If we live right and die right we shall rise triumphant, and meet the Lord in the air, and join the blood-washed throng, and sing of redeeming love.

JOHN T. FOULK.

FAILING EYES.—Persons suffering from dyspepsia, or any other malady, must take care of their eyes. Any disease impairs the strength, and the nervous system is depressed; and when laboring under this form of depression the eye is particularly liable to become weak. The reason of this is, that 'of the ten nerves which go off from the brain, six are distributed wholly, and the other four partially, to the eye.' Through the great sympathetic nerve, the disturbed stomach, or liver, or intestines, communicate with telegraphic speed with the brain, and so with the eye. The first advice to be given with reference to the comfortable use of the eyes undoubtedly is, to keep the intestines and liver and stomach in a healthy condition; in other words, do everything to confirm the general health. If this be impaired, do not read, and especially do not write long, without giving the eye rest. The great remedy for an eye whose disease depends upon the nerve, and not the muscle, is rest! rest! rest!

THERE is a quiet influence which, like the flame of a lamp, fills many a home with light and fragrance.

MY FIELD.

The night had come: the moonlight whitely lay
Athwart the field where I had sowed all day
Seed I should ne'er behold
Waving its harvest gold.

Nought even showed that seed was hidden there;
In pallid light lay furrows long and bare;
No blade, no leaf was seen
Signing its promise green.

And on the shore the little shallop lay
Which in the morn must bear me far away
Where I might never know
Whether the seed did grow.

And if I wept, 'twas none but God could see
How much the hope of harvest was to me.
He sent his angel down
My trembling trust to crown.

His gentle angel led me by the hand
Until we stood upon the bare, sown land,
And then he turned and smiled
With eyes serene and mild.

"Behold," he said," to still thy human fear,
In one short hour will God unfold the year."
And as he spoke the word
The barren clods were stirred.

And tiny blades crept out into the light,
And grew, and grew before my wondering sight,
And then the ears were seen,
Long-bearded, full and green.

And while I watched the waving grain, behold
The heads went down with weight of ripened gold;
The angel said, "The Lord
Shall give thee this reward.

"Fear not to get thee hence across the sea,
In harvest time I'll bind thy sheaves for thee.
Thy field may ripen late;
Fear not, but trust and wait."

A little cloud sailed by and hid the moon;
My angel comforter was gone too soon—
A tremor blurred the air;
Again my field lay bare;

Except that near me, close beside my feet,
Remained one handful of the golden wheat;
God's token that for me
Rich harvest yet should be.

And in my bosom, cherished, loved, behold
These precious ears of sacred harvest gold.
Such fruit my field shall bear—
I leave it in God's care. —Galaxy.

PATRONIZE CHURCH SCHOOLS.

THEY ARE THE SAFEST.

Mr. Editor: It is to be feared that many of our people do not appreciate the superior value of our well-ordered church institutions, over all others, in regard to their religious advantages and their care in guarding the morals of the pupils. On these points let me cite a case or two. The most popular private school in this State is located three miles from the nearest Methodist church, and, I think, also that distance from any church. It is not made the duty of pupils to attend church, of course, at that distance. The consequence is that many, if not most, of the boys do not attend church once in three months. What religious services they may have at the school I am not advised.

Another private school, much praised in the papers, is located further from town and church than the one alluded to above, and from its seclusion it is supposed to be a very safe place. But a friend of mine sent a son to it last year, and has since had reason to know, to his grief and horror, that he contracted the habit of swearing and drinking while at the school. The boys were in the habit of going to an adjacent town, where an illicit traffic in whisky was carried on, to buy "kerosene," and there they bought whisky by the gallon. Would not the principal of a church institution, if he had been fit for the place, have known whether the boys were in their rooms at proper hours, and whether they brought kerosene or whisky in their jugs? So I think.

But, Mr. Editor, a man who determines to have a school popular with the outside world cannot afford to watch boys too closely, or to maintain too rigid a discipline.

Brethren and parents, patronize the institutions of the church.—You will find it safest in the end. The heads of such schools are put there because they can be trusted.

WATCHMAN.

It is said that among the two million people by whom Jeddo, in Japan, is inhabited, there is not a beggar in the streets, not a ruffian. The women are beautiful, the men are robust and energetic; there is no trouble about fashions; education is universal, books are plentiful, though there are no newspapers; life is simple and easy; marriage is universal, and the children go naked.

Successful Ministerial Workers.

Some time during each annual session of the British Wesleyan Conference, one day is devoted to exercises bearing specially and directly upon the spiritual prosperity of the societies. The president calling upon members, Mr. Thomas Vasey was next called upon. The principle upon which he entered the ministry was that from that time it would be his business to save souls; and ever since then, whenever he had been any length of time without visible success, he had felt that he was wasting time, that he was useless, and he thought and felt that a useless Methodist preacher was above all things the greatest piece of lumber in the world. He had gone home many a time on a Sunday night when he had seen no results, feeling just like a tradesman who had stood all day behind his counter, and had not a single customer or taken a single penny. He supposed that a tradesman put into that position for a few weeks would soon give up his business; and that was just his feeling. Whenever he had labored as he thought in vain, he felt as if he had not got into the right line, and that he had missed his way. He had suffered more on this account than he could describe. He had never been tempted to infidelity or to doubt the doctrines of Holy Scripture; he had had singularly clear perception and apprehension of the doctrines of the Gospel; but he had been tempted to infidelity in some of its most revolting and blasphemous forms after laboring for some time without visible results. He felt then like a physician who had prescribed for his patients and yet saw them dying out of his hands on all sides, and the temptations he had had on that ground had surpassed all he had suffered in any other way whatever. He had many a time wished to die, and many a time asked to die. If he had not had a very decided call he would have given up long since. But he could not revoke the position he had received without first going to him from whom he had received it. He had gone to him and he asked him either to take him to heaven or to send him to some other post of duty where he could feel that he was doing the will of God, and was in his providential path. Two years ago the Conference had sent him to Newcastle—the last place to which he would have chosen to go, and an invitation to which he had refused; but he accepted the designation, and he went with the determination to do all the good he could. Shortly after his arrival he began to preach a course of sermons on the beatitudes. In preaching on that text, "Blessed are the poor in spirit," his sermon was applied to him as strongly as if somebody else had spoken it to him, and he felt that he must just be content to let God fill him and use him. That had been his motto and maxim during the two years he had been in Newcastle. He had been enabled, by the grace of God, to keep to that point, and when he had been the most poor in spirit he had been the most enriched with spiritual influences, and had been made the most useful in the work of God. He had endeavored to work upon two principles. He valued the conversion of a soul, under whatever circumstances that conversion might be brought about; and he liked public conversions. He liked to see people getting into classes, going to other people and inquiring about religion, and in a quiet and unobserved manner connecting themselves with the cause of God, but he thought that for all aggressive purposes a single public conversion was worth half a dozen of those private ones. He thought it had a very beneficial influence upon a congregation to see penitents, or in case there were no penitents to see that penitents were expected; in a word—if they would forgive the mercantile expression—it was a good thing to let the people see that they wanted to do business. In Newcastle they had seen some of the worst specimens of sinful humanity brought under the regenerating power of the Gospel. They had found that by securing the conversion of a few notoriously depraved and bad characters they had given people—worldly people who did not come to their chapels—an idea of the power of the Gospel such as they had never had before. On this account he went down into the lowest part of the town, gathered a small congregation together, and preached to them. Now, with him it was a maxim not to preach hell and damnation to such people, but always to take the most encouraging subject, such as the love of God, the power of the Holy Ghost, the possibility of their getting saved and elevated. He preached on that occasion from the healing of the demoniac child. There were some of the most notorious characters present—men of the worst possible type—and he tried to tell those people that if they would try to go to Christ he would help them, for Christ was stronger than the devil; the devil had taken advantage of them, and done them a great deal of mischief, but there was a chance after all of their getting to Christ. And when he had done he asked some of them who wished to get out of the grasp of the devil to come forward, and, to his surprise, some thirteen or fourteen of these fellows responded to the invitation and asked him to pray for them. He tried to get them to pray for themselves. They said: "Sir, we cannot pray. We never prayed afore. You mun tell us what to say." So he had to extemporize a little liturgy for them, and they repeated or shouted the words, crying aloud for mercy. One man, a great pugilist, whom nobody durst face, rose and said: "Friends, I sud'n't like ye ta' gang away withaught hearing me. I've gotten summat to-neet which if I nob-but keep I sal be a better man as long as I live." That man had been a very consistent character ever since.

People from miles round about went to these meetings to get converted; they had got an idea that the power of God was present, and they went back to their homes telling what great things God had done for them. That work had gone on with great steadiness, and they had now a very valuable society there that it would do anybody good to go and preach to. It was wonderful to see how those who used to be the most savage in the whole neighborhood, were now as tender, and quiet, and tractable as lambs. The way in which they would come to shake hands with him was something remarkable. A great fellow overtook him one day, as he was walking up the hill, and said: "Will yo' like ta have a lift?" and gave him his arm. (It must be explained that Mr. Vasey was at the time very much out of health.) And when they had gone a short distance the man said: "Nah, a' think y' had better stop a bit afore y' go onney farther, an' get yer breath." Now that was a man who had not a single refined idea about him before he was converted, and yet he was as tender toward him—Mr. Vasey—as a mother toward her child. Religion brought out the finer feelings and sensibilities of human nature, which they would fancy had been completely overlaid with diabolical and almost infernal passions and lusts.

For the sake of any good it might do, he would mention another thing. They had encouraged the people to do all the good they could, in their own way. He had said to them: "I expect every one of you to do all the work you can for the work of God. If you get your legs over the traces, I will pull you up directly, but till you do get wrong you must go on doing all the good you can for yourselves, every one of you." Those people, accordingly, without consulting him at all, were holding prayer meetings, and fellowship meetings, etc., and he believed that all the good that he could do was as nothing compared with what these people were doing. In every court and alley of the town they were stopping people, and talking to them about their souls.

Other members of the Conference, who were called out by the president, bore the general testimony that success came only to them as they made the ministry their only and their life work. Any turning aside to other employ, or any division of interest, operated invariably with an unfavorable influence on their efforts.—Western Christian Advocate.

The Chinese.—We have received a letter from an intelligent and public spirited citizen of Memphis, Tennessee, making inquiry concerning the feasibility of obtaining Chinese labor for the South. 'I see by the newspapers,' says the writer, 'that your people are, or seem to be, much disgusted with the Chinese. So be it. We want them. We want this steady, hard working people to put the South again on her feet. We want laborers for our deserted rice and sugar plantations; we want people who can and will work under our sun to make cotton, corn, etc. We can give employment to a million of men with adequate pay.'

This matter of Chinese labor for the South is destined to engage the attention of our business men and political economists. The similarity of climate and production of our Gulf States and a large portion of China is well known. Chinese laborers going to the South would reach there already acclimated, and would find in the rice and cotton fields congenial employment. The introduction of a few thousand by way of experiment might be a sensible procedure. When the great transcontinental railroad is completed, they can be sent at short notice from San Francisco; and, as our correspondent truly says, the Californians will spare them cheerfully. —San Francisco Spectator.

To be always intending to live a new life, but never to find time to set about it; is as if a man should put off eating and drinking from one day to another till he is starved or destroyed.

A BASIN OF SOUP.

In those dark, those pitch-dark ages, before side-dishes were invented, and when the majority of the half savage chasers of the mammoth lived on fullers'-earth and cold lizard, what would not a tyrant of Central Asia have given for a French cook—a Ude, a Francatelli, or a Careme? If such a man had then lived, would not Nasopilcheaver have instantly sent wagon loads of silk, rich cloths of gold and silver, chests of cinnamon, carts full of pearls and sapphires, to lure the great beneficent genius to his kingdom? Would he not have declared war on that rival king; and with spearmen, horsemen, battering-rams and other implements of war, have instantly marched on his city, given it to sword and fire, and carried off that illustrious stranger? And having got that great master under lock and key, would he not have threatened him with the most terrible death unless he instantly invented a dish lighter, more nutritious and more savory than any he had ever before devised? Immured in the hot and strong dungeon of King Nasopileheaver, could there be any doubt what new plat that mighty brain in the white night-cap would have conceived. What is the lightest, most nourishing, most wholesome, most savory, of all cooked food? Soup, of course.

Blessings on the man who invented soup! For it rejoices the tired stomach, disposes it to placidly digest, encourages the noble organ, and comes as a promise of future good things. It is a gentle experiment to test if the stomach be in sound working order. It contains the greatest amount of nourishment that can be taken with the least exertion. Chemically it is a wonder, (the cooks of the future will all be taught the elements of chemistry,) for broth, which is the humble father of soup, is literally an extract of all the soluble parts of meat. The ozmazome melts first; then the albumen. To make good soup, it is chemically necessary that the water boil slowly, so that the albumen may not coagulate in the center of the meat before being extracted. And the ebullition must be slow, so that the different ingredients of the extract may unite with each other easily and thoroughly.

A French epicurean writer of eminence asserts that ten solid volumes would not contain the recipes of all the soups which have been invented in those grand schools of good eating, the kitchens of Paris. The soup is to a dinner what the portico is to a mansion; it is not merely the first thing to which you come, but it also serves to give an idea of what the architect intends to do afterward; much as the overture of an opera conveys foreshadowing and glimpses of what is to follow. A simple dinner should have the prelude of a simple soup; which, however, requires to be perfect, and demands a care, patience and waiting watchfulness which good housewives are more likely to bestow than a professed cook. It has been often noticed by epicureans that thoroughly good soups are rare in great men's houses. The reason is, that the kitchen maids keep taking the soup for their ragout and side-dishes, and filling it up with water, till the crude adulteration has infected the whole. In small houses the soup is a principal object, and receives the most religious care. The chief fault in England is, that soups are over-spiced and under-vegetabled. They are also too hurried. By quick, violent boiling all the soluble and finest parts of the ingredients pass off in puffs of indignant steam, while the coarser parts only are retained in the solution. The process of soup making is a slow chemical process, and nature will not be hurried without having her revenge.

French cooks, in their versatile invention and restless desire to please and delight, give strange and striking names to their new dishes. They have "The Soup of the Good Woman," and, above all, "The Potage a la Jamhe du Bois (The Soup of the Wooden Leg.")

But the wooden leg is an after ingredient. Like most receipts of the first class, this one is horribly expensive; but, like most other expensive receipts, it is just as good made more economically.

Take a wooden leg—no, that is afterward. Procure a shin of beef, and put it in a pot, with three dozen carrots, a dozen onions, two dozen pieces of celery, twelve turnips, a fowl and two partridges. It must simmer six hours. Then get two pounds of fillet of veal, stew it, and pour the soup over the meat. Add more celery; then mix bread; and eventually serve up the soup with the shin-bone (the real wooden leg) emerging like the bowsprit of a wreck from the sea of vegetables.—All the Year Round.

Do little things as if they were great, because of the majesty of the Lord Jesus Christ, who dwells in thee; and do great things as if they were little and easy, because of his omnipotence.—Pascal.

MISSIONARY INTELLIGENCE.

AUSTRALASIA AND POLYNESIA.

On the Fiji Islands there are forty five native missionaries and assistant missionaries; six hundred and fifty three local preachers; one thousand and twenty five native day school teachers, and twenty-two thousand persons in church fellowship. There are thirty-six thousand schools, and ninety thousand who listen to the gospel of Christ. The church in Ban accommodates one thousand persons.

A missionary on Ponape, in Micronesia, speaks of having made a tour of the island, the people everywhere flocking together to hear his teachings, and giving the most undivided attention. A large district, headed by its chief, has lately embraced Christianity. The great mass of the people have abandoned heathenism, and there is scarcely a neighborhood where there are not praying people.

At Matua, on the Samoan Islands, is a well-regulated, self-supporting native seminary, which generally numbers ninety to one hundred students, and sends out annually, on an average, thirty well trained candidates for the ministry. The natives in each village have their own teacher, whom they support, besides contributing largely to the funds of the London Missionary Society.

In June of this year the General Association of the Churches in the Sandwich Islands was held, and the brethren from various fields of labor came together to sum up the results of their work. Of course, the men who had gone first to the islands were nearly all gone. But some of their descendants were there, and others had come to join in their toil, and help in the reaping of the harvest. Native ministers, too, had so multiplied that, with the delegates from the churches, they constituted nine-tenths of the body. Missionaries who had been sent out to Marquesas Islands, and to Micronesia, were there, to tell of the triumphs of the Gospel among the men to whom they had been sent. One, born in Portugal, and reared in the Church of Rome, but wandering far away as a sailor, and, in Honolulu, finding his way to the church, and, through the preaching of the word, to Christ, was there as a pastor of a Hawaiian church. Another, born in China, and still wearing the Chinese costume, sat in the association as a lay delegate. The Gospel finds subjects everywhere, and always fills their hearts with the same desire for the upbuilding of the kingdom of Jesus Christ, and the extension of the church to all lands. Together these men of different races sat, consulting concerning the interests of the one precious kingdom of Jesus Christ. And then they went out again into the field, refreshed and hopeful.

ASIA.

Two young Japanese were admitted to the church in Japan recently, both married men, of an elevated class, intelligent, and formerly members of the English school. They have been industrious students of the English Bible. Five Japanese are now studying at the academy in Monson, Massachusetts, and several others are receiving private tuition in Boston.

The Punjaub government in India is decidedly Christian in its tone. Christianity is no barrier to the privileges and emolument of office. Native Christians, in common with their pagan or Mohammedan fellow-countrymen, are eligible to all appointments in the gift of the State.

The native Christians in southern India are becoming constantly more and more inclined to give one-tenth of their income to religious purposes. In connection with the Madura mission there are thirty churches, one thousand two hundred and fifty members, one hundred and sixty-two village congregations, two hundred and fifty-five villages in which Christians reside, and one hundred and seventy-five places where religious services are held with preaching every Sunday. There are eleven missionaries, fourteen female assistants, seven native pastors, and ninety-four catechists. More than three hundred girls have been taught in the female boarding school, established thirty years since, of whom many have died in faith, and many are now the wives or mothers of mission helpers. —Methodist.

MADAGASCAR.

One of the English missionaries in Madagascar addressed the following interesting letter to the editor of the Christian World, of London:

"Bloomfield Street, Finsbury,
London, August 17th.

"Sir: The last mail has brought us most gladdening news from Madagascar. God has been graciously pleased to overrule events, so that the things which have happened have all turned out 'for the furtherance of the Gospel.' We are informed that the work of the mission is being blessed in a marvelous manner. Since the cessation of the mourning for the late Queen, the places of Christian worship, both in town and country, have been crowded to excess. Such is the wonderful eagerness to hear the word of God, that on the Sunday previous to the departure of the last mail two thousand four hundred and fifty persons were counted out at Mr. Toy's church, while two hundred and thirty were listening outside during the service. At another place, on the same day, the whole of the usual congregation turned out to make room for the crowd of people outside, that as heathens they might thus see the Christians were anxious that they should all hear 'the joyful sound.' The Queen and government have publicly renounced idolatry; the great national idol has been sent away, and the Queen sends her household to attend Mr. Toy's ministry. Believe me, your's truly,

"ROBERT ROBINSON,
"Home Sec'y of London Miss. Society."

The new Queen of Madagascar has sent word to the missionaries to trust her, as she would be to them the same as her predecessors. In connection with the London Society's mission in the Island of Madagascar there are ninety churches, with five thousand two hundred and fifty-five members and four hundred and sixty-two candidates for admission; thirteen thousand six hundred regular attendants of public worship, and about twenty thousand nominal Christians; one hundred and one pastors, and nearly one hundred chapels, erected by the people, within the last five years, at their own cost. It is proposed by the committee of the society to provide hereafter for the support of the English missionaries, but to leave the other expenses of evangelization to be borne by the people themselves.

Blind Hohannes, one of the native pastors in the Eastern Turkey Mission—a poor, half-educated, rough-looking man—has begun an influence upon the world that promises to be second to that of scarce any other Christian of the age. He is the father of the movement for tithes, which is becoming so general in Turkey, and has already been introduced with the best results in India, and will no doubt extend to our own and all Christian lands. A very interesting letter by Miss West to the editor of the Missionary Herald describes the man, and the effect of a sermon which she heard him preach on the subject of tithes. In that sermon he gave an account of the history of his own connection with the movement. After finishing his course of study he went to settle as pastor in a village where considerable labor and money had been expended by the board, but with little development of the spirit of liberality on the part of the people; in fact, it had never been called out. The missionaries promised him a salary of one thousand five hundred piasters, equal to $60. They told him that the people would pay six hundred piasters of this amount. He found that they had had with great difficulty subscribed five hundred piasters, and could do no more. While considering the matter and praying over it, it seemed as if an intuition from God impressed on his mind the thought. Let them give the tenth. He asked himself if he could spare one hundred and fifty piasters from his scanty salary. It seemed too much; but, when he thought of distributing the amount through the year, he determined to devote twelve and a half piasters each month to the cause of Christ. He immediately presented the matter to his people. They received it as a word from God. They subscribed their tenths; and, to their surprise, the sum amounted to more than his entire salary. From that time the movement has gathered strength, and is the most interesting feature of the mission work. Blind Hohannes is remarkable for his devoted piety; and his marvelous knowledge of the Bible, notwithstanding his blindness, has gained him the surname of "Concordance."

An English clergyman writes to the Bristol Mercury, asserting that colonial bishoprics are marketable commodities, being bought and sold like presentations to ordinary benefices. He says that he can prove one bishopric to have been bought for £3,500, and that he was offered another for £2,500, and refused it because, though he could see no simony in the act of purchasing a benefice when the purchaser is already in priests' orders, it is the identical sin of Simon Magus, to purchase "the office by which the Holy Ghost is ministerially imparted," whatever that may mean. He adds: "Any man thirty years old, in priests' orders, with a decent character, and £3,000 to spare, can get himself dubbed the Right Reverend the Lord Bishop of ——; and thus the country is filled with men who go out to their "sees," deliver a "charge" or two, and then come home and become great swells.—Bishop Staley, of Honolulu, is now traveling on the Continent, consecrating chapels in Switzerland, and other places where fashionable ourists resort.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 3, 1868.

To Subscribers.—Any person wishing to subscribe for this paper can do so by paying the Methodist preacher in the circuit, and forwarding to us his receipt for three dollars, with the address of the subscriber upon it, stating Post office, State, Circuit, and Conference. The receipt ought to be taken in duplicate.

N. B.—Agents are requested, wherever practicable, to invest and remit funds in a Post Office Order, draft, or by express. If this cannot be done, remember the latter at our expense.

When money is forwarded in either of the above methods we will be responsible for it, but not otherwise.

NOTICE.

A Quarterly Meeting of the official members and preachers, local and traveling, of the New Orleans District will be held in Carondelet street church, New Orleans, on the third Saturday and Sabbath in October. By the rule of the Louisiana Conference four delegates will be elected at this meeting.

J. C. KEENER, P. E.

COL. RICHARD SPENCER.

At Cottage Hill, Alabama, on the 20th of September, after a long and painful sickness, this true servant of his Lord departed this life in great peace, and full of years. A more accurate and extended notice of him will be given hereafter.

WHITWORTH FEMALE COLLEGE.

This institution, located at Brookhaven, ought to receive a large patronage from this city, because of the convenience of access, and because it is in a high degree flourishing. The president, Rev. H. F. Johnson, is in every way fitted for his responsible position, and such a person and instructor as we should select to educate a daughter.

ACCIDENTS.

Guns go off by accident sometimes, even when in experienced hands, and do damage. And so communications occasionally get into Advocates. One of these sorts of explosions produces a half a dozen echoes in the shape of replies which do but increase the surprise and horror of the editor at what has happened. Let him that readeth understand.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

A. Beirne & Co., general steamboat agents, No. 90 Common street. This is a long established and excellent agency.

Messrs. C. L. Walmsley & Co., cotton factors and general commission merchants, No. 31 Perdido street.

Messrs. Parham & Street, cotton factors and commission merchants, No. 75 Carondelet street. These firms are old friends whom we can recommend to our people as thoroughly conversant with the cotton business, prompt, accommodating and honest.

THE CORNER STONE of a Southern Methodist Church was recently laid at Shepherdstown, Virginia. Addresses were made by Rev. Drs. Rennett and Pond. A collection was taken up. The net proceeds were one thousand dollars.

IN MEMORIAM.

We were pained to receive the following note from the Rev. Joseph T. Curry, of the Montgomery Conference, giving the sad intelligence of the death of his wife. We tender our dear brother a most prayerful sympathy in this deep, the deepest, affliction of his life:

TUSCUMBIA, ALA., Sept. 21, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: This has been a year of misfortune and deep affliction to me. Overwhelming me in more than usual distress, on the 15th of February last my house, with their more contents, were consumed by fire; but this I could endure without a sigh; but the stroke that has fallen upon me within a few days past is heavier than my groaning.

After a protracted attack of typhoid fever, my dear wife was taken from me on the 1st instant. As nature was sinking, and her tongue refusing to perform its office, she looked me in the face and repeated:

"Streams of mercy, never ceasing
Call the songs of loudest praise."

Surely, "clouds and darkness are round about" the movings of Providence; but "righteousness and judgment are the habitation of his throne."

Yours, in deep affliction,

JOS. T. CURRY.

The Rev. James M. Franklin, in charge of the Anacoco work in the Louisiana Conference, also mourns the death of his beloved wife, after a short illness. An obituary notice will be found elsewhere. We have imagined that there is no greater loss than that the itinerant preacher suffers in the death of a faithful wife—the one who has cheered him and shared with him the changes and privations incident to such a life of sacrifice. The departure of so dear a companion is to him as dreadful as was the thought to Moses of journeying without the angel.

In this connection we notice the death of another dear friend, the Rev. Jno. D. Fisher, of the Mobile Conference. He was admitted to the Alabama Conference very nearly at the same time with ourself, and we were in the same class. His conversion in mature life, and his call to the ministry, were wonderful instances of the creative power of the Spirit. There never was a newer man than he was, when, for the first time, he came back to Linden—a preacher on the circuit! No doubt, for years, those who had known him in his old days kept their eyes upon him to see if this marvelous transformation could last. It did to the day of his death—for more than twenty-five years—and now it will forever.

Called, like the apostles were, right out from among the people, in his manhood, well acquainted with men and the world, he was after the true type a preacher—not a mere student or a lecturer. He had a healthy mind, full of good sense. His manner was in keeping with the natural and hearty conception he had of life; it was singularly open and pleasing. The very tones of his voice indicated the ingenuousness of his nature, and the volume of Christian love which the comfort of the Holy Spirit had evoked. His deliberate thoughtfulness never forsook him, and one can imagine that even down to the margin and in the end, he knew on what promises he was trusting. Another excellent trait was his moderation—he was decided but not expressive in any degree. Such a balance seemed him many friends; indeed, we suppose he had no enemies. The easy dignity of his address was as marked in private as in the pulpit. So natural and pleasant a companion, it may be supposed, was always welcome to the homes of the people; every station or circuit was ready to receive him again that had ever been favored with his services. Both a pastor and a friend, he was a great favorite with the young.

Since 1845 we have not had opportunity to know of his development as a preacher; as a Christian, we doubt not that he was gathered a "shock of corn fully ripe." His death brings the invisible world nearer to us. Where such men go we all wish to go. As they have made up the best company of earth, so they increase the attractiveness of heaven. The whole career of this godly man is a most triumphant vindication of the doctrines of Methodism, and a moan more than re-many demonstrations of their saving power. He fought a good fight.

Our sincerest sympathy we tender to the widow of our deceased friend.

NEWS FROM SOUTH MISSISSIPPI.

Dr. Harmon, just from southern Mississippi, reports that many excellent meetings have been recently held at Centre, Brandon, Hillsborough and various other places, at which there were large numbers of conversions and accessions to the church. In some circuits the meetings are still in progress. We shall be glad to hear of this work of the Lord from the pastors themselves.

He reports a good deal of sickness.

He thinks that fully one-half of the cotton crop has been destroyed by the caterpillar and boll worms. Many of the fields are as bare of leaves as in the month of December.

Politically, all things are as calm as a summer's eve.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

We have received from the publishers, through Mr. George Ellis, No. 7 Old Levee street, opposite the post office, several recent publications:

MISCELLANEOUS PROSE WORKS. By Edward Bulwer, (Lord Lytton.) Two volumes, 12mo. New York: Harper & Brothers, 1868.

The contributions of this polished writer to the English Quarterlies are collected in these volumes, and are supplemented by one or two essays not heretofore published. The works of fiction, by which Mr. Bulwer is so well known, had their basis of substance in the reflections, studies and opinions which now appear in the Prose Works. The more impassioned and imaginative period of his youth is fairly represented in this collection: so that the growth of his wonderful powers can be marked during the time he has been before the public. We never open one of his books without being impressed with his extensive and thorough scholarship. Those who have followed him in his works of fiction, say that they perceive a great improvement in the moral tone of his later novels. For our part, we know of no sadder thing than the struggles of a great mind after truth when the search is persistently made outside of the inspired word.

HISTORY OF THE CIVIL WAR. By Jno. William Draper, M.D., LL.D. In three volumes, 8vo. New York: Harper & Brothers, 1868.

This is the second volume; octavo, pp. 614. (By the by, where are the other two?) A ponderous book. The publishers must have a considerable sum to the credit of the author from his other works, else we can conceive of no greater courage in a house than to publish such a work upon its own chances and merits. The events of the war are stated with an air of composure and much appearance of philosophic analysis and estimate. The only difficulty is that the historian cannot conceal his hatred of the Democratic party, and of the "conspiracy," as he calls the secession of the States. His admiration for Mr. Lincoln is fully up to his antipathy for Mr. Davis. After giving a dream which greatly impressed the "rustic President"—that of a ship sailing very fast—he ventures the reflection that "it is better to have the child-like, innocent dreams of Lincoln, than the guilty and appalling midnight visions of the conscience-stricken Davis." One can hardly feel sure, after meeting such a silly sentence, on the fortieth page, that even the figures of the books are trustworthy.

THE FIRST PRINCIPLES OF POPULAR EDUCATION AND PUBLIC INSTRUCTION. By S. S. Randall, superintendent of public schools of the city of New York. New York: Harper & Brothers, 1868. 12mo., pp. 355.

A work of rare merit. The suggestions and theories of the author are such as influence a large experience in the art of teaching, and a sound philosophy of its true object. He nominates that he is interested to an association, for many years, with some of the ablest instructors this country has produced, the due matter and impressions which he reflects are the public. The central point of all proper development of the child is squarely stated—that is, a sound recognition of his relation to God and the Saviour. The true force of family training is impressively described. The early practice of accurate observation, and the right use of the senses, is made to precede the introduction of the child to the purely intellectual processes of mathematics. The sciences are given their proper place and quantity, and the importance of the study of languages fully vindicated. The latter part of the work presents some of the best general hints we have yet seen as to the best way of controlling a school and keeping it up to its full working power.

THE OPIUM HABIT, with Suggestions as to its Remedy. New York: Harper & Brothers, 1868. 12mo., 328 pages.

We had a very feeble conception of the chains with which this drug binds its victim. The reading of this book enlarges human sympathy for the opium eater. His is not a moral disease, so much as it is the most terrible of all morbid physical conditions. The writer describes his abandonment of its use. Beginning with eighty grains, equal to two thousand drops of laudanum, per day, he gradually descends to three drops, occupying in all a period of six weeks. The sharp pains of knives forced under the shoulder blades, of liquid flame poured over the arms, the mental irritation, the restlessness of the nerves, their "hot needles and myriad fingers of fire," the conscious and real inability to exert the will, and many other horrors, are set forth as attending this great struggle to "unwind to its last link" this habit of death. The experiences of De Quincey, of Coleridge, of William Blair, of Robert Hall, John Randolph and William Wilberforce, are also given, with many remarks and reflections which seem admirably suited to strengthen and encourage the unfortunate wretch who may be compared to one trying to get out of purgatory—without a priest.

Port Gibson Collegiate Academy.

This institution is doing excellent service to the country. Mr. A. J. Wright is its president—a thoroughly competent instructor of youth. He is aided by Mrs. A. A. Wright, principal; Mr. R. Scott Ricketts, preceptor; Miss C. A. Murphy, instructress in music and ornamentals. The academy comprises a college for young ladies, a preparatory and a primary school. The course of study includes algebra, natural philosophy, chemistry, astronomy, physiology, mental and moral science, Latin, and the higher mathematics; in fact, all that a high school offers anywhere.

Boarders are under the special charge of the lady principal. Every care is taken of the health, the morals and manners of students. The session is divided into four quarters, commencing severally September 9, November 18, February 3 and April 13. Charges for board, $16 a month, in advance. English tuition, $5 to $7. Music, $8. Address Professor A. J. Wright, Port Gibson. We can heartily indorse and recommend this institution.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

A letter from Brother F. Hall, dated Gaston, September 22d, speaks most favorably of the prosperity of the Gaston circuit, Mobile Conference. Protracted meetings have been held in various parts of it with success—some fifty accessions to the church. The presiding elder, Rev. Joshua Heard, and the Rev. J. M. Thames, have both done effective work. The Sabbath schools of the circuit are in good condition. Now to fill up the measure, let every head of a family, that claims to be a Methodist, hand three dollars to the preacher and become a subscriber to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. Why should not we see this fruit?

PERMANENT FOOD.—This fluid is an excellent preparation of chlorodyne. It is deservedly popular. We notice that President W. H. Cologne and Professor Darby are associated with manufacturers in New York. They cannot but be successful in the sale of this excellent disinfectant.

NEGRO SOCIAL STATUS.

The veto of the Governor has defeated the Civil Rights Bill in the State Legislature. The chagrin of the leading colored members was intense. Isabelle, the author of the bill, made the closing speech. His disgust and despair at this new turn in the affairs of the colored man may be seen in his estimate of the Governor:

Judge Warmoth, the pet and idol of the colored people of the State of Louisiana; the man whom we looked up to as Radicalism personified; the man who occupied the advanced position upon the outer bastion; the man whose command was: "Stand firm, colored men, and never take one jot of your just demands, and we will see that you are made the peer of the proudest Anglo-Saxon on the continent of America."

But the Governor tells us "the means, however, proposed in the fourth section of the bill for enforcing these rights are, in my judgment, not merely novel and unprecedented, but impracticable and pernicious. It seeks to make that a crime which has never to my knowledge been so considered in those communities where the highest regard is paid to the personal rights of all men."

Why did he not use that language before his own election. I have heard him use a practice more pernicious, more incendiary than I have ever heard from the lips of a colored man yet. Why does he prate to us about his knowledge of those communities where the highest regard is paid to the personal rights of all men?

I believe you will all agree with me that had he stayed in that community, or those communities, this community would have been benefited by his absence.

Mr. Pratt, of Claiborne, made a very sensible speech on the other side:

If there is any one question that the white people of this State are a unit upon, it is upon resistance to every aggression upon their social rights, and the inevitable result of an attempt to enforce the provisions of this bill is, that most direful of all evils, a war of races; and wherever it does occur, mark my prediction, the white carpet bagger and scalawag will make Bull Run time for a colder climate, leaving the deluded negro to be the innocent victim of their rascality.

That the result of such a struggle will be the annihilation of the negro, no one can doubt. That will be a woeful day for men, women and children, (both white and black.) I admit; but that the result of war of races is the death knell to the African race is as certain as the sun rises in the east. I know that many of the colored men expect the people of the North to come to their rescue, but there never was a greater mistake made upon earth. Whenever the conflict comes, and race is pitted against race, I care not how strong a white man's predilections may be in favor of giving the negro his civil and political rights, I care not if that man hails from the North, the South, the East, or the West, whenever he hears the wails of virtue as it succumbs to overpowering lust, whenever he sees the Caucasian mother and her little babe fleeing the flames that have enwrapt the dwelling that has sheltered her for years, if that man is worthy of his nativity and his Caucasian blood, if he ever honored a mother, loved a sister, or felt the warm embraces of a virtuous wife, he will raise his arm in defence of the Anglo-Saxon mother and the babe at her breast.

The veto of the Governor was sustained. That the people at the North, and everywhere else, may know the complexion of our Legislature, we give the yeas and the nays, and the color of the vote:

The roll was then called and the Governor's veto sustained by the following vote. The letter c. after a name means colored, the letters w.r. white Radical, the letter d. Democrat.

For the bill and against sustaining the veto: Alexander c., Antoine c., Adolphe c., Belot c., Carr w. r., Downes w. r., Simmes c., Dupart c., Renard c., Guignet w. r., Garlick w. r., Hill c., Hogans c., Harpin w. r., Holland c., Isabelle c., Le Roy c., Lott c., Morris c., Mahler c., McVean w. r., Johnson c., Pearce c., Raymond c., Ross w. r., Roy c., Hall c., Taylor c., Turenne c., Washington c., William C. Williams c., Henderson Williams c., Young c.—27.

Against the bill and for sustaining the veto: Abbott w. r., Batrell c. r., Coates w. r., Curtis d., DeGrange d., Demarest w. r., Evans c. r., Faulkner w. r., Foote d., Gair c. r., Crawford w. r., Kent d., L'Hoste d., McCullen d., Morrell c. r., Melvin w. r., Morey w. r., May d., Matthews w. r., Magee d., Noble d., Pratt d., Page w. r., W. H. Pierce d., Slaton d., Sterrett c. r., Walsh w. r., Wise w. r., Waters d., Yorke w. r., Hedenburg w. r., Zeully d.—32.

About twenty white men have been put out of this Legislature, upon various pretexts, by the negroes and whites who compose the majority. It was, therefore, by a considerable defection in the Radical lines that this result was secured.

The expulsion of black men from the Georgia Legislature has given great offense to the philanthropists of the bond holding end of the Union. The Northwestern Christian Advocate, Chicago, states the case as one who takes it much to heart:

On the 31 inst. the Georgia House of Representatives voted that twenty-five of its sitting members were ineligible because their veins contain more than one-sixth of negro blood, and those excluded members were not allowed to vote on the vote. Both acts were illegal, unjust and indefensible, even as a few considerations show.

The editor then goes on in a heated way, to speak of "peace:"

We must have peace, and one of the prerequisites to justice to the innocent cause of the late war, and of all this turmoil. That race is the nation's ward, and we must and yet will discharge our sacred duty by the strong arm of the law! The angel has not yet sanctioned our bloody atonement, and we must remain before the altar, even at the cost of more treasure, more blood and more precious life. Better that we have more dead in the battle array, than that we permit that greater holocaust of the innocent now daily offered to the Moloch of Southern anarchy or misrule.

In all this he evidently forgets that the country is quite too large, at present, for every man to have his own way. The "strong arm of the law" will, we suppose, never be employed to establish social equality between the negro and the white man, either in Ohio or Louisiana. All this, and the "dead in battle array," we consider as merely figures of speech. We cannot believe that he is willing to offer himself on any altar that purposes to degrade his race; or not if by so doing he could elevate the whole of the lower half of Africa. And if his philanthropy has really carried him beyond this point, we are glad to believe that there is in Ohio an overwhelming majority of sensible white men who do not stand with him.

LETTER FROM BISHOP ANDREW.

DISTRICT MEETINGS.

SUMMERVILLE, September 21, 1868.

DEAR BRETHREN: Although I am old and pretty well worn out, and incapable of much service, yet dear to my heart is the church of my early choice, and I like to throw in my mite as opportunity and strength will allow me; so I have not been idle during the past summer. I have had the pleasure of visiting many portions of the work which I had not visited for many years past. I attended two district meetings in Tennessee, one at Shelbura, in Mississippi, and three in Georgia.—These were all seasons of much spiritual refreshment, and I had ample opportunity of observing the working of this new appendage to our system of operations, and I must say that I believe they are susceptible of being made greatly useful. They bring the brethren of the different districts into closer acquaintance and fellowship with each other, and the various plans of operation of the preachers and officers of the different circuits; and the kindly intercourse which we usually cultivate at these meetings tends greatly to promote the communion of saints, and to promote unity of plan and action in the various departments of the church's work. Prior to these meetings our people knew comparatively little of the economy and workings of the system of Methodism. We learn from the representatives of the different circuits and stations whether our people are living as they ought, and may learn from our discussions some important means of good. The visits of our bishops to the different portions of the work are greatly desired by our people, and always produce a good effect on the church. Now the district meetings afford to the bishops the opportunity of seeing and becoming acquainted with thousands of our people who, but for the district meetings, would never have the privilege of communing with their chief pastors. At these meetings the bishops have an admirable opportunity of learning the mind of the churches in reference to the pastors, and their qualifications for the pastorate in the different fields of labor. I should regard this as a very important advantage if I were now charged with the duties of the chief pastorate of the church. I love the district meetings, too, because they bring the people in official relations to the preachers, especially now that the people are represented in the Annual and General Conferences. Upon the whole, I think they will be of incalculable service to the church if they can be kept true to their proper work. It will be of great importance to guard against the introduction of improper matter in their discussions. Don't let us dream that we are legislators, and act as though that dream were a reality. Avoid long speeches, and when we do speak let love control our words and tempers, and let the end of all our labors be to promote purity and Christian love. It will be well for the laity to do the most of the speaking: at any rate, let them have their full share. Let no speakor affect the high-falutin style in speech. There are some other things which I may say at another time. I purpose to visit you in New Orleans, this winter, if God will spare my life. Many bleesings attend you.

Your's affectionately,

JAS. O. ANDREW.

OBITUARIES.

Died, on the twelfth day of August last, after an illness of three days, at Anacoco, Sabine parish, Mrs. MALISSA ANN FRANKLIN, the wife of the Rev. James M. Franklin. She was born in Mississippi, on the 24th of February, 1839; but came to this State when quite young. In the fifteenth year of her age she joined the church, and ever after continued to be a consistent Methodist Christian. At the family altar, in the Sunday school, and in the class meeting she was earnest and faithful, aiding her husband and the church in the work of the Lord. She was in good health and sound mind up to the fatal attack, and was sensible to the very last of life. Only an hour before she died, she called all her friends and relations to her bedside, and exherted them in many tender and suitable words upon their spiritual welfare. After directing how and where she was to be buried, she exclaimed: "Come, Lord Jesus, and receive my spirit." To those around: "Do not weep for me." Now with clear voice she sang:

"When I am called to die,
O, sing to me of heaven!"

Afterward she sang:

"O, glorious hope of perfect love,
It lifts me up to things above,
It bears on eagle's wings."

She then sweetly exhorted the physician. Her dying breath was spent in supporting and kissing her husband and her dear only boy of eleven years. It was a noble exit, that of this young Christian mother. With what longing will she await all the appointed time, until the change comes, when she and husband and son shall be forever restored to each other.

J. C. K.

DEATH OF MRS. A. B. HILL.

Suddenly, at midnight of the 25th ult., Mrs. ARTHIA BUSHROD HILL, wife of Dr. George Hill, of this place, was summoned to eternity. She had been afflicted with heart disease for many years, and of late her natural strength was visibly abating; but there was no particular indication of the nearness of her departure from this life. She was in her usual health during the day of the 25th, but a couple of hours after retiring she began to suffer with great difficulty of breathing, and called instantly for her husband and son. As soon as they were at her bedside she said: "I am dying!" Her son told her not to be alarmed, to which she replied firmly: "I am not alarmed, Doddridge. I am resigned to the will of God." She again said, as her husband lifted her in his arms: "I hope that God will pardon my sins through"—here her voice failed, and without another word her spirit passed away. She died in the well grounded hope of everlasting life through Christ Jesus, our Lord. There was no terror in death to her, sudden as was the summons. Her mind had too often contemplated this certain event, and for years she had lived each day as though it were her last. She was a worthy member of our church at Opelousas, and delighted in all the services of the sanctuary.

Sister Hill was born in June, 1800, in Stafford county, Virginia. She was the daughter of Robert H. Hove, Esq., one of those princely planters of the olden time for which Virginia has been so celebrated. She was married to Dr. George Hill in November, 1824; was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1826; and herself and husband settled in this place in February, 1832, since which time she has been a member of this charge, and favorably known for her piety and hospitality to all the preachers who have served here during that period. Of the eight children born to her, six passed through the valley of the shadow of death in advance of herself. She had the utmost confidence that each of them had died in the faith of Jesus Christ, and that she and they should be reunited in glory. For her two living sons and husband the sincerest wish of her heart was that they, too, might be saved. For this she prayed constantly, and she often expressed the comfortable assurance she felt that the Lord would answer her prayers in their behalf. Indeed her son Doddridge has, within a few days, resolved to enter upon a Christian life, and take the place in our church made vacant by the decease of that sainted mother whom he loved so devotedly.—What encouragement this to faithfulness in Christian mothers!

Sister Hill had a bright religious experience. Her testimony in class meeting was ever redolent of strong faith and well-grounded hope. "I do not feel," said she, on one of these occasions, "that unbounded ecstacy that I did when I was first converted, but I feel more determined, calm and serene. Scarcely a cloud ever passes between me and my Master." Writing to a dear friend concerning the death of her children, just after the burial of a lovely daughter, she was able to say: "I hope in God. Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him." These were noble words to be uttered at a time when the heart was overwhelmed with sorrow. Our deceased sister was firmly persuaded that the blessing of sanctification was the privilege of every Christian, and I have every reason to believe that she lived in its enjoyment for several years past. In a letter to a pious friend many years ago, in which she relates the triumphant death of Mrs. Serasey, of this place, who had lived in the exalted experience of sanctification, Sister Hill writes: "I look forward with delight to such a death. It is the glory of the religion of our blessed Jesus that it grows better as we grew older—the more we know of it the more we enjoy it. With my whole heart I believe it is our privilege to be sanctified. This is a subject on which I love to dwell."

May the memory of her unwavering piety and patient submissiveness to the will of God long live in our church as an example for emulation, that she, "being dead, yet speaketh." J. W.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

NOTICE.—MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

VICKSBURG, Miss., Sept. 28, 1868.

To the Presiding Elders of the Mississippi Annual Conference:

DEAR BRETHREN—Please send me, at your earliest convenience, the names of the lay delegates, from your several districts, to the Annual Conference to be held in this city on the 18th of November; also the names of local preachers who will be present for ordination or admission into the traveling connection.

GEO. H. CLINTON.

To the Brethren of the Mississippi Conference.

Opposite the words "No. of Local Preachers," on your blank statistical reports, enter the figure indicating the number of unordained local preachers; and on the same line the number of local deacons and the number of local elders, distinguishing them respectively by the letters D. and E. Thus: supposing you have 3 licentiates, 2 deacons, and 2 elders, the returns will be: "No. of Local Preachers," 3 and 2 D., and 2 E.

L. R. REDDING,
Statistical Secretary.

Vicksburg Dist., Mississippi Conference.

To the Pastors and Official Members:

DEAR BRETHREN—A letter just received from Bishop Paine requests me "to act as presiding elder" on this district until other arrangements are made at Conference. My age and bodily infirmities will make the task heavy indeed, but, by the help of God, my mind is made up to undertake it. The Conference year is so far advanced I can only make one round, in connection with some previously-made appointments which I cannot recall. As soon as you see this notice please inform me by letter, directed to Fayette, Mississippi, at what places your quarterly meetings will be held. I earnestly request the attendance of all the official members, that we may finish our work handsomely for Conference. According to my usual plan, when out on the district, I will be glad to have a few intervening appointments in the day-time at convenient places. The preaching does not oppress me; traveling and exposure to inclement weather do. Subjoined you have the time of the appointments:

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

THE GREAT PACIFIC RAILROAD,

RECEIVING THE AID AND SUpervision of the Government, and carried forward by the extraordinary resources and energy of the powerful corporations to whom it was entrusted, is rapidly approaching completion, and it is safe to say that New York and San Francisco will be connected by rail by the FOURTH OF JULY NEXT.

More than two thirds of the Through Line and Branches between the Missouri River and the Pacific Ocean are constructed, at a cost of nearly

ONE HUNDRED MILLIONS,

and the remainder is being pushed forward with unparalleled vigor. The

CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY,

to whom belongs the Western and principal portion of the Main Stem Line, receive from the United States Government:

1. The right of way through the Territories, with the use of timber and materials along the route.

2. An absolute grant of twenty sections per mile (12,800 acres) of the Public Lands on the line, the minimum value of which is now fixed at $2 50 per acre.

3. A special issue of United States Six per cent. Bonds, at the average rate of $35,000 per mile, delivered as the work progresses; which the Company are allowed to repay within thirty years, mainly by transportation services.

4. Authority to issue their own First Mortgage Bonds to the same amount, having the preferred lien—superior to that of the Government.

5. It receives, in addition, donations and subsidies from the State and Cities of California amounting to more than $3,000,000 in gold;

Or an aggregate of Cash Resources for construction of more than Sixty Millions upon 725 miles, independent of the ten millions of acres of public lands, and further subscriptions to the Capital Stock. The early completion of the enterprise is therefore beyond all doubt.

This Company have already carried their road successfully across the Sierra Nevada Mountains, and are rapidly extending the track across the Salt Lake Plains, and have already a valuable way traffic thereon. Besides a mileage upon all through business, this road, having the best lands for settlement, the most productive mines, the nearest markets, and being exempt from competition, will always command large revenues. The net earnings upon the completed portion are more than double the total annual interest liabilities to be assumed thereupon.

The undersigned offer for sale, and recommend to investors, the

FIRST MORTGAGE 30-YEAR GOLD BONDS

OF THE

Central Pacific Railroad Company,

bearing six per cent. per annum interest, both principal and interest payable in "United States gold coin." These Bonds are the first lien upon one of the most productive and valuable railroad lines in the world—a line which will be finished within twelve months, and which is already earning, after paying operating expenses, more than twice the annual charge of its Bonded debt. They are already widely known and esteemed in this country and Europe, and it is believed the remainder of the Loan will speedily be taken.

A limited amount will be disposed of at

103 Per Cent. and Accrued Interest,

IN CURRENCY.

The Bonds are of $1,000 each, with semi-annual gold coupons attached, payable in July and January.

☞ The Company reserve the right to advance the price at any time; but all orders actually in transitu at the time of any such advance will be filled at the present price. At this time they pay

More than Eight Per Cent. upon the Investment,

and have, from National and State laws, guarantees superior to any other corporate securities now offered.

We receive all classes of Government Bonds, at their full market rates, in exchange for the Central Pacific Railroad Bonds, thus enabling the holders to realize from five to ten per cent. profit and keep the principal of their investments equally secure.

Orders and inquiries will receive prompt attention. Information, descriptive pamphlets, etc., giving a full account of the organization, progress, business and prospects of the enterprise, furnished on application. Bonds sent by return Express at our cost.

Subscriptions Received by Banks and Bankers, Agents for the Loan.

☞ All descriptions of GOVERNMENT SECURITIES bought, sold or exchanged, at our office and by mail and telegraph, at market rates.

Accounts of Banks, Bankers and others received, and favorable arrangements made for desirable accounts.

THE CHILD'S CORNER

LITTLE BROWN HANDS.

BY M. H. E.

They drive home the cows from the pasture,
Up through the long shady lane,
Where the quail whistles loud in the wheat fields
That are yellow with ripening grain.
They find, in thick waving grasses,
Where the scarlet-lipped strawberry grows,
They gather the earliest snow drops
And the first crimson buds of the rose.

They toss the new hay in the meadow;
They gather the elder-bloom white;
They find where the dusky grapes purple
In the soft-tinted October light.
They know where the apples hang ripest,
And are sweeter than Italy wines;
They know where the fruit hangs the thickest
On the long, thorny blackberry vines.

They gather the delicate sea weeds,
And build tiny castles of sand;
They pick up the beautiful sea shells—
Fairy barks that have drifted to land.
They wave from the tall, rocking tree-tops
Where the oriole's hammock-nest swings,
And at night-time are lulled in slumber
By a song that a fond mother sings.

Those who toil bravely are strongest;
The humble and poor become great;
And from these brown-handed children
Shall grow mighty rulers of state.
The pen of the author and statesman—
The noble and wise of the land—
The sword and the chisel and palette
Shall be held by the little brown hand.

THE BIRD THAT RINGS A BELL.

'Oh, here's the Children's Hour for September!' cried little Harry. 'I wonder if the editor has put in our picture of the fish with a blow-gun? Yes, here it is. Just see, Uncle Rea!'

'Sure enough,' said Uncle Rea, as he looked over the page that Harry held up. 'How nicely the artist has drawn the fish! though I think he's put him a little too close to the fly. But that doesn't matter.'

'Pop goes the water-bullet, and down goes the fly! Poor fly!' said Harry. 'I wonder what animals can't do? There are climbing and flying and shooting fish, and birds that sew, and spiders that make rafts and go out a sailing on them, and animals that cut down trees and build dams, and I don't know what all. I guess I never heard of half the things birds and beasts and fishes can do.'

'I guess not, nor a quarter of them, either. I don't believe you ever heard of a bird that rings a bell.'

'Rings a bell, Uncle Rea?'

'Yes.'

'Have you?'

'Yes, and what's more, I've heard him ring his bell.'

'Oh, Uncle Rea, please tell me all about it, won't you? It must have been away off in India, for there are no birds with bells in this country that I ever heard of,' said Harry.

'It was in South America,' replied Uncle Rea, 'and the first time I heard the Campanero ring his bell you may be sure I was astonished.'

'Tell me about it, Uncle Rea,' urged Harry, all impatient to hear.

'I was in one of the great forests of Guyana—'

'All alone, Uncle Rea?' asked Harry.

'No. There were three of us in company.'

'Oh, I'm glad you wasn't all alone; you might have got lost, or met some wicked Indians or dreadful wild beasts. And it was there you heard the—the—what?'

'Campanero.'

'Oh, yes; the Campanero ring his bell?'

'Yes. Birds were singing in the forest as we walked along. The day was hot, and the air heavy with the odor of hundreds of rare and lovely flowers. Toward noon the voices of our feathered friends grew silent, and all seemed strangely still. Suddenly there rang out on the still air the clear, sweet notes of a bell, loud enough to be heard for the distance of a league, as we sailors say. It was not like a church bell, but finer in tone. You may be sure we all started and listened in silent astonishment. What was it? Where did it come from? For about a minute all was again still. Birds, insects, animals, everything seemed to listen. Then out rang the clear bell again, not in one stroke, but many, flinging through the forest its sweet and silvery chimes. A pause of another minute followed, and the bell rang again. Another pause, this time of nearly ten minutes, when the bell filled the air with its music once more.

'It is the Campanero,' said our guide. 'See!' and he pointed to a snow-white bird, about the size of a pigeon, high up on a limb a few hundred yards away from the place where we stood. I could not believe it possible those bell-like sounds were made by this bird; but, even while we looked at him, he rang out his wonderful chimes again, then lifted his wings and flew away.'

'It seems like a fairy story,' said Harry.

'And I seemed to be in fairy land for a little while,' answered Uncle Rea. 'But I soon got used to the bell-bird, and to his strange notes, that were tinkling and jangling all around us, in a day or two, as we went deeper into the forest.'

'How I should like to see a bell-bird,' said Harry.

'I've never heard of one being brought from South America,' replied his uncle.

'What kind of a looking bird is it? I wonder if there is a picture in any of the books, uncle?'

'Most likely. Bring that large natural history from the library. Now let us turn to the index. Yes, here it is, "The Bell bird, or Campanero." And here is its picture to the very life, looking just as I saw it in the forest.'

'Why, it's got a horn on its head!' exclaimed Harry.

'Yes, and I think this horn has something to do with the sound the bird makes. It is a hollow black tube sprinkled over with little tufts of white feathers; not of bony hardness, but firm and tough like rubber, and has an opening into the mouth. When the Campanero sings, or rings his bell, just as you please to say, this horn fills out and stands up very straight and firm, looking something like an ear of corn.'

'I don't believe,' said Harry, after gazing for a long time at the picture, 'that one in twenty of the children who take the "Hour" ever heard of this bell-bird; so I'll get sister to make a copy, just as she did of the fish with a blow-gun, and send it to Mr. Arthur. I'm sure he'll put it in.'—Children's Hour.

SCIENTIFIC.

ELECTRICAL NOVELTIES.

Electricity is a wizard's power. With it and a little mechanical skill a man may turn his house into a magician's castle. The late ingenious Mr. Appold—of 'centrifugal pump' notoriety—indeed did this without it: his room doors opened as you approached them, and shut behind you; his stable gates did the same; upon touching a spring the window shutters closed, and the gas was turned on; his apartments maintained themselves at a uniform temperature, and at a proper hygrometric state, by regulating thermometers and atmospheric damping apparatus; in short, his house was full of surprising devices, created and worked out by his wonderful inventive and executive skill. Had he but pressed electricity into his service, there is no saying into what a palace of enchantment his dwelling would have been transformed. But what he did not do has been done by the famous Robert Houdin, who has made electricity do the work of a retinue of servants and a watchman to boot. The ex-conjurer lives at a country seat called the Priory, near to his native town of Blois, and there it is that these wonderful applications have been effected. A visitor presenting himself at the portal finds the name of 'Robert Houdin' upon a door plate, above which is a little knocker; operating upon the latter, a great bell sounds within the house.

In a few moments the lock is thrown back, and the name on the plate changes, like a pantomime trick, to 'Entrez.' The visitor obeys, and the door automatically closes behind him. If more than one person enters, the invisible and inanimate 'concierge' makes known the fact by tinkling a small bell, which keeps up its tintinnabulum so long as the door is held open. The carriage gates, some distance off, announce themselves open or shut in the hall, where an inscription exhibits the words, 'The gates are open,' or 'The gates are shut,' as the case may be. The letter box on the gate tells in the house how many letters have been put into it, and, by an arrangement with the postman, which are letters and which book parcels or newspapers; and if the postman is wanted at the house to carry correspondence to the village, he is apprised of the fact by a bell, of the ringing of which he knows the meaning. The horse, in a stable more than forty yards from the house, is fed at regular intervals by electrical intervention. At stated times a clock sends a current, which opens the orifice of a shoot or hopper, and allows the due proportion of provender to fall into the manger. This same clock is charged with the transmission of time to two large external dials, and to several smaller ones about the domicile, all of which go together in sympathy, so that Father Time has here a company of subalterns that march step by step with irrefragable order. Then it rings bells at the proper times for meals and other regular household duties, calls up the servants by alarums in the morning, and at night puts a galvanic current in connection with a wire that communicates with all the doors and windows, so that if any of these are attempted by burglars an alarm is instantly given. Lastly, the greenhouse telegraphs its temperature to the conjurer's study; if the gardener allows the thermometer to rise above or fall below certain limits, his master is apprised of the irregularity, and he is called to account next morning. The poor man knows when he has been at fault, but does not know who or what tells the tale, and he thinks he has a sorcerer to serve; and so, in the only sense in which we can now-a-days regard the word, he has.

Such are a few of the domestic functions of the most ubiquitous slave that science has entrapped for man. Of its public services we need hardly speak; telegraphs have become too familiar to be longer regarded as curiosities, even those that send the message in fac-simile of the hand in which it is written, or reproduce a drawing a hundred miles away. Electric lights, too, have ceased to be surprising, though they are far from having been used to their full powers. There have been difficulties in the way of getting a good and cheap source of electricity, which have barred the way to their extensive introduction; but some of these are removed, and we may entertain better hopes for the future. One of the great doctrines, perhaps the greatest, of the present era of science, is that of the convertibility of forces one into another. Heat is turned into mechanical force, and mechanical force into heat; mechanical force is turned into electricity and vice versa, and heat and electricity are similarly interconverted. A celebrated London photographer has erected a magneto-electric machine for conducting some of his operations which require an intensely bright illumination, and has thus apparently become independent of the sun; in reality, he is using the solar rays which came to our planet thousands of years ago, for what is coal but 'bottled sunshine?' A Birmingham electro-plating firm also set up a similar machine for depositing their precious metals, and a sugar refinery another for generating ozone to bleach sugar. But the principal use of such an apparatus is for light house illumination. A French company bought the patent for France to this end, and the light was to be tried at Cape Grisnez. It was not only to illuminate the Channel 'a giorno,' but to shed a mild twilight over our own southern counties. We have not heard of the trial—perhaps it has yet to come off.

From light houses the transition to buoys and beacons is easy. These an ingenious inventor has proposed to illuminate by electricity. Those who attend scientific lectures, or look into instrument makers' shops, will have come to know something of coils called 'induction coils,' for producing in effect a very powerful current of electricity from a very weak one, and of certain glass tubes and globes for exhibiting the passage of the electric spark through a partial vacuum. Well, the inventor aforesaid proposes to place a battery and a coil in the hollow body of a buoy, and to lead the current to one or more of these vacuum tubes inclosed in a lantern on the top. A steady light, glimmering like a glow worm on the sea, would thus be secured, and neither wind nor wave could readily extinguish it. Some one else invented a lamp for miners on the same principle; a knapsack was to hold the battery and coil, and wires were to lead to a lamp composed of a vacuum tube carried in the hand. There could be no doubt of the safety of this light—in this respect it would rival the immortal Davy's invention; but portability is a rather necessary feature in any tool a pitman has to use, and the knapsack and entangling wires might prove rather worse than an inconvenience to him, especially when, as happens occasionally, he has to pick and wriggle his way, worm fashion, through a one-foot seam.—English Paper.

War.—Give me the money that has been spent in war, and I will purchase every foot of land upon the globe. I will clothe every man, woman and child in an attire of which kings and queens would be proud. I will build a school house on every hill-side and in every valley over the earth; I will build an academy in every town and endow it; a college in every State, and fill it with able professors; I will crown every hill with a place of worship, consecrated to the promulgation of the Gospel of Peace; I will support in every pulpit an able teacher of righteousness, so that on every Sabbath morning the chime on one hill should answer to the chime on another around the earth's wide circumference; and the voice of prayer and the song of praise should ascend like a universal holocaust to heaven.—Rufus Stevens.

Assurance.—Happy is he who, having given his heart and life to Jesus, can look over his title, and read it clear to a mansion in the skies. Happy is he who in self-sinking humility and in Christ-exalting assurance can sing:

"Through the love of Christ, my Saviour,
All will be well;
Firm, unchanging in his favor,
All—all is well!
Precious is the blood that sealed us,
Perfect is the grace that sealed us,
Strong the Hand stretched forth to shield us!
All must be well!"

FARM AND GARDEN.

ACREAGE OF CROPS.

The following is an abstract from "Condition of the Crops" in the Monthly Report of Agriculture for July:

Corn.—The most remarkable fact in connection with the corn crop of the present year is the great increase of its acreage in the South, the difference in number of acres, between the present and preceding year, being more than two millions and a half. A slight decrease is apparent in the eastern sea board States, resulting from the unpropitious character of the cold, wet and backward spring, which sadly interfered with planting. A careful estimate of the acreage shows a decrease of 49,609 acres in eight States, and an increase of 3,108,215 acres in the remaining States, as follows:

DECREASE.	ACRES
Maine	3,300
New Hampshire	3,184
Massachusetts	1,985
Rhode Island	1,719
Connecticut	9,511
New York	12,888
New Jersey	8,818
Maryland	8,204
INCREASE.
Vermont	1,679
Pennsylvania	57,106
Delaware	6,697
Virginia	70,775
North Carolina	216,927
South Carolina	89,764
Georgia	255,987
Florida	48,728
Alabama	43,827
Mississippi	313,109
Louisiana	397,291
Texas	132,229
Arkansas	376,762
Tennessee	127,215
West Virginia	13,131
Kentucky	207,307
Missouri	407,942
Nebraska	16,145
Kansas	63,411
Iowa	236,683
Minnesota	25,500
Wisconsin	32,361
Michigan	18,146
Ohio	178,397
Indiana	100,626
Illinois	366,692

These figures show an increase of over 3,000,000 of acres in corn, making about 36,000,000 in the United States, an advance of nine per cent. The per centage of Louisiana reaches 65, that of Arkansas 47, that of Kansas 30, Mississippi 25, Nebraska 15, Missouri 22, Texas 18, Minnesota 17, Iowa 15, Illinois and Ohio 8, and Indiana 4.

The drought in the South has retarded somewhat the growth of corn, but its condition, in that section, is generally good. In the West the average is high, with the exception of Ohio and Indiana, where the weather has been somewhat unpropitious, and storms destructive. In the East, on the last of June, the growth was small, but the hot weather of July has brought a large portion of the crop into splendid condition.

Cotton.—Returns from the cotton district indicate everywhere a reduction of the acreage in that crop with the exception of Texas, which shows an increase of 33 per cent. over last year, and Alabama, where there appears to be no material change in the figures. The falling off in Mississippi appears to be 18 per cent., 24 in Louisiana, 12 in Georgia, 13 in Arkansas, 18 in South Carolina, 20 in Tennessee and 32 in North Carolina. The average reduction in acreage is about ten per cent. With this diminished breadth there is cleaner and better culture and a more general use of fertilizers, so that the yield may be quite equal to last year, the season being equally favorable, with a like experience as to insects and other causes of injury. It is yet too early to predict the result, but the present status of the crop is fairly shown in this statement.

One county in Arkansas (Desha) reports less than a third of the acreage of last year, while the area in corn is three times as large. Such indications are hopeful. The correspondent, as might be expected, declares that the crops are in splendid condition, and if not injured by a drought, the finest yield, for many years, will be the result. A want of rain has been apparent in the Gulf States, and a severe drought has afflicted western Tennessee, but few complaints upon cotton are made. So far the plant enjoys a very general exemption from casualties and injuries.—Southern Cultivator.

A New Silk and a New Silk Worm.—Mr. F. S. Johnson, of Jones county, has submitted to our inspection an entomological novelty which is equally new and surprising to us. He brings several small branches or sprigs of the arbor vitæ, from which are pendant, at intervals of half to three quarters of an inch, cocoons, covered with the dead leaf of the tree, in length about two inches, and in diameter say three-quarters of an inch. Underneath the layer of dead arbor vitæ leaf is a tough sack of the color and consistency of fine parchment, but of such extraordinary strength that we believe it would suspend a hundred pound weight. Inside the sack is a deposit of beautiful silky fiber of lighter color and higher luster than the raw silk, and we think the fiber is finer. In strength it beats anything we have ever seen. It surpasses the raw silk in all these qualities, so far as we can remember from tests made years ago. Mr. Johnson says his arbor vitæ trees are all covered with these cocoons and are all dead or dying. The worm which does the mischief is a small black worm, which, after depositing its larvæ perforates the lower end of the cocoon and lets itself down to the earth by this spider-like filament, and disappears, leaving its shell in the sack, enveloped in the beautiful fiber we have described. This is something new to us. Has any one about Macon observed the same phenomenon? We have a little twig with six cocoons upon it for the inspection of the curious. We should have mentioned the way the cocoon is attached to the twig, which is by a loop passed around it, but so loosely as to turn. This is itself a marvel of strength and ingenuity.—Macon (Ga.) Telegraph.

ARABIAN MODE FOR TAMING HORSES.

The following is said to be the mode of taming Arabian horses. This sketch is in reply to an inquiry made to the editor of the American Stock Journal, and this plan might be adopted with our high spirited California mustangs; this would bring down a little of their "vim." The following prescription has been sold through the country at from $1 to $5. The horse castor is a wart or excrescence which grows on the hind legs. It has a peculiar, rank, musty smell, and is easily pulled off. The ammoniacal effluvia of the horse seems peculiarly to concentrate in this part, and its very strong odor has a very great attraction for all animals—especially canine, and the horse himself. For the oil of cumin the horse has an instinctive passion—both are original natives of Arabia, and when the horse scents the odor he is instinctively drawn toward it. The oil of rhodium possesses peculiar properties. All animals seem to cherish a fondness for it, and it exercises a kind of subduing influence over them. The directions given for taming horses are as follows: Procure some horse castor and grate fine. Also get some oil of rhodium and oil of cumin, and keep the three separate in air-tight bottles. Rub a little of the oil of cumin upon your hands, and approach the horse on the wind-part side, so that he can smell the cumin. The horse will let you come up to him without any trouble. Immediately rub your hand gently on the horse's nose, getting a little of the oil on it. You can then lead him anywhere. Give him a little of the castor on a piece of loaf sugar, apple or potato. Put nine drops of the oil of rhodium into a lady's silver thimble, between the thumb and middle finger of your right hand, with the fore finger stopping the thimble, to prevent the oil from running out whilst you are opening the mouth of the horse. As soon as you have opened the horse's mouth, tip the thimble over upon his tongue, and he is your servant. He will follow you like a pet dog. Ride fearlessly and promptly, with your knees pressed to the horse's side, and your toes turned in and heels out; then you will be always on the alert from a shy or sheer from the horse, and he can never throw you. Then, if you want to teach him to lie down, stand on his right or left side; have a couple of leather straps, about six feet long; string up his left leg with one of them round his neck; strap the end of it over his shoulders; hold it in your hand, and when you are ready tell him to lie down, at the same time gently, firmly and steadily pulling on the strap, touching him lightly on the knee with a switch. The horse will immediately lie down without the straps. He is now your pupil and your friend. You can teach him anything; only be kind to him, be gentle. Love him and he will love you. Feed him before you do yourself, shelter him well, groom him yourself, keep him clean; and at night always give him a good bed, at least a foot deep. In the winter season don't let him stand out a long time in the cold, without shelter or covering; for remember that the horse is a native of a warm climate, and in many respects his constitution is as tender as a man's.—San Francisco Spectator.

Modesty.—Nothing is more admirable than true modesty, and nothing more contemptible than that which is false; the one guards virtue, the other betrays it. True modesty is ashamed to do anything that is repugnant to right reason; false modesty is ashamed to do anything that is opposite to the humor of those with whom the party converses.

Fashions of thought succeed each other like fashions of dress, and appear as absurd after they have passed by.

WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTITUTE, Staunton, Virginia.

The next session begins on the 21st day of September, 1868, and closes on the 24th of June, 1869.

Rev William A. Harris, President, with a Faculty of twelve professors, teachers and matrons.

This is a Female College of the first rank; one of the most flourishing in the South; young ladies here from nearly all sections of Virginia, and various Southern States. Method of teaching like that pursued in the University of Virginia. Health and comfort of pupils unsurpassed. Those from the Gulf States, especially, have greatly improved in health. No social disquietude. The population of this great Valley is nearly all white. This institution is an educational home for the daughters of the South.

Charges for the entire scholastic year, board and tuition, in collegiate course, embracing

Ancient Languages	$215 00
Music	50 00
French or one Modern Language	20 00

TENNESSEE FEMALE COLLEGE,
Franklin, Tennessee, situated on the Nashville and Decatur Railroad, eighteen miles south of Nashville, in a most beautiful and healthful portion of the State, with ample buildings, thoroughly refitted and refurnished, and supplied with the modern improvements for heating, ventilation and bathing. This institution, with a full Faculty, will begin its Fall Session on Monday, September 7, 1868.

In the Literary Curriculum both Latin and French are thoroughly taught, without extra charge. This Curriculum must be completed for a degree in the College; yet young ladies may pursue an eclectic course, and receive diplomas in special departments.

For Music and Painting skilled instruction and the best facilities provided.

Boarders will find a home in the College with the family of the Principal.

Prices throughout very low for the grade of the institution. The entire charges for board and the full Literary Course will not exceed $25 per month.

The climate is specially favorable to study, and hence our scholastic year is one month longer than in the Gulf States.

CENTENARY COLLEGE,
Jackson, Louisiana,

was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war; but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually, in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month.

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution the Southern States.

The past history of the College is the pledge its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the institution, are requested to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

W. H. WATKINS, President.

EMORY AND HENRY COLLEGE,

A man who wishes to be known in the country is certainly much in his own light who does not display his name in our advertising columns.

Our terms are precisely the same as those of other weekly newspapers in this city.

We have fewer advertisements than the secular papers, but what we have are read with that conscientious regard for everything that appears in a Christian paper which takes hold in fact, too strong a hold—and holds the editor responsible for all the patent medicines, hardware, shoes, pork, flour, and even whisky, which may be set forth in its columns.

The terms of advertising are as follows:

THE HOME MONTHLY, New Orleans, for 1867.

The HOME MONTHLY will contain forty eight pages of reading matter; printed upon fine paper and in clear type, and will, from time to time, be accompanied by elegant steel-plate engravings. The subscription price will remain $3 per annum, or $1.50 for six months, invariably in advance. In order to build up a still larger circulation, we have concluded to offer the following

Liberal Inducements to Agents,

To any person sending us three yearly subscriptions, with nine dollars, we will send the MONTHLY six months, or allow them, if they prefer, to retain One Dollar and Twenty-five Cents of the amount.

To any person sending us six subscriptions, with eighteen dollars, ($18,) we will send the MONTHLY one year, or allow them to retain Two Dollars and Fifty Cents of the amount.

On amounts for subscription less than nine dollars, agents will be allowed to retain ten per cent.

Ministers, it is hoped, will act as agents, not so much from pecuniary considerations as from a laudable desire to assist in building up a home literature worthy of a place among the families of the South and on the center-tables of a Christian people.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as to means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally knows as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. That meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

For sale only by the undersigned.

In addition to the above, I also have a large and complete assortment of COOKING STOVES, comprising all of the leading Stoves of the day, equal to any offered in any other house in this city.

T. K. PRICE, ESQ., Vendor of "Price's Patent Texas Tonic," or Vegetable Medicine:

DEAR SIR—After a fair and deliberate use and experiment of your Vegetable Medicine, known as PRICE'S PATENT TEXAS TONIC, we give it as our decided opinion, that it is the best recipe that we have ever known, for Indigestion, Torpor of the Liver, Constipation of the Bowels and Dyspepsia. We consider your Vegetable Medicine worthy of all commendation, and therfore feel no hesitation in recommending its use to all our friends, as well as the public at large, and that in doing so we are contributing to all the afflicted. Many of us have been suffering from these evils from ten to fifteen years, and have been greatly benefitted.

Wishing you great success in introducing this valuable medicine,

NEW PATENT PIANOS.

RAVEN & BACON, (established in 1829.)

Warerooms, Nos. 644 and 646 Broadway,
NEW YORK.

Manufacturers of Piann Fortes, with the patent Combination Sounding-boards,

Patented August 14th, 1866.

This invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affects the sounding board, the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a pure liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. The sounding-board released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding-boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection, and its vibratory quality increased.

Our Pianos are first-class in every respect and purchasers will have not only our own guarantee as to their quality, but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument, obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

EAST ALABAMA MALE COLLEGE

AT AUBURN, ALA.

The Fall term of this Institution will open on the FIRST WEDNESDAY in SEPTEMBER next, and close on the 20th December. Besides the regular course of studies for graduation, large facilities are afforded for instruction in the Commercial and Agricultural branches. Separate schools for these branches, in connection with the College, were authorized at the last annual meeting of the Board of Trustees. A student not wishing to take either the regular or a partial literary course in the College, may confine himself to either of these Departments, and in a short time become qualified for business.

The Preparatory Department, with competent teachers, will be under the special supervision of the Faculty.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

We have again to notice a fair degree of animation in the general market from an increasing country demand for staple goods, including dry goods, boots and shoes, hardware and groceries, and increased activity in our leading staple, the demand for which has absorbed most of the supplies as rapidly as placed on sale, while prices have improved under the combined influence of favorable accounts from Liverpool and New York, and increased competition among buyers. Only a moderate business has been done in tobacco, and nothing worth special notice in sugar and molasses. The movement in Western produce has been of about the usual extent, without any material variation in prices, except an improvement in pork and a decline in corn.

The weather has been reasonably cool and more settled. The accounts from the country differ but little from those previously noticed. In some localities planters anticipate a full crop of cotton in proportion to the amount planted; in others they expect from a half to two thirds of a crop; while in others again the prospect is still more unfavorable. Upon the whole, nothing decisive has as yet been developed to satisfactorily show the probable extent of the yield, which can hardly exceed last year's, and may be materially less.

The river has risen ten inches since our last report, and is now eleven feet below high water mark.

Cotton.—The following are the arrivals since the 25th instant:

Louisiana and Missis-ippi	bales..	7653
Lake		27
Mobile		336
Texas		11
Total		8227

We left the market, at the time of our last report, ruling at 21 to 21¼c. for Good Ordinary, 21½ to 22c. for Low Middling, 22¼ to — for Middling, 22¾ to — for Strict Middling, and 23¼ for Good Middling, since which, after a further falling off of about one-fourth of a cent on Saturday, prices have responded to favorable accounts from Liverpool and New York, and increased competition among buyers, by an advance of fully one-half cent. On Saturday, owing to the increased supply on sale, factors were compelled to meet the demand more freely, and the business during the early part of the day was mostly at a reduction of one fourth of a cent, but the additional scope offered to buyers having subsequently stimulated the movement, the closing rates showed renewed firmness, while the sales summed up 4,700 bales, which is much the largest business reported this season. On Monday, the extensive operations of the previous day having cleared factors' tables of nearly all ready for sale, the supply at the commencement of business was limited, but additional lots having been opened during the day, the sales were again on a very liberal scale, amounting to fully 3,700 bales. On Tuesday the market opened with a very good inquiry and only a limited supply; but when, later in the day, the opening of additional samples offered wider scope to buyers, the demand became much more active, and 3,300 bales changed hands, at prices showing an improvement of one-half cent. The advance was stimulated by increased competition among buyers and the comparatively limited supply.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 11,700 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 41,766 bales, against 7,367 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 34,691 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 5,796 bales to Great Britain, of 3,082 to France, and of 81 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we now quote as follows:

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, AT Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

ELEVENTH SESSION.—TERMS REDUCED.

The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first-rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar, etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.

SPECIAL CAUTIONS.

Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health.

A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.

It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

Terms—Board and Tuition per session, $300.
Payments—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.

Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

Incidental Fees—First session, $2 50; second session, $2; third session, $1 50. All payments in advance.

Indigent young men can have tuition free, but will be expected to pay the incidental fees.

Boarding can be had (including lodging, washing fires and lights) in the families of citizens at $5 per week.

Boys who have made some progress in Arithmetic, English Grammar and Geography can be received into the Preparatory Department. Terms, same as above named.

Every boarder will furnish a pair of blankets, a pair of sheets, a pair of pillow slips, a counterlet or spread, and towels and lights.

For catalogues, containing full particulars, address the President. july25 3m

FRANKLIN SEMINARY.

THE subscriber would inform his friends and the public that he has in charge FRANKLIN SEMINARY, and has a good school, which is designed to be permanent, in successful operation, and that he is prepared to receive any number of pupils that may be entered to his care. He would board, in his own family, some eight or ten pupils.

His experience enables him to assure patrons and friends that the education of their children and wards will be secured by confiding them to his institution.

The following are his terms of tuition, payable in advance, per session of five months:

Elementary Branches	$20 00
Higher Branches	25 00
Latin, Greek, etc	30 00

French, extra.

Board can be had, in good families, for $15 per month, exclusive of lights and washing. Present session ends on the 7th of February, and the next ends on the 10th of July. No vacation until July. Pupils can be entered at any time. For further particulars apply to

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

THE SPANISH REVOLUTION.

LONDON, Oct. 1.—Madrid quiet. Madaz is president of the provisional junta. No measnres have been taken looking to the future beyond denunciation of a plan for a republic. Nothing will be doae until Prim and Serrano arrive. The battle between Pavia and Serrano was short, losses few.

LONDON, Oct. 1.—Speculations regarding Isabella's successor are rife. It is believed that Napoleon's dislike to the Orleans family will be fatal to Montpenciens, and the choice of an Orleanist is regarded as improbable. The Duke of Oasta, second son of Victor Emanuel, is talked of as an available candidate.

PARIS, Oct. 1.—La France predicts that violent civil war will follow the present revolution. Queen Isabella crossed the frontier yesterday. After an interview with Napoleon and Eugenie, Isabella left for Castle Pon, which has been assigned her as a residence in France.

MADRID, October 1.—To-day, Prim and Serrano arrived.

PARIS, October 1.—It is reported that Manuel Concha has fled from Spain for France.

LONDON, Oct. 8.—It is announced to-day that the great powers will allow their diplomatic relations with Spain to remain in statu quo.

Disraeli has issued an address to his constituents. Alluding to the disestablishment of the Irish Church, he said it meant severing the church and State; it also involved stirring up of additional rancor and bitterness in Ireland; it would unsettle property, make confiscation contagious, and, worse than all, give England to popery, and practically to the rule of a foreign power.

MADRID, Oct. 3.—Marshal Serrano, accompanied by seven generals of the army, entered Madrid to-day in triumph.

Great preparations were made for his reception. The streets and buildings were superbly decorated, and a large civic and military procession escorted them through the city, wild with enthusiasm.

The procession was followed by a parade and review of the National Guard, which was made the occasion of striking manifestations of the popular will.

The troops carried, side by side with their flags, banners on which were inscribed, "Down with the Bourbons," "Sovereignty of the People," "Religious Liberty," "Free Education," and other mottoes of similar character. At the termination of the review Serrano made an address announcing he had united with Gen. Prim in calling Espartero to the head of the State. The formation of the new cabinet has been completed, as follows: Serrano, President; Castello, Minister of Commerce; Topete, Marine; Agnerre, Justice; Gen. Prim, War; Olozaga, Foreign Affairs; Madoa, Minister of Finance. Manuel Concha has been arrested.

Evening.—It is said the successful revolutionary movements in Spain had the effect of inducing the Emperor Napoleon to make certain concessions to Italy, and that Massena is expected to arrive in Paris for the purpose of conducting negotiations.

Isabella has protested against concessions being made to the revolutionary junta at Madrid, contending that her forcible exclusion, for the time being, from the Spanish throne does not affect her legitimate rights as Queen of Spain, and she asserts the acts of the junta are forced upon the people against their will.

MADRID, Oct. 6.—The provisional junta has requested Serrano to take charge of affairs until the meeting of the Cortes, and he has consented to act with Prim and Olozaga as colleagues. The formation of the new cabinet is not yet completed. Escalanta, Democrat, is in command of the National Guard. It is evident that a great majority of the people are in favor of a republican government. The Duke of Vittoria and Count Cheste support the provisional junta.

MADRID, Oct. 6.—Prim has arrived, and was enthusiastically received.

MADRID, Oct. 6.—Ten P. M.—The definative provisional constitution and the provisional government, with Prim and Serrano at its head, is considered an accomplished fact.

MADRID, Oct. 7.—The provisional junta will free the children of blacks, in anticipation of the abolition of slavery by the cortes.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 5.—Our minister to Spain having notified the Secretary of State of the flight of Queen Isabella and the formation of the new provisional junta, various statements have been made as to the action taken thereon.

It is believed that the subject has been considered but briefly in the cabinet and by the President and Mr. Seward, but the matter will probably receive more careful consideration during the cabinet meeting to-morrow.

Meantime it is understood to be the opinion of the administration that our minister, Mr. Hale, should recognize the new junta as being in fact the only existing government of Spain, and none disputing its right with force, or pretense of opposing it successfully.

As to the course that shall be pursued by our administration toward the Spanish minister sent here by the fugacious Queen, and heretofore recognized by our government, it is not necessary that any action be taken until some official intercourse or recognition shall be demanded by the exigencies of the case.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 1. — Several New York papers denounce the assistant treasurer for secret sales of gold.

All the cavalry recruits at Carlisle barracks have been ordered to Gen. Sherman to fight Indians.

Col. D. S. Goodloe has been appointed revenue supervisor for Kentucky. No appointment has yet been made for New York.

Gen. Custar has been ordered to his regiment, which is to act immediately against the Indians.

Treasure in the treasury vaults, $80,000,000; $30,000,000 will be required on the first proximo for interest on the 5-20s.

WASHINGTON, October 1.—In connection with the sudden stringency of the money market all the New York papers have elaborate articles, and the following from this morning's World is selected to show the situation:

"The management of the assistant treasurer here continues to be the subject of sharp criticisms among business men. It is asserted that the assistant treasurer has sold since Friday last about $40,000,000 in gold and holds $5,000,000 in checks against banks, which have not yet been presented for payment. The selection of this week, when all the banks are preparing to make quarterly statements as the time for the Treasury Department to sell gold and drain the banks of currency is not calculated to satisfy the public.

"The government sales of gold and the draw on the banks for currency work into the hands of stock jobbing bears, and the coincidence causes comments unfavorable to the reputation of the department. Why was the government not a seller of gold at 144 or even higher, when money was easy at 3 to 4, instead of pressing sales now at about 141, when money is tightening?

"The sharp demand for money and the advance in the rate of call loans to 7, with exceptions on governments at 6, has not taken Wall street by surprise. The World warned its readers of the intended movement of the bear clique to lock up greenbacks simultaneously with preparations of the banks for quarterly statements. Many accordingly have provided themselves with all the money they will require until the end of October, so that the stock market was not much affected by money stringency.

"Leading government dealers have provided themselves with all the money they will require for some time to come, and are lenders of money."

HAMBURG, Oct. 1.—The brig Germania, of the north pole expedition, is at Bergin, Norway.

NEW YORK, Oct. 6.—The following is Gen. McClellan's letter read at the Democratic meeting last night:

NEW YORK, Oct. 3, 1868.

Douglas Taylor, Esq., Chairman:

MY DEAR SIR—I have the pleasure to acknowledge the receipt of your invitation to preside over the Democratic meeting of Monday next.

I have long since determined to abstain from further participation in political life, and therefore feel myself compelled to decline the honor you proffer me. I should, however, be glad to attend the meeting as a private citizen, did not engagements of a domestic nature, rendered imperative by my long absence from the country, detain me from the city upon the day in question.

I gladly avail myself of this opportunity to express my continued hearty sympathy with the Democratic cause, [loud cheers,] and my ardent wishes for the success of those constitutional principles for which the recent war was undertaken by the North.

Separated as I thus am from the distinguished soldier who has been chosen as the leader of our opponents, I know that you will agree with me in the highest respect for the service he has rendered our country, but it is my conviction that the measures of the party which has placed him in nomination are but continuations of strife, and can never restore peace or constitutional supremacy, and thus complete the work which he and other brave soldiers so ably commenced.

The war was only the first epoch in the history of the struggle in which we have been so long engaged. The work of the soldier is, I trust, forever ended, and it remains for the people to fulfill the great objects for which they, or their sons and brothers, were called to the field—a restored Union of States and hearts; an invigorated Constitution, to be firmly and faithfully supported; the maintenance of the national credit inviolate; a re-establishment of national and State rights in all their integrity—and thus, true harmony and a lasting peace.

These are the objects for which every citizen should now strive, and believing these to rest in the success of the Democratic cause, by the election of the eminent statesmen selected to represent the party, it is my intention to sustain that cause as a private citizen. [Renewed applause.]

With the request that you will convey to the gentlemen of the committee and my other friends, for whom you act, my sincere thanks for the compliment they have paid me, I am, most truly your's,

GEO. B. MCCLELLAN.

NEW YORK, Oct. 6.—The meeting last night was the greatest ever held in this city.

An experienced police captain estimated that ninety thousand persons were in the torchlight procession.

After the procession was joined by the delegations from adjoining counties it extended ten miles.

The scene in Union Square was grand. The main stand represented the Temple of Liberty.

The square was brilliantly illuminated by a string of lights stretched to Tammany Hall.

The streets in the vicinity seemed literally on fire with calcium lights, rockets, fire paintings and balloons.

The main stand facing Broadway was the center of attraction outside of Tammany Hall, although there were six other stands at which speeches were made to the immense throng.

The crowd, which was roughly estimated at half a million of men, women and children, stretched compactly down Broadway to Eleventh street, while the cross streets were alive with citizens. General Baldy Smith presided.

He said he represented hundreds of thousands of soldiers who thought that the results of the war would be lost without an entire change of policy.

MEMPHIS, Oct. 6.—Four thousand stand of arms arrived here, consigned to Little Rock, supposed to be to arm the negroes. No steamboat would take them as freight to Little Rock on any terms.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 6.—This city has contributed $13,000 in gold to the earthquake sufferers.

MONTGOMERY, Oct. 6.—The Governor has signed the registration bill passed by the Legislature. Both houses have passed bills providing for an election. The Senate bill makes it a misdemeanor for any person to challenge a voter, punishable by fine and imprisonment.

The probate judge of each county is to designate any number of voting places he desires. This is done to have all the voting at the court house. The Democrats denounce the registration and election bills as frauds. It took five days last February, by General Meade's orders, for the negroes to vote at the court houses.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 7.—The Republicans have eighty-three Connecticut towns; Democrats fifty-nine; divided six; unheard from thirteen.

The vote is small. Both parties claim gains on the aggregate vote.

Forty-two bishops and one hundred and fifty lay delegates are at the Protestant Episcopal Triennial Convention at New York to-day.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 7.—Governor English was in this city to day, and called upon the President.

Governor English says the vote in Connecticut on Monday last, as understood in that State, is favorable to the Democrats, and that Connecticut will certainly give a large majority for Seymour and Blair.

LIVERPOOL, Oct. 7.—Noon.—Cotton steady and unchanged. Sales, ten thousand bales.

Democratic Convention of Louisiana.

This convention adopted with applause the following sensible report, which was read by Mr. Fuqua, chairman of the Committee on the Condition of the State:

To the President and Members of the Democratic State Convention:

Your Committee on Resolutions and the Condition of the State have given the subject that serious consideration which its importance demands.

There is much in the present condition and future prospects of Louisiana to excite the most serious apprehensions in the mind of every patriot.

The Republican convention, which assembled in Chicago in May last, adopted the following resolution:

"We congratulate the country upon the assured success of the reconstruction policy of Congress, as indicated by the adoption, in a majority of the States lately in rebellion, of constitutions securing equal civil and political rights to all."

Never was a sadder misstatement solemnly proclaimed to the world by any respectable body of men. So far from securing equal civil and political rights to all, the very foundation upon which all of these constitutions rest is proscriptive. By the present Constitution of Louisiana seven distinct classes, composed of the most wealthy, the most intelligent and the most experienced in affairs of government, are disfranchised for imaginary political offenses, made offenses for the first time by that Constitution, and of which, it is needless to say, the parties have never been convicted. And by the interpretation placed upon that Constitution by the present registrars of voters, a large number of naturalized citizens, many of whom were soldiers in the Federal army, have also been denied the right to register and vote.

At the last election in this State twenty thousand, one third of the entire white vote of the State, were denied the right of suffrage, while the elective franchise wrested from them by the strong arm of military authority was, by the same authority, conferred upon more than eighty thousand negroes, originally imported from the wilds of Africa, and just emerged from two hundred years of slavery. Thus we have seen established among us, not universal suffrage and negro equality, but restricted suffrage and negro supremacy.

What has been the result of this most reckless and wicked experiment? Has it been in any sense a success? This depends upon what Congress intended to accomplish by adopting this policy. If it was their purpose to prostrate all our material interests, to array one half of our people against the other half; and to use the strong but not exaggerated language of Senator Doolittle, to "inaugurate hells" in every one of these States, then have they achieved a complete success, and well may they congratulate themselves upon the result. But if it was really their object to establish governments capable of securing the rights of all, and affording protection in life, liberty and property to every citizen, never was there a more disastrous failure.

Our present State government presents a spectacle calculated to excite no other feelings than those of shame and disgust. The ascendancy of the negroes at the ballot box has enabled them to elect the lieutenant governor and about one-half of the Legislature of their own race, and a large number of reckless and unprincipled adventurers from other States, who have no home or interest here, and are entire strangers to our laws, manners and customs. These two classes have obtained the absolute control of the State government in all its departments, and have inaugurated a system of profligacy, bribery and open and shameless corruption that we hope, for the honor of human nature, is without a parallel.

These men seem to labor for but two objects: to perpetuate their own power, and to devise new and hitherto unheard of schemes for plundering the State. They have created about two hundred new offices, with enormous salaries, and have increased and, in most instances, doubled the salaries of the old ones. Under this profligate legislation the public debt is daily increasing at a fearful rate; the public credit is utterly ruined, and the ability of the people to support the enormous taxation levied upon them by men who pay no portion of it, constantly diminishing. Nor is this all. The white people of the State, smarting under a sense of wrong, groaning under an almost intolerable load of taxation, seeing their money daily squandered to enrich needy adventurers, while they are in the same proportion impoverished and ruined, are becoming hourly more restless, discontented, and hopeless of the future.

On the other hand a great number of the negroes, though naturally a quiet and peaceable race, excited by inflammatory appeals to their worst passions, from white men of the most depraved and abandoned character, and elated by their sudden elevation to power, have become idle, turbulent and lawless; impatient of contradiction, tolerating no discussion of their newly-acquired rights, with no idea of strength except in its physical development, and no conception of power except as displayed in brute force, they are ever ready to resort to the club and the torch as the readiest means of convincing their opponents. Is it surprising that the white man often answers these arguments in the only way suited to the capacity of those who offer them? Thus almost daily we hear of collisions, of bloodshed, of riots actually occurring, and of still greater dangers threatened. Doubtless these reports are often greatly exaggerated, but it is not to be denied that there are frequent collisions between the races, and that the public mind is in such a condition as constantly to endanger public peace. In this state of things the Governor of the State proclaims to the world his inability to preserve order and enforce the laws, and calls upon the President for a large military force to be placed at his disposal. Is this the assumed success boasted of by the Chicago convention, and is there anything here upon which to congratulate the American people? What is the cause of this confessed and proclaimed inability to accomplish the only results for which governments ought ever to be instituted or sustained among men? It is to be found in the fact that this government has not the confidence and cannot command the support of the white people of the State, and it demonstrates, what was perfectly obvious before to all but crazy political zealots, that white men will not quietly submit to slavery, and that the negro is totally unfit for a ruler.

In the meantime, while we shall not cease to struggle against the tide that is sweeping us to destruction, we feel that we must mainly rely upon the good and true men of the North; and we can but appeal to them by all the ties which once bound us together, by all the traditions of the past, and all the hopes of the future, to take from us the intolerable burden which has been imposed upon us by Congress at the point of the bayonet. And in the language of our revolutionary fathers, when addressing their British brethren, we solemnly warn them that if they remain "deaf to the voice of justice and of consanguinity," and permit the shackles to be riveted upon us, we may at no distant day become "the example, and fit instruments for enslaving them."

J. O. FUQUA, Chairman.

THE great solar eclipse has been successfully observed in India. Quite a number of photographs were taken by Major Tennant's party. M. Jansen writes that the French expedition obtained very satisfactory spectrum analyses of the protuberances, which extended far beyond the edge of the sun, and which have caused so much discussion. These observations prove the protuberances to be composed of gaseous matter, and not of floating liquid globules of metallic or other substance. These enormous masses are many times larger than our earth, and had been erroneously supposed to be caused by condensation, like our own clouds. This can hardly be the case, unless the fierce heat of the sun is sufficient to turn, not merely liquids into vapors, but even vapors into some still more subtle form, allowing them to condense, in the upper regions of the sun's photosphere, into the condition of ordinary gas.

A PARISIAN artist has discovered a process for taking photographs by which the glazing of the paper with the white of eggs is dispensed with. The photograph has a much greater softness upon the dull paper, and photographs taken from engravings are undistinguishable from the originals. The glaze that hitherto always betrayed the photograph is completely displaced.

THE daughters of the late General Scott have just erected a simple monument over his remains at West Point.

LETTER FROM BISHOP PAINE.

All our readers will be delighted with the following letter from Bishop Paine. Thank God for his restoration to health. May he long live to bless the church with his labors:

ABERDEEN, Miss., Sept. 24, 1868.

I have had a strong desire to write you a long letter ever since my recovery from my illness, but, from one cause and another, have deferred it until now. The sympathy manifested for me in my affliction by brethren and friends throughout the country has deeply impressed me, and I desire to express my heartfelt gratitude for it.

My illness and recovery were alike strange. The doctors attribute the former to exhaustion, caused by overtaxing my strength; and they may be right. I had labored almost constantly since our last General Conference. On horseback, in stages and hacks, as well as by railroads, I had been attending district meetings—losing rest and sleep, and on several occasions riding on horseback through drenching rains, many miles. Last summer and fall my health gave way, yet I still persisted to meet my engagements. In April I suffered a sudden and violent attack while riding alone to fill an appointment. I became entirely oblivious, and found myself lying on the road, having fallen precipitately. I, however, got up, stunned and bruised, resumed my trip, and filled my appointment. This was followed with considerable debility, and an incessant pain in my head. In this condition I started to Louisville, Kentucky, to attend the meeting of the bishops. My indisposition increased, and I reached Winchester, Tennessee, in great pain. Here I was constrained to preach, which greatly aggravated my sufferings. At Nashville I found myself utterly unable to proceed, and but for the very kind hospitality of Brother Fite and his wife, and the medical skill of Drs. Martin and Maddin, must have had the attack which ensued immediately upon getting back home.

At midnight of May 12 I reached home, and from that time until July 26 there is a perfect blank in my memory. When I became conscious of my condition, I was utterly prostrated in strength, my nervous system in great disorder, and my mind in some degree sympathizing with my physical system. My restoration to consciousness was nearly as sudden as the attack. Friends and physicians gave me up. Some came from a distance to attend my burial, and my death was currently reported.

God raised me up in answer to the prayers of the church. His agents were the tenderest and best of nurses, who never left my bedside, and the most skillful medical attention—by Dr. Lowe. To God be all honor and praise. To them, and to all who felt and prayed for me, I hereby tender my earnest gratitude. Throughout this whole affliction I have suffered no uneasiness nor doubts as to my eternal destiny. All was calm and peaceful. My large and helpless family, and security responsibilities, alone gave me anxiety. And in addition to these, the apprehension that I would never be able to preach the Gospel, or write a line again, caused the keenest and most depressing agony I ever felt; for I was told my work was done, and that if my life should be prolonged, I could never labor again. What a privilege to preach and do good.

I am now recovering health and strength, and do most devoutly reconsecrate myself, my all, to him "who loved me and gave himself for me." I am told that my illness was typhoid fever of a severe form. Whatever it was, I thank God he has brought me off without any permanent physical or mental deprivation.

I think I have learned some important lessons. One is, that preachers, as well as others, should take care of their health, and not tax mind or body too heavily.

I am anxious to resume my labors—tried to preach a little last Sunday, but my physician and friends say I must not yet fatigue mind or body. But I hope to be in the field again shortly, and do what I can for the souls of my fellowmen. God bless the church and give her great prosperity.

R. PAINE.

P. S.—During my sickness and convalescence a great many letters were received, which I could not answer, and my correspondents will please accept this explanation.—Memphis Christian Advocate.

THE OLD HOMESTEAD.

BY ALICE CARY.

When the elms are growing warm and bright,
And in the woodland bowers
The spring time in her pale, faint robes
Is calling up the flowers;
When all with naked little feet
The children in the morn,
Go forth, and in the furrows drop
The seeds of yellow corn;
What a beautiful embodiment
Of one devoid of pride,
Is the good old-fashioned homestead,
With doors set open wide!

But when the happiest time has come
That to the year belongs,
When all the vales are filled with gold,
And all the air with songs;
When fields of yet unripened grain
And yet ungarnered stores
Remind the thrifty husbandmen
Of ample threshing floors,
How pleasant from the din and dust
Of the thoroughfare aloof
Stands the old-fashioned homestead,
With sleep and many roof!

When home the woodman plods with axe
Upon his shoulder swung,
And in the knotted apple tree
Are scythe and sickle hung;
When low about her clay-built nest
The mother swallow trills,
And decorously slow the oxen
Are wending down the hills,
What a blessed picture of comfort,
In the evening shadows red,
Is the good old-fashioned homestead,
With its boundless table spread.

And when the winds moan lowly,
When the woods are bare and brown,
And when the swallows' clay-built nest
From the rafter crumbles down,
When all the untrod garden paths
Are heaped with golden leaves,
And icicles, like silver spikes,
Are set along the eaves;
Then when the book from the shelf is brought
And the fire lights shine and play,
In the good old-fashioned homestead,
Is the farmer's holiday.

But whether the brooks be fringed with flowers
Or whether the dead leaves fall,
And whether the air be full of songs,
Or never song at all,
And whether the vine of the strawberries
Or frosts through the grasses run,
And whether it rain or whether it shine,
It all to me as one;
For bright as the brightest sunshine
The light of memory streams
Around the old fashioned homestead,
Where I dreamed my dream of dreams.

LETTER FROM NORTH LOUISIANA

Mr. Lebanon, Bienville Parish.

Mr. Editor: I have long wanted to look in upon this Mecca of the immersionists. Finding that the Ouachita District Conference was to convene at this place on the 7th ultimo, this "Pilgrim" determined to take advantage of this particular time to gratify a wish so long entertained. Arriving here on Saturday, the 5th, I found the Vernon circuit Quarterly Conference in session, Rev. Samuel Armstrong presiding. I have seldom witnessed such a scene as that which began with the opening exercises. The presiding elder read the lessons, sang, and offered a prayer of deep fervency. Much feeling was manifest in the congregation while the prayer was being offered; but in the singing of the second hymn this feeling seemed involuntarily to burst out in a blaze of delightful religious enjoyment. Shout after shout went up from preachers and people, and the attempt to preach was useless. The great Head of the Church was the preacher for that day.

The Conference sermon was preached on Sunday, at 11 o'clock, by Rev. N. A. Cravens, of Homer. It was a discourse distinguished by all the excellencies that should characterize a pure Gospel sermon—calm, dignified, yet sufficiently impassioned. He was listened to with respectful and earnest attention. Brother Cravens seems to have "renewed his youth like the eagles," and works with a degree of activity, earnestness and zeal most wonderful. In the pulpit and at the altar he is a workman "that needeth not to be ashamed."

On Sunday night we had a sermon from Rev. Thomas White, followed by such songs and shouts as your correspondent hath not heard since the days of the good old ante-bellum camp meetings. There were a number of conversions. Until a late hour the church resounded with praises to God.

On Monday, at eight A. M., the District Conference was organized, with Rev. Samuel Armstrong as president, and ex-Governor Pierce as secretary. Eighteen or twenty ministers were present, and perhaps as many laymen.

The secretary will doubtless furnish you with a full account of the proceedings, with reports, etc.

Among the visitors present I noticed the portly form and pleasant face of Professor Stuart, the popular president of that popular institution, Mansfield Female College. Taking the professor's looks as prima facie evidence of the fact, I conclude that the people at Mansfield live well. If this "Pilgrim" should ever enter the ranks of the itinerants, he hopes the appointing power will locate him permanently in Mansfield. I should be glad to see our north Louisiana friends more zealous in the support of this school—satisfied that there is not a better one in any country. I would earnestly commend it to the patronage of our people everywhere; and so long as the present accomplished scholar and true-hearted Christian gentleman presides over the college success must attend it.

But I began this letter with the intention of saying something of the rise and progress of Methodism here.

This town of Mount Lebanon is the "hub" of the Baptist church in Louisiana—the "head-center" of the immersionists throughout the State. For twenty-five years after the place was settled there was never a sermon preached by a Methodist in this region. The immersionists were "monarchs of all they surveyed—their right there was none to dispute." No wonder, then, that the efforts to plant Methodism here should meet with stern opposition. What right could "baby sprinklers" have to invade this territory consecrated to the use of the "successors" of "John the immersionist?" Had they pursued a different course, results would have been different, and more satisfactory to them.—But the opposition served only to increase the zeal of the few scattered sheep of the Methodist flock. They worshiped in an old grocery and in the woods. One good woman, who has lived here during all, says that for eighteen years she prayed for the establishment of a Methodist church at Mount Lebanon. At length God sent Brother Upton, and by a long and earnest effort a church was built. To-day Methodism is a power in Mount Lebanon. You would think thus, Mr. Editor, could you see all that I have seen since my arrival here. With nearly one hundred communicants at the sacramental board on the Sabbath, the large congregations, the deep devotional spirit pervading the people, the happy conversions witnessed within the last three days, the flaming zeal of the preachers—all these things tell of the growing power of Methodism at the "hub."

Most interesting revivals have taken place in nearly every part of this district within the last few weeks. Of those I hope the several preachers will write you.

The preachers and people rejoice greatly over the fact that Homer College, on which so much labor and money have been expended, is again the property of the Louisiana Conference. With unanimity and a spirit of determination never before manifested, the people now rise up and rally to its support. Too much praise cannot be awarded to Bro. Cravens for his earnest efforts to wrest this property from the hands of the "dippers."

Prospects grow gloomy for the Radicals in north Louisiana. The negroes have gone over en masse to the Democracy. Judge Haliburton says that it takes puppies about nine days to get their eyes open. It has taken the negroes a little longer; but they begin to see very clearly. The Radicals will find that they have supplied a stick to break their own heads. The negroes say they have been duped, humbugged, swindled and outraged by these carpet baggers. So embittered have they now become toward these cormorant adventurers that they are ready to rise up and drive the last Bureau agent from the land. I was highly amused at the views expressed by a negro orator in this parish on the subject of equality. "De Lord," said he, "made de black man a black man. He made de white man a white man. Nobody can't make 'em nothin' else. A turkey roosts on de fence: de goose he roosts on de ground.—You pull de turkey down, he git up agin. You crop his wings, but somehow or nuther he's gwine to git on de fence agin. You put a goose on de fence, and he fall off; he don't blong dar. Now dat's nigger and white man,—white man's place on de fence; nigger on de ground. Bleeged to be so."

The people in this country have made plenty of corn, and gather more than double the quantity of cotton gathered last year.

From the "hub" I go to Homer. From there I may find time to write you again.

Pilgrim.

MONTGOMERY DIST. MEETING.

Mr. Editor: The Montgomery district meeting was held at Tuskegee on the morning of the 20th of August. The introductory sermon was preached by the Rev. James F. Dowdell, D. D.

Bishop Wightman was present, and presided. The organization was perfected by the appointment of Brothers William Lowther and J. H. Swearingen as secretaries, and the usual committees.

There was a full attendance both of preachers and lay delegates, every circuit and station being represented. The preachers in charge were all present, except Rev. J. H. Lockhart, who was detained by a revival in his charge. Not only was a lively interest exhibited among the members of the meeting in its business operations, but there was evidently a deep spiritual influence pervading the whole body, making their labor a labor of love. Nor should the social influences be unnoticed. Harmony and brotherly love prevailed, and the hearts of the members, baptized by the spirit, were sensibly drawn together. In short, it was a good meeting, and the good seed sown during its session will doubtless spring up and bring forth an abundant harvest to the Lord during the ensuing year.

The reports of the committees were full, and gave evidence of thought and labor. The discussions were marked with earnestness, power and practical sense. The great aim was to devise plans for effective work.

In accordance with a resolution passed by the meeting, I submit a synopsis of the reports and resolutions for publication.

The preachers in charge made written reports of the condition of the work in their several charges.

The churches of the district were represented as in a healthy condition. During the past year there has been a gradual but decided advance of the Lord's work, evinced by a steady increase in the number and spirituality of the membership of the various churches. A number of revivals were reported, resulting in accessions to the church, and in an increase of vital piety, as evidenced by profession and practice

The report on Sunday schools was presented by Brother J. W. Glenn. The paramount importance of this great auxiliary of the church was clearly and forcibly presented, together with the necessity of keeping pace with other churches in this field of labor, if we would, as a church, maintain the position we already occupy. It was replete with practical suggestions for making available all the appliances for effective teaching. It especially urged upon teachers and superintendents the importance and duty of thoroughly qualifying themselves, intellectually and spiritually, for their great and responsible work, and cautions them to keep the conversion of the children under their instruction as the primary object, to which everything else is subsidiary. Their suggestions are embodied in the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we all work more earnestly in this cause—the preacher by lecturing, the laity by laboring in the schools.

Resolved, That we recommend the institute, teachers' meetings and normal classes for the preparation of teachers.

Resolved, That we request the quarterly conferences, at their first annual meeting, to appoint some one in each charge to lecture and labor especially for the efficiency and extension of this cause.

Resolved, That we recommend in all schools the formation of Bible classes for the adult members of the charge.

Resolved, That the great end of Sunday school teaching is the salvation of the pupils.

Resolved, That we work for and encourage the circulation of the Sunday School Visitor.

Reports in writing were received and read from each Sunday school delegate, giving a most cheering account of the state of the Sunday school work, showing that much new ground has been occupied. A number of new schools are reported as organized by individual effort. So pertinent are the remarks of the delegates on this point that we extract them: "Here is the great field for lay effort. The Sunday school leaven is in the lump, and is being slowly diffused throughout the whole; but progress is slow, and will be until individual effort is everywhere engaged in the church Experience and observation teach that organizations and resolutions, as a rule, amount to almost nothing. There must be individual action.—The Sunday school cause is missionary, and there are side doors to almost any church, open to individual effort, inviting the laborer to enter and reap the ripe harvest. This course has been pursued in several churches in this district, and children have been brought in who had never been in a church or heard a sermon."

Ninety-two conversions were reported in the Sunday schools since the last meeting. This was not a full report of conversions.

The Committee on Missions reported, through their chairman, Rev. E. J. Hamill, the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we recommend regular missionary collections to be taken up in all our Sabbath schools, and that in every church a missionary committee be raised, whose duty it shall be to devise plans for taking up, as regularly as possible, in the churches, such collections as are necessary for the extension of this great work.

Resolved, That it is the duty of our itinerant and local preachers to gather colored congregations, whenever practicable, and preach to them as often as possible; and that we recommend the laity to promote among them the organization of Sunday schools, the establishment of prayer meetings, and the adoption of all other aids to piety.

At the conclusion of an earnest discussion by a large number of the members of the meeting, the bishop publicly returned thanks to God for the deep missionary spirit pervading the meeting and the entire congregation.

The Committee on Church Extension, through its chairman, Rev. John Mathews, concluded an able report with the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we recommend to our preachers and people the importance of entering upon the unoccupied portions of our territory for the purpose of extending and building up the kingdom of Christ.

Resolved, That it is the sense of this district meeting that the time has come in the history of our denomination to agitate the necessity of organizing a Church Extension Aid Society.

Brother Mathews was requested, by a vote of the meeting, to prepare his report for publication We forbear, therefore, to make even a synopsis of this able report.

The report of the Committee on Books and Periodicals showed that there is a lamentable want of interest and effort in the support and circulation of our church literature. It is clearly proved that poverty is not a legitimate or tenable excuse, for the houses of our members are frequently found well supplied with secular literature, and that too of a questionable moral character, to the exclusion of our church publications. [These italics are our own.—Ed.] The evil lies in the want of a proper appreciation of the intellectual and religious influence of the sanctified literature of our church, and of the tremendous evil influence of the irreligious and semi-infidel publications which are falling from our secular press, thick as "the autumnal leaves which strew the vales of Vallambrosa." The church must arouse from its lethargy on this subject. It must be made to feel its responsibility and its duty, to sustain and diffuse the clear, logical, sanctified issues of the religious press—this powerful adjunct to the Christian ministry, the appointed instrumentality for the evangelizing of the world, and building up the Christian church. It was Resolved, That it is the duty of our ministers and laymen to interest themselves energetically in the circulation of the Advocates, especially of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, the organ of this district meeting, which is edited with such distinguished ability by Dr. Keener.

Resolved, That we pledge ourselves to use every effort to introduce the new Discipline, and the publications of our Publishing House, into every family of our membership.

Resolved, That the preachers in charge of stations and circuits, belonging to this district conference, be required to report in writing, to the next meeting of this body, the efforts which they have made personally to extend the circulation of our church literature.

The Committee on Quarterly Conferences reported a series of resolutions looking to greater efficiency in our quarterly conferences. They especially recommend the strict observance of quarterly fast days—the requiring of fuller and written reports of the operations of the church—that three days be devoted to such meetings, and especially urges the punctual attendance of all the official members, and a general attendance of the members of the church within the circuits or stations.

The Committee on the State of the Church submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Worship announce that the members of this body, together with others, convene at the church at four P. M on Sunday, to engage in prayer for an outpouring of God's spirit upon this district.

This meeting was held with gracious results.

The Committee on Education reported, through its chairman, Rev. J. F. Dowdell, the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we encourage our people, to the extent of their ability, to educate their children, and thus qualify them to fill usefully any station in life.

Resolved, That we recommend the East Alabama Male College as an institution of learning, belonging to the church, worthy of the largest patronage, and affording facilities for acquiring a thorough practical education second to no other in the land.

Resolved, That this district meeting will raise annually an amount sufficient to keep at the college one young man preparing for the ministry, and that a committee of five be appointed to apportion the sum among the respective stations and churches, and to collect and pay over the same to the presiding elder for the benefit of said student.

Resolved, That the amount of three thousand dollars, proposed by the board of trustees to be raised by the district, and deemed indispensable to the relief of the college, be apportioned among the different stations and circuits, and that the respective ministers are hereby solemnly enjoined to use their best endeavors, in the fear of God, for its collection.

Resolved, That the committee of five mentioned in the third resolution be empowered, when a vacancy shall from any cause occur in the representation of the district in the college, to fill such vacancy by some other worthy young man who may be preparing for the ministry.

Resolved, That we cordially approve of the plan adopted by the board of trustees to afford the benefits of a collegiate education, at a small cost, to poor young men.

Rev. G. W. F. Price presented a report of the condition and prospects of the Tuskegee Female College. This institution is under his charge, assisted by four other teachers. The exercises of the past year have been characterized by quiet diligence and earnest application. A good moral and religious influence has pervaded the school, and the church has been constantly recruited from its pupils. Since the opening of the institution, in 1856, there have been nearly a thousand students under its tuition. A large number of its graduates are steady and consistent members of the church, exerting a wholesome influence in their several spheres of activity.

There is strong reason for believing these institutions will eventually become unembarrassed. They are recommended to the support and confidence of the church, particularly within the bounds of this Conference.

On motion of Brother William Lowther, a committee was appointed to ascertain the expense of maintaining the present beneficiary of the district at college, and to assess the amount to the several stations and circuits.

The pastors of the district are requested to nominate a layman in their respective charges to collect the amounts assessed, and forward them to the presiding elder, under the third resolution of the Committee on Education.

The following delegates to the Annual Conference were appointed: Rev. G. W. F. Price, D. Clopton, William Lowther, J. Hill. Alternates: R. H. Howard, E B. Wilkerson, Rev. J. F. Dowdell, Jos. R. Green.

The next meeting was appointed to be held at Salem.

Resolutions of thanks were adopted to the M. and W. P. R. R. for its courtesy in extending the privilege of half fare to delegates; and to the citizens of Tuskegee for their generous hospitality.

The preaching was simple, direct, evangelical, and attended by the power of the Spirit. Bishop Wightman preached to a very large congregation on Sunday, in the college chapel, with his usual power and unction. The administration of the sacrament followed, when about thirty preachers and a large number of members partook.

W. Lowther, Secretary.

We published last week an account of the adhesion given by the new Queen of Madagascar to Christianity. Later news is of the most favorable character. Since the cessation of the official mourning the chapels have been crowded; and at one, which had just been enlarged, there were counted 2,680 attendants at an evening service. The prime minister's sister has just been baptized. The same eagerness to hear the Gospel is manifested in the country as in the city, and is confined to no class or locality, but seems universal. Mr. Cousins, in a letter to the Chronicle of the London Missionary Society, mentions as a sign of progress the rescinding of an old law which prohibited the erection of stone or brick houses within the walls of the city. "The richer people are all intent upon building brick houses, and a few years will probably make a great change in the appearance of the place. As an addendum to the permission to build brick or stone houses, it was also enjoined that all houses within the town shall be roofed with tiles." So that, if the Gospel is allowed free course, and the civilization which it originates and fosters receives no check, in a few years we may see a new and civilized Madagascar. Though separated by but a narrow strait from Africa, the Madagascans belong not to the negro race; but to the same Malay or Polynesian race which has shown in the Sandwich, Feejee and Tahitian Islands such a gregarious adoption of Christianity and civilization. In this they also resemble the aborigines of India and Burmah, among whom all our marked success has taken place.—New York Independent.

A Basle paper states that the keeper of the buffet at the railway station charged Queen Victoria and a suite of thirty persons 700 francs for a breakfast of coffee, eggs and cold meat, being at the rate of 23 francs ($5 60 gold) a head. The Basle people are very indignant at this extortion; but the restaurateur would probably justify himself as the English innkeeper did who presented George III. with a bill of one guinea for a slice of bread and one egg. The king, while paying the money, observed that eggs must be very scarce in that part of the country. "No, your majesty," was the reply; "eggs are plentiful enough, but king's visits are rare."

CHRISTIAN LIGHT IN CLASSIC DARKNESS.

BY REV. EDWARD A. LAWRENCE, D. D.

In comparison with their ancestors, the modern Greeks are intellectual dwarfs; and yet, as in ancient Greece, the intellect is greatly in advance of the affections. There are some noble exceptions; but many of them are lazy, lying, marauding and revengeful—claiming all the importance of their fathers, with little of their wisdom, or virtue, or valor. To the influence of a bigoted and corrupt hierarchy, and their long bondage to the Turks, this sad state of things is mostly to be ascribed.

The government is a constitutional monarchy, consisting of a king, senate and chamber of deputies. My visit to the latter gave me a view of the Greek manner of transacting parliamentary business. Some of the members were in Grecian costume, some in the Frank, and some partly in both. All kept on their hats or caps, even while the chamber was being addressed, and sometimes even when addressing it. Of parliamentary rule there was next to none; for, although no exciting topic of debate was before them, yet, like Elihu the Buzite, they all seemed "full of matter," and were making speeches, two or three at a time; not, as it seemed to me, for reasons of state, but for their own amusement or relief. Nor was there much inconvenience in this parliamentary disorder, as each addressed some other member, and the president was thereby relieved from the necessity of attending to the several arguments at once; and the weight of all together did not seem burdensome to the house, although it was evidently a feeble one.

Nearly every member had a string of beads, with which he was giving employment to his fingers; not, as with the Romanists, for devotion, but for diversion. This twirling of beads is a fancy and a fashion among the Greeks. Some of their best speakers would lose the thread of their discourse if they dropped that of their beads; and, judging from the specimens I observed, some have no other thread to drop.

The king, Otho, who at the time of my visit was on the throne, was a Bavarian Roman Catholic, and a despot. His queen was a Protestant, and the people were of the Greek church. The constitution, which was wrested from him in 1843, by the people, while surrounding his palace twenty thousand strong, and holding him prisoner, grants toleration to all religions, but does not allow of proselytism from the established one.

In October, 1862, the people rose again, dethroned Otho, expelled him, with his Bavarian minion, from the palace and the country, and selected to take his place Prince Alfred of England. In this they were checkmated, and George I., son of Christian IX, of Denmark, brother-in-law to the Prince of Wales, was placed upon the throne. He is a Protestant, simple in his tastes, and quite democratic in his bearing for a sovereign. He was only eighteen when he assumed the government, but he was of a mature judgment, and wise and winning in his policy. Otho came to Greece attended by nearly four thousand Bavarian soldiers. George, Cincinnatus-like, was accompanied by only two friends and the minister accredited to Greece from Denmark. Otho rode in state to the cathedral; George walks, that his coachman may worship when and where he does. Otho built a throne in the house of God, and sat above the priests and people. George had it removed, and stands before the Lord on the same level with his subjects. Otho never recognized our veteran missionary, Dr. Jonas King, as a minister of God. George invited him to officiate in the royal chapel, and to administer the Lord's Supper to him and his court, sending his coachman for him and to carry him home again. What more becoming than that such a king, should ride in the king's carriage?

Otho commenced his reign with a loan of sixty millions for the poor Greeks to pay, which was mostly squandered in the extravagance and vanities of royalty. Until within the last year we read of no loan by the government under George; and then it was the sum of five millions to give bread to the exiled and starving Cretans who had taken refuge among them. The ancient Athenians would not deliver up a political refugee, even at the demand of Alexander the Great, nor would they let him starve. The old spirit still lives in modern Athens.

In his proclamation on ascending the throne, King George modestly says to the "Hellenes:"

"I bring to you neither ability nor an experienced mind; these are qualifications which you could not have expected from my age. Nevertheless, I bring to you a conviction and an earnest devotion, with strong faith in the oneness of our destiny in the future. I promise to consecrate my whole life to your prosperity.

"I request the best and ablest among you to rally around me, without regard to past political differences; and by their intelligent and enlightened assistance I shall attempt to develop the various good elements and material resources which your beautiful country possesses, and which is, henceforth, to be my country too.

"May the Almighty God, who shows himself strong in our weakness, guide me in my endeavors, and never allow me to forget these public promises I make to you this day!

"Besides, I beseech our God to cover you under his holy and saving shadow. GEORGE."

A proclamation of such rare beauty and Christian simplicity in her youthful monarch bodes better days for hitherto troubled and oppressed Greece. But while in this favorable change of rulers the country makes a decided advance, yet, on account of the opposition of the priests, the new constitution, framed by the chamber of deputies, does not give her entire freedom. She simply tolerates other religions, on condition of their not proselyting from the holy Oriental Greek church.

This church is as corrupt as the Romish, while the conduct of some of its higher functionaries is scarcely exceeded in licentiousness by that of the cardinals at Rome; indeed, common rumor makes them even more intemperate. Its theology, being mostly made up from the first five Councils, and the Lives of the Saints, leaves its adherents at liberty to live very much like sinners.

The ecclesiastical constitution in Greece, until recently, was that of an independent synod. In 1850 it came into subjection to the Patriarchate at Constantinople, in the hope that the Russians were about to take possession of that city, and make it the center of a consolidated Greek empire. In this they have been, as yet, disappointed.

The Greek church has fewer pictures of the saints than the Romish, and these are ugly and repulsive as works of art. In the service there is a great deal of intoned or mumble prayer, but very little preaching, although as a simple Bible Christianity works itself among the people this latter becomes more common, and one or two monks have recently attained a kind of celebrity by their pulpit powers.

Public service is a work performed by the priests for the people, and, for the most part, behind a screen which separates the actors from the auditors. The part of the latter consists in bendings, bowings and crossings, now on the forehead and now on the breast; then on the right shoulder and then on the left. These crossings are a kind of ecclesiastical art, and a theological symbol. The first finger is pressed closely upon the thumb, the second is placed on the top of the first, the two remaining ones being shut together in the palm. The three united denote the trinity in unity; and the crossing, the crucifixion.

A little girl, some five years old, who was standing at my feet one day in the cathedral, was slow in learning the art. A gray-bearded, benevolent old priest bent over to assist her, but she could not make her fingers come right. Again he stooped to his young charge, and again she failed. Taking her little hand in his, and placing thumb and fingers each and all in exact theological position, he carried her skillfully through all the manipulations. How exact, how careful in these fingerings, as if divine worship were a performance on the polished keys of some instrument of music!

The women—where all ought to be equal before the great King—are turned into an outer court, like goats into a pen, separated from the sheep, or are shut off into the side galleries, as only semi-worshipers; while the men—man is everything in the East, and woman next to nothing—occupy the body of the church and all the best positions.

The priests are allowed to marry once, but, by so doing, can never rise above simple presbyters. They believe in God, in his Son, and in the Holy Ghost; in the first five Councils, and transubstantiation. But their chief object of worship is the Virgin Mary. They kiss her image, they pray to her, they adore her, they defy her. And to dissuade from this worship of a creature is proselytism, is impious, and almost as bad as atheism. The priests are watchful over their people in eternals, even to the placing of a finger in making the signs of the cross, yet how careless of the state of the heart and of the life! They cumber them with burdensome forms, yet how zealously they misinterpret to them the vital substance of the divine word! In their own ignorance and vices lies, in a great degree, the secret of their urgency to prolong the reign of ignorance. They lock up the temple of knowledge, and hang the key upon their filthy girdles as a badge of sanctity. Still, there are some honest priests.

But, notwithstanding the moral darkness which has so long brooded over this classic land, there are many encouraging signs. Forty years ago, when Dr. King first went to Athens as a missionary, Greece had just emerged from the caves of Turkish bondage. The allied sovereigns frowned on her noble struggle. Everything was chaotic, and everything had to be learned by experience and from our example. There were no public schools, and but few private ones. Nor was there a single woman in Athens qualified to become the teacher of such a school. Now, through the influence of Drs. King and Hill, with other conspiring causes, there exists a system of public and private instruction unsurpassed by any in Europe, from primary schools up to the university, with its fifty professors and six or eight hundred students—a system which brings one-sixth part of the whole population of Athens into the processes of thorough mental training.

In all these schools, despite the influence of the church, the Bible may be freely read and studied. Their text books consist, in part, of their ancient historians, orators and poets, whose spirit of freedom is doing much to emancipate the young from their bondage to an ignorant, intolerant, licentious priesthood. Literary men are beginning to be ashamed of the vile calumnies and persecutions which narrow minded ecclesiastics have heaped upon Dr. King, as a disgrace to the nation.

When he commenced his mission at Athens it was at the close of the Greek revolution. The city was in ruins, and the Turks, in great numbers, were leaving. For two or three hundred dollars he made a purchase of a plot of land, which has since increased to the value of some thousands. This land, lying in the heart of the city, was appropriated by the government without rendering any remuneration or account. This injustice, together with Dr. King's personal rights as an American citizen, was the occasion of a diplomatic correspondence between the government of Greece and our own, which led, finally, to a satisfactory settlement of his claims.

His second persecution had commenced just before my arrival. The petition to the Holy Synod, in which he was characterized as "of an utterly wicked and devilish spirit," "as a false apostle, a mad dog of impiety," and by other kindred epithets, had been published in the Church Journal only three days before. It originated in the intense bigotry of the ecclesiastics, who dread all mental and moral illumination, as owls the rising sun.

Dr King had violated no constitutional principle—had infringed no legal authority. As a citizen of the United States, using the rights secured to him in common with all other dissenters from the established religion, he preached the pure Gospel in his own house to all those who wished to hear it, and circulated the Scriptures and other religious books to as many as were willing to receive them. But the seed was taking root. God had blessed the springing thereof. The field was giving promise of a golden harvest. It was this that provoked persecution. Satan came down in great wrath, as was most natural when the foundations of his kingdom were beginning to shake. The tool made use of in this case was one who styled himself "the pious Leonidas Kyriakoulis," who, as a spy on Dr. King's Sabbath services, sought the materials of the false and scandalous accusation which he laid before the synod in the form of a petition.

On the Sabbath morning following the appearance of these charges in the public journal, I threaded my way across the city from the Hotel d'Orient, and, turning from Mercury street into a narrow lane, came to a strong gate. I applied my hand to the heavy iron knocker, and in a moment was admitted into a yard inclosed by a high stone wall, with a moderate sized stone house at one end, and a small shop for the sale of books on the other, which fronted on the main street. It was the residence of our faithful missionary. His gate was watched by spies to report whoever should pass through it.

It was the hour of service as I entered the chapel, a room on the basement story. Two soldiers were stationed within, and about forty persons were present, under circumstances in which hardly any were expected. Some thirty of these were members of the university. Dr. King read in modern Greek, with free explanations and comments, the eighth chapter of John. Then he preached from the last clause of the forty-sixth verse: "If I say the truth, why do ye not believe me?" His manner was simple, earnest and forcible; and his mild blue eye, expressive of his well-known benevolence, and his calm and dignified composure, were such as to give force to the peculiarly appropriate and beautiful words of his text. With no art, he was rhetorical, and without effort he was eloquent. But his rhetoric and eloquence, like Paul's on Mars Hill consisted in going directly to his subject. He felt deeply, he spoke earnestly; and I never beheld an assembly of more eager listeners.

Many of the most intelligent men in Athens, some of them connected with the university and the government, privately sustained and encouraged Dr. King; not from religious interest, but because they were persuaded that the only hope of mental and moral emancipation for Greece is in an open Bible, and a free, bold preaching of the Gospel. Twelve of the most learned lawyers protested, in a public document, against the decision of the court, by which Dr. King was sentenced to fifteen days' imprisonment, and to exile. These men regarded him as an apostle of freedom as well as a teacher of religion. They perceived that there is the most intelligence, the most freedom, the most social comfort and national prosperity, precisely where the Bible is most attentively studied, and the Gospel preached without let or hindrance. For such reasons discerning statesmen secretly countenanced that to which they lacked and still lack the courage for giving their open advocacy.

But I believe the morning dawns on Greece. She has an open Bible, and the priesthood cannot shut it. And the light will shine, for the church cannot long fence it out; and the darkness will flee away, for the Lord God hath spoken it. Three native Greeks are now laboring as missionaries in Athens, with the patriarchal Dr. King as a co-worker and counselor. And the three were in part or altogether educated in this country. The Rev. Mr. Kalopothakes is acting in the fourfold capacity of editor, physician, teacher and preacher. "The Star in the East," issued by him, is most appropriately named, from being the first religious newspaper ever published in Athens. It is the most ably conducted journal in Greece, and gives the people more of true light than all others. He has been chosen president of the Athens association of editors, and is fast coming to be, morally and politically, one of the archons of the city. He is a thorough scholar, having passed through their university course, and received his theological and medical instruction in this country. Shrewd, yet he is practical; bold, yet wise and prudent. His wife, one of the noble Marblehead women, is a true companion and a real helper and worker. She was a lamb of the flock which the great Shepherd gave me to watch and to feed. As Timothy was the genuine son of Paul, so was she one of my own dear children, in whom I had great confidence, and now have great comfort as "a crown of rejoicing."

Mr. Kalopothakes and his friend, Mr. Paionides, were university students at Athens, and through Dr. King's preaching had become converts to the Gospel when I first met them. One dark, drizzly night in January these two students and young Christians accompanied me and my nephew from Dr. King's, where we had passed a delightful evening, to our room at the hotel. We could not be very communicative, as they did not understand much of our language, nor we much of theirs. For a while, therefore, we sat rather demure. Then, remembering that God could understand both Greek and English, I proposed a little prayer meeting. We all knelt and prayed, and we soon felt the presence of a fifth, whose Spirit is the golden chain that binds both Greek and Jew, both bond and free, in sweet and holy communion.

I also met at Dr. King's another Greek youth, George Constantine, who afterwards, from a spirit of enterprise and a desire to know more of the world, found his way in a Danish vessel to this country. His only introduction was a card to "Professor Sophocles, near Boston." Not being acquainted with our language, he wandered over the city in search of this indefinite location; and it was after no little difficulty that he made his way to Cambridge, and to the house of the Greek professor. Not long after he was led on the Sabbath to Dr. Albro's church, where the preacher was the venerable Dr. Goodell, of whom he had heard as a missionary at Constantinople. Calling upon him in the evening, he met with my nephew and traveling companion—now the Rev. Samuel D. Hosmer, of Nantucket, Massachusetts—with whom, on the following day, he sought me in my Marblehead home.

I found him with an ardent thirst for knowledge, and a degree of religious interest that soon resulted in the new Christian life. From this time I became particularly interested in his education, and with the earlier part of it was quite closely connected, so that he was for some time an inmate of my family, and, as it were, a son to us.

A genuine Greek Yankee, he is now a missionary in his native land, under the auspices of the American Foreign and Christian Union. With the assistance of his excellent and cultivated American wife, from Charlestown, Massachusetts, he is occupied in preaching, teaching, translating, exploring destitutions and distributing Bibles and other religious books, with an earnestness that makes him a growing power for good in Greece.

These men and women are true missionaries in classic Greece, right under the Parthenon-crowned Acropolis, in full view of Mars Hill, and near the old Bema, where Attic eloquence and oratory so often thrilled the people, and almost ruled the world. They know what the pure Gospel is, and will do what they can to make Athens and all Greece know it too. In connection with Mr. Sakellarius and wife, and Dr. and Mrs. Hill, they have gathered twelve or fifteen hundreds of Cretan refugee children into schools, and are teaching them to read and sing, and the girls to sew and knit.

The three American wives of these Greek laborers are all musical, and add the charms of melody to the rhythm of our own sweet Sabbath school hymns, "Come to Jesus," "Sweet Hour of Prayer," and others, which have been translated into modern Greek as a means of elevating these degraded and destitute outcasts whom God has sent to their doors.

The days of Greece, for three hundred years of Turkish vassalage, were dark as midnight. From 1820 to 1828—the period of revolutionary struggle—the first rays of light began to tinge its hill-tops, and to strike into its valleys. From 1828 to 1863 the great powers, England, France and Russia—termed the Holy Alliance, but, better, unholy—forcing their vile nostrums upon the invalid patient, doctored her well-nigh to death. Thanks to a silently working and invigorating Gospel, the medicines did not quite kill her; and she has thrown away the prescriptions, is dismissing the doctors, and has every prospect of a steady and permanent convalescence, through the "healing medicines" of the great Physician.—Sabbath at Home.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

EUTAW, Ala., Sept. 18, 1868.

Died, near Romulus, Tuscaloosa county, Alabama, on the 29th of August, 1868, in the 39th year of her age, Sister MARY E. GREGORY, wife of Dr. C. C. Gregory, and daughter of William and Jane McKee.

The deceased was born in Kershaw district, South Carolina, and in early infancy, with the rest of the family, removed to Pickens county, Alabama. Here she was brought up under religious influences. In early life she sought and obtained religion, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South. In 1846 she was married to Mr. (afterward Dr.) C. C. Gregory, and subsequently became a resident of Tuscaloosa Co., where she died.

The limits of an ordinary obituary notice will not suffice to give an adequate idea of the real worth of this Christian woman. We may be permitted to say, however, that in all things she "adorned the doctrine of God, her Saviour;" was an ornament to society. As a mother she was tender and affectionate, as a wife amiable and devoted, and as a neighbor kind and obliging. She was devoted to the church of her choice, and her house was the home of the preacher.

In her death all who knew her have sustained a great loss, and to the afflicted husband and children the loss is irreparable. But we are not left without hope. Aside from a life of piety, her death was a calm, quiet, peaceful, and yet remarkable transition from earth to heaven. So triumphant was that death that one could feel that he was standing hard by the entrance to the world of glory. She delivered dying messages to her husband and children. She said she cheerfully resigned them into the hands of the good Lord. She repeated a stanza of the beautiful hymn, "Rock of Ages," and then sang:

"Jesus can make a dying bed Feel soft as downy pillows are."

She then quietly breathed her life away. Thus passed into a bright eternity this good and noble woman. T. C.

OUR BISHOPS.

JACKSON, La., Sept. 23, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: Why is there so much writing—and printing too—about our bishops? Is it necessary or best for the church, or the people generally? We doubt it. Nor can it be pleasant to the bishops themselves.

It would seem that one class of writers are called to watch and praise, and yet another class to "watch for" and complain of the same "holy men." The first, faithful to their calling, praise the bishop's personal, his reading, praying and sermonizing—praise all as men of wonderful power, toil, etc., all of which is true; but that is not the question, for I suppose none doubt the "fine appearance," the moral worth, the "erudition" or the eloquence of the "Rt. Rev. College," which, as a church, we justly revere. But why should our church organs, in almost every week's issue, sound out in descriptions or praise of these holy men by letter-writers, whether they write of colleges, church dedications, district meetings, Sunday school celebrations, revivals, or railroad and steamboat rides? Is it the more excellent way?

The second class sing on the same key and by the same organ, but in different sentiment—about thus: "We never see or hear a bishop in this region," "Our people want to see a bishop," "We had a good district meeting without a bishop," "All were sadly disappointed at the absence of the bishop, but the business of the meeting was well conducted by the presiding elder; the preaching was excellent, and the Holy Ghost was present in power," "The bishops ought to travel through the districts," "We ought to have more bishops," etc.

Now, Mr. Editor, it is supposed that the foregoing rather hackneyed deliverances are in doubtful taste, to say the least of them, and may not tend to the edification or even the amusement of the people.

An occasional notice of any good man, and his work, power and success, it is thought, may be just and proper, and pleasant to the subject of commendation and praise; but such continual harping upon the character and doings or non-doings of an already highly honored class of brethren might be enjoyed, one would think, by members of an "admiration society," by a political jungle; but strangely, if at all, by grave ministers of the Gospel, or by Christian communities generally.

Your brother in the church,

JUSTICE AS DISPENSED BY A NEGRO MAGISTRATE.—A little incident of the result of Radical rule has just been related to us. It occurred in our sister State of Louisiana, which in its late election elected a number of negroes to office. In the parish of Madison, among others, a negro was elected justice of the peace. He was duly installed, and for months past has been playing magistrate. In his neighborhood lived a very worthy old negro named Billy Hoagh. Billy owned two mules, and last year, to enable him to plant, he gave a bill of sale of the mules to Col. B., who supplied him with a stipulated amount of supplies. Billy, with every one who engaged in planting last year, met with total failure. His employes were to a great extent unpaid, and the claim of Col. B. was unsatisfied; but knowing Billy to be perfectly honest, the colonel permitted him to use the mules in making a crop this year. A few days ago our colored Solon of a magistrate attached the mules in favor of Billy's hands, and the mules were sold. Col. B. being apprised of this, recovered the mules by the usual legal process. This so incensed the ebony dispenser of justice that he arrested Billy, chained him for two days and nights in front of his door to a tree, and refused to give him for that period either food or water. He finally released his prisoner on condition that Billy pay him twenty-five dollars in cash. This was readily performed, when the prisoner was released. A few days after he had Billy rearrested, forced him, through fear of being again chained, to pay him five dollars and a pledge for one hundred pounds of cotton, to be paid as soon as picked. All this action, it will be remembered, was in the collection of a debt in a civil case. No use for military commission where this negro magistrate rules.—Vicksburg Herald.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.—Any person wishing to subscribe for this paper can do so by paying the Methodist preacher in the circuit, and forwarding to us his receipt for three dollars, with the address of the subscriber upon it, stating Post office, State, Circuit, and Conference. The receipt ought to be taken in duplicate.

N. B.—Agents are requested, wherever practicable, to invest and remit funds in a Post Office Order, DRAFT, or by express. If this cannot be done, REGISTER the letter at our expense.

When money is forwarded in either of the above methods we will be responsible for it, but not otherwise.

NOTICE.

A DISTRICT MEETING of the official members and preachers, local and traveling, of the NEW ORLEANS DISTRICT will be held in Carondelet street church, New Orleans, on the third Saturday and Sabbath in October. By the rule of the Louisiana Conference four delegates will be elected at this meeting.

TO OUR AGENTS.

"What thy hand findeth to do," etc. Put off nothing until Conference—not even the payment of moneys for the ADVOCATE. Money can be sent safely by post if the letter be registered—at any rate we take the risk. How is it that so many people are being added to the church, and none of them can be got to take the ADVOCATE? Something wrong somewhere. "By their fruits ye shall know them." We suppose that returns for cotton are already supplying the country with cash enough for indispensables, and a family paper of some sort should be reckoned among them. Going, as this paper goes, to five hundred stations and circuits, it will require but a feeble canvass of each to yield us directly one thousand new subscribers. This is the auspicious time—in the month of October—and we earnestly request our agents to avail themselves of it.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

We refer our readers to a number of New York advertisements which they will find recently inserted in the ADVOCATE, especially to that of Messrs. S. M. Pettengill & Co., of 37 Park Row, New York, and No. 10 State street, Boston. We have done a good deal of business with the firm, and find it prompt, correct and reliable in everything.

SOULE'S COMMERCIAL COLLEGE, No. 80 Camp street. In addition to the usual advantages of such institutions, Mr. Soule has in his college a model bank and a business establishment, so that students learn not so much from books as from practical operations and entries. His continuance here and his success entitle him to the patronage of all who wish to acquire a commercial education. The specimens of his penmanship seem to us to be about perfect.

NOT satisfied with the rate of speed attained by their velocipedes, the French have invented a locomotive with four wheels, which is said to be safer, swifter and less fatiguing to the rider than any road vehicle known.

THE MEMORANDUM BOOK.

Bishop Asbury was famous for the small packages of sugar and tea which he had neatly put up and placed in his saddlebags when about to start upon one of his half-continent Episcopal circuits. He went prepared in small matters as well as large ones. It is a good example. Go to Conference: 1. Expecting to stay patiently to the end—leave word at home that you are not to be looked for until back. 2. Take your newest sermon with you, not your best. That "best" sermon has probably lost somewhat of its life, and life is what you will need, and they will wish for most at Conference. 3. Take your razor, your coat-broom, your toothbrush, and if you smoke—which is not impossible—your own pipe. These things are not essential to you, but they will add to the comfort of others. We, of course, do not mention Discipline and hymn book, because they as much belong to the person of an itinerant as his parson's coat; but that very full and invariable blank book of memoranda, upon the yearly presence of which depends our entire general statistics of membership. Do not come without it. It is to that book we mainly look for new subscribers, and "complaints" from old ones, and "charges," and the "balance" due. Strange to say, the thought of that book at once sets our fancy at work, more than all else we have mentioned. The debt and credit account with the circuit, the "allowance" and the "collections," and the "quarterage" and "traveling expenses" of the year—they are all there. The memorandum book of the soldier, the farmer, the merchant, each has its individuality; it contains the essentials of the history of each calling; so that of the Methodist preacher. We could wish no better elements for realizing the itinerant past than these leaves full of entries, in most accidental style, of places, sermons, deaths, meetings, appointments, names of members, and moneys received. Occasionally a "diary" in ink is kept up, in true Wesleyan style, upon which rains and creeks have left a blurring. A preacher without his blank book at Conference is a very blank personage, and walks about as if he had left his memory behind him. The secretary, the bishop, the presiding elder and his own brethren look at him in silent sorrow.

SPAIN.

The revolution in Spain seems to be an accomplished fact. Prim and Serrano are in Madrid, and the junta in complete, quiet possession. Queen Isabella has passed over into France with the crown jewels and a considerable sum of gold. Great enthusiasm has been displayed in Madrid, and banners are carried about bearing the significant mottoes, "Down with the Bourbons," and "Religious Liberty." This hoary tyranny has gone down in an hour. Its iniquities must have been full, for it has been the stronghold of the Dominicans for generations. This daughter of Rome is now no longer able to comfort the "holy father."

One cannot but be impressed with that silent working of the truth and the Spirit of God, which are steadily undermining all parts of the empire of Satan. The Bible in Spanish has been excluded from the Spanish people by the highest authority of the Romish church.—Protestant missionaries and Bible agents have found no place there; yet these people have felt a divine influence which cries out for "religious liberty!" Truly, the truth of God is the light of the world, the Pharos of the floods—"it cannot be hid."

This political change affects the situation of Italy, and by that much leaves the pope suspended upon Napoleon. He has, meanwhile, just as much as he can attend to in maintaining his own throne, in the presence of Prussia and Russia. His cities and towns are full of troops, his arsenals full of war material, and France has the satisfaction of being consumed by her own soldiery rather than by those of a foreign power. How long this state of things can be kept up is a question. The probability is that Napoleon looks wistfully upon the chance which now presents itself for controlling, if not for possessing Spain; but he has no power to spare in that or any other direction.

These events will put new life into Garibaldi and the Italian patriots, it will fix beyond dispute the present boundaries of the kingdom of Sardinia, and will probably terminate the career of Cardinal Antonelli. The Austrian ministry will complete the great deliverance of that empire from the Concordat and the Allocution, the chains and the anathema of Pio Nino.

These forces are from without as well as from within. When Austria moved spontaneously and threw off the burden of three centuries, Spain, doubtless, felt that to be possible to her which was possible to the German, and, therefore, has asserted her inalienable right to worship God, to be married or buried without the intervention of a foreign political prince, though he vaunts himself as God's "vicegerent."

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

The Rev. Joseph A. Lano writes, September 10, from the Pleasant Hill circuit: "We have just closed a good meeting at Bulah. More than thirty were converted; twenty-two added to the church."

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The Rev. W. J. Glenn writes from Fayette circuit, September 30: "We have had some excellent revival meetings on our circuit, besides a revival spirit in some communities. Forty-five have joined the church; between fifty and sixty have been converted. A very general reawakening of the church has greatly advanced our cause."

MOBILE CONFERENCE.

BRUSH CREEK CIRCUIT, Sept. 28, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: Permit me, through your paper, to inform the friends of our church that the Lord has been pouring out his spirit on this work. At Mount Zion, Nebo and Hamburg we have had precious seasons of revival. Forty-eight were received into the church, and others converted that will join other churches. The district meeting for the Tuscaloosa district was held in this circuit, at the Providence church, commencing on the 24th and closing on the 26th of this month. All the appointments were represented but Eutaw and Franklin. We were favored with the presence and fatherly counsel of Bishop Andrew, who gave us a plain and practical sermon, on Sabbath, which was listened to attentively by a large audience. Brother E. V. Lavert preached two good sermons, with as much zeal as he preached fifteen years ago. May they both live long to bless the church with their presence and counsel. We agreed to send a young preacher to the Southern University. The young man was selected, and part of the money raised.

Your's,
J. W. MCCANN.

THE religion which the Holy Ghost teacheth is the only religion that enables a sinner to give all the glory to God.

THE OPELOUSAS OUTBREAK.

From the raid of John Brown until now the most enlightened Abolitionists of the North have supposed that nearly every negro in the South was prepared to murder his white master and family. But let it be recorded in vindication of the slaveholders of the South that no such negro was ever found. Let all those who have been busy in plans for the extermination of the white inhabitants of the South lay that to heart. As Mr. Webster says, the past, at least, is secure. Nearly four years have now passed since the South, by its legislatures, declared the slaves free. Since that time we have been denied all management of the freedman. He has been in the hands of his professed Northern friends. It is not likely that we should at this day have awakened in him passions for evil which were not engendered either during his enslavement or during a conflict which was avowedly waged against us in his behalf.

But from the hour when the Rev. H. W. Brecher, in Brooklyn, New York, carried into the house of God a cannon ball and a Sharpe's rifle, and displayed them while urging a crusade in behalf of the slave against the South, from that time until this there have been large numbers of men in the North who religiously desire to see our cities and homes burnt and our throats cut. They write, preach, argue, plan, raise collections and send out agents to accomplish that end. This Opelousas affair will bring them some comfort, as "drops before the mighty shower." Not that the town was burned or many whites killed, but they will see in this thing an opening which looks that way. In this case the negro was the greater sufferer—no thanks, however, to those bloody-minded fanatics that it was not the white man. It must be remembered that negroes in many parts of the State greatly outnumber the whites; that they are fully as well if not better armed; and that it is impressed upon them by traveling agents, religious and other, that they have an immense Northern backing. The temptation, then, to be insolent or quarrelsome, under the constant urgings of those whom they regard in some sort as the authors of their deliverance from slavery, is very great. The wonder is that they have not yielded to these bad counsels in a hundred instances in which they have resisted them.

We are not madmen, that we wish to stir up trouble with the people upon whose labor we of necessity must depend. Nor are the negroes so foolish as not to understand their best interests to consist with living in peace side by side with those whose enterprise and skill are absolutely necessary to keep them from starving. What, then, is the difficulty? Simply this, that we and the country are in the hands of men who are crazed upon one idea—men who are without reason in this direction; who are borne forward by passions which they believe to be principles; who are ready to hate and destroy whatever may seem in the way of the gratification of their intense lust for money and power.

It is the duty of every white man in the South to try and rescue the negro from the hands and the influence of these desperate, it may be sincere, lunatics. By maintaining a moderate and patient treatment of our colored people we believe it can be done. We may not yield to maniacs, however bloodthirsty. We have reason to believe that what our correspondent states is true—that the most prudent and sensible men of Opelousas labored to avert the disaster, but could not.

THE EQUINOCTIAL STORM.

On Friday and Saturday last the rain fell without intermission, and the wind blew a gale from the North for forty-eight hours. The waters of the Gulf were consequently banked up on the side of Pontchartrain next to the city, and all the streets in the back part of it were flooded several feet deep. No lives were lost, but much property, and there is a great deal of suffering among the poor of that district. Fortunately the wind blew steadily from one direction, so that but little damage is reported from the lake shores or shipping.

THE SPECIAL FULCRUM.

We find the following "call" in the Republican of this city, under the head of "Political Notices:"

A CALL TO THE FRIENDS OF FREEDOM AND LIBERTY.—The friends of freedom and liberty, especially ministers, are requested to attend a meeting on Monday, October 5, 1868, at seven o'clock in the evening, at the Free Mission Baptist Church, on Common street, near Claiborne, to take into consideration the propriety of setting apart a day of fasting and prayer for the progress of the great cause for which our fathers fought and suffered. Also for the divine direction in the choice of candidates for President and Vice-President of the United States, to be elected on the third of November next.

Signatures for the call:

REV. CHAS. SATCHELL, REV. JOHN TURNER,
REV. GEO. W. STEPTOE, REV. M. ALLEN,
REV. J. F. WINSTON, REV. ISAAC LANGON,
REV. CHAS. BRADLEY, REV. B. BUCHANAN,
REV. WM. MOODY, ELDER E. GREEN,
ELDER T. PETERSON, ELDER D. BURRELL,
REV. J. P. NEWMAN.

It is not improbable that the foremost party in this search for "divine direction" is the one whose name appears as the last. This whole company of divines we suppose to be colored—all that we recognize are, excepting the Rev. Dr. himself. If so, he is leading this gentle flock into new pastures. The attitude is not without interest. Returning from the turbulent scenes and religious masses of the North, where he has been for months past declaiming inflammatory periods against the South to excitable audiences, he now reappears in our midst, and proposes to subside into the central figure of a company at prayer. The politician at prayer is certainly a sight to see; and not the less interesting when it is added that he is praying for the candidates! But a company of divines, consisting of twelve conservatively constituted negroes and one white firebrand, entering the canvass on their knees, is a very different affair. Not content with the responsibility of their own strange position before the majesty of heaven, they collect together large numbers of ignorant colored people, in places set apart to the worship of God, and there make them a party to their own sacrilege. As individuals these men can pray for whom they please and what; but as ministers, professing to be sent of Christ, they have no right to stand in the house of God and prostitute their high calling to the low purposes of a political campaign.

This attempt at carrying a point, by calling everybody to take position at prayer, was illustrated on a large scale by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, at Chicago. Special services were instituted in aid of the Radical party in Congress, in behalf of the impeachment trial. But there must have been a defect in the faith or the prayer of that body of Northern divines, at least on that occasion, for Mr. Johnson was not impeached. Possibly they lost sight of an important item in the Apostle's direction how to pray for kings and people in authority: they did not "lift up holy hands without wrath and doubting." The "wrath" and the "doubting" go together, so that if they had entertained a more kindly feeling toward the President perhaps they might have gotten rid of him. We say "perhaps," because this political praying is rather a nice business, and if neither "wrath" nor "doubting" be in the way, yet the prerequisite of "holy hands" is no small obstacle, especially to those who have been for any time in favor with the party in power. And it is quite possible that this very condition will prove fatal to Dr. Newman's prayer meeting. We see that his hands have been filled with the public plunder, that three entire sides and an extra of his Advocate are taken up in publishing laws which are already published sufficiently by another official organ in this city. The printing bill passed by this Legislature is regarded by the people of Louisiana as the most barefaced instance of corrupt legislation which has yet transpired. So that by just as much as this taste of public affairs may serve to intensify his petitions for the election of Grant and Colfax, by just so much it may unfit him for advancing "the cause for which our fathers fought and suffered." In this particular exigency the "suffering" which the "fathers" have endured will not answer; it is his own peculiar suffering and the thought of the suffering taxpayer that will constitute the fatal ingredient in his prayer meeting.

Alas! it is the old story. The secret wedge of gold and Babylonish garment have arrested many a victory, and have often overwhelmed the fortunes of an entire campaign. If, then, the Radicals, native or exotic, in their desperation, are counting upon this new fulcrum which the doctor has rigged out of the colored brethren for raising the party from its present depressed condition, they are destined to sore disappointment—unless they can persuade him to disgorge incontinently all that he has shared of the public plunder.

THE CONFLICT AT OPELOUSAS.

OPELOUSAS, Sept. 29, 1868.

MR EDITOR: A state of excitement has existed here, for a few days, such as I have not seen for many months. On Monday morning there was a personal rencounter between some gentlemen of Opelousas and a notorious scoundrel by the name of Bently, a teacher of a "nigger" school in town. He had for some time been writing in the Progress, a Radical paper of this place, vile and slanderous articles about citizens of the parish, and evidently seeking by them to stir up bitter feelings between the blacks and whites. Several men had told him they would not stand such attacks any longer, and in every case he would promise to set the matter right, but in doing this he always made it worse! At last an article appeared that caused two or three to resolve on making him take it back, if they had to cause him to do so. They went to him and demanded retraction and instant apology. He made use of some insulting language, and they gave him about twenty five blows with a ratan. He at once sent runners into the country, and so did the Radical leaders in town; ordering the negroes to come in town with their arms. I was here at the time. The citizens were attending to their usual business. Directly a man came running in and said there were about one hundred negroes near his house, armed and apparently very much excited. In another portion I had passed near fifteen or twenty with guns. Now, at this time I did not see five armed white men on the streets. But very soon all who could do so got guns and loaded them. In the meantime Drs. Ray and Littell, Colonel Thompson, and others of the prominent citizens of town, went to Donato and others of the Radical leaders to know what it meant, and why they had, contrary to agreement, made a political affair out of a personal rencounter. They (some of them) promised to countermand the order. Now I was witness to the efforts made by the citizens to avoid collision, and can testify that they most earnestly sought peace. Yet after all this, and the promises made, couriers were caught, by men called in from the country, two hours after, going out with fresh orders for the negroes to appear armed! Plainly, they intended war. The citizens of Opelousas having sent for help, were soon joined by men from the country. Still, however, efforts were made to preserve the peace, and with this purpose several gentlemen went, about noon, to a certain Radical leader to urge upon him prompt efforts to stop the matter. While going they were fired upon by a party of negroes, and several wounded. They then fired, and there was a general rush to the battle ground. The white men then gave up trying to keep peace and arranged for battle. They sent strong parties out into suburbs, and placed guards at suitable places. During that evening and the night there were skirmishes about in the vicinity, and some on both sides were killed. To-day scouting parties are out after a band or two of negroes in the surrounding country, and to prevent attack upon the town, but it is generally believed that temporarily there is a cessation of hostilities.

During the night, in a skirmish near the Progress office, some of the men became so excited that the destroyed the press, which had been the unconscious instrument of fomenting discord and bringing death into the community. I have heard that the French editor of the Progress got killed in the melee. Bently has run off. He is a low beast, a vile incendiary, and yet will, doubtless, be elevated into a saint and martyr by the Radical party.

The whole country is armed, and waiting in perfect readiness for any attack the negroes may make; but we hope for quiet.

I have written this in haste, but you may rely upon it as a correct outline of the affair. Do not think that "the boys" are the leaders in this matter. Old citizens, gray-haired men, are conducting matters, and though blood may yet be shed, it will not be the result of hot-headedness and youthful indiscretion. The people have borne until they can bear no longer, and if the government won't protect their wives, children and homes from these demons, they will. Your's truly,

F. T. RAWSON.

OBITUARIES.

WASHINGTON STATION,
Louisiana Conference, Sept. 25, 1868.

Miss FRANCIS M. GILLET was born February 1, 1852; united with the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at Pleasant Park, Missouri Conference, in the fall of 1863, and died September 15, 1868.

She was the daughter of John and Harriet Gillet, the latter of whom preceded her to heaven not quite one year ago. Like her Saviour, she was meek and lowly in heart, pure and faithful in life. An humble Christian here, she is a shining saint in heaven.

B. F. WHITE, Pastor.

St. Louis Christian Advocate please copy.

Died, in Amite county, Mississippi, on the morning of September 21, 1868, WILLIAM JOHNSON, son of the Rev. R. A. and E. J. Sibley, of the Mississippi Conference, aged six years and twenty-five days.

Thus sprang the plant,
Thus budded the flowor,
Nipped and withered in an hour—
It is no more exient.

Far removed from earthly sorrow,
Transplanted into Eden's bowers,
Forever lives with God in glory.

Rev. JOHN D. FISHER was born at Newbern, North Carolina, July 31, 1802, and died in Dayton, Alabama, September 7, 1868.

Of the last thirty years of Brother Fisher's life there can be but one testimony—"he was a good man." He joined the Methodist church shortly after his second marriage, in 1837. His previous life had been one of continuous dissipation, of such character that all were astonished at his reformation, and feared a return to his former evil associations and habits. But such was his decision of character that, having gone forward, he never made one step backward. Shortly after connecting himself with the church he felt it incumbent upon him to preach. He was licensed to exhort in 1839, licensed as a local preacher in 1840, was admitted into the Alabama Conference in 1843, was ordained deacon by Bishop Andrew in 1845, and elder by Bishop Soule in 1847. Through all his ministerial life he was pronounced, in every work he served, an acceptable preacher. Wherever he preached one year the Conference was petitioned by the people to send him back the next year. The three stations of Demopolis, Prattville and Wetumpka each enjoyed his ministrations for a number of years. During the year 1866 he served on his last work—Demopolis—with his customary zeal and acceptability, though his health was quite feeble. When the Conference met that year he was placed on the superannuated list.—During the two past years he has been residing in Dayton, where his declining health was a source of great anxiety to his many friends.

Just two weeks before his death he became an inmate of my house, and we thought his health improving. He attended the district meeting, and enjoyed the presence of his brethren very much, every one remarking his cheerfulness and apparent return of health and spirits. On the day of his death he remarked to me that he felt much better than usual. About nine o'clock at night, after having spent a cheerful evening with our family, and several of the members of the district meeting who had not yet left for their homes, he, with the remainder of the household, retired to rest. He had just lain down on his bed, when he was seized with a hemorrhage of blood from the lungs. The alarm was immediately given by his companion, and though we ran to him in all haste, I reached him only in time to receive his fainting form and to watch his last dying gasp. So great was the flow of blood that there was not five minutes of time between the attack and his death. He was not able to speak a word. A glance of the eye was the only communication made to us in his dying moments.

Thus died the kind father, the loving husband, the acceptable preacher, the good pastor, the genial friend, the Christian gentleman. The remembrance of him is as a sweet perfume. His funeral sermon was preached in the Methodist church by Brother Mitchell, and he was buried with Masonic honors. The church and his brethren of the mystic tie will long remember him.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

NOTICE.—MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

VICKSBURG, Miss., Sept. 28, 1868.

To the Presiding Elders of the Mississippi Annual Conference:

DEAR BRETHREN—Please send me, at your earliest convenience, the names of the lay delegates, from your several districts, to the Annual Conference to be held in this city on the 18th of November; also the names of local preachers who will be present for ordination or admission into the traveling connection.

GEO. H. CLINTON.

Vicksburg Dist., Mississippi Conference.

To the Pastors and Official Members:

DEAR BRETHREN—A letter just received from Bishop Paine requests me "to act as presiding elder" on this district until other arrangements are made at Conference. My age and bodily infirmities will make the task heavy indeed, but, by the help of God, my mind is made up to undertake it. The Conference year is so far advanced I can only make one round, in connection with some previously-made appointments which I cannot recall. As soon as you see this notice please inform me by letter, directed to Fayette, Mississippi, at what places your quarterly meetings will be held. I earnestly request the attendance of all the official members, that we may finish our work handsomely for Conference. According to my usual plan, when out on the district, I will be glad to have a few intervening appointments in the day-time at convenient places. The preaching does not oppress me; traveling and exposure to inclement weather do. Subjoined you have the time of the appointments:

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

THE GREAT PACIFIC RAILROAD,
RECEIVING THE AID AND SUpervision of the Government, and carried forward by the extraordinary resources and energy of the powerful corporations to whom it was entrusted, is rapidly approaching completion, and it is safe to say that New York and San Francisco will be connected by rail by the FOURTH OF JULY NEXT.

More than two thirds of the Through Line and Branches between the Missouri River and the Pacific Ocean are constructed, at a cost of nearly

ONE HUNDRED MILLIONS,

and the remainder is being pushed forward with unparalleled vigor. The

CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY,

to whom belongs the Western and principal portion of the Main Siem Line, receive from the United States Government:

1. The right of way through the Territories, with the use of timber and materials along the route.

2. An absolute grant of twenty sections per mile (12,800 acres) of the Public Lands on the line, the minimum value of which is now fixed at $2 50 per acre.

3. A special issue of United States Six per cent. Bonds, at the average rate of $35,000 per mile, delivered as the work progresses; which the Company are allowed to repay within thirty years, mainly by transportation services.

4. Authority to issue their own First Mortgage Bonds to the same amount, having the preferred lien—superior to that of the Government.

5. It receives, in addition, donations and subsidies from the State and Cities of California amounting to more than $2,000,000 in gold;

Or an aggregate of Cash Resources for construction of more than Sixty Millions upon 725 miles, independent of the ten millions of acres of public lands, and further subscriptions to the Capital Stock. The early completion of the enterprise is therefore beyond all doubt.

This Company have already carried their road successfully across the Sierra Nevada Mountains, and are rapidly extending the track across the Salt Lake Plains, and have already a valuable way traffic thereon. Besides a mileage upon all through business, this road, having the best lands for settlement, the most productive mines, the nearest markets, and being exempt from competition, will always command large revenues. The net earnings upon the completed portion are more than double the total annual interest liabilities to be assumed thereupon.

The undersigned offer for sale, and recommend to investors, the

FIRST MORTGAGE 30-YEAR GOLD BONDS
OF THE
Central Pacific Railroad Company,

bearing six per cent. per annum interest, both principal and interest payable in "United States gold coin." These Bonds are the first lien upon one of the most productive and valuable railroad lines in the world—a line which will be finished within twelve months, and which is already earning, after paying operating expenses, more than twice the annual charge of its Bonded debt. They are already widely known and esteemed in this country and Europe, and it is believed the remainder of the Loan will speedily be taken.

A limited amount will be disposed of at

103 Per Cent. and Accrued Interest,
IN CURRENCY.

The Bonds are of $1,000 each, with semi-annual gold coupons attached, payable in July and January.

☞ The Company reserve the right to advance the price at any time; but all orders actually in transitu at the time of any such advance will be filled at the present price. At this time they pay

More than Eight Per Cent. upon the Investment,

and have, from National and State laws, guarantees superior to any other corporate securities now offered.

We receive all classes of Government Bonds, at their full market rates, in exchange for the Central Pacific Railroad Bonds, thus enabling the holders to realize from five to ten per cent. profit and keep the principal of their investments equally secure.

Orders and inquiries will receive prompt attention. Information, descriptive pamphlets, etc., giving a full account of the organization, progress, business and prospects of the enterprise, furnished on application. Bonds sent by return Express at our cost.

Subscriptions Received by Banks and Bankers, Agents for the Loan.

☞ All descriptions of GOVERNMENT SECURITIES bought, sold or exchanged, at our office and by mail and telegraph, at market rates.

Accounts of Banks, Bankers and others received, and favorable arrangements made for desirable accounts.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

BABY BLESSINGS.

BY MRS. E. D. HARRINGTON.

Ho! ho! the sunshine!
Baby loves the sunshine!
Softly coos with happy glee,
All its elfin pranks to see;
Up the crib it slowly creeps;
Underneath her eyelids peeps.
Now it lights on pussy's tail,
Decks her with a brilliant veil—
Stealing slyly all about,
Finds the fire and puts it out;
Kindly visits caged canary,
Cheers her like a pitying fairy.
Baby never can repine,
Lying in the bright sunshine.

Ho! ho! the water!
Baby loves the water!
See her toss it all about
With a merry laugh and shout.
Now from off her golden curls
Drop a thousand shining pearls;
Filling mouth and eyes and ears—
But my darling never fears.
Dimpled palm the silvery rain
Tries to catch, but tries in vain.
Now the dripping sponge she squeezes
On her nose, and now—she sneezes!
In her arms mamma has caught her—
O, the sparkling, shining water!

Ho! ho! the blazing fire!
Baby loves the fire!
Hear it crackle, roar and snap,
While she takes her morning nap.
See! she smiles and softly crows,
As it warms her tiny toes.
Now the little head sinks down,
Every infant woe has flown—
Cradled warm upon my breast,
Rosy sweet, she lies at rest.
"Hush, my babe, lie still and slumber,"
All my joy what words can number!
While the flames rise high and higher,
Blessings on the blazing fire!

Ho! ho! the fresh, pure air!
Baby loves the air!
How she springs with wild delight—
Softly! I must hold her tight!
Breezes meet her as we come,
Tell her of their ocean home;
Whisper of the blooming May,
Budding flowers and the scented bay;
Kiss each dimpled, baby grace;
Fling blush roses in her face;
By their wooing she's beguiled;
She is nature's foster-child!
Ah! what nectar can compare
With the fresh, life-giving air!

Light and water, fire and air,
Each to baby lends a share—
Makes her healthy, pure and fair.

—Little Corporal.

THE YOUNG SOLDIERS.

Every Saturday afternoon a few boys in the town of Grunan were in the habit of playing soldier. The schoolmaster used to be the instructor, and he had the boys go through their military exercises in his own orchard. In a short time they became quite skilled in soldier-life, and understood all the orders that were given to them. But only the sons of rich merchants, the two sons of the pastor, and Constantine, the school teacher's son, were able to take part in this pleasant instruction. The most that the rest of the boys could do was to stand and see the company drilled.

All the young soldiers wore three-cornered paper hats, blue or red, ornamented with gilded letters and rosettes. They also had swords, which were fastened to their bodies by leathern girdles. Now, this little military company were se in the habit of seeing the poorer boys come to look at them, that they began to think that nobody else was of any importance except themselves, and, consequently, looked upon all the poor boys in the town as far inferior to them.

If any of the little soldiers met one of the poor boys during the week, and the latter did not get out of his way, he would speak very harshly to him, and tell him that soldiers must have the path given to them.

By and by, when the yearly fair came on, the young soldiers resolved to make a public parade, so that all the people of the little town and the surrounding country might have an opportunity of seeing what excellent soldiers they had become. The schoolmaster gave his consent to their plan, but did not intend to accompany them, which was an arrangement that they gladly submitted to.

On Saturday, the greater day of the fair, they dressed themselves up in their best soldier clothes, and marched toward the fair ground. Now, these boys marched just as if they thought themselves the greatest soldiers in the world, and as if everybody else looked upon them in the same light. A large crowd of poor children ran on the opposite street, and some came on behind them, for they all wanted to hear the music of the boy's band.

After the boys had marched around and through the fair ground two or three times, they were hardly satisfied to return to their homes without some further exhibition of their great soldierly qualities. So they halted, and decided to face about, and enter a beer saloon, and there take a glass of beer apiece. In due time they were all seated in one of the beer saloons, and called for their beer with as important an air as if they had been experienced topers.

Somehow or other the beer seemed to affect them a little, for they had no sooner drank one glass than they became excited, and, without scarcely knowing what they were doing, called for another glass apiece. So they all drank around again. They finally took another glass, and it was now very plain that they hardly knew whether they were soldiers or not. They found their way out of the saloon after a while, and formed a military line as best they could. The captain then ordered them to make an attack with their swords on a certain stand belonging to a dealer in cake and confectionery.

If the captain and his men had been perfectly sober, they would never have dreamed of such an undertaking; for there was the proprietor of the establishment himself, and two or three clerks, and many grown people were standing around. But the boys wanted to be brave, so they made a violent attack upon the cake store, and knocked over several jars containing candies and preserves, and a great pile of Brunswick honey-cake.

But the truth is, they injured themselves as much as they did the confectionery dealer, for they cut their faces against the glass jars, and the counter on which they stood and the cake was piled. Moreover, it did not take long for a half dozen men to arrest all the boys and tie them. The confectionery dealer said that he thought military law ought to be inflicted on the boys; so he had their hands tied, and they were all led into the middle of the market place, when he got upon a high chair and invited all the people to come to see them, for that was the brave company which had displayed its military skill by marching around and through the fair ground several times, and wound up its great campaign by going into a beer saloon and becoming intoxicated, and then making war upon his shop.

I will not tell you how much the people laughed at the prisoners, who stood with their hands tied in the presence of a great crowd of people; but of all the showmen at the fair, there was nobody who presented such an amusing scene as these boys did. The severe treatment which they received at the hands of the confectioner seemed to bring them somewhat to their senses, and it was two hours before they were taken to their homes. After the confectioner had amused himself and the many visitors at the fair as long as he desired, he then gave the boys into the hands of policemen, one of whom took charge of each boy, and led him to his home. In addition to this, the boys' parents were required to pay for all the damage which they had inflicted upon the confectioner's stand.

But the greatest punishment was what the boys had to endure for months and even years after this. All the poor boys in the place, whom they had been in the habit of taunting and making give way to them in the streets, now gained courage, and the military company was disbanded. The great mass of the people of the town were heartily glad that the boys who put on such airs, and made themselves so important, had at last some of their self-importance taken out of them.—New York Methodist.

SCIENTIFIC.

Fossils in the Sierra Nevadas.

The fresh water tertiary of the Sierra Nevadas have not yielded many fossils. It is covered with lava, and the method of working in the mines and elsewhere destroys all delicate matter. If the bones escape the pickax, they are destroyed to amuse the finder. Professor Whitney spoke of fossils on the table identified by Dr. Leydy. There were the teeth of the horse and the elephant, a jaw from an extinct bison and a rhinoceros, and a curious tooth of a sort of hog—"sole tenant that is known" of his kind. One of the horses must have been four times the size of the living animal. Now the Calaveras skull was found in the gravel, within the "rim-rock," as it is called by miners, and this needs explanation. Over the Sierra are scattered what are called table mountains; these consist of a plateau of basalt covering in the bed of an ancient stream at the bottom of a rocky valley. This rocky bottom or "rim rock" is shaped like a cup, and its rim rises on each side into visible mountains of still older structure. The cup is filled with sedimentary gravel and fossils, and covered safely with a volcanic rock, as if God meant that man should some day read the record of his work, and so shut it in safe from profane fingers. At the very bottom of the cup the gravel is rich in nuggets of gold, and the miners tap through the "rim-rock" to get at it by a vertical shaft. These gravel beds, whose fossils are of extinct species, Professor Whitney believes to be of a miocene age. They are covered with heavy deposits of fossils, elephant, camel and rhinoceros bones being mixed with living species in a bed which he calls pliocene. This is followed by another which he calls pliocene, in which the fossils are chiefly of living species. In September, 1864, the bones of man, the mastodon and the elephant were found together, and it is to be presumed that they lived on the earth together. In France the miocene man evidently spent his time in hunting the mastodon, for he carved its bones into ornaments; we may at least he allowed a pliocene man, and if any of your readers want to know how long ago he appeared, I must answer that it is very uncertain. That bad habit of "putting your foot in it" must be of remote antiquity, for the "hilarious member" further relates that the tertiary is like the "Gulf Stream, very wide in some places, and very narrow in others!"—in short, that our friend, Bowers Calaveras, (or cadaverous, as you will,) must have been born at least seventeen thousand years ago, or possibly seventy ——, to which you must add, to be exact, the three score and ten years, to which his attenuated molar bears witness! Whenever and wherever he lived, he was buried in the lowest of four grand beds, each of which had been covered in its turn by a bed of lava, one hundred and thirty-one feet below the surface, and in a pyramidal security that the oldest Pharaoh could not attain. Here Professor W. exhibited most interesting relics of the period, and a fortunate excavation made a few days ago at Mount Holyoke, in cutting for the railway, made the table, for the moment, so interesting that I could hardly turn away from it. Years ago I saw at Lake Superior the soft pure copper still bearing traces of the dusky miners who found a way to drag it from its bed long before a white man trod these shores. Long did I wonder then, and often have I wondered since, whether all that copper went by some ancient Adams' Express to Peru and Mexico, to be wrought by the fingers of the same races and guilds that wear to-day in Peru, and Milan and among the Parsee ghauts, the sinuous threads of gold and silver lotuses! On the table before him Professor Whitney showed the stone spindle, mortar, dish and kettle of ancient California, looking so like things dug up from Mount Holyoke, that it would seem as if the same fingers must have fashioned them. There were stone tubes too of unknown use, a prism-shaped stone that might have served to sharpen razors, if our friend "Cadaverous" had worn a whisker, but rarer than all, and touching me with strange pathos, were some large beads of pure copper—spherical and three sided—and two long needles or hodkins of the same metal. It is not likely that these were buried at Mount Holyoke more than three hundred years ago. The ancient express must have opened an express office in the Connecticut valley, and the old squaws of that day invested their dowry in copper, as the peasants of Dalmatia still invest theirs in gold! These are the first copper utensils ever found. I felt very near to the past as I looked at them. Professor Whitney stated that the gravel of the rim-rock is always consolidated by cement—and it was a cement of that tertiary that he painfully chiseled away from the bone.

Professor Lesly and Professor Guyot then testified to the interesting fact that one skeleton had been found in France under precisely the same circumstances as this skull. In the central southern portion of France, in an extinct volcanic district, there are many masses of basalt, left by denudation, like the table mountains of California. Upon one of those the petty city of Le Puy was built in the department of the Haute Loire. There was discovered, and there is still preserved, a skeleton found in the gravel beneath, and partially involved in the flaid basalt. Its genuineness, long doubted, has never been explained. Professor Guyot followed with some interesting remarks, intended to show that the progress of time had not so much brought new species of creatures into existence as deprived us of the unwieldy giants, which stalked through the first forests or made their lairs in the gigantic bulrushes which bowed over the primeval currents. The reindeer was above the glacial deposit once. Changes in the climate of Europe, by the elevation of the Himalaya and South European mountains, were here alluded to in a manner to have delighted the heart of Bunsen. I thought of him yesterday when Count Pourtales told us of the immense quantities of walrus bones bedded fast on the coast of Florida—indeed, I never attended a scientific meeting without being struck with the unconscious confirmation often given to what scholars think his most fantastic views. But you will not give me space, Mr. Editor, for half of this discussion, which, in the magnificent human power brought out, just showed in what likeness man was originally made, and challenged the keenest of us to keep its lines distinct.—Correspondence of Boston Advertiser.

FARM AND GARDEN.

HOW TO RAISE CARROTS.

I have my ground manured and worked at least fifteen inches deep. The deeper the better, and the longer the carrots will be. As soon as the ground is well dried, I stretch a line, and without any dragging, rake the ground smoothly under the lines; then, with the handle of the rake, make a drill about half an inch deep, and having sowed the seeds, cover with a single raking, and it is planted. In seven or eight days I see my plants, and I then, with a light and sharp plow, turn the soil away from the carrots; and as soon as the weeds appear in the rows I weed them, and do it thoroughly. I don't mind having the carrots grow thick, as long and small roots save cutting up for cattle. I use the cultivator and subsoil plow (lifter) through the season, especially it the weather is dry, as stirring the ground wet is injurious. I prefer a dry rather than a wet season, for this reason: I can, by thorough cultivation, keep them growing in a dry time, but in a wet season the seeds are apt to get the start of the crop. About the first week in November I pull—not dig—the roots out of the ground, and cut the tops; put them in a cellar, and feed them all winter. The tops I feed to my stock, and they are valuable, especially for milch cows. And I often feed the roots to horses, instead of corn, with good results. Where water is hard to be obtained, as in some places in the West, cattle will do well on carrots with much less water. I can easily grow one thousand bushels per acre. If I cannot pull carrots without digging, I am sure my ground is not properly cultivated. I have raised carrots for stock a good many years, have done the work myself, and can raise them at a cost of five cents a bushel. I always grow my own seed and some of my neighbors', and have never had the slightest trouble about the seed sprouting when sowed. I have often planted seed four years old, which, if properly grown and cared for, is just as good as any. I planted four-year old seed last year, and sold my new seeds. There is one thing about carrot growing upon which the success of the crop depends. The ground must be rich, light and fine, so that you can pull the roots out of the ground without breaking the tops. The carrot is the most certain crop I ever cultivated. Like the currant, there is no ingratitude about them. They never fail to appreciate thorough cultivation.—Cor. Germantown Telegraph.

Staking Fruit Trees.—We have for years practiced but one method of supporting young fruit trees, and like the way so well we shall continue it until we see something better than has yet come to our notice. We drive a stake, which we usually make of a strip of board or plank, strong enough to support the tree, but elastic, to allow it considerable motion, about six or eight inches from the tree, on the south or west side, and fasten the tree to it by a strip of waste leather, forming a single loop, so as to allow the tree to move a little in the wind, fastening the ends of the leather on the top of the stake by a shingle nail. By this method the young tree has sufficient play to induce it to throw down its roots, which it will very soon, and stand erect without any support. This never mars or prevents the growth of the tree by stopping the circulation of the sap, and is the cheapest manner a tree can be staked up. During the summer months it is well to cast off this leather, letting the tree depend upon its own energies.—New England Homestead.

An Easy Method to have Healthy Fruit Trees.—An experienced fruit grower, who possesses a beautiful orchard near the Niagara river, western New York, has used one simple method with great success. He takes ley from leached ashes, mixes a little grease with it, heats it quite warm, and with a syringe throws it up into all parts of the trees, branches and trunk. It will effectually kill all caterpillars, all kinds of worms that are either infesting the tree in nests or running over the bark. Trees treated in this manner were exceedingly healthy, beautiful and vigorous in appearance, possessed a smooth, glossy bark, and bore the best apples of the country. The remedy is easy and cheap.

Hay Required for Cows.—After an experience of seventy years, a writer in the New England Farmer says that good cows will eat, on an average, twenty pounds of hay per day when giving milk, and fifteen pounds when dry. Not by guesswork, but tested by actual weighing for months at a time. They will pay well for their keeping by yielding an average of six quarts of milk per day throughout the year. He estimates summer pasture at fifty cents per week, and milk at three and a half cents per quart.

INVENT A SOUP.

People brag of croquet as a successful new amusement: "It brings young people together, you know." But what of the old people? For these waifs and strays of the busy world, who have dropped out of the ranks and have got out of sight of the flags, and out of hearing of the band, there is eno source of amusement still open; let them cook, let them invent a soup.

See, my Lord Fitzfidget, what a delightful old age this notion offers to your notice! Make Binns turn all those dusty deed boxes and iron safes out of your den; remove those county histories you only pretend to consult, that Clarendon's Rebellion you never read, and put the room in fighting order for newer and more intellectual pleasures. This done, ring for the gardener, and order in small bundles, carefully sorted, of potatoes, mushrooms, champignons, (the nankeen-colored, generally thought poisonous, and mind there is no mistake about them,) parsnips, carrots, beet root, turnips, peas, garlic, onions, cucumbers, celery, celery seed, parsely, leeks, common thyme, lemon thyme, orange thyme, knotted marjoram, sage, mint, water savory, sweet basil, borage, bay leaves, tarragon, chervil and burnet. Then send to the cook (who will, no doubt, smile, but not disrespectfully,) for cinnamon, ginger, nutmeg, cloves, mace, black and white pepper, lemon peel, Seville oranges, salt, anchovies, garlic and cayenne. Tell Mrs. Redburn to send you in some lean juicy beef, mutton and veal, some chickens, and, if it be the game season, a partridge or two, a snipe and a woodcock. Some truffles and morells, fresh, black and fine, and two or three bottles of Madeira will then be all your remaining wants for a pleasant morning's amusement. Of course we presume you have a neat steam kitchen range already fitted up on a small scale, and a shelf of bright stew pans.

The disjointed elements of a feast lie before you. You are like Euclid with his floor covered with isosceles triangles and circles, and with a problem to solve. As a beginner, first try a "soup without water;" you will make less mess, and if you fail, the materials thrown away will not be costly.

Come, then, my lord, tuck up your sleeves, take courage, and fall to work. Cut three pounds of beef and veal into thin slices, put them into a stone jar with a dozen sliced turnips, two onions and a little salt; cover the jar close in a sauce-pan of boiling water. There is no coloring or variety in that.

Take two quarts of water, my lord, and boil a fowl; then add to it a white onion, a chili, two teaspoonfuls of pounded ginger, two of curry powder, one teaspoonful of turmeric, and half a spoonful of black pepper; boil these for half an hour; then fry some small onions and add to the soup; season with salt, and serve up.

Who has not seen with admiration, mingled with pity, a huge turtle fresh from its azure bath in sweet Indian seas, fresh from gales off the storm-vexed Bermoothes or calms off Trinidad, cowering in a London eating house window, its feeble flappers vainly fumbling about the straw, and a large placard upon the shell of the mute and bewildered martyr informing us that "this turtle will be killed to-morrow." That turtle will require arms full of sweet herbs, three bottles of Madeira, some forcemeat balls, and the juice of many lemons. Only a professional man dare touch that precious creature. But mock turtle, my Lord Fitzfidget, is within your grasp, though Milton may not be.

First, my lord, take your calf's head, remove the brains, wash it, and boil it for an hour. Then cut up some ham and a knuckle of veal, and stew with vegetables of all sorts, cloves, lemon peel and sweet herbs. Let it stew for two hours. Then thicken it with butter and two tablespoonfuls of flour, and strain and cut the head and tongue into square mouthfuls, to simulate the real head and tongue. Season with browning, lemon juice, catsup and wine. There is now left for you, my lord, the crowning pleasure of making the forcemeat balls, and adding to the haut gout (if you wish to add perfume to the violet) anchovies, mushrooms, truffles, curry powder, artichoke bottoms, salmons' livers, lobsters cut into mouthfuls, a bottle of Madeira, salted neat's tongue cut into pieces, and brain-balls fried in crumbs. A passionate desire of excellence has led the English cook to make this soup a Thesaurus, nay a very Gaza, of good things, hoping to transcend the great fish soup of the luxurious West Indian Islands.

The Egyptians make a delicious soup of lentils. The Scotch leek-soup is very palatable; indeed, in the world of soups both rich and poor may find an endless choice—from the asparagus soups to water soup, from the costly Bisque to soup maigre, from mock mutton broth (only gruel and catsup) to the gorgeous and imperial turtle.—All the Year Round.

FIVE HUNDRED SOUTHERN METHODIST PREACHERS,

Who are both the agents and owners of this sheet.

A man who wishes to be known in the country is certainly much in his own light who does not display his name in our advertising columns.

Our terms are precisely the same as those of other weekly newspapers in this city.

We have fewer advertisements than the secular papers, but what we have are read with that conscientious regard for everything that appears in a Christian paper which takes hold—in fact, too strong a hold—and holds the editor responsible for all the patent medicines, hardware, shoes, pork, flour, and even whisky, which may be set forth in its columns.

The terms of advertising are as follows:

SQUARES.	1 MO.	3 MOS.	6 MOS.	12 MOS.

THE HOME MONTHLY, New Orleans, for 1867.

The HOME MONTHLY will contain forty-eight pages of reading matter, printed upon fine paper and in clear type, and will, from time to time, be accompanied by elegant steel-plate engravings. The subscription price will remain $3 per annum, or $1.50 for six months, invariably in advance. In order to build up a still larger circulation, we have concluded to offer the following

Liberal Inducements to Agents.

To any person sending us three yearly subscriptions, with nine dollars, we will send the MONTHLY six months, or allow them, if they prefer, to retain One Dollar and Twenty-five Cents of the amount.

To any person sending us six subscriptions, with eighteen dollars; ($18,) we will send the MONTHLY one year, or allow them to retain Two Dollars and Fifty Cents of the amount.

On amounts for subscription less than nine dollars, agents will be allowed to retain ten per cent.

Ministers, it is hoped, will act as agents, not so much from pecuniary considerations as from a laudable desire to assist in building up a home literature worthy of a place among the families of the South and on the center-tables of a Christian people.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING

STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as a means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally knows as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. That meats roasted is such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

For sale only by the undersigned.

In addition to the above, I also have a large and complete assortment of COOKING STOVES, comprising all of the leading Stoves of the day, equal to any offered in any other house in this city.

TUITION.

Academic Department, per term	$35 00
Preparatory Department, per term	30 00
Contingent fee, per term	2 50

A fee of $5 is charged those who attend the schools of Chem. and Nat. Phil.

Board, exclusive of washing and lights, $16 to $20 per month. By messing it can be obtained even cheaper than at these rates.

Sons of ministers of the Gospel in the regular work, and those studying for the ministry, are admitted free of tuition.

The whole expense for the scholastic year, including everything except books and clothing, will be $250, payable one-half at the opening of the session and the remainder on the 15th of February. If the student wishes to board in a private family it will be $280. This great reduction in the price of board and tuition will bring the advantages of the University within the reach of those whose limited means have heretofore placed the highest scholastic training beyond their reach, as well as secure the patronage of those who, on the score of economy, are sending their sons out of the State to be educated.

Especial attention is called to the fact that preparatory students are taught exclusively by the Faculty.

The Law School has been organized under the management of Hons. Judge Coleman and A. Bennars.

NEW PATENT PIANOS.

RAVEN & BACON, (established in 1829.)

Warerooms, Nos. 614 and 616 Broadway,

NEW YORK.

Manufacturers of Piano Fortes, with the patent Combination Sounding-boards,

Patented August 14th, 1866.

This invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affects the sounding-board, the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a pure liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. The sounding-board released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding-boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection, and its vibratory quality increased.

Our Pianos are first-class in every respect and purchasers will have not only our own guarantees as to their quality, but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument, obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The storm which prevailed throughout Saturday partially suspended outdoor business and materially restricted the movement of the general market; but since the return of fine weather most branches of trade have shown a fair degree of animation. The demand for our leading staples, however, has not been very active. There has been some little movement in Cuba sugar and molasses. Very little has been done in tobacco. In Western produce we notice that there has been some shipping demand for flour, and that pork has been in better request at fuller prices, but most other articles have continued dull at previous rates.

The heavy storm which prevailed toward the close of last week continued with but little abatement throughout Saturday, and on Sunday it was still cloudy and threatening, but toward night it cleared up, and has since been bright and cool. Thus far we have not heard of the ruin causing much injury to the growing crops, but our accounts from the country indicate a poor prospect of any general excess in the cotton yield over that of last year.

The river has risen nine inches since our last report, and is now nine feet three inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the 2d instant:

Louisiana and Missis.ippi	bales..	9110
Lake		37
Mobile		347
Texas		53
Total		9547

On Saturday, notwithstanding the dark and rainy weather, and the limited supply offering in consequence of the storm preventing sampling, as well as the enhanced pretensions of factors, predicated on the New York and Liverpool telegrams, the demand continued fair, but the sales were restricted by scanty offerings to 1,200 bales, while factors realized an improvement of fully ¼c., Low Middling closing at 24½ to 24¾c., and Middling at 25 to 25¼c. On Monday the movement was encouraged by fine weather, a further rise at Liverpool and New York, and increased firmness in foreign exchange, under the combined influences of which 2,600 bales changed hands, at an additional improvement of ¼ to ⅜c., Low Middling closing at 24¾ to 25¼c., and Middling at 25½ to 25¾c. On Tuesday the market opened with a fair supply but only a moderate inquiry, buyers awaiting the receipt of the Liverpool telegrams, which did not come to hand until the afternoon. The few sales made during the early part of the day were at about Monday's figures; but after the receipt of the Liverpool news, and under the influence of a marked falling off in the demand, prices gave way ¼ to ½c. In fact, at the close the market was quite unsettled, and sales could hardly have been made to any extent unless at further concessions.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 5,200 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 60,152 bales, against 9,361 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 57,781 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 9,926 bales to Great Britain, of 8,412 to France, and of 51 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we now quote as follows:

Low	— to —
Ordinary	— to —
Good Ordinary	23¾ to 24
Low Middling	24½ to 24¾
Middling	25¼ to 25½
Strict Middling	25½ to 26

SUGAR.—Better grades are more in demand and prices are firmer, though without any quotable change. A fair jobbing business is doing at 12¾ to 13¼c. per pound for grocery grades of Cuba, in boxes, and 11¾ to 13¾c. in hogsheads. There have been sales reported during the past three days of 80 boxes No. 12, and 30 hogsheads, on private terms. Louisiana sugar is retailing slowly at 13½ to 15½c. per pound for fair to prime.

MOLASSES.—We have heard of a sale of a cargo of choice Cienfuegos at 45c. per gallon. Cuba sugar is quoted at 31½ to 45c. per gallon, as in quality.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, AT Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

ELEVENTH SESSION.—TERMS REDUCED.

The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first-rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar, etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.

SPECIAL CAUTIONS.

Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health. A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.

It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

TERMS—Board and Tuition per session, $300.
PAYMENTS—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.

Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

July25 W. H. N. MAGRUDER.

KENTUCKY WESLEYAN UNIversity, at Millersburg, Bourbon county, Kentucky.

FALL AND WINTER SESSION.

From the third Monday in September to January 1 ..... $16 00
From January 1 to April 1, 12 weeks ... 12 00
From April 1 to close of June, 12 weeks. 12 00

INCIDENTAL FEES—First session, $2 50; second session, $2; third session, $1 50. All payments in advance.

Indigent young men can have tuition FREE, but will be expected to pay the incidental fees.

Boarding can be had (including lodging, washing fires and lights) in the families of citizens at $5 per week.

Boys who have made some progress in Arithmetic, English Grammar and Geography can be received into the Preparatory Department. Terms, same as above named.

Every boarder will furnish a pair of blankets, a pair of sheets, a pair of pillow slips, a counterlet or spread, and towels and lights.

For catalogues, containing full particulars, address the President. july25 3m

FRANKLIN SEMINARY.

THE subscriber would inform his friends and the public that he has in charge FRANKLIN SEMINARY, and has a good school, which is designed to be permanent, in successful operation, and that he is prepared to receive any number of pupils that may be entered to his care. He would board, in his own family, some eight or ten pupils.

His experience enables him to assure patrons and friends that the education of their children and wards will be secured by confiding them to his institution.

The following are his terms of tuition, payable in advance, per session of five months:

Elementary Branches	$20 00
Higher Branches	25 00
Latin, Greek, etc	30 00

French, extra.

Board can be had, in good families, for $15 per month, exclusive of lights and washing. Present session ends on the 7th of February, and the next ends on the 10th of July. No vacation until July. Pupils can be entered at any time. For further particulars apply to

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

THE SPANISH REVOLUTION.

MADRID, Oct. 10.—The provisional junta has issued a programme guaranteeing many reforms, including administrative decentralization, universal suffrage, religious liberty, freedom of the press, the right of public assemblages, radical changes in the educational system, jury trials, and equality before the law.

LONDON, Oct. 10.—The leaders of the junta have monarchical preference, but will yield to the demands of the people if they pronounce for a republic.

MADRID, Oct. 10.—The junta has issued a circular, invoking all officials and citizens to join in preserving order, and thus prove that revolution is not anarchy or violence, but peace and justice. Elections for members of the cortes have been fixed for the 15th of November.

Mr. Hale, the American minister, waited upon General Serrano and congratulated him. Gonzales, secretary, was mobbed yesterday and badly hurt. Prim came upon the ground and made a speech to the rioters. He deplored acts of violence, and said the people could now afford to forget the wrongs of former servants of the crown.

BERLIN, Oct. 10.—Reports having been received here of lawlessness and disquiet in Cuba, the merchants in various German cities united in a request to the government to send ships of war to that island, in order to guard the interests of German traders.

HAVANA, Oct. 13.—Lersundi has not declared for the provisional government, but will maintain law and order. He says he is a loyal Spaniard, and only retains and governs the island as a portion of the Spanish dominion, irrespective of parties governing in the mother country. The island is perfectly tranquil.

HAVANA, Oct. 13.—Lersundi has issued a proclamation enjoining tranquility.

Rich gold mines have been discovered in Guadalajara.

HAVANA, Oct. 13.—Later Mexican advices state that Colonel Podilla, Santa Anna's agent, has been captured with papers showing that he inteaded to excite revolution.

MADRID, Oct. 13.—The junta is sure of the adhesion of the Captain General of Cuba. Dispatches sent him by steamer, which left Cadiz on the 2d instant, will, it is believed, remove all doubts as to his course.

MADRID, Oct. 13.—The junta offered a loan of ten million reals, which was taken immediately.

General Dulce has been appointed Captain General of Cuba.

PARIS, Oct. 13—General Prim publishes a letter urging the formation of a kingdom in Spain immediately. It is said Prim himself aspires to be king.

MADRID, Oct. 13—Great interest is manifested in Cuba regarding representation in the new government and the abolition of slavery.

Action of the constitnent cortes on these subjects is waited with great anxiety. The ministers promise Cuba equal liberties with Spain.

MADRID, Oct. 13.—The junta has issued another circular urging the extinction of all religious corporations. Internal taxes on home or foreign ware have been abolished.

PARIS, Oct. 13.—Prim has written the emperor stating that the junta desires close relations with France; they prefer a ruler who will be acceptable to France and Europe.

The provinces of Barcelona and Valencia being strongly protectionist, hesitate to recognize the junta.

MADRID, Oct. 13.—The junta has seized the property of the Jesuits and abolished the order.

NEW YORK, Oct. 10.—Yesterday moruing Colonel Williams, of Florida, accompanied by a Baptist clergyman, called on Governor Cobb. An animated conversation had occurred between the minister and Governor Cobb; the governor and Mrs. Cobb were taking leave of their guests on the stairs leading from the parlor to the office; the governor sat down on the stairs, when Mrs. Cobb observed a tremor of the body and contraction of the muscles of the face. Attending physicians at the hotel were called, but before medical remedies could be administered the general was carried into the reception room and in a few minutes was a corpse.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 10.—The President has prepared an order, which will be sent to the department and district military commanders on Monday next, calling attention to the provisions of the Constitution and the acts of Congress relative to the appointment of Presidential electors, and to the act of Congress providing a punishment for military officers who shall interfere, or attempt to interfere, with the free exercise of the suffrage franchise.

This order is suggested by the announcement that General Reynolds, the officer in command in Texas, has issued an order forbidding the people of the State from voting for President in November.

The conduct of General Reynolds, if the report be true, is regarded as a high-handed outrage, and it is hoped that the citizens of Texas will immediately see that the proclamation of the sheriffs or other officers, whose duty it may be to issue it, at once give notice to the voters to meet at their respective polls and deposit their votes for Presidential electors.

PARIS, Oct. 10.—The emperor defers his return to Biarritz.

LIVERPOOL, Oct. 10.—Evening.—The ship Sorrento, from New Orleans for Liverpool, is at Cork, having lost her masts.

NAPLES, Oct. 10.—Another eruption of Mount Vesuvius is threatened.

LONDON, Oct. 10.—Preliminaries of a naturalization treaty, similar to that recently concluded between North Germany and the United States, have been arranged between Lord Stanley and the American minister.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 13.—Brigham Young is among the bidders to carry the mails between the termini of the Pacific railroad.

Senor J. M. Vele presented his credentials to-day as charge d'affairs from Guatemala and San Salvador.

The Commissioner of Pensions estimates the requirements of his bureau for the next year at twenty three and a half millions. On June 13 there were over one hundred and sixty nine thousand names on the pension rolls.

The President proclaims the 26th of November as a day for praise, thanksgiving and prayer. The proclamation says:

"We are permitted to hope that long-protracted political and sectional dissentions are at no distant day to give place to returning harmony and fraternal affection throughout the republic."

The New York Evening Express gives vague particulars of a plot to murder Mr. Johnson, and promises explicit details to-morrow.

Bureau changes: Major John R. Lewis, of the 44th Infantry, relieves General Sibley in Georgia; Captain George W. Gile, brevet lieutenant colonel, 45th Infantry, relieves Colonel Sprague in Florida. General Miles has been relieved in North Carolina; his successor not named.

LONDON, Oct. 13.—A meeting for the relief of the earthquake sufferers was held to-day. The lord mayor presided. Among the prominent persons participating were the governor of the bank of England, the Rothschilds and the Barings. Nearly seven thousand pounds sterling were raised.

LONDON, Oct. 14.—The reported coronation of Gabazze as emperor of Abyssinia is confirmed. He is opposed by the oldest son of Theodorus.

Dispatches from India report that the civil war in northern Afghanistan has ended; the opponents to Emir have fled to Bokhara.

THE ELECTIONS.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14.—The following summary is gained from various sources:

Ohio.—Strader, Democrat, is elected to Congress from first district by two hundred majority.

Indiana.—The State ticket is close, but Baker's election is conceded. The third congressional district is doubtful. Kerr and Niblack are elected. The rest of the delegation are Radical.

The Pennsylvania press estimates the Republican majority at eighteen thousand; Moffett, Democrat, carries the third district by ninety-one majority; Covode, in the twenty-first district, is probably defeated; Reading, Democrat, carries the fifth district.

Nebraska returns indicate two thousand Republican majority, with the Legislature strongly Republican.

The Republicans elect the entire State ticket in Ohio, Nebraska, Indiana and Pennsylvania.

DAYTON, O., Oct. 14. — Schenck beat Vallandigham five hundred votes.

Republicans estimate their majorities as follows: Pennsylvania, eighteen thousand; Ohio, twenty-two thousand; Indiana, two thousand five hundred; Nebraska, two thousand.

INDIANAPOLIS, Oct. 14.—Thirty-seven counties show Democratic gains of nearly seven thousand—unheard from forty-one. The Democrats claim the State by one thousand five hundred; Republicans by two thousand four hundred. The third district still doubtful.

CLEVELAND, Oct. 14.—Democratic congressmen are elected in the first, fifth, ninth, tenth, twelfth and thirteenth districts. Republicans get the balance.

ILLINOIS CONFERENCE.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

It is with much pleasure that I attempt to furnish the readers of our beloved Advocate with a few thoughts in regard to our holy religion in Illinois. There are about twenty preachers at this place, on the way to their fields of labor, from Canton, Fulton county, Illinois, where our Annual Conference has just ended.

We have had a very pleasant session. Love, harmony and prosperity pervaded. According to our statistics, we had about forty per cent. increase of membership—also in the other interests of the church.

Among our late transfers were Revs. F. M. English and J. B. Harris, of the Memphis Conference, who were gladly received. Among those admitted on trial was Rev. Robert Tucker, a local preacher who came from Arkansas about three months ago, of whom, and his kind wife, many of their old Arkansas friends will rejoice to hear.

Bishop Pierce presided with becoming dignity, and gained for himself a great name by so doing, and by preaching two of the finest sermons that many of the kind citizens of this prairie State ever heard. He is still with us. We love him greatly We want him another year. I send a list of the appointments.

EL PASO, Illinois, Sept. 25, 1868.

C. W. Miller transferred to Kentucky Conference.

S. S. Rider transferred to Baltimore Conference.

J. Farmer, John F. Medley and Richard Stevens were located at their own request.

NEGRO RIOT IN JEFFERSON.

We are pained to lay before our readers another evidence of the results of Radical incendiarism, which they in their fanaticism and partisan blindness call "progress." G. W. Smith, a delegate to the Austin (Texas) convention, had been in the habit of inflaming the negro population by speeches of the most incendiary character. His influence and conduct among the negroes of the Coy was dangerous in the extreme to the public peace. Hence, feeling their danger from civil outbreak on the part of the negroes under Smith's teachings, the citizens notified him on his departure to the Austin convention that his absence would be preferred to his presence in Jefferson. He, however, returned to Jefferson, and seemed more determined than ever to inflame the blacks against the whites, and did all he could to create a local war of races. At length he called a meeting, at which he and Judge Caldwell, of the Supreme Court of Texas, were to be the chief managers. The meeting was called for Saturday, October 3, 1868, Smith being the leading spirit. During a discussion as to the arrangements of the meeting, Smith insisted to Judge Caldwell that the negroes and whites should be compelled to sit together. Caldwell reasoned with him, and argued against the policy of this proceeding, but Smith was determined, and a quarrel ensued between them, which prevented the taking place of the meeting.

The same evening, Saturday, October 3, Mr. Philip Crump, a prominent citizen of Jefferson, was riding along the public thoroughfares with some friends, when the party was fired upon from a negro groggery; two of those with Mr. Crump were wounded.

The building was surrounded, and the whole party captured and turned over to the civil authorities. Smith acknowledged that he had fired, and said that he was "d—d sorry he didn't kill Crump." They were imprisoned in the county jail, and a military guard was set over them. The citizens, learning the circumstances, became very much excited, and a party of them, representing the citizens of Jefferson, called upon the military guard at the jail and stated to them that there was not the slightest ill-feeling between the citizens of Jefferson and the military, but that this outrage was so shocking that they demanded forthwith the custody of the prisoners. The major in command made objection to this, but notwithstanding, in the face of the excited popular feeling, and the force which presented itself, he could not prevent the citizens from taking possession of the jail, when the prisoners were shot in their cells.

Such are the facts as furnished to us. We publish them for the information of our readers, but hope further intelligence may put another face on the affair.—Times.

The Galveston Bulletin (Republican) of the 11th says:

We spoke on Friday of a report from Jefferson that the Hon. Gen. W. Smith, delegate to the Austin convention from Waco, had been assaulted, and was then under the protection of the military. It seems that for safe keeping he was placed in the jail, as were also several freedmen who were objects of popular vengeance. It now appears that on the next night a mob of disguised men overpowered the military guard, broke open the jail, and took out Smith and the freedmen. Smith seems to have fought the mob to the last; he died fighting, at least this was the report at Austin. A volley was fired into the freedmen, two of whom were killed, while a third was badly wounded. We cannot understand how it was that Major Curtis, who commanded the guard, suffered his men to be disarmed before any were killed. Smith was a young man of but twenty-five years, and had served in the Federal army. As a member of the convention he was a Radical of the most extreme school. The Rev. Mr. Grisby, one of his colleagues, has fled to Missouri. The whereabouts of Judge Caldwell and others is unknown. Possibly he is at the Supreme Court at Tyler.

We understand that Judge Caldwell arrived here yesterday.

More Trouble in Bossier Parish.

The Shreveport News of the 3d says:

On Sunday another encounter ensued between the races in Bossier parish, about four miles from this place. It had its origin in the shooting of a white man, a citizen of Arkansas, by a negro. A number of Arkansians came down to avenge his death, but the citizens of Shreveport and the military went over and restored peace. Two white and several negroes were killed. Considerable excitement prevailed here on first report, but all is quiet at present, though the troops have not returned.

The Monroe Intelligencer (Radical) of the 7th says:

We learn that trouble has again broken out in Bossier parish. The facts, as we heard them, are as follows: "About ten days ago a man returning from Shreveport got into a difficulty with some colored people about five miles above Shreveport, in the course of which he fired his pistol at them, but without injuring any one. The colored men tied him and were about punishing him, when two young men whom they knew interceded with them and promised to see justice done. The white man was taken before a magistrate, but as the colored people had not been informed of the time of trial, no witness appeared against him and he was discharged The colored men then, in hunting up the man from Arkansas, came across the two young men and shot them.

In the meantime a portion of Baker's gang came down from Arkansas to revenge the tying of their friend, and commenced an indiscriminate slaughter of the colored people in the neighborhood where the first difficulty occurred. A company of troops had left Shreveport for the protection of the remaining colored people.

We learn from Mr. A. L. Hay, editor of the Shreveport News, who arrived here Sunday by the Lizzie Hopkins, that that steamer brought down to Baton Rouge thirty-eight colored men, who had been convicted of participating in the recent riot in Bossier parish, and sentenced to one year's imprisonment in the penitentiary. Of the jurymen who brought in the verdict eight were colored.

'MOBILE,' writing to the Nashville Christian Advocate, says:

Continue your protest against the practice of patronizing Romish schools by Protestants; make it as loud as thunder; wake up the church, and the Protestant country, on this subject. Any Protestant father who, with the facts before him, will send a child to a Romish school, ought to be dealt with by his church as guilty of one of the greatest of crimes, viz., that of conspiring with the agents of Satan to ruin the soul of his child. Two instances of the kind have come to my knowledge within the last twenty-four hours. In one case the parents are both Methodists; they sent a daughter, some fifteen or sixteen years of age, to the Catholic school at Pascagoula, taught by 'Sisters of Charity,' I think. In the course of a few months they received a letter from the daughter, expressing a desire to join the Romish church! This opened their eyes, and the father hurried off for his daughter forthwith. In all probability her return home will be followed by letters from the 'Sisters,' to papists in this city, putting them on her track, and the efforts to Romanize her will still be continued. In the other case, only the mother is a member of our church. Having a rather wayward son of fifteen, who had not been indneed to study by any of the teachers in the city, the parents thought they would try the 'Brothers' School,' also at Pascagoula. The mother accompanied him, gave him a Bible, with a mother's charge to read it—notified the 'Brothers' that she did not wish her son taught the Catholic religion, but his books; and received the fullest assurance that her wishes should be strictly observed, etc. But certain things coming to her knowledge after a while, she became dissatisfied and went for her son before the scholastic year expired. Now for the result. She found that her son had been taught almost nothing in his proper studies—that his Bible had been kept from him, and that he had not been allowed to read it—that he had been thoroughly drilled in the Romish faith and usages, had been required to be up and in the chapel for their peculiar services before six in the morning, had had history perverted and falsified to him, and his young mind so worked upon that the boy can now hardly shake off the idea that he must be in the Romish church in order to be saved! Nor was this all; she learned, to her great grief, that her son had not been required to observe the Sabbath, only long enough to get through with the Romish ceremonies in the morning—say until about nine o'clock—that the rest of the day was devoted to fishing, sailing, or any other amusement that the 'Brothers' and priests felt like engaging in. Such is Romish faith—such are the hands in which Protestants place their children to learn piety—such are Romish schools—and such is the 'Brothers school at Pascagoula. Send on your children, Protestants, if you wish them sent to perdition, and their arrival there will be insured.

CAMP MEETINGS.

Lying on our table we have an interesting sketch entitled "A Camp Meeting Forty Years Ago," for which we are indebted to the Rev. J. T. Neblett, an aged and useful local preacher of the Wesley circuit, and the father of the Rev. R. A. Neblett, of the Memphis Conference. This sketch was published some time since in the Clarksville Chronicle, from which it was clipped and forwarded to us. In 1827 "Observer," as the writer of the sketch signs himself, arrived in Clarksville, then a village with only two hundred and forty white inhabitants. In August of that year the whole community of the village and surrounding country was much excited in anticipation of the camp meeting at Antioch, eight miles from Clarksville—it was all the talk. The time having arrived, old and young, great and small, white and black, were in motion for Antioch, with every horse and every vehicle—the latter being only wagons and ox-carts. "Observer," with many others, wended his way on foot. Arriving Sunday morning, he surveyed the scene—a camp ground of rough tents, and a wide-spread arbor in the center, all surrounded by a dense forest of native trees, shady and cool, with great throngs of people of every age, character and condition in life, many seated, and others moving here and there, while they waited the hour of service. The campers were "Parson Neblett" and other Nebletts, John, William, Edward, Henry and Sterling; and besides, there were the Lairds, the Ramseys, the Orgains, and the Allens. Food for man and beast abounded—free for all. The tables were filled with the substantials, and also with the luxuries afforded by the country, which were few. At the hour of eleven "Observer" heard the shrill noise of an old cow's horn, the signal for preaching. The preacher was the Rev. Robert Paine, now Bishop Paine—his subject, the Last Judgment. The sermon was eloquent and thrilling; the preacher's soul was breathed into it, his face beamed with light, his eyes flashed lightning, and his voice sounded peals of thunder. The sermon struck terror in many hearts—a death-like silence prevailed throughout the vast crowd of eager listeners. Finally, the preacher depicted the closing scenes of the last judgment, the righteous approved, and the wicked condemned—turned into hell, and the door shut, while upon it was written by the hand of God: "Eternity! Eternity!! Eternity!!!" "Observer" adds that many times since he has visited Antioch, and always the preacher of that day stands before him, and he hears the word "Eternity" echoing among the hills and valleys surrounding the camp ground.—Memphis Christian Advocate

THE CLEAR VISION.

I did not dream. I never knew
What charms oor sternest season wore,
Was never yet the sky so hioe,
Was never earth so white before.
Till now I never saw the glow
Of sunset on yon hills of snow,
And never learned the bough's designs
Of beauty in its leafless lines.

Did ever such a morniog break
As that my eastern windows see?
Did ever soch a moonlight take
Weird photographs of shrub aod tree?
Rang ever bells so wild and fleet
The music of the winter sweet?
Was ever yet a sound by half
So merry as yon schoolboy's langh?

O earth! with gladness overfraoght,
No added charm thy face hath found;
Within my heart the change is wrought,
My footsteps make enchanted ground.
From couch of palo and cortaioed room
Forth to thy light and air I come,
To find in all that meets my oyes
The freshness of a glad sorprise.

Fair seem these winter days, and soon
Shall blow the warm sooth winds of spriog
To set the unbound rills in tune,
And hither orge the hine bird's wing.
The vales shall langh in flowers, the woods
Grow misty green with leafing buds,
And violets and wild flowers away
Against the throbbing heart of May.

Break forth, my lips, in praise, and own
The wiser love severely kiod;
Since, richer for its chasteniog grown,
I see, whereas I once was blind.
The world, O Father! hath oot wronged
With loss the life by thee prolonged;
Bnt still, with every added year,
More beautiful thy works appear!

As thou hast made the world without,
Make thou more fair my world within;
Shine through its llogering clouds of doubt;
Rebnke its hauntiog shapes of sio;
Fill, brief or long, my graoted span
Of life with love to thee and mao;
Strike when thou wilt the hoor of rest,
Bnt let my last days be my best!

TRAINING SCHOOLS FOR THE MINISTRY.

Mr. Editor: I have noticed for some time a tendency in our church authorities toward fixing upon us training schools for young ministers. This question will, doubtless, continue to agitate the Methodist public until some definite plan is adopted to secure a learned ministry.

Yonr hnmble correspondent differs fundamentally from some of these high authorities in Methodism; not that he stands opposed to a learned ministry, but he doubts the eligibility of the means for securing the end. In the first place, I cannot see that it is absolutely essential for every Methodist minister to be a learned man. In the second place, if it be admitted that such a dire necessity exists, it does not follow, as a logical consequence, that training schools for young ministers are the best means of attaining that result. In the next place, I am firmly persuaded that this system, if generally adopted, will bring with it evils tenfold more deplorable than ignorance in the ministry. The tendency of the system is to ignore the doctrine of a divine call to the ministry. If that important truth is lost sight of, in our haste to have a learned ministry, then farewell to efficiency and spirituality in both the ministry and laity. We will all be landed in the dead sea of formalism.

The Holy Ghost moves upon the hearts of ministers to take upon them the office and work of the ministry. The church recognizes and indorses this divine call by licensing them to preach the Gospel. It would seem inconsistent with the doctrine of a divine call for the church first to select a certain class of men for the work of the ministry, and then present them to God for his approval. Indeed it would be a virtual denial of his right to select his own embassadors. But it may be said that the advocates of the training system do not contemplate admitting any to those schools but those who profess such a divine call, and therefore my objection does not apply. These schools and colleges will either be sustained by the tuition fees of the students or by the volnntary contributions of the whole church. In the first case supposed none but men of some means can avail themselves of the benefits of the system, and consequently none but men of means can be admitted to the ministry. In that case my objection lies with its full weight against the system, for it is tantamount to saying to the great Head of the Church: You must select your agents from among men of wealth. It is restricting the Holy Ghost to a certain class—a denial of his rights and prerogatives; in fact a giving up of the doctrine of a divine call to the ministry. But if, to evade these consequences, it be said, these training schools will be sustained by the contributions of the whole church, and thereby made accessible to the very poorest of the poor, even in that case my objection is applicable. It will be a standing bid to the worldly-minded aspirant to enter these schools as the surest and speediest means of attaining to distinction and ease at other people's expense; and though every one admitted be required to profess a divine call, it will not secure the church against an enervated, spiritless and godless ministry. Make the ministry attractive, and thousands will be ready to assume the garb of piety for the sake of the perquisites and worldly advantages of this holy vocation. The safeguards to a holy ministry will be removed. Besides, we might urge against these charity schools that the church is not in a condition to bear this enormous tax, especially if the outlay does not promise valuable returns.—But for the present we waive this objection.

Again, if the Holy Ghost calls one to the work of the ministry, the question will arise: When must this work be commenced—now, or three, four or five years hence? God calls to-day, and is answered with a promise of obedience hereafter. If the church can wait for all this preparation, why cannot the Holy Ghost delay his calls until the manipulations of the professor have fitted these embryo ministers for their work?

Does the Holy Ghost make any mistakes in selecting his agents, either in respect to the persons employed or the time they should engage in the work? I cannot be convinced that God's call to the ministry means a call to enter a college. Again, if a young man of good parts, with a tolerable English education, cannot make a respectable preacher by assiduous application, while engaged in the regular work, it is folly to expect him to succeed with the aid of theological schools. If one enters college a fool or a drone, he will leave as he entered. No human contrivance can impart what nature has denied. I have never known a young preacher to leave the regular work, in order to go to college, who was improved by the process in efficiency and spirituality; but I have known some whom I thought were pretty nearly spoiled by the operation. They almost invariably contract an artificial manner of delivery, and a florid, high-falutin style that disgusts sensible people. They suppose, now that they are learned men, it is absolutely essential that the world should be impressed with the fact. Hence, in too many instances they preach themselves, instead of Christ Jesus—not "in words which the Holy Ghost teacheth," but "in enticing words of man's wisdom."

The best way to attain perfection in any art is to practice as you learn. In this way some of our ablest ministers worked their way to their present exalted positions. If a young man begins preaching on a small capital stock of ideas he will, if not an imbecile or drone, add to his capital daily, and this addition will continue indefinitely. The opposite plan, of accumulating a vast capital before learning the art of investing, is a serious embarrassment. It is clothing the youthful David in Saul's armor. It is a ponderous, unwieldy instrument, that cannot be employed efficiently. Let science and art go hand in hand. As capital increases let it be prudently invested. Why should the stock already on hand lie idle? Why not put it out, that it may be returned with usury? Why should the one talent lie buried because it is not five?

If a few ignorant preachers in our church be regarded by the good and wise as a blot upon the fair proportions of our beloved Methodism, a recurrence of the disgrace can be prevented by adopting a plan that will effectually bar the door of the ministry in our quarterly conferences. Let none be licensed to preach who have not a fair English education, and an acquaintance with the Bible and our standard theological authors. Let the next General Conference fix the standard and provide for the appointment of an examining committee in each circuit and station, and the stain may be wiped out, and leave our brethren, so jealous for the honor of the church, to breathe freely.

This plan is not open to the objections that lie against theological schools. It guards the door of the ministry at the right place. Instead of licensing ignorance to teach, and then attempting to rectify the mistake by placing the licentiates under tutors and governors, that they may, after a few years' labor and toil, be qualified for the work which we have already authorized them to do, we will only license those who are competent for the task. This plan, if generally or universally adopted, would obviate the necessity for theological schools, and at the same time be encumbered with no expense.

Then I would say, in conclusion, spare the church and the world the infliction of these preacher factories. Better, infinitely better, suffer from a ministry partially ignorant than to have thrust upon us a man-made ministry, however learned in worldly wisdom.

Lake Providence District Meeting, Louisiana Conference.

Bastrop, September 29, 1868.

Mr. Editor: I send you the reports of the different committees upon the various subjects brought before us in our district meeting, held at Delhi, Louisiana, from September 19 to 23.

We had a pleasant meeting and a good revival, for these times.—There were several conversions, and twelve accessions to our membership. The attendance of official members was slim—eleven, I believe, in all. Our business was done too hurriedly, as you will discover by these reports. The next district meeting is to be held at Bastrop. The following brethren were elected lay delegates to our next Annual Conference: Major E. K. W. Ross, J. Harvey Brigham, John W. Cazey and Alexander S. Pipes. Alternates: J. L. Cheatem and H. P. Wells.

Your's in Christ,

James S. Wright, Sec'y.

Origin of Old Hundred.—The New York Sun says:

The Rev. Robert Collyer, of Chicago, says that 'Luther took the grand measure we know as Old Hundred from the ballad music of the peasants of his time.' As this idea respecting that magnificent piece of music, though very common, is erroneous, it may be worth while to state the truth respectiug it. It was not derived from ballad music, but appears to have been compiled from the Gregorian chants. There are four of these old chants in existence, from which the whole of Old Hundred may be made up. Its compiler was not Luther, but most probably William Franc, who furnished the music to the Geneva Psalms, published in 1564. In that publication the tune in question was contained. It was originally known as the One Hnndredth Psalm. Thence its present title.

Rice, the great staple of South Carolina, the culture of which was once confined to the river swamp lands, is now grown on the uplands. The seed of the swamp rice is used, and the grain raised compares favorably with that from the old rice fields.

THE DEATH OF ST. PAUL.

From Conybeare and Howson's Life and Epistles of Paul.

The privileges of Roman citizenship exempted St. Paul from the ignominious death of lingering torture, which had been lately inflicted on so many of his brethren. He was to die by decapitation; and he was led out to execution beyond the city walls, upon the road to Ostia, the port of Rome. As he issued forth from the gate his eyes must have rested for a moment on that sepulchral pyramid which stood beside the road, and still stands unshattered, amid the wreck of so many centuries, upon the same spot. That spot was then only the burial place of a single Roman; it is now the burial place of many Britons. The mausoleum of Cains Cestus rises conspicuously amongst humbler graves, and marks the site where papal Rome suffers her Protestant sojourners to bury their dead. In England and in Germany, Scandinavia and in America, there are hearts which turn to that lofty cenotaph as the sacred point of this whole horizon; even as the English villager turns to the gray church tower which overlooks the gravestones of his kindred. Among the works of man, that pyramid is the only surviving witness of the martyrdom of St. Paul; and we may thus regard it with yet deeper interest, as a monument unconsciously erected by a pagan to the memory of a martyr. Nor let us think that they who lie beneath its shadow are indeed resting, as degenerate Italians fancy, in unconsecrated ground. Rather let us say that a spot where the disciples of Paul's faith now sleep in Christ, so near the soil once watered by his blood, is doubly hallowed; and that their resting place is mostly identified with the last earthly journey and the dying glance of their own patron saint, the apostle to the Gentiles.

As the martyr and his executioners passed on, their way was crowded with a motley multitude of goers and comers between the metropolis and its harbor—merchants hastening to superintend the unloading of their cargoes; sailors eager to squander the profits of their last voyage in the dissipations of the capital; officials of the government, charged with the administration of the provinces, or the command of the legions on the Euphrates or the Rhine; Chaldean astrologers; Phrygian eunuchs; dancing girls from Syria, with their painted turbans; mendicant priests from Egypt, howling for Osiris; Greek adventurers eager to coin their national cunning into Roman gold; representatives of the avarice and ambition, the fraud and lust, the superstition and intelligence of the imperial world. Through the dust and tumult of that busy throng the small troop of soldiers threaded their way silently, under the bright sky of an Italian mid-summer. They were marching, though they knew it not, in a procession more truly triumphal than any they had ever followed, in the train of general or emperor, along the sacred way. Their prisoner, now at last and forever delivered from his captivity, rejoiced to follow his Lord "without the gate." The place of execution was not far distant; and there the sword of the headsman ended his long course of sufferings, and released that heroic soul from that feeble body. Weeping friends took up his corpse, and carried it for burial to those subterranean labyrinths, where, through many ages of oppression, the persecuted church found refuge for the living and sepulchres for the dead.

Thus died the apostle, the prophet and the martyr; bequeathing to the church, in her government and her discipline, the legacy of his apostolic labors; leaving his prophetic words to be her living oracles; pouring forth his blood to be the seed of a thousand martyrdoms. Thenceforth, among the glorious company of the apostles, among the goodly fellowship of the prophets, among the noble army of the martyrs, his name has stood pre-eminent. And wheresoever the holy church, throughout all the world, doth acknowledge God, there Paul of Tarsus is revered as the great teacher of universal redemption and a catholic religion—the herald of glad tidings to all mankind. LETTER FROM CHINA.

Education in China.

Shanghai, August 12, 1868.

Mr. Editor: The opportunity to be educated is to be found all over China, in every city, town and village. If a man wishes respectability he must be educated. The true knowledge to be gained by the study of the Chinese classics is but little. There is one advantage in the study of their books according to their prescribed method, and that is, the faculty of the memory is strengthened and cultivated to a wonderful extent. It is in reality the only faculty of the mind put in requisition in a Chinese school. And it is necessary, in preparing for an examination, to have the mind well stored with the text and comment of their standard works, for on such an occasion each student is confined in his cell, and no access can be allowed to any work or manuscript. There is no doubt about the cultivation of the memory being of great advantage to the literary class, and of course an advantage to the people generally. Schoolmasters are to be found everywhere. Many are deterred from proceeding in these examinations on account of the expense which attends it. At the present day, in China, if a young man has the wherewith to pave his way by means of bribery, it is comparatively an easy task to get the desired degrees. If he is not able to do this he opens a school and thus obtains a sufficient amount (say eight or ten dollars per month) to support himself and family. I say family, because many hundreds and thousands attend these examinations who are husbands and fathers. It is often the case that son and father attend the same examination, and continue to do so for many years, until one or the other gains the palm, on which occasion there is always great rejoicing in the village.

There is one dark feature in the educational system of China, and that is, they neglect the education of the women. The consequence is they grow up in ignorance, without any cultivation of the mind, and are thus easily influenced by the priests of the various religions of the land, and become exceedingly superstitious, so that the action of the mother in idolatrous exercises is enough to convince the child, and often has great weight with the father. Occasionally you will see a girl of some wealthy family being taught to read. But such cases, I am sorry to say, are but few when compared to the great mass of untaught females. A mother's influence in China is perhaps as great as in any other country, and thus, being uneducated and superstitious, her influence for evil tells fearfully in the early training of the child. Out of one hundred women you will find at least ninety regular in their devotional exercises at the temples; while of one hundred men you will find but about ten who really feel it a duty to prostrate themselves before the idols, or believe there is any efficacy in doing so. Just now the officials of the city refuse to allow the female portion of the city to worship at any of the temples in this city. The consequence is the women are today flocking to all the temples outside of the city, worshiping their goddess of mercy, an idol, this being the birthday of that goddess. The officials state that as many bad women go to the temples to be seen and praised of men for their good looks, it will lead to evil, and, therefore, for that reason they wish to put a stop to it. Their husbands are exhorted to do all they can to prevent their wives and daughters from frequenting the temples.—From our long stay among this people we have seen the absolute necessity of the education of the women of China. At the present time there are several schools in which girls are taught to read the Scriptures. These schools are superintended by foreign missionaries. Where there are day schools the girls are paid each ten cash or one cent per day as an inducement for their mothers to allow them to leave home. At least I am not aware of any change being made in this system. I remember well, in 1854, when I first came to China, that was one thing which rather astonished me—the paying of little girls to come to school. I will write you again.

Your's in the love of Christ,

J. W. Lambuth.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

New Iberia, Louisiana Conference.

Mr. Emror: We have had a very interesting meeting at New Iberia; which was continued for eight days, morning and evening, and resulted in eighteen persons joining the church and twenty-two professing conversion. It is hardly necessary to add that the members of the church were greatly revived by these services, and rejoiced at their results.

Brother Wilkinson, of Opelousas, was with us, and was abundant and efficient in labors. He is, indeed, a chosen vessel of God, who has not only the seal of an apostolic bishop upon his parchments, but that which is far better—the seal of the Holy Ghost to his ministry. May the Lord of the harvest send forth many more such laborers into his vineyard!

Our meeting was one of peculiar interest. There was more than one direct test of the promise of the blessed Saviour "that if two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven." There were several instances of such agreement and earnest asking for the conversion of friends, and it was done according to the promise. While some among the most substantial of the community laid themselves upon the altar and consecrated their lives to the service of God and the church, perhaps the most impressive and affecting scene of the meeting was that of several children giving their young hearts to God and their hands to the church, with such an evident sense of the solemnity and sacredness of the engagement as to overwhelm with emotion all who witnessed the scene. May the good Shepherd ever have these precious lambs in his holy keeping!

The closing service of this delightful meeting was a love feast on Sunday evening, at which forty-two persons bore witness for Christ, several being constrained to speak a second time—one newly born of God to ask the church to warn or rebuke him if they saw him going astray; another to ask prayer for a sick mother, another for an aged father, another for wayward brothers, and yet another for an afflicted neighbor and veteran of the cross, whose feet, for more than eighteen months, have not been permitted to tread the courts of the Lord's house. These special cases were then borne before the Lord, together with the general interests of his church, by our dear Brother Wilkinson, in the spirit of earnest and faithful prayer, in which every heart present seemed joined with his in asking these petitions. Thus ended one of the most interesting meetings it has ever been my good fortune to attend.

How to Hear the Gospel.—Rowland Hill paid a visit to an old friend a few years before his death, who said to him, "Mr. Hill, it is just sixty five years since I first heard you preach, and I remember your text and part of your sermon. You told us that some people were very squeamish about the delivery of different ministers who preached the same Gospel. You said, supposing you were attending to hear a will read where you expected a legacy to be left to you, would you employ the time when it was reading in criticising the manner in which the lawyer read it? No, you would be giving all ears to hear if anything was left to you, and how much it was. That is the way I would advise you to hear the Gospel."

A Traveler to the Island of St. Thomas describes it as the nest of yellow fever, difficult and dangerous of access, swarming with sharks, fearfully depressing to the spirits, liable to storms and earthquakes, and wholly destitute of fresh water. We hope this traveler adheres more closely to the truth than travelers usually do.

OUACHITA DISTRICT MEETING,
LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Mr. Editor: The Ouachita district meeting of the Louisiana Conference was held in Mount Lebanon.

The meeting convened at eight o'clock A. M. on Monday, the 7th of September, the Rev. Samuel Armstrong, presiding elder, in the chair. The meeting was harmonious in all its deliberations, and left an impress on the minds of all in attendance for good in the future.

STATE OF THE CHURCH.

Rev. W. C. Haislip, from the Committee on the State of the Church, reports an evident improvement in the spiritual condition throughout the district. Revivals are taking place almost everywhere. People are looking to the church as truly the "salt of the earth."

COLORED MEMBERSHIP.

Rev. S. S. Scott, chairman, says that Minden circuit has two large colored congregations, with a membership of two hundred, and one church house, all in charge of the pastor of the Minden circuit. They have enjoyed several fine revivals during the past year, and are easily controlled by the pastor, and are willing to pay something of their earnings for the Gospel.

Homer circuit has three colored congregations and over one hundred members. They are not so easily controlled, and very much inclined to superstitious forms of worship.

Haynesville circuit has one organized church of seventy five members, entirely under the supervision of the pastor of the circuit.

Mount Lebanon has one colored congregation and twenty-five members, supervised by the pastor of Mount Lebanon circuit.

Ouachita circuit has no colored charge. They prefer their own color The other circuits represent nothing good. The colored people of Ouachita circuit do not stand alone in wanting preachers of their own color to serve them; but it is the unanimous desire of all the negroes.

It is the opinion of this committee that to grant this desire would be but to work their own ruin, and be an instrument of great injury to the country. It is the experience of our people that so long as the white man holds on to the negro and guides the helm of State and church, he can elevate the negro; but so soon as he turns him loose he begins to sink into greater superstition, and finally into barbarism—the "hole of the pit from which he was dug." We therefore recommend that the Annual Conference continue the colored membership under its direct supervision, and to appoint white preachers to them wherever it is practicable, and where that cannot be done, require the preachers who have charge of the white congregations to take charge of the colored congregations in their bounds, so far as they can control them.

MISSIONS.

The committee says that no collections have been made. "The heathens are at our doors."

EDUCATION.

Rev. N. A. Cravens, chairman.—Denominational education, at the present time, assumes great importance. At no time in the past history of our country has this subject pressed itself upon our attention and appealed to our liberality by motives so high and holy. And as Homer College is the only institution in this portion of the State with any claims upon us, we feel that in presenting it to you for support we appeal both to your interest and denominational pride.

The whole debt of the college is only $1,006 39 in coin, while the property is worth from $5,000 to $7,000.

We have succeeded in securing the services of the Rev. H. T. Lewis as president, with a complete corps of teachers. The college will open on the second Monday in October. Here our sons may receive a thorough collegiate education in our own State, under teachers educated in our own sunny South, and at a reasonable cost.

Resolutions were then adopted co-operating with the agent, in dorsing the action of the board of trustees, and pledging influence for patronage.

FINANCE.

Rev. N. A. Cravens, chairman, reports: One of two evils is unavoidable—either a secular ministry, or destitution, which amounts to suffering. Although we are fully aware of the stringency of the times, yet we are satisfied that there has been great error somewhere. In the first place, on many of the circuits the amounts assessed will not furnish the absolute necessaries of life. This is calculated to drive men of liberal minds from any participation in the collection of such sums for such purposes; and secondly, with destitution provided for, a minister would have to be more than man to labor cheerfully and faithfully among a people that placed such an estimate upon his services. No other man would work for such compensation, and an enlightened public will always look with contempt upon a calling that pays so poorly.

Again, the amounts collected upon the assessments up to the tenth month of the Conference year suggests the inquiry: How can your preachers live under a cash system and preach on a credit? The merchants and planters are all adopting the cash system, and provisions especially cannot be bought on time. It may do for a man to be without means in his pocket if he has corn in his crib, meat in his smoke-house, pigs in his pen, and cows in his pastures; but an itinerant, who changes his home at the will of the church, cannot surround himself with these conveniences of life. We are painfully impressed with the belief that in many instances the men who make the assessments, instead of taking into account the necessities of the preachers and their families, and educating the people up to the point of raising it, regard themselves as the guardians of the people's purses.

The following resolutions from the committee were then adopted:

Resolved, That the stewards take into account the necessary amount to make the preacher and family comfortable, and keep him out of debt, and not the ability of the work to pay.

Resolved, That they take up their subscription, or make their assessment, at the beginning of the year, and to be collected quarterly.

Resolved, That they collect their supplies for preachers when they can be bought at the lowest prices.

PERIODICALS.

Rev. T. J. Upton reports the New Orleans Christian Advocate altogether worthy of our patronage, and regrets that from a variety of circumstances its circulation is no greater within the bounds of this district. It is not one-fifth what its merits deserve.

Resolved, That we will do all in our power, under the circumstances, to facilitate the circulation of the Advocate in the bounds of our respective works.

SABBATH SCHOOLS.

Rev. W. P. Kimball, chairman, reported encouragingly on Sabbath schools. The changes in boundaries were suggested for the action of the next Annual Conference, and many other matters discussed, and complimentary resolutions passed.

Rev. Charles B. Stuart, president of the Mansfield Female College, was present, addressed the meeting, and urged the claims of the college.

The next annual district meeting will be at Haynesville, Claiborne parish, commencing on the Wednesday before the third Sabbath in August, 1869.

The lay delegates elected to the Annual Conference are: W. F. Moreland, R. Raual, E P. Harris and J. S. Williams.

B. W. Pearce, Secretary.

A singular fish is found in great numbers in the coast rivers of Alaska. It is about eight inches long, transparent, and the fattest of all the finny tribes. This fat, however, has not the oily, rancid taste of other fish, but is like fresh lard. When these fish are dried the Indians often turn them to a novel and practical account—burn them in the place of candles. They give a clear brilliant light, and are not liable to be blown out by the wind. Mr. Manson, the superintendent at Fort Simpson, says the tail should be lighted instead of the head, and that each fish will last about fifteen minutes!

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Died, September 11, 1868, at his residence on Deer Creek, Washington county, Mississippi, Dr. George W. Vaughn, in the thirty-seventh year of his age.

Dr. Vaughn was born and raised in Tuscaloosa, Alabama. When grown to manhood he removed to Columbus, Mississippi, in which place and vicinity he practiced medicine until the beginning of the war. During the war he was in the Confederate army, part of the time as lieutenant of a battery and part as surgeon of a regiment.

While residing about Columbus he was married to Miss Alberta Sykes, a lady of fine endowments and great piety. She lived five years after their marriage, and left him two sons, one of whom (a boy ten or eleven years old) is still living—an orphan indeed.

In November, 1864, he was married, near Union Springs, Alabama, to Mrs. Carrie Andrews, widow of Mr. James Andrews, of Madison county, Mississippi, and daughter of Dr. David Thomas, long known and revered as a minister of our church in this State.

His parents were both pious, but he did not embrace religion in early life. While residing in Columbus he joined the Methodist church on probation, but afterward went back to the world. The strong religious influences with which he was brought in contact by his last alliance—the near view he obtained of living Christianity—revived the holy impressions of other days, and inclined his heart toward the path of wisdom. In the summer of 1867, while visiting his place on Deer Creek, he was powerfully awakened by a severe spell of sickness, and promised, if his life was spared, that he would thenceforth devote it to God. He recovered and remembered his vow. In November of the same year he joined the Methodist church at Vernon. Soon afterward he moved his family to Deer Creek. There being no house of worship in the neighborhood, Mrs. Vaughn, with two or three other ladies, began to exert themselves to build a church. In this movement she was heartily supported by Dr. Vaughn, who subscribed liberally, and promised that if she could not collect the requisite sum he would supply the deficit. He exhibited much interest in the accomplishment of the design, and expressed an intention to take a Sabbath school class, and thus aid the cause of Christ. My last meeting with him was at the communion table of the Lord. His view had been that none should partake of the Lord's supper but those who were converted, and in partaking of it we suppose he expressed a saving faith in Christ. A few hours before he was taken sick, in conversing with a minister, he declared his purpose to keep the service and glory of God in view in all his business plans. His death was very sudden. At nine o'clock on Thursday night he was taken with a congestive chill, and at seven on Friday evening he died. He was rational almost to the last, and aware that he would die. He talked freely and calmly about dying, without fear, but not with full assurance. Triumphant deaths are rare. It is enough that the sting is taken away. The vision of glory seldom floods the eyes until they are too much blurred to reflect it to their living friends.

As a citizen and neighbor Dr. Vaughn was much esteemed and beloved. He filled up the character of a good husband, and had gained a large place in the hearts of his mother-in-law and her family.

Besides his orphan boy, he leaves two sweet little girls, a daughter and a stepdaughter, bereaved of a father's care and support; but they have a Father in heaven. The tears of the little orphans, and the deep sorrow of the desolate wife and mother, told of the curse. But I saw there a faith in God which the strong blasts of grief could not shake. This spake of him who takes away the curse.

Alabama and Columbus (Mississippi) papers will please copy.

English residents in India, men who are anxiously saving every penny, that they may speedily return to England, yet contribute no less than $100,000 each year to missions. Nor is money the only thing that they give. Time, trouble, hard work, all contributed, in large measure, by Christian officers in the civil and military services, from the young ensign up to the governor general, and by Christian merchants. They evidently do not believe missions to be a failure.

For twenty months the army expenses are $214,253,031; navy $44,995,971; Interior, $48,042,924; in all about $304,690,926. This is at the rate of 15½ millions per month or more than half a million per day.

Nine Christian churches of the primitive Byzantine style of architecture have been discovered at Lallibala, the holy city of Abyssinia, which have not been visited by Europeans for over three centuries.

Faith is as necessary to the soul as the sun is to the world; were it not for these bright, prolific lights, both the one and the other must remain dark and fruitless.—Charles Howe.

ST. LOUIS CONFERENCE.

We extract from interesting letters in the St. Louis Christian Advocate, from its editor, accounts of the proceedings of this Conference:

I am at Jefferson city. The annual session of the St. Louis Conference commenced here on Wednesday, the 23d instant, Bishop Kavanaugh presiding. The members of the Conference generally are in attendance, in good health and fine spirits; grateful for the past and hopeful for the future.

The past ecclesiastical year has been one of considerable prosperity in the way of erecting and repairing churches, gathering up our scattered members in the more remote parts of our territory, reorganizing churches and receiving fresh accessions to our membership. But the financial operations during the year have been very unsatisfactory. The support given the preachers has in most cases been very inadequate, while the collections for missionary and other general purposes have fallen far short of what it was desired and hoped for. In respect to these the Conference cannot boast.

The opening sermon of the present session was delivered by Dr. W. A. Smith, and from the well known ability of the doctor, the reader will be ready at once to admit the sermon was one of more than ordinary interest. It was not my privilege to be present on the occasion, but hear the sermon spoken of in most favorable terms.

The bishop is in fair health and as much as ever devoted to the work of the Divine Master. Fourteen years ago he held a Conference in this city and in the same house. Then, however, the Conference met in the Senate chamber; now it meets in the Hall of Representatives. Of course this hall is in the State capitol, a magnificent and beautiful structure, most admirably located.

Perhaps I may here be indulged in a few remarks of a personal character, and to begin with the older members:

Rev. John Monroe is sixty two years old; joined the church in 1828; entered the traveling connection in the Missouri Conference in 1833, and has been a member of the Conference ever since. Last year he traveled the Vienna mission, with some twenty-eight or thirty preaching places. When he went there only about twenty five members were found. During the Conference year just passed he preached three hundred and twenty sermons, forty-five of them during the hot month of July, and in the end returned a membership of one hundred and twenty-three! Who of our young men have done more or done it better? * * * * *

FOURTH DAY.

The business of the Conference is being carried on in the ordinary way, and I will give a little further attention to the personale of the Conference.

Two of the older, most useful and most honored members of the Conference, Rev. W. Browning and Dr. Boyle, are not present at this session. Their absence is much regretted by their brethren Few men of any Conference were ever more respected or beloved by their brethren than they, and their presence and counsels here would be highly appreciated.

But here is Rev. J. C. Berrymnn, who, after nearly two score years of labor in the Christian ministry, is hale, hearty, strong, active, and in good report among his brethren In excellent health and fine spirits, he appears as though he might perform active and efficient labor for twenty years to come. He has lately been married, and I can but admire the good taste manifested in the selection he made.

Here, also, as a lay member, is Honorable Trusten Polk, assisting in conducting the business of a Conference in the very hall where, a few years since, he was inaugurated Governor of the State. Here, too, is R. A. Hatcher, Esquire, another man of note both in the State and in the church, active and faithful as a member of the Conference, sitting in a hall where, in times past, he has served the State as a member of its Legislature and of a convention to revise its Constitution.—Here, too, are other leading and influential men from various parts of the State. Such men as T. R. E. Harvey, of Saline county; J. L. D. Blevans, of Veraou county; Dr. M. M. Robinson, of Lafayette county; and various others from other parts of the State, all united in hand and heart in trying to do their Master's work, and advance the interests of the church.

One thing in particular is noticeable in the conduct of these lay members of the Conference: they seldom occupy the floor as speakers, but when they do they always speak directly to the point—say what they have to say and quit when they are done; which is more than can be said for all the other members. They are also remarkable for the brevity and pointed character of the reports they draw up and present to the Conference.

WEST VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.

Parkersburg, Sept. 22, 1868.

The West Virginia Conference met in Clarksburg, Virginia, September 16, 1868, Bishop McTyeire in the chair. There was a very full attendance of clerical members, and it was one of the most harmonious and agreeable sessions I ever attended. Bishop McTyeire presided with consummate dignity and ability, and won his way to the confidence and esteem of the Conference as promptly as the sweet-spirited Doggett did in the two preceding sessions.

We had the pleasure and benefit of the presence of Drs. Sehon, R. A. Young and A. H. Redford. The presence of these distinguished brethren was very gratifying.—They rendered us great service in the pulpit and on the Conference floor.

The writer presented the claims of your excellent paper, and is assured that it will speedily gain that patronage in this Conference which it so justly deserves.

The result of this year's labor is highly gratifying and encouraging. The fact considered that three years ago the entire church in this Conference was in a state of disorganization, its property held by vandal hands, and political and ecclesiastical fanaticism "breathing out threatenings and slaughter" against us, and our exhibit at the present session must be an amazement to every man. Then we were truly "the least among the tribes of Israel." Now we report as follows: Members, eight thousand nine hundred and forty nine, an increase over last year of two thousand two hundred and sixty-five; one hundred and thirty-two Sunday schools; eight hundred and ninety-four officers and teachers; three thousand nine hundred and sixty-one children in Sabbath schools; five hundred and one adults baptized; two hundred and seventy infants baptized; eight thousand one hundred and ninety-seven volumes in library; ninety churches, worth $106,500, affording twenty thousand sittings. We have raised during the year the following amounts: $11,958 for building, repairing, etc; for the support of the ministry, $11,879, an increase of $1,437 over last year; $149 for bishops' support; Conference collection, $105; domestic missions, $214; foreign missions, $108; Bible cause, $221; Sunday schools, $665.

As compared with the older Conferences these figures seem small. But let it be remembered that nearly every foot of ground in this Conference is properly missionary ground, and that under the blessing of God we have wrung the above results out of the most antagonistic surroundings, and it must furnish ground for congratulation to the whole church. Does this look like disintegration? like decay? No, sir! The West Virginia Conference will be standing here flushed with victory and full of youthful vigor when Gabriel blows his trumpet at the close of time. It is composed of a body of men who have endured every hardship and privation known in the annals of martyrdom, and who would die, inch by inch, before they would yield to the foe.

The following additional particulars may be of interest to you: G. W. Young was admitted on trial; J. W. Lambert, G. J. Conner, F. B. Carroll, R. C. Wiseman, S. F. Burgiss and John Martin remain on trial.

Joseph A. Crowder and L. G. Chenront were readmitted; R. C. Wiseman was ordained deacon; J. F. Medly, R. Stevens and J. Farmer were located.

The next Conference is to be held at Point Pleasant.—Correspondence of Baltimore Episcopal Methodist.

The South American Convulsions.

According to the Comercio of Lima all the data so far gathered lead to the belief that the center of this terrific convulsion was the volcanic zone between Arequipa and Tanun. In this zone are to be found the snow-clad volcano of Cailloma, the Misti, the Ubinas, the Huainaputina, the Tutupacu and the Candarave. The dates on which the shocks were felt at the different places along the coast and in the Pacific islands would seem to bear this out, as the earliest shock felt was in the above volcanic zone on the afternoon of Thursday, August 13, the shock making itself felt at varying later dates both north and south of the said zone. It will be interesting to know in what direction the shock was felt at the different points on the coast.

The area over which the phenomenon was noticed in Peru covers one thousand six hundred and seventy miles of latitude and six hundred of longitude.

On the night of August 13 a brilliant light was observed in the northeast. It was a flash light, and caused the observers to suspect a large conflagration at a great distance. It filled the space for about one-half mile. We afterward thought it might be due to the activity of some volcano, but thus far we have no knowledge of any neighboring volcano being in eruption, but judging from the nature of the damage done at Hocumbia, we are inclined to think that Mount Tutupaca or some of the peaks around Candarave are at work. Some of my neighbors think the light was due entirely to electric causes.

A letter from Tanna asserts that during the earthquake the light was visible there. The Governor of Moquequa confirms the same. A letter from the latter place adds this fact—that an enormous development of electric fluid filled the atmosphere, and that on passing the hands through one's hair, or on shaking one's coat, electric sparks were struck off in abundance.

The crater of Mount Apo broke, and a portion fell out; the same was the case with Mount Orqueta and some others of the Chachuni.

Northern and Southern Methodism.—Again.

Our article on 'Northern and Southern Methodism,' published two weeks ago, seems to have made a strong impression upon the mind of the editor of the California Christian Advocate. Last week he referred to it in three different articles. But his remarks are weak and pointless. He does not attempt a denial of the facts cited in our article; they are undeniable. And while he cannot deny them, he cannot defend them. He knows they are indefensible. His own instincts revolt against the policy of his church. He takes no pleasure in the reflection that the Northern Methodist church is the most hostile and relentless in its spirit toward the South of all existing organizations. He is humiliated at the thought, that while the Baptists, the Episcopalians, the Roman Catholics and the Presbyterians, North and South, are burying their differences and coming together, the Northern Methodist church still holds aloft the red flag of strife, and approaches the Southern church not to forgive, forget and fraternize, but avowedly to divide and destroy. He is humiliated to know that the Masons and Odd Fellows are in advance of the Methodists in the path of reconciliation. His good sense and Christian feeling protest against the propriety of the present relations between Northern and Southern Methodists. He knows that as the last fraternal advance was made by the Southern church and rejected by the Northern church, that the overture for peace and fraternity should now come from the latter. He knows that with all its wealth, numbers and power, the Northern Methodist church is in a position to make such an overture appropriately and gracefully. He knows that there are many good people in that church who think it is time that the sword were sheathed, and who disapprove its policy of 'disintegration and absorption.' In the depths of his soul the editor of the Advocate feels that this is not the better way to advance the cause of religion, North and South, and fears that the Master will not smile upon the proposed attempt to destroy a sister church. Knowing all this, and feeling thus, it is no marvel that the editor of the Advocate is weak and pointless in his discussion of this subject. The facts are against him, and he knows it. His conscience is on the other side, and he cannot silence its whispers.

As to what the editor of the Advocate says about 'rebels,' 'the Democratic party,' 'disunion,' and such like, we discover no necessity that we should take much space to answer. Epithets are very useful in partisan warfare of a certain kind, but facts have more weight with thinking people. The interests involved in this matter are too momentous to be dismissed with mere clap-trap or vituperation. We have heard those epithets too often to be alarmed by them now. Our good will for the editor of the Advocate is too sincere, and of too long standing, to allow us to reciprocate in the use of unkindly words. We are concerned for the interests of Christ's cause.

The fact that we deplore is, that instead of a policy of conciliation, the Northern Methodist church has determined on a policy which means the destruction of the Southern Methodist church, or perpetual war. The announcement that we would make to Northern Methodists and to all the world is that while we have an open hand and heart to all who approach us as friends and brethren, we shall resist and by the help of God defeat all attempts to 'disintegrate,' 'absorb,' or destroy, let them come from whatsoever quarter and in whatsoever guise they may.—San Francisco Spectator.

The various Methodist missionaries in China—British and American—are about to join in preparing a Chinese commentary on the New Testament. They also propose to publish a selection of Wesley's sermons.

NOTICE.

A DISTRICT MEETING of the official members and preachers, local and traveling, of the NEW ORLEANS DISTRICT will be held in Carondelet street church, New Orleans, on the third Saturday and Sabbath in October. By the rule of the Louisiana Conference four delegates will be elected at this meeting.

J. C. KEENER, P. E.

TO OUR AGENTS.

"What thy hand findeth to do," etc. Put off nothing until Conference—not even the payment of moneys for the ADVOCATE. Money can be sent safely by post if the letter be registered—at any rate we take the risk. How is it that so many people are being added to the church, and none of them can be got to take the ADVOCATE? Something wrong somewhere. "By their fruits ye shall know them." We suppose that returns for cotton are already supplying the country with cash enough for indispensables, and a family paper of some sort should be reckoned among them. Going, as this paper goes, to five hundred stations and circuits, it will require but a feeble canvass of each to yield us directly one thousand new subscribers. This is the auspicious time—in the month of October—and we earnestly request our agents to avail themselves of it.

MR. PENDLETON TO THE TEXAS DEMOCRACY.—He Urges Them to Vote.—We find the following in the Houston Times of the 13th instant, of which paper Mr. Kinney is senior editor:

BANGOR, Me., Aug. 21, 1868.

Somers Kinney, Esq., Houston, Texas:

MY DEAR SIR—Yours of the 2d instant, dated at Brownsville, was forwarded to me from Cincinnati. In reply, I have only time to say that you cannot urge too strongly our brethren of Texas to stand by the national Democracy, and resist all mongrel attempts to abuse you. My heartfelt wish is that you may succeed in your new undertaking. We are making a last fight for constitutional liberty, and the signs of the times indicate a Democratic triumph hitherto unknown. Yield not a scintilla of your honor. There is no room for compromise. About your being allowed to vote, be not alarmed; we shall see that Texas is represented. Vote, by all means Send me your paper to Cincinnati. I will write more fully to-morrow or the day after.

Your's truly,
GEO. H. PENDLETON.

THE PEACE OF GOD.

There is a peace which follows justification and is properly termed "peace with God." It is reconciliation, and in contrast with the warfare and enmity of the unbelieving heart. This peace, and much more, embracing all inward tranquility and spiritual comfort, is the peace of God, as coming from the infinite Father. He is called "the God of peace" because the fountain of it—the giver and creator of all peace. But in a still higher and far more significant sense is this experience called the peace of God. It is so not merely because it implies agreement and union with him, and because he is the author and source of it, but because it is God's peace—such as God himself has, and such as belongs to the divine character.

In other respects the believer is privileged to be a "partaker of the divine nature," and to be renewed "after the image of him that created him." We distinctly conceive holiness to be something which is both from and like God. Our highest idea of peace is of this kind: the peace which God has, as well as the peace which he gives. In kind our peace is the same as that which dwells in him. No wonder, therefore, that it is represented as passing "all understanding." The complacency of God is not disturbed by any event—his deep tranquility is never ruffled. God's peace is something so profound, so perfect, so infinite and so comprehensive of all happiness, that nothing in the universe can affect it. Whatever men and devils may do in opposition to the plans and purposes of infinite wisdom and goodness, there is still unclouded serenity. There is no perturbation in air or water, in the land or the deep, but the same repose from everlasting to everlasting. Peace in God is, then, the peace of God, as transferred to ourselves, and felt and exhibited in us. As seen in him there is no anxiety, no confusion, no flutterings of fear, and no despondency. He is above all clouds and storms, and dwelling in light which is never dimmed.

It is this peace which the Christian must reach before his experience comes up to the standard of the inspired promises and declarations. There may be the peace of reconciliation, and a measure of spiritual comfort, at the same time that the soul is disturbed by anxious thought, and is tossed and driven by outward affairs. Where is the peace of God which passeth all understanding, when the soul is trembling amidst the perplexing and uncertain events of the times? What has become of that perfect peace which is promised to him whose mind is stayed on Jehovah? God is declared to be "a very present help in trouble;" but how hard to practically realize this description? How does God regard the things which trouble us? They may be matters of vast importance to ourselves, to others, to the nation or the whole world; but God is calm, whilst we are thrown into the utmost distress. It is this peace of God we must attain, or there is no rest for the soul. If God is not anxious and disturbed about the government of the world, and other matters, it is certainly foolish for us to be so. Faith in him ought to dispel fear, and end all anxious and tormenting care. Such peace as fills the divine mind will then fill ours. We shall become accustomed to look at things from his point of view—a view so much higher and broader than our own as to sweep away all disturbing elements. God is not anxious about the future. We cannot think of him as in painful suspense. No matter why this is so; it is one aspect of God's peace, and may be ours possibly. It becomes ours if we have faith in him, and if this faith makes us like him. The good man "shall not be afraid of evil tidings," and in this respect he is like God, and has the divine peace. Faith in God makes us partakers in all that constitutes this divine tranquility. God's peace admits of no fear and of no uncertainty. To the believing there is no tormenting fear, because "if God be for us who can be against us?" God is not afraid, and this aspect of his peace is felt by the believing soul. With God all is certainty. Substantially it is so with his children. It is certain "that all things work together for good to them that love God," and that Christ's grace is sufficient for us. Beyond these points we may launch out as far as we please, and there is no fear, no uncertainty. The infinite strength and the infinite assurance are ours, respecting all things, if we accept the promises and abide in them.

The peace of God, then, is not only a divine gift, but the divine nature. It is the beatitude of thinking and feeling as God himself thinks and feels. This is the peace which he ordains for us, and plants within us, so that, like himself, the believer is "careful for nothing." He sings and adores at once—

"Thou hidden source of calm repose,
Thou all-sufficient love divine,
My help and refuge from my foes,
Secure I am if thou art mine!
And lo! from sin, and grief and shame,
I hide me, Jesus, in thy name."

COLORED CONFERENCES.

We publish below a communication from Bishop Paine, which appears in the Nashville Christian Advocate. Last week we gave notice of the meeting of a colored Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, to be held at Hazlehurst on the 18th of December next, as directed by the Rev. Thomas Taylor, superintendent of the colored work in the bounds of the Mississippi, Louisiana and other conferences.

This letter of the bishop will be read by all our people with much interest. The religious and political condition of the colored population of the South is worthy the most serious and patient consideration of our wisest and best citizens. This mass of colored people must not be sacrificed to the mania of New England abolitionism; which will be the case if they are left to the exclusive control of Northern politicians and preachers. The negro moving under the impulses of fanaticism will presently be transformed into a savage. He has receded already in many parts of the South into semi-barbarism. We know full well what the reconstruction of a State is, according to the Radical idea; and it is equally evident, by this time, what the policy of Northern churches is in the religious management of the colored man. It simply amounts to this: licensing everybody to exhort, turning all the exhorters into preachers, putting all the preachers in charge, and turning all the members loose generally. These meetings, of the most extravagant kind, filling the day and night with a droning noise, have prevailed for the last three years. In some instances colored men of good sense, both of the Southern Methodist, the African and the Zion Church, have been placed in charge of congregations; but this is the exception. Most of these preachings are confused roarings, interrupted every two minutes by a wave of singing response from the women, given with the regularity of a Greek chorus.

Here and there we have a showing of schools and intelligent guidance, but in the main the missionary white brother has been solicitous to make home returns of large accessions. The colored man on paper is as great as any man; and statistics made up of multitudes who join every time the door is open, but never give in the same name twice, have as great weight with Radical conferences, secretaries and politicians as if they were true, and as if every unit represented a living person.

It is difficult to decide which state of things is the more alarming just now as regards the negro, the religions or the political. His best friends must see that those who have used him for the accomplishment of their own ends are not yet done with him, and that under the pretense of philanthropy they are steadily driving him on to destruction. We have no desire to be destroyed ourselves, nor to see these colored people harmed, and we can not but think that in guarding the interests of the colored man we are at the same time defeating the wicked designs of the same philanthropists against ourselves.

BISHOP PAINE'S LETTER.

ABERDEEN, Miss., Sept. 18, 1868.

Several questions have been submitted to me, in view of the Memphis Colored Conference, to be held November 18, which, coming from intelligent and true friends of our church, I feel inclined to answer.

1. "Does the General Conference plan give authority to quarterly conferences to license, and annual conferences to ordain, negro preachers, who do not come up to the disciplinary requirement?"

The late General Conference adopted the policy of giving a separate organization to our colored membership; and authorized the bishops to form charges, districts, and annual conferences of colored members; and "where two or more annual conferences shall be formed, to advise and assist them in organizing a separate General Conference for themselves." Of course they must be licensed and ordained in order to carry out this plan; and as very few, if any, of them are prepared to stand the test of the literary and theological examination required of white candidates, it was "provided, that in the case of colored preachers the question, both as to time and qualifications, shall be left to the annual conferences." So there is no standard of disciplinary requirements prescribed as to them.

2. "What number of negro preachers in the Memphis Colored Conference can read and write?"

I suppose nearly all of them can read; and half, or more, can both read and write. The few who cannot read are, generally, old, well-tried, and of most approved character. Some have been licensed and ordained deacons, who are doubtless but poorly qualified; but the late Colored Conference resolved to raise the standard, and I trust they will do it.

3. "What number possess the qualifications required of a white applicant for the ministry in the same church?"

This question is answered above.

4. "Is a quarterly conference composed of black members competent to take charge of the property of the church?"

Our policy is not to make over to them any property of our church until they shall have formed themselves into a separate organization by General Conference action; until then the titles continue, as heretofore, in white trustees—the blacks having the use of it, as before the war.

As to my own views of what is best for all, I think they ought to have several annual conferences this fall; hold a General Conference next year; elect a bishop; organize a church, and set up for themselves—that it is our duty to advise and aid them in every practicable manner, and keep them as near to us as possible. I confess I have fears as to their administrative capabilities, but think the plan of our General Conference, which we are trying to carry out, is the most feasible one, and I trust will succeed. If it should fail, then will I despair of the black man, with the consolation, however, that many of them have gone to heaven through the instrumentality of our past labors, and that we have tried to do our whole duty to them in their new relation as freedmen.

Let us make the experiment in good faith, trusting in God; and let no friend and brother obstruct our efforts. We are acting upon the General Conference plan, and shall soon know the result.

GREENBACKS WELL INVESTED.—Whatever may be the political decision about the value of greenbacks, a dollar and a half of them cannot be better invested just now than in securing that most valuable and beautifully illustrated journal, adapted to the wants of every man, woman and child, in city, village or country—the American Agriculturist, so called because it was originally started, twenty-seven years ago, specially as a rural journal. It is now three times its former size, and is filled with highly useful, non political information for all classes—for the household, for the garden, for the orchard, and for the farm The hundreds of beautiful and instructive engravings are alone worth many times the cost, while its forty large pages contain a world of carefully prepared, practical instruction, including an excellent household department, and a very useful as well as pleasing department for children and youth. It is taken and read by at least seventy-five thousand people in cities and villages, and by as many more farmers, gardeners, fruit growers, etc. Probably nowhere else can one get so much that is really valuable for so little money. Now is the time to subscribe, for the publishers offer the balance of this year free, to all new subscribers now received for 1869. Four copies are supplied from now to the end of 1869 for $5. The number for October 1, just at hand, like its predecessors, is a superb paper. The publishers offer a large and valuable premium list to those securing clubs of subscribers. Address Orange Judd & Co., 245 Broadway, New York. Take our advice and try the paper for a year—or fourteen months now for the usual cost of a year.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

A letter, dated the 7th inst., from Rev. T. Y. Ramsay, presiding elder on the Columbus district, Mobile Conference, says: "The churches generally may be said to be in a prosperous condition—a good many conversions, and a considerable number have been added to the church. The most discouraging aspect is the finances. The preachers are working for almost nothing, yet the most of them labor with unabated zeal. The cotton crop is almost a failure; an average corn crop; a vast amount of sickness. I visited Bishop Paine a few days ago and found him much improved in health."

Also, a letter from the Rev. R. A. Timmons, of the Montgomery Conference, dated the 6th instant:

TALLASSEE, Ala., Oct. 6, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: Two rounds more and I will have completed my second year's labor on Tallassee circuit, consisting of seven appointments. And I think I have been more successful this than last year. During this year one hundred and three persons have professed religion and joined the church. We have had a revival at every appointment on the work; and I find a large majority of the members more active than formerly. The Wetumpka district meeting was held at Tallassee, embracing the third Sunday in August, and good to the people of this community has been the result of the meeting. Our brethren who were here, and especially those who preached during the meeting, have left behind them a saving influence. Since that meeting I have baptized and received into the church, at this place, twenty-one persons. Bishop Wightman's sermon on Sunday morning was productive of good, for I have just learned that it was blessed to the awakening of two souls. They have since been converted and joined the church. A great many of our people in this region of country never saw a Methodist bishop before. They were all pleased with Bishop Wightman, and would like if episcopal visits could be more frequent.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

That old and well known commission merchant, R. L. Walker, has a card in this number of the ADVOCATE Planters can rely upon him in any business they may entrust to his care.

Alfred H. Pierson is personally known to us, and we take pleasure in calling attention to his card. He is found at 95 and 97 Gravier street. He is almost infallible, in the order department especially. Energy, experience and integrity all assure that his patrons will receive satisfaction.

J. H. Massey is an old friend of many years, and well known to many of our readers. It will be seen from his card, in our paper, that he has formed business relations with the house of McShea & Value, No. 98 Canal street, New Orleans. There his many friends and former customers will be glad to find him.

Blackman's music store, No. 164 Canal street, is advertised this week in the ADVOCATE. Those of our readers needing musical instruments will, of course, examine his stock. It would be unreasonable to do otherwise, when they consider the long reputation of the house.

We are reminded of the approach of winter, and of the time when cheerful fires will be needed, by the card of W. G. Coyle & Co., which appears this week. These gentlemen deal most extensively in coal—every kind of coal, any quantity of it—on most reasonable terms. We warmly recommend the firm to all. They guarantee satisfaction in quality and measure.

The card of D. J. Wasson tells our readers where to find a good builder—a wise master builder—viz.: at office 254 Carondelet street, and at carpenters' works 188 and 190 Delord street. That unique and splendid specimen of architectural success, recently erected on Calliope street, between St. Charles and Prytania, is his work, and sufficiently declares his skill.

GRACE is to the body what good sense is to the mind.

THE STATUS HOPEFUL.

A few weeks ago our friends returning from the North, or writing, gave rather depressing views of the public sentiment of the Northern people. The chances of a change in the government were represented as doubtful. We are glad to state that the latest testimony is very encouraging. Changes are going on in Indiana and all over the North with great rapidity. The tax question promises to be the decisive one. The public debt would require for its payment two dollars from every human being, man, woman and child, in Africa, Asia, Europe, Australia and Polynesia. The continuance of the Radical party in power will increase this immense burden by eight hundred millions of dollars. Having paid fifteen hundred millions in taxes since the close of the war, without reducing the debt one cent, they now despair of ever liquidating it unless some new policy can be introduced into the management of public affairs.

Nor are they quite ready to make the colored man of the South equal in the United States Senate to the entire representation of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Iowa, Wisconsin, Minnesota and Missouri. They may not love us, but they do love themselves; and they are not willing to gratify the pure humanitarians of the abolition school by placing the negro politically further above themselves than he can possibly be above us. The vote of one negro in Louisiana is something more than the vote of one white man in Louisiana, but it is equal to that of twelve white men in New York. No sane man wishes to bite himself.

The Pacific Railroad Approaching Completion.

The rails have been laid across the two great mountain ranges of the continent—the Rocky mountains and the Sierra Nevadas—and are being rapidly pushed onward along the intervening valleys. Many persons imagined, when the Pacific railroad was projected, that it would halt at the mountain barriers. The result has been that the corporations entrusted with its construction have redoubled their energies as the work went on. Twelve hundred miles of the route between Omaha and Sacramento are made by the locomotive, and the gap of about five hundred miles between the eastern and western portions will be further reduced by two hundred and fifty miles before January. Verily, this is marvellous progress, and the overland railroad is no longer a thing of hope and conjecture—it is almost an assured success.

The Central Pacific Railroad Company, who have in hand the Pacific half of the line, have built more than two hundred miles since the first of July last, and have one hundred miles graded in advance of their track. The growing confidence of the community in this road is shown by the demand for the first mortgage gold bonds issued thereupon, which were two years ago offered at ninety-five, are now selling at one hundred and three and interest, in currency, and may go higher shortly. There is, we are informed, a probability that the remainder of the loan will be disposed of within a short time. Capitalists and others interested in such matters can learn the particulars and foundation of the bonds by reference to the advertisement of the financial agents, Messrs. Fisk & Hatch, of New York city, elsewhere in this issue.

RED RIVER OUTBREAK.—We copy as follows from the Bossier Banner of the 3d:

Just a few miles above Shreveport on Red river, and in this parish, a robbery, attended with considerable maltreatment, was committed about the 28th ultimo, by several freedmen, on a citizen of Columbia county, Arkansas. A considerable body of white men from that county came down a few days ago to investigate the matter, and to arrest the guilty parties. But previous to their arrival a party of freedmen, belonging to the band undoubtedly that committed the robbery, arrested Messrs. James Brownlee and Beverly Ogden, who, it seems, had been instrumental in releasing the person who had been robbed.

Immediately after the arrest, and in cold blood, the negroes began to shoot their unresisting prisoners, and after each had been shot four or five times, left them to die. Ogden died in a few hours, but Brownlee, at last account, still lingers without any hope. Runners were sent to Shreveport and out into the country immediately by the neighbors, for assistance. From Shreveport many citizens, and the military there to-cated, repaired to the scene of the outrage, and found some three hundred negroes bandod together.—Skirmishing took place between advanced parties, resulting in the killing of several freedmen. But when the United States military arrived in sight, the large band of negroes dispersed, and have not been since found.

The laborers of Griswold's plantation, the Shady Grove and Gold Point places, and of M. Baer's place, have deserted their homes, and are supposed, therefore, to be the rioting party. We learn that the United States troops will camp at Benton until the troubles cease, which perhaps has already happened.

We hope to be able to give full particulars in our next, and would be thankful to any one to set us right in any point wherein we may be mistaken.

We are also pained to learn that Mr. W. H. Thompson has probably been killed.

James Brownlee was a young man of excellent character—not over twenty years of age.—Ed.

The cattle plague has appeared in Kentucky, and Governor Stevenson, on the 2d instant, issued a proclamation forbidding the importation of cattle for the next sixty days from any State or locality where the disease is prevalent.

SYNOPSIS OF CHARTER.

The plan proposed by the Mutual Aid and Benevolent Life Insurance Association is as follows:

1. Each person, upon enrolling himself or herself as a member, shall pay into the Treasury a membership fee, if between the ages of

16 to 30, inclusive, the sum of	$10 00
31 to 40, inclusive, the sum of	15 00
41 to 50, inclusive, the sum of	20 00
51 to 60, inclusive, the sum of	25 00

which payment constitutes him or her a life member.

2. A Life Insurance Policy is issued for a sum equal to one dollar for each enrolled member appearing on the books of the Association, at the decease of said member.

But in no event shall the amount paid on said policy exceed $5,000.

3. On the death of any member an assessment is made upon each policy holder for one dollar and twenty-five cents, payable at the office of the Association, within thirty days after notification thereof, by publication in one daily newspaper published in the city of New Orleans, in English and one in French, for five consecutive days, and if the policy holder resides out of New Orleans he shall be notified in writing.

4. Should the number of members exceed five thousand, the assessment of $1 25 will be reduced in proportion to the number of members exceeding five thousand.

5. Should any member fail to pay the assessment in the time specified, he forfeits all previous payments or credits.

6. All accumulations from whatever source, such as forfeitures, interest, etc., shall be credited upon the books of the Association to the members pro rata, to be withdrawn in lieu of assessments. oct17 1y

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

GOLD BONDS OF THE
CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

A limited quantity of the THIRTY-YEAR SIX PER CENT. FIRST MORTGAGE BONDS of the Central Pacific Railroad Company are offered to investors, for the present, at

103 Per Cent. and Accrued Interest,
IN CURRENCY.

These Bonds are secured by a Trust Deed upon the most important link of the great Inter-Oceanic Railroad, two-thirds of which is already built, at a cost of nearly

ONE HUNDRED MILLIONS,

and which enjoys already a self-sustaining way traffic. The whole line of continuous rail between will be completed by July next, when an immense through business will undoubtedly follow. More than Twelve Hundred Miles of the distance between the Missouri river and the Pacific ocean are already traversed by the locomotive; and it is probable that three hundred miles additional will be completed during the current year. The future of this Line, therefore, is unusually promising.

NEW YORK AND SAN FRANCISCO

The Central Pacific Railroad Company

receives from the United States Government about ten millions of acres of

THE PUBLIC LANDS,

situated along the line of their Road; also a Subsidy Loan of UNITED STATES SIX PER CENT. BONDS, averaging $35,000 per mile, as fast as the sections of twenty miles are completed.—They have received, in addition, important grants from the State and cities of California, worth more than $3,000,000 in Gold. The proceeds of these Lands, Bonds, Capital Stock, Subscriptions, Subventions and Net Earnings are invested in the enterprise, to which is added the amount realized from First Mortgage Bonds. These latter have

THE FIRST LIEN UPON THE WHOLE PROPERTY,

and are issued to the same amount only as the Government advances, or to the extent of about one-third the cost value of the Road, equipment, etc., etc.

The Cash Resources are abundant for the completion of the work, and the net earnings, from the way traffic upon three hundred and twenty-five miles now open for business, are

MORE THAN DOUBLE THE CURRENT INTEREST LIABILITIES.

Besides a mileage upon all through business, this Road, having the best lands for settlement, the most productive mines, the nearest markets, and being exempt from competition, will always command large revenues, which are wholly in Coin.

Two-thirds of the entire Loan is already marketed, and, judging by past experience, the Loan will soon be closed. Investors who desire an unusually safe, reliable and profitable security would do well to purchase before the Bonds are all taken.

☞ The Company reserve the right to advance the price at any time; but all orders actually in transitu at the time of any such advance will be filled at the present price. At this time they pay

More than Eight Per Cent. upon the Investment,

and have, from National and State laws, guarantees superior to any other corporate securities now offered.

The First Mortgage Bonds are of $1,000 each, with semi-annual Gold Coupons attached, payable in July and January. Both INTEREST AND PRINCIPAL ARE MADE EXPRESSLY PAYABLE IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN. The back interest from July 1 is charged only at the currency rates.

We receive all classes of Government Bonds, at their full market rates, in exchange for the Central Pacific Railroad Bonds, thus enabling the holders to realize from five to ten per cent. profit and keep the principal of their investments equally secure, and receive the same rate of interest for a longer period.

Orders and inquiries will receive prompt attention. Information, descriptive pamphlets, etc., giving a full account of the organization, progress, business and prospects of the enterprise, furnished on application. Bonds sent by return Express at our cost.

Subscriptions Received by Banks and Bankers, Agents for the Loan.

☞ All descriptions of GOVERNMENT SECURITIES bought, sold or exchanged, at our office and by mail and telegraph, at market rates.

Accounts of Banks, Bankers and others received, and favorable arrangements made for desirable accounts.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

THE BABY'S KISS.

Sunbeams creeping through the maples
Flashed across the window pane,
Lighting up the darkened parlor
Like a shower of golden rain.

Baby May, her white hands softly
Folded in her mute surprise,
Sat upright upon the carpet—
Baby wonder in her eyes.

Soon the little hands unloosing,
Each essayed the toy to grasp,
But in vain—no shining substance
Found she in her tightened clasp.

Down she went upon the carpet,
Creeping softly round and round,
Making eager, restless movements,
And a cooing, baby sound.

Reaching now, and now bewildered
By her shining new found prize—
All the while the baby wonder
Beaming in her violet eyes.

Wearied with the vain endeavor,
Both the dimpled hands grew still,
But the bright eyes watched thin sunbeams
Flitting here and there at will.

Watched them as they danced about her,
Lighting up the carpet gray—
Then she softly stooped and—kissed them!
Darling, precious Baby May.

LOVING OTHERS BEST.

Away off in Edinburgh two gentlemen were standing at the door of a hotel one very cold day, when a little boy, with a poor, thin, blue face, his feet bare and red with the cold, and with nothing to cover him but a bundle of rags, came and said:

'Please, sir, buy some matches.'

'No, I don't want any,' the gentleman said.

'But they are only a penny a box,' the little fellow pleaded.

'Yes, but you see we do not want a box,' the gentleman said again.

'Then I will gie ye twa boxes for a penny,' the boy said, at last.

'And so, to get rid of him,' the gentleman who tells the story in an English paper, says, 'I bought a box. But then I found I had no change, so I said:

'I will buy a box to-morrow.'

'O! do buy them the nicht, if ye please,' the boy pleaded again. 'I will rin and get ye the change, for I am verra hungry.'

'So I gave him the shilling, and he started away; and I waited for him, but no boy came. Then I thought I had lost my shilling; but still there was that in the boy's face I trusted, and I did not like to think bad of him. Well, late in the evening a servant came and said a little boy wanted to see me. When he was brought in, I saw it was a smaller brother of the boy that got my shillling, but, if possible, still more ragged and poor and thin. He stood a moment diving into his rags, as if he were seeking something, and then said:

'Are ye the gentleman that bought the matches frae Sandie?'

'Yes.'

'Weel, then, here's four pence oot o' your shillin'. Sandie canna come; he's no weel. A cart ran over him and knocked him doon, and he lost his bonnet, and his matches, and your sevenpence; and both his legs are broken; and he's no weel at a', and the doctor says he'll dee. And that's all he can gie ye the noo,' putting the four pence down on the table; and then the poor child broke down into great sobs.

'So I fed the little man,' the gentleman goes on to say, 'and then I went with him to see Sandie. I found that the poor little things lived with a wretched, drunken step mother; their own father and mother were both dead. I found poor Sandie lying on a bundle of shavings. He knew me as soon as I came in, and said:

'I got the change, sir, and was coming back, and then the horse knocked me doon, and both my legs are broken. And O Renby, little Reuby! I am sure I am deein! and who'll take care o' ye, Reuby, when I am gane? What will ye do, Reuby?'

'I took the little sufferer's hand, and told him I would take care of Reuby. He understood me, and had just strength to look at me, as if he would thank me; then the light went out of his blue eyes, and in a moment

'He lay within the light of God,
Like a babe upon the breast;
Where the wicked cease from troubling,
And the weary are at rest.'

Children, listen! This poor little man lying on a bundle of shavings, dying and starving, was tender and trusty and true; and so God told the gentleman to take poor little friendless Renby and be a friend to him. And Sandie heard him say he would do it—just the last thing he ever did hear; and then, before I can tell you, the dark room, the bad step-mother, the bundle of shavings, the weary, broken little limbs, all faded away, and Sandie was among the angels.—Chicagoan.

A CHEERFUL FACE.—Carry the radiance of your soul in your face. Let the world have the benefit of it. Let your cheerfulness be felt for good wherever you are, and let your smiles be scattered like sunbeams, 'on the just as well as the unjust.' Such a disposition will yield you a rich reward, for its happy effects will come home to you and brighten your moments of thought.

Cheerfulness makes the mind clear, gives tone to thought, and adds grace and beauty to the countenance. Joubert says, 'When you give, give with joy and smiling.'

Smiles are little things, cheap articles, to be bought with so many blessings both to the giver and the receiver; pleasant little ripples to watch as we stand on the shore of every day life. They are our higher, better nature's responses to the emotions of the soul.

Let the children have the benefit of them: those little ones who need the sunshine of the heart to educate them, and would find level for their buoyant natures in the cheerful loving of those who lead them.

Let them not be kept from the middle-aged, who need the encouragement they bring.

Give your smiles also to the aged. They come to them like the quiet rain of summer, making fresh and verdant the long, weary paths of life. They look for them from you who are rejoicing in the fullness of life.

'Be gentle and indulgent to all. Love the true, the beautiful, the just, the holy.'

'THE WORST OF IT.'—'Do you want to buy any berries to-day?' said a poor little boy to me one afternoon.

I looked at the little fellow and saw that he was very poorly dressed. In his hand he held a large basket full of ripe raspberries.

I told him I should like some, and taking the basket from him, stepped into the house. He did not follow me.

'Why don't you come in and see if I measure your berries rightly?' said I. 'How do you know but I may cheat you, and take more than I agreed for?'

The boy looked up at me and smiled. 'I am not afraid,' said he, 'for you would get the worst of it, ma'am.'

'Get the worst of it!' I said. 'What do you mean?'

'Why, ma'am, I should only lose my berries, but you would be stealing. Don't you think that would be the worst for you?'

Let us think of this when we are tempted in any way to cheat another. How often do we hear persons pity any one who has had his property stolen from him. Yet, though a man lose all and keeps honest, he is rich indeed compared with the man who has robbed him.—Winning Words.

SCIENTIFIC.

DIAMONDS.

Many persons suppose that diamonds are only used in jewelry—for rings and other articles of personal adornments, and that they are really of no essential value in the practical arts. This is a mistaken notion; they are used for a great number of purposes in the arts. Thus, for cutting the glass in our windows into proper size, no other substance can equal it, and it is exclusively used for this purpose. A natural edge, or point, as it is called, is used for this work, and thousands of such are annually required in our glass factories. Diamond points are also employed for engraving on cornelians, amethysts and other brilliants, and for the finer cuttings on cameos and seals.

Being very hard, the diamond is also used in chronometers for the steps of pivots; and as it possesses high refractive with inferior dispersive power, and little longitudinal aberration, it has been successfully employed for the small deep lenses of single microscopes. The magnifying power of the diamond in proportion to that of plate glass, ground to a similar form, is as eight to three. For drawing minute lines on hard steel and glass, to make micrometers, there is no substitute for the diamond point. The rough diamond is called bort, and the points used for glass cutting are fragments of the borts.

Great care and skill are necessary in selecting the cutting points, because the diamond that cuts the glass the most successfully has the cutting edges of the crystal placed exactly at right angles to each other, and passing through a point or intersection made by the crossing of the edges; a polished diamond, however perfect may be its edges, when pressed upon the surface of the glass, splinters it with the slightest pressure; but with the natural diamond the most accurate lines are produced on glass, and their surfaces are so highly burnished that, if ruled close together, they decompose light and afford the most beautiful prismatic appearance—all the colors of the rainbow flashing from them as from the silvery interior of a pearl oyster shell.

Diamonds are also employed to drill points to perforate rubies, and bore holes in draw-plates for fine wire, and also for drilling in hard steel. The apparatus for boring rocks with diamonds was originally patented in France by Leschot in 1864, and was rendered practical by Pihet in 1866. The expense of excavating tunnels with a single machine of this kind, in hard rock, was found in France to be forty or fifty francs per cubic meter, which corresponds to $6 or $8 per cubic yard.

CAUSE OF PERIODIC FEVERS.

Since the time of Lancisci, an Italian writer who wrote at the beginning of the last century concerning the cause of periodic fevers, denominating the cause marshmiasm, the etiology of these diseases has engaged the attention of all celebrated pathologists and chemists up to the present time.

Yet, notwithstanding the learned researches of the most famous of these, the causation of these affections remained in doubt and uncertainty—more subtile than the perfumed odor of the rose, it constantly escaped the chemist's retort and the pathologist's microscope. But it seems left for the learned pathologists of the last half of the present century to fully elucidate the wonderful cause of this most wonderful and strange disease. And as the disease is so common to every household in this section of country, the writer hopes the following will be of more or less interest to the general reader, as well as to professional men.

A most remarkable paper on the cause of intermittent and remittent fevers has appeared from the pen of Dr. Salisbury, of Cleveland, Ohio. In this paper Dr. Salisbury claims to have ascertained that these fevers are caused by the introduction into the system of cells or spores, emanating from certain species of algoid plants, called palmellæ, which belong to the lowest known vegetable organism. To this species of plants he applied the generic name Gemiasm; signifying earth miasm; and he also calls them ague plants.

He bases his discoveries on the following facts: A microscopic examination of the salivary secretions and mucous expectorations in the morning of persons living in a malarious region showed cells of an algoid type, resembling strongly those of the palmellæ, to be the only constant bodies present, and these bodies were invariably absent whenever the mucous secretions were examined from persons residing above the summit plane of ague. These palmellæ cells were obtained by suspending plates of glass near broken ground, over night, in places whence malarious emanations were known to arise.

The so-called ague plants were invariably found in numerous localities in which intermittent fever prevailed, and in no instance were they found where this disease did not occur. Cakes of surface soil from a malarious locality, which were covered with the palmellæ, were carried to a high, hilly district, situated five miles from any malarious locality, where a case of ague had never been known to occur. These cakes were exposed on the sill of an opened second story window opening into the sleeping apartment of two young men. A plate of glass suspended over them during the night was found to be covered with palmelloid spores and cells. Both the young men had intermittent fever—one on the twelfth, and the other on the fourteenth day, no other member of the family being affected. The ague plants were found in the urine of persons affected with intermittent fever.

Prof. Austin Flint remarks in his valuable work on the practice of medicine that if this is substantiated it will form one of the most interesting, and, in a practical view, one of the most important events in the medical history of the present century. The theory of the cryptogamic origin of periodical fevers has been ably argued by some of the most celebrated pathologists of the present century.

NURNBERG VIOLET.—A patent has been taken out in France for a solid violet pigment, under the name of "Nurnberg violet," which is insoluble in water, and unaffected by acids. It is not precisely a novelty, but the directions given probably give rise to a finer color than those given several years ago by Barreswill. The inventor takes oxyd of manganese or chlorine residue and fuses it with phosphoric acid. The result is a violet mass, which he dissolves in ammonia or carbonate of ammonia, and then evaporates the solution until it becomes a pasty mass and ceases to swell up.

The beauty of the color is said to depend upon the proportion of phosphoric acid in the compound, and the inventor does not say how much is to be employed. He gives, however, an analysis of his product, which may serve as a guide to an experimenter: Ammonia, 6 21; oxyd of manganese, 28 39; phosphoric acid, 53 89; water, 10 75. If this color is bright and permanent, it will prove a valuable addition to our stock of pigments.

FARM AND GARDEN.

BARLEY.

The varieties of this grain are nearly all annuals, though some of them have been acclimated as a winter grain.

Barley was extensively cultivated by the ancients, and a liquor made from it was known to the Greeks and the Egyptians, as well as to the ancient Germans at a later period. It adapts itself more readily to different climates than any other grain, and acclimates as well in a warm latitude as in a cold one. The area in which it is cultivated is wider than of any other grain. In warm climates it is raised as food for animals, chiefly horses and mules, but at present it is cultivated more for brewing purposes than for all others. When the skin or pellicle is removed, and it is used as an article of food, it is called pot barley. When this is removed, and the grains rounded and polished, it is called pearl barley. Patent barley is a farina obtained by grinding pearl barley.

It is doubtful if more than one species of barley exist, and whether those described by botanists as distinct species are not really different varieties of the same species, resulting from long cultivation. There is no difference in the character of the grains, but is found only in the growth and shape of the heads. Of the two-rowed, the four-rowed and the six-rowed varieties, the four-rowed has a tendency to assume the six rowed form in rich soil.

Nor are the kinds known as the naked or Nepoul barley, in which the grain separates readily from the chaff, to be regarded as a distinct species. The four and six-rowed varieties are more productive than the two-rowed, but brewers say that the latter makes a finer quality of beer and ale, and therefore commands a higher price.

Nearly every part of the United States is well suited to the successful cultivation of barley, and the high price it brings in market—$2 50 per bushel—makes it a very profitable crop to farmers. It can be sown either as a spring or a winter crop. Corn ground, which fails to bring good crops of wheat of late years, can be cultivated in barley with reasonable certainty of a good crop. No crop will compensate for good tillage better than barley, and the better the soil is prepared the greater will be the yield.

The Nepoul or two-rowed, the Nonpareil and California six-rowed spring barley, will yield from fifty to sixty bushels per acre, and are of superior quality.

These varieties grow from three to five feet high, and can be cut by a reaper and bound in sheaves and shocked as readily as wheat.

Those farmers who have been disappointed or discouraged by the failure of their wheat crops, would find barley a profitable substitute.

SMALL FARMS.

The Norfolk Day Book says the public mind is being greatly exercised on the subject of small farms, and much good will, no doubt, grow out of it. The old idea of extensive farms found a grave with slavery, and from the want of sufficient help will spring an important change in all farming operations. Aside from the fact that small farms will increase the population, is the more important fact that a new system of agriculture will spring up which will eventually produce more on forty or fifty acres than was produced, under the old regime, by one hundred.

We are told that it is no uncommon thing for a Germam farmer to clothe, feed and educate his family upon the products of four or five acres. And this is done upon land no better than ours, nor are the prices so remunerative; but the fact is they understand the art of farming better than we do; a dense population forces them to pursue a system which husbands every resource, and makes every article pay. They reduce their system to science, and by a quick rotation of crops make one acre produce as much as twenty or thirty do in this country.

We have in our mind's eye an example in the high latitude of Massachusetts, in which a gentleman, who had pursued the German system, has in forty years amassed a fortune of $1,000,000 on a farm of twenty acres. He has pursued a regular and scientific course, by which, at all seasons of the year, in winter's cold and summer's heat, he has something green, or ripe, or ripening, and, of course, something always ready for market.

Just such a system must be adopted in this section, and then the land will be made to blossom as the rose, our population will increase, and our country be filled with a population of thrifty and independent people, who will add to the material wealth of the State.

IT is said there are forty-six Baptist churches in New York and Brooklyn.

PRESERVING FRUIT WITHOUT SUGAR.—We have received numerous applications for information about the modus operandi of putting up fruit so as to preserve it in a fresh state, without cooking, drying or packing in sugar. It is a business that cannot so well be done in families as in large manufactories, where everything is arranged for convenience; but still, with a little experience and careful attention, every family can save enough of the various fruits of the season to furnish their tables with a great delicacy during that portion of the year when they can get nothing of the kind.

The whole secret consists in expelling the air from bottles or cans, by heat, and then sealing up the contents hermetically. If the article to be preserved is peaches, select such as you would for sweetmeats, and pare and cut them so they can be put in the bottle, and you must do this with the least possible delay, or they will be colored by the atmosphere. Some persons who want them to retain their natural whiteness put them under water. When the bottle is full cork it tight and wire down the cork, with very little projecting above the glass. When you have bottles enough to fill a kettle, such as may be most convenient, put them in and boil with the water all around up to the nozzle, for about fifteen or twenty minutes, or until the bottle appears to be full of steam—the atmosphere having been forced out through the cork. As soon as the bottles are cool enough to handle, dip the corks in sealing-wax so as to cover them quite tight. An additional precaution is used by some in putting tin foil over the wax.

Another plan is to cook the fruit slightly in a kettle, and then put it in cans or bottles, and pour hot syrup of sugar in to fill up the interstices, and then cork and seal. The heat of the fruit and syrup answers to expel the air. But the less they are cooked, or sweetened, the more natural will be the taste, like fresh fruit, when opened. We have eaten peaches a year old that we could not tell from those sugared an hour before.

CLEANING UP THE GARDEN.—We have noticed, in the onion districts, that the best cultivators are exceedingly careful in cleaning up the land after the crop is matured. Not only are all the weeds gathered that have escaped the hoe in the cultivation of the crop, but the whole ground is raked over and not a weed left to mature its seeds. They find it pays in the labor it saves next year. It is partly on this account that onions are cultivated for years in succession upon the same land. It takes several years to get the weed and grass seeds out of the soil, and to give the crop the full benefit of the land. If the garden could have his thorough cleaning up, as fast as the crops are out of the way; it would make vegetables much cheaper. The peas are often out of the way in July, and the weeds have the ground for the rest of the season. The potatoes and early cabbage are gone in August, and the weeds reign till frost comes. If you must have a crop to induce tillage, put in turnips. These will always pay where there is a pig or cow on the premises. But, with or without cultivated crops, keep every corner of the garden clean.

WHERE IS YOUR BOY AT NIGHT?—The practice of allowing boys to spend their evenings in the streets is one of the most ruinous, dangerous and mischievous things possible. Nothing so speedily and surely marks their course downward. They acquire, under the cover of night, an unhealthy state of mind, vulgar and profane language, obscene practices, criminal sentiments and a lawless, riotous bearing. Indeed, it is in the streets, after nightfall, that boys generally acquire the education and the capacity for becoming rowdy, dissolute men. Parents, do you believe it? Will you not keep your children home of nights, and see that their home is made pleasant and profitable?

THE USE OF PEPPER.—Pepper is an almost universal condiment. Black pepper irritates and inflames the coatings of the stomach. Red pepper does not irritate, consequently it should be used instead of black pepper. It was known to the Romans, and has been used in the Indies from time immemorial, as it corrects that flatulence which attends the large use of vegetable food. Persons in health do not need any pepper in their food. But to those of weak and languid stomachs it is far more healthy to use cayenne pepper than any form of wine, brandy or beer that can be named, because it stimulates without the reaction of sleepiness or debility.

MAKE friends of none in whom you have not implicit confidence—whom you cannot trust in all places and at all seasons. The best friendship you can make is that which is based on those feelings which spring from the observance of sacred truths.

THE HOME MONTHLY, New Orleans, for 1867.

The HOME MONTHLY will contain forty-eight pages of reading matter, printed upon fine paper and in clear type, and will, from time to time, be accompanied by elegant steel-plate engravings. The subscription price will remain $3 per annum, or $1.50 for six months, invariably in advance. In order to build up a still larger circulation, we have concluded to offer the following

Liberal Inducements to Agents.

To any person sending us three yearly subscriptions, with nine dollars, we will send the MONTHLY six months, or allow them, if they prefer, to retain One Dollar and Twenty-five Cents of the amount.

To any person sending us six subscriptions, with eighteen dollars, ($18,) we will send the MONTHLY one year, or allow them to retain Two Dollars and Fifty Cents of the amount.

On amounts for subscription less than nine dollars, agents will be allowed to retain ten per cent.

Ministers, it is hoped, will act as agents, not so much from pecuniary considerations as from a laudable desire to assist in building up a home literature worthy of a place among the families of the South and on the center-tables of a Christian people.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as the means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

At Least Thirty per Cent, as Compared with any other Stove.

and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally known as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. Tenderments roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

For sale only by the undersigned.

In addition to the above, I also have on large and complete assortment of COOKING STOVES, comprising all of the leading Stoves of the day, equal to any offered in any other house in this city.

The next session of this institution begins the first Wednesday in October, and is divided into two terms.

TUITION.

Academic Department, per term.....$35 00
Preparatory Department, per term..... 30 00
Contingent fee, per term..... 2 50

A fee of $5 is charged those who attend the schools of Chem. and Nat. Phil.

Board, exclusive of washing and lights, $16 to $20 per month. By messing it can be obtained even cheaper than at these rates.

Sons of ministers of the Gospel in the regular work, and those studying for the ministry, are admitted free of tuition.

The whole expense for the scholastic year, including everything except books and clothing, will be $250, payable one-half at the opening of the session and the remainder on the 15th of February. If the student wishes to board in a private family it will be $280. This great reduction in the price of board and tuition will bring the advantages of the University within the reach of those whose limited means have heretofore placed the highest scholastic training beyond their reach, as well as secure the patronage of those who, on the score of economy, are sending their sons out of the State to be educated.

Especial attention is called to the fact that preparatory students are taught exclusively by the Faculty.

The Law School has been organized under the management of Hons. Judge Coleman and A. Bonners.

NEW PATENT PIANOS.

RAVEN & BACON, (established in 1829.)

Warerooms, Nos. 644 and 646 Broadway, NEW YORK.

Manufacturers of Piano Fortes, with the patent Combination Sounding-boards,

Patented August 14th, 1866.

This invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affects the sounding board, the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a pure liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. The sounding-board released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding-boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection, and its vibratory quality increased.

Our Pianos are first-class in every respect and purchasers will have not only our own guarantee as to their quality, but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument, obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

EAST ALABAMA MALE COLLEGE

AT AUBURN, ALA.

The Fall term of this Institution will open on the FIRST WEDNESDAY in SEPTEMBER next, and close on the 20th December. Besides the regular course of studies for graduation, large facilities are afforded for instruction in the Commercial and Agricultural branches. Separate schools for these branches, in connection with the College, were authorized at the last annual meeting of the Board of Trustees. A student not wishing to take either the regular or a partial literary course in the College, may confine himself to either of these Departments, and in a short time become qualified for business.

The Preparatory Department, with competent teachers, will be under the special supervision of the Faculty.

OBITUARIES.

DAVID HEITEN was born in Holland, February 28, 1805, emigrated to this country in 1847, and departed this life on the 25th day of August, 1868, just two years, to a day, after the death of his beloved wife.

Brother Heiten was a man of pure principles, strict integrity and deep piety.—Often did he lament the formal Christianity and outside show, while they "denied the power," of those whose ministrations he was obliged to attend in the absence of his own worship. His principles and integrity in these days, when, like the pure gold, they are at a high premium, were ever conspicuous, while hospitality, kind-heartedness and liberality, combined with great diligence in business, marked and recommended the man of God to all who knew him.

In the death of our friend we can only view the hand of Providence, in removing him, in the light of the husbandman gathering the ripened fruit—he was ready and was happy. He exhorted his children not to give him up as something that was lost. O that we all may, like him, be ripe and ready for glory when the time of reaping shall come. V.

Evangelische Apologie please copy.

Mrs. ANN ADAMS, consort of James Adams, formerly of Selma, Alabama, died of consumption, at their residence in Montevallo, Alabama, August 18, 1868. She was born in South Carolina in 1804. Her maiden name was Patterson—related, on her mother's side, to the Pickens family of that State, of whom was Governor Pickens. She removed with her parents to Georgia, thence to Tennessee, where, in her sixteenth year, she was married to Mr. G. Gurley. In 1821 they removed to Selma, Alabama, where he died in 1830, leaving her, with one daughter, now the wife of Dr. H. C. Backus—a distinguished physician of this place.

After living a widow four years she was married to Brother Adams, on the 31st of August, 1834. She had become the subject of God's saving grace and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church a few months previous to her second marriage; in which communion she continued a consistent, devotedly pious and useful member until the command was given, "Come up higher." She loved the church, and until prostrated by disease her seat in the house of God was never vacant. Her house was the preacher's home, not only those of her own church, but the minister of Christ, of whatever order, always met a hearty welcome, and his arrival was never inopportune. Though an invalid for nine years, her piety was of that peculiar type which beautifully illustrated the power of the Christian religion to dispel the gloom of affliction, and shed the sunlight of peace and cheerfulness around her. Therefore her society was sought alike by young and old. In her character were combined, in a remarkable degree, gentleness, patience, kindness, firmness, and an implicit reliance on the promises of God. It was the privilege of the writer to visit her often during her protracted illness, and her invariable testimony was, that "God's grace is sufficient," and that having sustained her through the pilgrimage of life, she could trust him "through the valley of the shadow of death." Though the summons was delayed, and she lingered long on the margin of the grave, she waited patiently God's appointed time, and when the call was given her spirit's cheerful response was: "Come, Lord Jesus, for thy servant waiteth."

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

ENTERPRISE, Miss., Sept. 20, 1868.

WHEREAS, It has pleased our heavenly Father to remove from our midst, from our Sunday school and Bible class at this place, ORAELLA VIRGINIA EDMONSON; be it therefore

Resolved, That in her death we have lost one of our good pupils and pleasant companions.

Resolved, That while we submit most humbly to this dispensation of Providence, yet as teachers and scholars we desire to bear testimony of our sorrow at her loss, and to tender to her distressed parents and brothers our sympathy.

Resolved, That as a tribute of respect to her memory we, her class, will wear the usual badge of mourning for four Sabbaths, and that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of the deceased, and also read before this Sunday school.

E. M. AVIRETT,
EUGENIA PRICE,
MARY LYERLY,
Committee.

Sister O. V. Edmonson was born November 6, 1852, and died August 30, 1868. In the early part of the present year she made a profession of religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South at this place. She died from home, at J. D. Lee's, in Jasper county, Mississippi, where she had went a short time before on a visit. She truly left a comfortable home on earth, where a father, a mother and brothers mourn because the lovely Oraella's voice is no more heard in their midst. But she has found a better home in that mansioned city above, where her voice is heard in sweeter notes and sweeter anthems than friends she left behind were ever permitted to hear. W. SPILLMAN.

Died, October 10, at her residence, Forest Home, Pike county, Mississippi, Mrs. C. M. DOWNER, aged sixty-six years.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

With an ample supply, an active demand, encouraging news, and fine weather, our leading staple has shown increased activity since our last issue. Several branches of wholesale business have also shown a fair degree of animation in meeting the country demand; but very little has been done in tobacco and only a moderate business in foreign sugars and molasses, while the movement in Western produce has been of inconsiderable extent, without any material variation in prices.

We have again to notice a continuance of fine weather, which we hope has extended throughout the country. The last accounts from the sugar districts indicate that the damage to the cane from the late storm will prove less than has been apprehended. Nothing new has transpired with regard to the cotton yield. In the meantime the necessities of both planters and factors stimulate the rapid movement of the crop to the delivery posts, and our receipts show a large increase over last year's.

The river has risen two inches since our last report, and is now six feet eight inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the 9th instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales..	9982
Lake.....	9
Mobile.....	926
Florida.....	3
Texas.....	33

We left the market, at the time of our last report, ruling at 21¾ to 22c. for Good Ordinary, 22¾ to 23c. for Low Middling, 23½ to 23¾c. for Middling, and 24c. for Strict Middling, since which, under the favorable accounts from Liverpool, the demand has been active and prices have advanced ¾c. per pound. On Saturday the movement commenced with considerable spirit, and, although the enhanced pretensions of factors subsequently compelled several foreign buyers to withdraw, yet the sales summed up 3,150 bales at an irregular advance of ¼ to ½c., Low Middling closing at 23 to 23½c. and Middling at 23¾ to 24c., even running lists being scarce and in request, and occasionally commanding a fraction more than outside figures. The supply, in fact, consisted mostly of Strict Good Ordinary to Strict Low Middling, and the finer qualities were so scarce that quotations for Good Middling were nominal. On Monday the demand continued fair, and although, in consequence of the encouraging tenor of the foreign news, factors were still more stringent in their pretensions, yet the business comprised 3,100 bales at a further improvement about equal to that realized on Saturday. In the latter part of the day the movement was materially checked by prices having advanced above the limits of several pending orders for Liverpool. On Tuesday the market opened with a fair demand for the North, but only a limited inquiry by foreign purchasers, the high pretensions of factors, who asked full prices in consequence of the favorable tenor of the Liverpool accounts, preventing the latter from coming forward. At a later hour, however, rates were ¼c. easier and the movement became more active, 2,200 bales changing hands, mostly on the basis of 23½ to 23¾c. for Low Middling.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 8,450 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 79,378 bales, against 15,356 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 78,811 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 16,989 bales to Great Britain, of 13,370 to France, and of 37 to other foreign ports.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, AT Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

ELEVENTH SESSION.—TERMS REDUCED.

The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first-rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar, etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.

SPECIAL CAUTIONS.

Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health.

A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket-money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.

It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

TERMS—Board and Tuition per session, $300.

PAYMENTS—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.

Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

NO CHANGE OF CANDIDATES.

The Times says: We have been furnished with a copy of the following dispatch, which was received in this city on Sunday. It derives particular significance from the fact that it is from Utica, New York, the home of Governor Seymour. It is known that Mr. Clarke is a personal friend of Governor Seymour.

UTICA, Oct. 17.—Thomas L. Macon, New Orleans: No change of front has been contemplated. No reason for change. "Up, boys, and at 'em!"

THOMAS ALLEN CLARKE.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 17.—Forty-nine counties official, and the balance of the State reported, give the Radicals ten thousand majority.

NEW YORK, Oct. 18.—Accounts from all parts of the North represent great excitement over the proposition to remodel the Democratic ticket, and a determination to stand by Seymour and Blair.

The reaction has helped the Democracy.

I have the very best reason for saying that after this week the Democratic party will have better prospects of success than at any time during the canvass.—New Orleans Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 19.—Colfax says that persons with whom he is in communication agree that there is no necessity for a session on the tenth of November.

Governor Orr, of South Carolina, is here.

Voorhees' and Julian's seats, from Indiana, will be contested.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 19.—The following dispatch has been received from the Governor of Arkansas:

"LITTLE ROCK, ARK., Oct. 17, 1868.

"J. M. Schofield, Secretary of War:

"The arms purchased for the State were destroyed by an armed band of men in the Mississippi river. The boat was captured and the arms thrown overboard. From facts in my possession, I am satisfied that armed resistance to the laws is contemplated, in which event the United States forces here would be entirely inadequate to preserve order.

"POWELL CLAYTON,
"Governor of Arkansas."

President Johnson is reported as having said, when the above matter was presented to him, that, if the parties had contemplated armed resistance they would not have destroyed the arms and ammunition on the Hesper.

FRANKLIN, LA., Oct 19.—The office of the Attakapas Register was entered last night by unknown parties, the press destroyed and type scattered over the streets. The editor and printer left for New Orleans this morning on board the Peerless.

The citizens of Franklin and the surrounding country are doing all in their power to preserve order.

The negroes have made some very bold threats, but they have not as yet made any attempt to carry them into execution. The town and parish are perfectly quiet at present, so far as we have been able to ascertain.

RALEIGH, Oct. 19.—Both political parties are vigorously canvassing. The Republicans are jubilant over Northern elections; the Democrats disappointed but determined, and are confident of carrying the State. Both parties have full electoral and congressional tickets in the field.

The Republican electoral ticket has Byron Loflin, of New York, and A. H. Galloway, a negro or mulatto, on it—the rest are native whites. The Democratic electors are all native whites, and all enfranchised.

SPAIN.

MADRID, Oct. 19.—Prim disclaims any pretentions to the crown. Hale has frequent interviews with Prim and Serrano.

MADRID, Oct. 19.—The junta has issued an address regarding the future government. The cortes must decide whether the form of government shall be republican or monarchical. Olozaga, Serrano and Tapeste have declared for a monarchy, but favor the submission of the question to universal suffrage.

NEWARK, N. J., Oct. 21.—The New and Old School Presbyterian synods are in session here. They had a union prayer meeting to-night. Several eminent Presbyterians of both schools spoke warmly of the advantages following the healing of past differences. In the New School synod this afternoon the home missions were discussed, especially referring to the freedmen of the South and the western districts opened by the Pacific railroad. The Old School synod adopted resolutions favoring union.

EARTHQUAKE AT SAN FRANCISCO.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 21.—A heavy earthquake occurred at eight o'clock this morning, the motion being east and west. The damage is confined to the lower part of the city, below Montgomery street, among old buildings on made ground.

The custom house, which was badly shattered by the earthquake of 1865, is now considered unsafe, and the officials have removed to the Internal Revenue building.

Business in the lower part of the city is suspended, the streets are thronged and great excitement exists.

The parapet walls and chimneys of many buildings fell, causing some loss of life. The damage will not exceed one million.

The shock was severe at Oakland, damaging many buildings. The earth opened in several places, smelling sulphurous.

The court house at San Leandro was demolished, killing one person.

The shock was very severe at San Jose, and many buildings were damaged.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Oct. 22.—Heavy snow falling.

JEFFERSON PARISH.

There was a very large gathering of the most respectable citizens of the parish of Jefferson, last evening about seven o'clock, near the market house, in Jefferson City. Hon. B. M. Turnbull was enthusiastically called on to act as chairman. Mr. Turnbull tendered his thanks in an exceedingly neat and appropriate speech. He stated that the meeting was called not for any political purpose, but to adopt some course with regard to measures which had created a great deal of excitement, and to stamp the conduct of the officials of Jefferson City, both of the council and the police, with the approbation of the white people of the parish.

C. H. Parker and R. P. Fleming, Esqs., were called to act as secretaries. A committee of seven was appointed to draft resolutions. The chairman named on the committee, Dr. S. R. Chambers, E. R. Chevallie, Carter, Miller, John Ulmer, Bokenfohl, and another whose name we could not hear.

The committee repaired to the City Hall to draft the resolutions.

The committee then brought forward and read the following resolutions, the first series of which were from a majority of the committee and the second from the minority. The majority report was adopted by acclamation, and both reports were ordered to be published.

WHEREAS, We, the white people of the parish of Jefferson, in common with our fellow-citizens throughout the State of Louisiana, have patiently submitted to the dictates of every law, however iniquitous or unjust, that has emanated from any body of legislators having the least semblance of authority, hoping that by submission we might at least challenge the magnanimity of our oppressors, and wring justice from their unwilling hands; our motives have been misconstrued, our appeals have been disregarded, and our liberties trampled in the dust; and

WHEREAS, The present Legislature of the State of Louisiana (which has been foisted upon us by force and fraud) have persistently continued to assail our dearest rights, to disregard the great principles of American liberty, to insult us daily by the enactment of the most vindictive and abominable decrees, to appoint or insure the appointment of unworthy men to the highest offices in the State; and

WHEREAS, Among the many odious laws which the said Legislature has passed, that known as the Metropolitan Police bill stands unrivaled in audacity; and

WHEREAS, We, the white people of the parish of Jefferson, in mass meeting assembled, do pledge ourselves to protect our homes by resisting, by every means, the installation of D. C. Woodruff as the chief of police of the City of Jefferson, or the enforcement of the so-called Metropolitan Police bill.

And we hereby publicly inform the present Legislature that the people of Jefferson City, in mass meeting assembled, demand that these unparalleled attacks upon the happiness and liberties of the white people of Louisiana must cease from this time forward; that the said Legislature must at once repeal the unjust, the heinous laws which they have passed.

That the time has now arrived when forbearance is no longer a virtue; and further, that these are sentiments not of Jefferson City only, but that the heart of every true Louisianian beats responsive to them.—Crescent, September 18.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

SKETCH OF REV. THOMAS OWENS, LATE OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

By the solicitude of deeply interested friends, who wish to perpetuate the memory of the good and useful, I have undertaken to write a biographical sketch of one of the most lovely, interesting and useful ministers I have ever known. I regret my inability to write a life-like memoir of this old itinerant. It will be difficult to describe his peculiar characteristics in ordinary language, for he was an extraordinary man. But the attempt will be made. He was the son of Thomas and Frances Owens, and was born not far from Charleston, South Carolina, January 8, 1787. We calculate the date of his birth from data left by himself, the family record being lost. His parents brought him to the Natchez country when he was young, and settled in what afterwards became Jefferson county, Mississippi. Thomas was a peculiar youth. He had, as the gift of nature, unusual vivacity, and was full of fun and frolic. It was much deplored by his godly parents and friends that, in early manhood, this exuberance of a noble and generous nature was perverted to vicious purposes. He became addicted to profanity, Sabbath-breaking, occasional drunkenness and horse-racing.—When intoxicated he was rude and noisy. On one occasion, while riding an impromptu race near Selsertown, he was thrown from his horse with such violence on his face and breast that respiration was suspended, and had not his comrades come up in time to turn him out of the blood that had accumulated about his mouth and nose, he would, probably, never have breathed again. But in the midst of all his wickedness he could say from bitter experience: "The way of the transgressor is hard." He often felt the anguish of an awakened conscience, and the foreboding of coming retribution if he persisted in sin. In his twenty-fourth year he yielded to the gracious influences of the Holy Spirit on his heart, and became an earnest seeker of salvation from sin and wrath through the merits of him who died for all. As a preliminary step he determined to join the Methodist Episcopal Church—of which his parents were members—as a probationer for future membership. It was in 1810 that Rev. Miles Harper, after preaching at his regular week-day appointment at Spring Hill, opened the door of the church, when a lady—now the venerable widow of Rev. John C. Johnson, late of the Mississippi Conference, who still lives to tell the tale—went forward and united with the church, and was instantly followed by Thomas Owens. Many were the unfavorable predictions of his former associates in sin as to the probabilities of his stability in religion. But he had now passed the Rubicon, and both honor and interest urged him to live up to his church engagements. He became truly penitent, broken in heart and contrite in spirit, and wept and prayed much for the forgiveness of his sins. Miles Harper, his pastor, appointed a sacramental meeting, and exhorted the membership to seek a preparation of heart for the holy communion. Thomas' heart was melted and subdued under a sense of his sins and guilt. He feared to stay away from the sacrament, and yet shuddered at what might be the consequence of participating unworthily. In this fearful dilemma he determined to throw himself on the mercy of God, as manifested in the death of his Son for guilty sinners, and venture forward. He kneeled at the communion altar, and the minister began to repeat: "Take and eat this in remembrance that Christ died for thee," when his whole being yielded to God, and his faith took hold of Christ as a present, willing and all sufficient Saviour. His burden of sin and guilt was gone. The darkness and despondency of unbelief were superseded by assuring faith, and he was a new creature in Christ Jesus.

In accordance with the prevailing practice of those days the brethren now called on him to take an active part in their weekly class and prayer meetings, and, though he proceeded with much diffidence and self-distrust, he soon began to develop those extraordinary talents which rendered him so conspicuous in all after life. Without seeming to know, or even think, that he was destined to become a preacher, he threw his whole being into the work of soul-saving, and became enthusiastic with religious excitement. His field of operations was soon extended, and people flocked from every quarter to the meetings of little Tommie Owens, as he was generally called; while day and night, with accents loud and shrill, he shouted, "To the battle." His brethren urged him to make appointments to preach. "No," said he, "I cannot, but I will make appointments to hold meeting." Many were awakened and converted through his instrumentality, and he got about eighty persons to pledge themselves for church membership as soon as the preacher in charge could properly admit them. But the time had come for him to enter upon the great business of his life, and at an informal meeting held by the preachers of the Tennessee Conference, who labored south of the Indian nations, at the house of Rev. Newit Vick, in Jefferson county, Mississippi territory, on the first of November, 1813, he was admitted into the traveling connection. He was already so worn and wasted by the labors of the great revival through which he had passed, that none thought he could endure the exposure, travel and labor on our large circuits many years; but in this they were mistaken. He had uncommon elasticity and powers of endurance. He was effective seventeen years, four of which he traveled in Alabama, four in Louisiana, west of the Mississippi river, and eleven in various parts of Mississippi. He was most willingly retained by his brethren on the superannuated list for thirty-eight years—not that he was either unable or unwilling to labor in the ministry all that time—for he often rendered effective and useful service as a minister—but, in addition to his advanced age and waning strength, his domestic circumstances were often such as to hinder him from taking regular work. He lived unmarried until he was forty-one years old, not because he preferred a single life, but because he could not see how he could continue to render effective service in the itinerancy with a family on his hands, situated as our Conference then was. He gloried in being "a bishop's man—ready to go anywhere."

On the eighth of January, 1828, he was happily united in marriage with Mrs. Rebecca Calvit, of Claiborne county, Mississippi—a lady every way qualified, by education, active piety and worldly competency, to be the wife of the labor-worn itinerant. After his permanent settlement at Rocky Spring he deprecated the thought of being considered a mere hanger on to the Conference, and several times intimated a willingness to locate, but his co-laborers told him promptly they would never vote him a location. God, in his good providence, had given them their Tommie Owens—they were happy in the enjoyment of the gift, and would never yield it up except to the original donor. He submitted, saying he would never ask a location again.

He was a universal favorite with the older members of the Mississippi Conference, and was the life and soul and general pacificator of our annual sessions. The older bishops loved him as a son, and, on account of his genial temper and spontaneous repartee, allowed him to be a sort of privileged character in the Conference room. He, in turn, looked on them with the greatest respect and veneration. If he had been asked, in the close of life, who was the best and greatest bishop he ever saw, he would doubtless have answered, Robert R. Roberts. All who have succeeded Thomas Owens in his different fields of ministerial labor know what a deep and lasting impression his preaching and kindred exercises made on the minds of all classes. And yet he was not a man of more than ordinary literary attainments, theological acumen or oratorical resources. Apart from "the demonstration and power of the spirit" with which he preached, it is almost impossible to describe, in ordinary language, the apparent causes of his extraordinary control over the feelings and actions of his auditors. He had learned, by experience and practical observation, all the leading avenues to the human heart, and how to touch every chord of human sympathy. He knew how to awaken the fears and excite the hopes of all classes. He knew when to sum up what had been said and felt, and make his final charge. His native wit and genius cropped out everywhere. He said what other men said, and preached the same doctrines his brethren preached, but all was said and preached in his own peculiar and attractive style. His genial face, his gestures, his words, his apt illustrations, and even the indescribable intonations of his voice, were all his own. His elegant home at Rocky Spring was the abode of hospitality. He and Sister Owens having no children, their ample means were employed in doing good until they were swept away by the late war. Being right in the track of Grant's devastating army, they had but little left after he passed away.

Brother Owens had been manifestly declining for several years. While still able to move slowly about, he sometimes declined going to church because his younger brethren in the ministry would persist in calling on him to perform services he no longer felt able to render.

His disease was finally developed as a cancer of the stomach, from which he suffered immensely. Some apprehensions being expressed that he might die suddenly and alone some day, he calmly replied that he had no fears as to when or where he might die. His only business was to be ready when the Master called for him. A short time before he died Rev. C. T. French, one of his pastors, asked him to make a distinct statement of his future prospects, for the satisfaction of his absent brethren. His characteristic reply was: "My way to heaven is as strait as a line; but I have not strength to talk about it." When called upon, as one of his oldest colleagues, to preach his funeral, my thoughts at once turned heavenward, and Heaven was my theme. The silent tears which fell in that vast audience showed how they loved their departed patriarch, who had lived forty years in their vicinity. He died on the first of July, 1868. He was eighty-one and a half years old. He had been a member of the church fifty-eight years, and a preacher fifty-five years. But few men of his talents have ever accomplished a similar amount of good.

Assassination in Saint Mary Parish.

SHERIFF POPE AND JUDGE CHASE KILLED.

A dispatch, dated Franklin, October 18, contains the startling intelligence that the sheriff and judge of that parish have been assassinated. We copy as follows:

Last night, the seventeenth, at about half past eight, the citizens of Franklin were startled by some eight or ten pistol shots fired in rapid succession at O'Neill's hotel. The crowd gathered to ascertain the cause, when, after a few moments, it was announced that Henry Pope, Radical sheriff elect, had been killed. It seems that Pope was on the gallery near his room, when several men advanced upon him and commenced firing. Before the citizens could reach the scene, which took place in a rear building, the perpetrators had made their escape, and by many, it is said, mounted their horses and went, full speed, down the road; and although some of them were seen, it was impossible to identify any one. The citizens, ignorant of the cause which led to this, and apprehensive of an outbreak, immediately organized a heavy guard for the town, who patrolled until morning.

In their rounds, passing between the bayou and the hotel, on what might be called Water street, another body was found. A physician was immediately sent for to ascertain whether or not life was extinct. The surgeon pronounced him dead. The body proved to be that of Valentine Chase, lately elected parish judge. A guard was placed over his body to protect it until the coroner should take the matter in hand. At an early hour this officer was on the ground, and his jury having been summoned, an investigation was gone into, but no facts bearing on the case were elicited, nothing to give rise to any suspicion as to who were the actors in this terrible tragedy. At present the town is quiet, and although the blacks are here in considerable numbers, there are no evidences of any feeling which would cause apprehension; still, all are on their guard, and ready, at a moment's notice, to quell any violence.

LATEST POLITICAL NEWS.

We give a few extracts upon important points.

1. The World's proposition was unauthorized:

The World's editors are soundly berated for assuming the authority to control the party in a matter so vital to its interests.—Washington Cor. New Orleans Times.

2. It is probable that the gold of Wall street has been freely used upon Democratic headquarters:

It is asserted in New York that Belmont is opposed to the Democratic tenet, as set forth in their platform, and that he desires the defeat of Seymour and Blair to further the interests of the bondholders. They also say Belmont, who goes to Europe to-morrow, is taking refuge from his just responsibility, and by getting far away he avoids taking an active part in the canvass.—Washington Cor. New Orleans Times, September 20.

3. The system of "colonizing," if used in carrying Pennsylvania, cannot be used in a general election coming off on the same day and at the same hour:

We have, moreover, good reason to believe that both Pennsylvania and Indiana were carried for the Republicans by means which cannot be repeated at the Presidential election, and which have no connection with the character or direction of public opinion. In any event, the Democracy rely on the votes of New York, Connecticut, New Jersey, Maryland, Delaware, Kentucky, Missouri, California, Oregon and Nevada. These States have eighty-nine votes, which, added to the seventy votes of the ten Southern States, would give Seymour one hundred and fifty-nine votes, or just a majority of the electoral college.—Louisiana Democratic Address.

4. There must have been immense gains for the Democracy, as the majority of the Republicans in Pennsylvania has been reduced to ten thousand, and that of Indiana to five hundred, so that a gain of only six hundred votes is required to carry the Presidential election. It is said that millions on millions of dollars were paid for the recent victories in these two States. The difficulty of getting everybody out in a State election is an item in the calculation of the final result.

5. The Radicals at the North indicate much uneasiness at the result of the State elections. The overwhelming majorities of 1864 have melted away to a thin surplus.

Butler, in a recent speech, warned his hearers that if any attempt be made to carry out the Democratic policy in the reconstructed States bayonets will be crossed.

6. Such fears are unfounded. General Butler is mistaken.

The Democratic party can proudly point to every page of its record. It has never violated a single obligation of the fundamental compact by which these United States entered into the family of nations. Its watchword, in peace as in war, has been, and will always be, the Union, the Constitution and the laws, and no man, nor set of men, however high they might be placed by the suffrages of their fellow-citizens, can expect to receive the support of this great conservative party in any revolutionary attempt against established laws.

The ballot box and the supreme will of the American people are the only means of redress to which we look.—National Democratic Committee.

If the people of the North wish to build up a strong and lasting Union, let them be magnanimous and generous to the South; let them confide more fully than they have done to the honor of our people, and they will meet a cordial and heartfelt response.—Wade Hampton.

BILL AND JOE.

BY OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

Come, dear old comrade, you and I
Will steal an hour from days gone by—
The shining days when life was new,
And all was bright with morning dew—
The lusty days of long ago,
When you were Bill and I was Joe.

Your name may flaunt a titled trail;
Proud as a cockerel's rainbow tail;
And mine as brief appendix wear
As Tam O'Shanter's luckless mare;
To-day, old friend, remember still
That I am Joe and you are Bill.

You've won the great world's envied prize,
And grand you look in people's eyes,
With H O N. and LL. D.
In big brave letters, fair to see—
Your list, old fellow! off they go!—
How are you, Bill? How are you, Joe?

You've worn the judge's ermined robe;
You've taught your name to half the globe;
You've sung mankind a deathless strain;
You've made the dead past live again;
The world may call you what they will,
But you and I are Joe and Bill.

The chafing young folks stare and say,
"See those old buffers, bent and gray—
They talk like fellows in their teens!
Mad, poor old boys! That's what it means"—
And shake their heads; they little know
The throbbing hearts of Bill and Joe!—

How Bill forgets his hour of pride,
While Joe sits smiling at his side;
How Joe, in spite of time's disguise,
Finds the old schoolmate in his eyes—
Those calm, stern eyes, that melt and fill
As Joe looks fondly up at Bill.

Ah, pensive scholar, what is fame?
A fitful tongue of leaping flame;
A giddy whirlwind's fickle gust,
That lifts a pinch of mortal dust;
A few swift years, and who can show
Which dust was Bill and which was Joe!

The weary idol takes his stand,
Holds out his bruised and aching hand,
While gaping thousands come and go—
How vain it seems, this empty show!
'Till all at once his pulses thrill—
'Tis poor old Joe's "God bless you, Bill!"

And shall we breathe in happier spheres
The names that pleased our mortal ears,
In some sweet lull of harp and song
For earth-born spirits none too long,
Just whispering of the world be'ow
Where this was Bill and that was Joe?

No matter; while our home is here
No sounding name is half so dear;
When fades at length our lingering day,
Who cares what pompous tombstones say?
Read on the hearts that love us still,
Hic jacet Joe—Hic jacet Bill.

RELIGIOUS TENDENCIES AMONG THE NEGROES.

MR. EDITOR: To my mind there are few subjects of graver importance just now than the above. It is one that affects materially the religious, social and political well-being of both races. The nation is shaken to its very foundations upon the political bearings of the negro question. Into that field of strife I will not enter. But there is one phase of the question that belongs to the church. To this she ought to give more attention. We hear it stated, in general terms, in reports of committees, that in some localities the negroes have set up for themselves ecclesiastical organizations, while in others they still maintain their connection with the churches to which they have all the while belonged, and that is about all that is said. But what of their religious tendencies? I do not mean their ecclesiastical affinities, but the question has reference to the development of religious character among them.

I wish to group together such facts as will show this within the sphere of my observation. I have been watching these tendencies ever since they were thrust into what we believe to be their present abnormal condition.—I claim to be a friend to the negro race. When they were slaves I devoted as much of my time and means to evangelize them as my circumstances would admit of. Since they have become free I have preached to them whenever they have shown a willingness to hear me. They have now been free more than three years, and the question we start is: Are they in a better condition religiously than when slaves, or not?—are they tending to a higher development of the spirit and practice of Christianity, or are they retrograding? This question can be answered by facts alone. I will give the following as the result of my observation:

1. There is certainly a great religious movement among the colored people in all this country. Their custom is to begin their services at their places of worship early on Sabbath morning, and continue them nearly or quite all day. They have weekly prayer meetings on almost every plantation, and continue them nearly all night. Large numbers are flocking into the church. At one of my colored churches I have received about one hundred and twenty members this year. This statement, standing alone, would argue well.

2. There is a general disposition among them to preach. In some localities the women have caught the preaching spirit. They preach (?) everywhere, without license from any church, except in a few instances. As a rule they regard but little the intelligence or moral character of their self-constituted preachers. Many of them are known to be grossly ignorant, and given to drunkenness, profanity, adultery, etc. Such men seem to have a wider influence among them than the more intelligent and moral. Some of these preachers boldly discard the Bible, declare it to be false, and claim to be directly inspired.

3. Led by such men, it might be expected that there would be much extravagance and fanaticism among them. They have dreams, go into trances, see visions, hear voices, are carried to heaven and hell, whence they come back to startle the neighborhood with messages and revelations from those unseen worlds. Such phenomena are connected with almost every one's religious experience.

4. In many localities their religious movements are connected with the most abominable practices. This is especially true where they are but little in contact with the whites. Let me give instances by way of illustration:

A gentleman, whose veracity I have no right to doubt, told me, the other day, that he not long since went, an unobserved observer, to a night meeting on his plantation. After singing and praying and shouting some time around a fire in the yard of one of their houses, they placed one of their number in a chair, and sung and danced around him, calling him God almighty! This, I suppose, was in imitation of what they conceived to be angelic worship.

Near my work, in Wilcox county, is a large scope of country where there is a large negro population, and but few whites.—Among the former they have what they call the "holy society." This society, composed of both sexes, is very select in its membership, meets privately at night, and has its judges, who decide upon the eligibility of applicants for membership. When they meet, after going through a religious exercise, of which shouting and dancing form an essential part, they extinguish the lights. This is the privilege of the holy alone, who, like David and Solomon, whose examples they plead, are God's special favorites. I have heard of this holy society in several localities.

I could multiply instances of the grossest corruption in connection with this widespread religious movement, but the heart sickens at such recitals. To all observing minds its tendency is to destroy what evangelical piety remains among them, and stamp the name of religion upon the most debasing practices. I know of but one colored community of which this may not be said, and this exception grows out of the fact that a few intelligent leaders among them see and deplore this tendency, and cleave to the whites as their only means of escape from the vortex of ruin.

A few years ago these people sat contented and happy under the instruction of our missionaries. They were rising rapidly in intelligence and piety. Now they are sinking into the lowest conceivable depths of ignorance and depravity. Their very religion moves them, with fearful velocity, down the descending scale. This is the first fruit of Northern philanthropy. Its crowning work is to be the incorporation of this corrupt mass of sensual semi-barbarism into the social life of the nation. To carry out its purpose it appeals to the negro's religious instincts, and tells him it is dangerous to receive the Gospel from the Southern white man. Instead of aiding us to arrest the fearful relapse of four millions of beings into barbarism, it appeals to their worst passions to bind them to its political juggernaut. What cares Northern philanthropy for the people of the South, white or black, so it may run its arms to the shoulder in the spoils of office?

What must we do—what can we do—to arrest the downward tendency of this race? It is a problem with which we are compelled to grapple, or woe betide us. My soul is stirred with the subject. The salvation of the negro race, as well as our own most vital interests, demands that something be done—more than is now being done—to save them, if possible, from their impending destiny.—Who will give us a clue?

NATCHEZ DISTRICT MEETING,

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

WOODVILLE, Miss., Oct. 6, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: The Natchez district conference met at Midway church, near Centreville, Wilkinson county, Mississippi, October 1.

Owing to inclement weather and prevailing sickness, the attendance was smaller than it would otherwise have been; but a goodly number were present to deliberate upon the interests of Zion, and to be refreshed by this delightful reunion.

Our faithful presiding elder, Rev. James A. Godfrey, was in the chair, presided with befitting dignity and discretion, and occasionally took an animated part in the discussion of subjects before the body. The blessing of God was realized in a refreshing season in answer to prayer at the opening of the conference, and throughout the deliberations the brethren seemed to have the fear of God and the good of his cause at heart.

The reports from the circuits exhibited in some respects an improved condition.

Committees on the following subjects had been appointed previous to the meeting:

1. On Financial Plan to Annual Conference.
2. Sabbath Schools.
3. Ministry to Children.
4. NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and Sunday School Visitor.
5. Colleges and Schools.
6. Church Efficiency.

The Committee on Financial Plan being absent, on motion they were authorized and requested to prepare a plan and present it to the Annual Conference at Vicksburg. This was deemed an important matter, as the appalling dereliction as to the salaries of the preachers and the finances of the church is thought to be owing less to the inability and indisposition of the people than to the want of a system upon which the preachers and stewards, by sanction of the church, may operate.

The Committee on Sabbath Schools reported that much was being done in certain places; while in others on the district there is neglect of this important institution. They fear these nurseries of the church are not adequately appreciated. The family is recognized as the most fit and proper place for the religious instruction of youth, yet many who are deprived of it in the family find it in the Sabbath school. Thereby the borders of the church are extended, and many are brought to Christ who would otherwise become a prey for the enemy. Jesus leaves it to his church to devise the means of carrying out the minutiæ implied or proposed by the plan of salvation. Christianity makes science and art her assistants in teaching the truth. In the absence of positive command and specific statement of method, her benevolent and progressive spirit is not slow to embrace whatever means of doing good an enlightened civilization suggests. Among these means the Sabbath school is prominent. Therefore the church is urged to renew her efforts in this direction, according to our Discipline.

The Committee on Ministry to Children report that to some extent there is a sad and damaging neglect of the young of our pastoral charges; that this failure to care for the lambs of the fold attaches to parents and pastors; that it grows, probably, out of vague notions in reference to the spiritual condition of children, and of the duty of parents to have them baptized, and to thereby declare their true relation to Christ's kingdom; that, whether from unbelief, indifference or ignorance, a widespread failure exists to instruct the children in their relation to the church, as declared in the Scriptures, and as set forth in our church Discipline.—Baptized children are truly members of the church—are solemnly made so by their baptism—and hence are as really the proper subjects of pastoral care as adults, and need such interest and exertion while young, in order that they may be retained in the church, and become, more surely than on any other plan, its ornaments and faithful soldiers of the cross. Early habits of piety and zeal for Christ and the church are rarely broken off. Children really brought up in the nurture of God are in a great measure safe from the wiles of the wicked.—"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it," is the declaration of God's word. Renewed, energetic and faithful effort to instruct and edify the children of the church, as the book of Discipline directs, is therefore urged upon all our preachers; and it is requested of preachers in charge that they keep the record of baptisms in perpetuity, so that each succeeding pastor may be handed a book containing a perfect list of all the baptized children of his charge.

The very appropriate and merited notice of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and Sunday School Visitor, taken by the committee for that purpose, is inclosed with this sketch.

The Committee on Colleges and Schools, and that on Church Efficiency, being absent, we had no reports from them.

The following are the lay delegates elected to the ensuing Annual Conference: L. K. Barber, A. T. Norwood, J. E. Jagers, George W. Baynard. Alternates: John Hobgood, George H. Wiley, Thomas W. Brown, George I. Dix.

The time and place of holding the next meeting is left to the discretion of the next presiding elder.

THOS. W. BROWN, Sec'y.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE AND SUNDAY SCHOOL VISITOR.

Your Committee on the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and Sunday School Visitor beg leave to report that they have had these two periodicals under earnest consideration, with special reference to their intrinsic worth and power of doing good in the bounds of their circulation.

The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE is published under the supervision of a publishing committee, composed of members of the Louisiana, Mississippi, Mobile and Montgomery Conferences. It is edited by Dr. Keener, the presiding elder of the New Orleans district. Of its character under former editors we do not deem it our duty to say anything. Since it has been in the hands of the present editor it has commended itself to our taste and judgment by his selection of literary, scientific, religious and general intelligence. Its editorials and original articles, especially those over the signatures of W. and an asterisk, we consider highly creditable to their authors, and well calculated to promote the piety and intelligence of its readers. The purity of its morals, the deep and earnest tone of its piety, and its freedom from mere political strife in these times of excitement, are a further commendation to men of sense and piety. While we regard with pleasure these interesting features of our CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, we would not overlook nor undervalue its corner designed for the instruction and edification of children, nor the department on horticulture and culinary operations. In each of these we have found, from week to week, much to instruct and profit. Its mechanical execution and general appearance are highly satisfactory. We regard the paper one of the very best religious papers published in this or any other country. Its influence in the promotion of personal piety and the general interests of the kingdom of Christ has been felt and seen wherever it has been intelligently read. Its weekly readers being much more numerous than the hearers of the most popular preacher, gives it a position for usefulness unequaled by any other agency of the church. Nor does its influence cease with the week in which it is issued, for the important doctrines which it promulgates, and the wholesome precepts which it contains, live and operate with original freshness and vigor (if the paper is preserved) through years to come. The church owes the editor a debt of gratitude for his untiring zeal and personal sacrifices in furnishing her, without remuneration, an agent so potential in the Master's cause. We are gratified to learn that the list of subscribers is constantly increasing, and that the paper is out of debt, with a small surplus.

Resolved, That we earnestly recommend the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE to our people as one of the best family papers published in this country.

Resolved, That in whatever field of labor assigned us, we will promote, both privately and publicly, its circulation.

The Sunday School Visitor is published monthly at Nashville and New Orleans, and is designed to promote the Sunday school cause, and to instruct, improve and edify Sabbath school children and youth. It is edited by Dr. Summers, an accomplished scholar, a mature Christian minister and an accurate writer, who thoroughly understands the wishes and wants of our girls and boys. As might be expected, he has furnished us with a paper which is the joy and delight of our children. Being assured that it is for them, gives them an interest in it which they cannot feel in a paper designed for those of mature years. We are pleased with the little monthly visitor, but think that the devotion of more time and attention to it by the accomplished editor would increase its usefulness among our youth.

Resolved, That we cheerfully recommend it to our Sunday school scholars and children of the families of our charge.

THE very Rev. Henry Hart Milman, Dean of St. Paul's, died at London, last month, at the age of seventy-seven. He was the youngest son of the late Sir Francis Milman, Bart., physician to Gregory III. He was born in London February 10, 1791, and was educated at Oxford, where he graduated in due course. In 1817 he took orders, and shortly afterward was appointed Vicar of St. Mary's, Reading. He was the author of several poems and dramas; but his literary fame rests chiefly on his great historical works, which belong among the best of this department of English literature—a History of the Jews, published in 1835; a History of Christianity, in 1840; a History of Latin Christianity, in 1855. Other works of Milman are, Notes and Illustrations to Gibbon's Decline and Fall, a Life of Keats, and Hebrew Prophecy, a Sermon, published in 1865. He also edited an illustrated review of Horace, with a life of the poet, and was a frequent contributor to the Quarterly Review. In 1821 he was elected Professor of Poetry in the University of Oxford. Subsequently he became rector of St. Margaret's, Westminster, and, in 1849, Dean of St. Paul's. In church questions Dean Milman was one of the leaders of the Broad Church party.

THE subject of wooden railways is attracting considerable attention in Georgia.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

ESCAMBIA MISSION, MONTGOMERY CONF'E.

MR. EDITOR: A few thoughts from this mission field may be of interest to some of your readers.

At our last Annual Conference this appointment was left to be supplied. Brother West, our presiding elder, tried all over the district to get some one to supply it, but failed. At our first quarterly meeting on the Mount Pleasant circuit, which embraced the second Sabbath in March, he asked me to divide my time between that appointment and the mission. I at first hesitated, fearing that it would kill my horse. He insisted that the roads were good and prospects favorable generally. So I consented. At once I sent an appointment to Pollard to preach there on the fifth Sabbath in March. At the time appointed I came over, preached twice, published several appointments and returned. Since that time I have been devoting about half my time to this work, which has enabled me to occupy the entire field and to take in four new appointments. I found the people all glad to have a preacher. They are glad to have preaching just at any time that the preacher can get there. To ride eight or ten miles in the rain to attend night meeting, and return home after service, is esteemed a privilege and not a hardship. I have held a two-days' meeting at each of the regular appointments, except one. For want of time and help we have not been able to protract but in one instance. At Pollard we commenced on Saturday and closed on the Wednesday following. It was a meeting of considerable interest, resulting in several conversions and accessions, and the church was much edified. We have had no special revival, but a general interest has been pervading the entire work, which has resulted in fifty-nine accessions to the church, and some others yet to be received.

On last Wednesday I preached at Lathram's chapel, on the banks of the Perdido river. The congregation was large and attentive, and at the close of the services eight persons came forward and joined the church. It is true that none of these persons were lawyers or doctors or merchants; but each one of them has a soul, for which the Saviour died as much as he did for the wealthiest banker on Wall street.

The people generally, not to say universally, are poor, but they are generous. If their preacher loses his horse they help to get another, and willingly contribute to his support. For instance, we have one member whose wages is $100 per month, and he makes it a rule to live up to the old Jewish law, to give one-tenth of his income to the Lord. What a great blessing it would be to the church if each member would have such a rule of giving to the Lord.

This is an old mission. Fathers Dowling, Pilley and others preached through this country more than thirty years ago, and the consequence is that Methodism is the religion of the country.

You have heard of "W. P. Miller, of the Church Extension Society." He came down to the Molino Mills, on the Escambia river, last spring, established an appointment and made several visits to the place. But I learn that he has abandoned the appointment for some cause, perhaps to attend to more inviting fields. By request I expect to preach there myself on my next round.

I will not pretend to dictate to the appointing power, but I do hope and pray that at the next session of our Conference it will send into this field a man full of the Holy Ghost—"one that loves God and not money, that loves souls and not ease." Your's, etc.,

W. W. GRAHAM.

ATLANTA CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFER'E.

MR. EDITOR: Brother Boult and I have just closed a meeting at Ebenezer church, two miles from the town of Montgomery, which lasted nine days and nights, and resulted in twenty-five conversions, and an addition of twenty-one members to the Methodist Episcopal Church South. To the Lord be all the praise.

A NEARER VIEW.

BY MRS. JOSEPHINE POLLARD.

I long for a nearer view to-day,
A nearer and clearer view,
Of the pearly gates and the jasper walls,
And the glory that shineth through.
This earthly house and these earthly cares—
Controlling, absorbing things!—
Have fettered the body, and hindered the soul
That crieth aloud for wings.

I long to fly—for a while at least—
Afar from the thoughts of care—
Those eagle talons that seize my hopes,
And follow me everywhere.
Though I fain would sever the veil that hides
These beautiful heights of bliss,
I fear that a glimpse of a brighter world
Would darken the hue of this.

For, oh! there are times when the heart goes down,
And everything smells of clay,
When the soul has no power to lift the hands,
No power to think or pray;
But if, on the forehead, a holy touch
Anoints with the holy chrism,
The wand'ring soul to its place returns
In the strength of a new baptism.

And thus when I weary of earthly things,
The forms and the tints of flesh,
I know that my spirit is overcome,
And needs to be stayed afresh.
Though close into shore the ship may ride,
And dream that its rest is sure,
'Twill drift away on the ebbing tide
If the anchor be not secure.

I long for a nearer view—O God!
Is it sinful in me to say
That I long for a nearer view of Christ—
Yes, a nearer view to-day?
If but from mine eyes these scales would fall
That render my sight so dim,
I know I should walk with a firmer step,
For I should be nearer him.

Thy daily work and thy daily cares
A promise and hope afford,
For the services rendered unto man
Are rendered unto the Lord.
Thy way to thy Father's house above,
To thy heavenly home pursue,
And at many a station along the road
He'll grant thee a nearer view.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Died, at the residence of her husband, John S. Beesley, on the 31st of August, 1868, MARTHA BEESLEY, after a brief illness.

She was the daughter of Thomas Millsaps. She was born March 20, 1830, and was married January 10, 1850.

In early life she joined the Methodist church at Pleasant Valley, and was ever a consistent member. In society Sister Beesley did not aspire to a leading or central position. She was content with any station in life, however retiring. Never dictatorial, never exacting, her instincts and impulses were all as true to her friends as the needle to its pole. No adversity, no personal prosperity with her could ever cloud an old friendship. No varying circumstances of time or fortune ever weakened her attachments. No tale of slander ever véored the needle of her affections. She had friends, many friends, not because of superior intellect, not because of wealth or greatness, but because she was true—true in heart, true in life, and true in affection.

In her Christian life meekness was the prevailing characteristic—never obtrusive, never demonstrative, but always quiet and firm as the rock upon which rested her faith. Unconsciously to herself, she soon became a strong pillar in the church, and an exemplar in all that adorns our human nature.

Around her cheerful hearthstone was a sunny nook where the itinerant preacher delighted to repose himself. Here he found an easy hospitality—a kindness not burdensome, a temporary home made up of all the elements which render home the sweetest spot on earth. Want never went away from her door unrelieved—charity never appealed to her in vain.

We cannot point to any one signal display of faith on the part of our sister which confirms her Christian character; we cannot point to any very great battles fought and victories won in her Christian experience; but we can point to a bright record of "little deeds of kindness," accumulating through many years of quiet, patient toil, which speak to us now far more sweetly than any more declaration. It is now our chief source of pleasure to cull over these "little deeds of kindness" which we find strewn along her pathway, and hang them carefully about the neck of memory. They are the golden threads brightening all the woof of memory.

To the lonely husband, orphaned little daughter, bereft father, brothers and sisters, we would say:

"Earth has no sorrow that heaven cannot heal."

Far beyond the flight of years, upon the threshold of immortality, in her usual quiet way, stands the wife, mother and sister, scanning the ineffable scenes of all that life of love, talking low and sweetly, to the blue-eyed Bettie, of all the dark years since their parting. They are waiting, lingering, upon the portal for our coming.

W. WADSWORTH.

IN MEMORIAM.

Sister ELIZABETH FIKE, consort of Brother James Fike, died at their home, near Pleasant Hill, Louisiana, August 10, 1868, in her forty-fourth year.

In the spring-time of life she gave her heart to God, and never afterward doubted her conversion nor lost her hope of heaven.

She was a modest, untiring servant of God for more than thirty years, leaving an example of industry and intelligent piety worthy of imitation. It may truly be said of her that she was "diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." She was industrious, yet always had time enough to visit the sick, to comfort the distressed, to help the needy, and to honor God in his sanctuary.

Hers was an unshaken faith in God as her Redeemer, and also as her God in Providence. She was often thereby enabled to strengthen the hearts and hands of those that were ready to faint. Thus was she in life "rich in faith and good works." Though rather suddenly called to enter the "valley of the shadow of death," she feared no evil. Her calm, triumphant reply was: "I am ready." Soon after, as she entered the Jordan of death, looking, as it were, into the very face of the blessed Saviour, she uttered a short prayer, and the last words which came back to the shores of time from the departing one were: "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit." We saw not the angelic band, nor did we hear the triumphal shouts on the other shore, yet we strangely felt that we were almost on the verge of heaven. The righteous have hope in her death.

Sister Fike has left a husband and an only child, with his little family, to mourn their irreparable loss. May they follow her, as she followed Christ, and be reunited in heaven.

German Life—Religious Aspects

BY THE REV. DR. STEVENS.

You ask me to give you some views of the more internal or interior life of the Germans—such as cannot be had from our usual books of travel. Your American travelers generally fly over the country, and, of course, cannot study its real life. I have now lived some time in the very midst of these interesting people, in their families, have traveled on foot among their villages, and not gone beyond their territorial boundaries. They have been a study to me, one of the most entertaining in all my visits to Europe, after five voyages across the Atlantic; and yet, nearly every characteristic fact about them is still somewhat a problem to me. I have never met a people whom I liked so well, and never any so inexplicable. They are the most comfortable, life-enjoying race I have known within the limits of civilization; and yet, in their lower classes at least, the most depressed, especially in the condition of woman; the most honest in business and financial matters, and yet with the least apparent elevating influence of business on the condition of the masses; the best (or at least the most universally) educated, and yet the slowest in all the movements of life, especially in breaking away from the hereditary incumbrances or customs of the lower practical life—that of agriculturists and artisans; the most given to religious inquiries, and the least really religious, so far, at least, as our "orthodox" standard of criticism can estimate them; the most addicted to those habits of recreative self-indulgence which we dread as threatening our own country with demoralization—beer-gardens and Sunday pastimes—and yet the least apparently demoralized, the most decorous and apparently moral of communities.

Take, for instance, their religious condition. Their country is studded with antique churches; their history is full of religious achievements; their traditions full of religious legends, their universities rife with religious polemics; but there is apparently no religious life in the heart of the race, if you except the peculiar little parties of Pietists, Moravians and Methodists, who really are exceptional to the whole modern genius of the people. Indifference to all vital religion seems to be a characteristic of the mass of the Germanic race. They appear to have exhausted their old interest in it, after so many struggles and revolutions of opinion and criticism, and now turn away from it as if tired of it, and waiting for something new as a substitute. Religion fares thus among the common people, as philosophy does among the learned classes, now that its old and powerful schools have fallen into incurable languor. The philosophical chairs do not now so much expound or defend the old schools, from Kant to Hegel, as state the grounds or hopes for some new and more satisfactory theory, with not a few doubts whether any can ever be attained. Theology is in about the same condition (with the exceptions mentioned in my late letter) generally among the intelligent classes.

And I think we have here a just explanation of the religious indifference of the lower classes also—that is to say, of the masses of the people. Of course, "rationalism" is too recondite to be understood by these classes—the peasants, miners, artisans—but it is powerful enough to be felt by them. They know that their great theologians and writers and university professors have virtually questioned the divine authority of their Bible—that is to say, of their whole religious faith; and this knowledge has therefore died out among the people; the old habit of church-going has fallen away (with local exceptions) at a fearful rate, according to a late showing of Tholuck; comparatively few men ever enter a church any more; and as to religious life, or even religious forms, in families, they seem extinct, except so far as they may be dimly embodied in old legendary customs or celebrations, like those of Christmas, etc. Domestic worship is seldom or never seen, aside from the Pietists, Methodists, or clerical households. The Sunday has become a great holiday, on which the "Bier Garten," with its music and social reunions, takes the place of the church.

If you converse with the common people, you find that, without the ability to give you a single argument or criticism from the rationalistic authorities, they have, nevertheless, effectively seized the resultant opinions of these thinkers. No people were, a few generations since, more addicted to legendary beliefs and traditional opinions than these slow-moving Germans; but to-day all such things are entertained only as the poetry of their history. The supernatural is not only incredible, but ridiculous to even the common mind.

"Have they never seen the Teufel (the devil) down there?" I asked an aged but singularly smart-looking old matron, after coming up the subterranean abysses of the mines near Goslar, at the foot of the Hartz mountains. She had charge of the house where visitors enter the mines, and was an example of the mining population.

"The Teufel, indeed!" she replied; "there is no Teufel."

"No Teufel!" I rejoined; "what then do you do with your Bible?"

"The Bible," she replied, "is an old book; it has old ideas, and many of them are old fibs."

"Is that opinion of the Bible common about here?" I asked.

"Yes," she responded. "We are all 'freethinkers' about here."

"Freethinker" is the word for "rationalist" in Germany. Traveling on foot in the recess of the Hartz, (that region of old legends and superstitions,) I expected to find some faith in the ancient traditions; but in conversing with men who were repairing the highway, when, in an occasional shower, I took shelter with them under the cliffs, or in their booths, I found they not only smiled at the ancient local legends, but equally at the supernatural teachings of the Bible. The devil, especially, is a general joke in Germany; and an eternal hell apparently "inconceivable," as a certain writer says.

"But if you deny these things," I remarked to a Hartz mountaineer, "what license you give to wicked men in this world!"

"Not at all," was his reply; "for every man may be assured that if he does wrong in this world he will fare the worse for it, in some way or other, in the next."

Besides this rationalistic tendency of the general German mind, the scientific intellect of the country has, within a few years, made a stride further in unbelief. I should suppose that the leaders in natural science are almost universally Darwinians. Materialism (with atheism, or, at best, pantheism) has become prevalent among such men, including the medical faculty generally. In a large company I found all, save one, disbelievers in a personal God and the immortality of the soul. Carl Vogt, the famous naturalist, has become quite an itinerant lecturer in favor of those deplorable errors, and it is probable that they are soon to give a new phase to German thought.—New York Methodist.

Taking the Veil in the Church of England.

A correspondent sends us the following: Last week a very interesting ceremony took place at this house. A young novice took the white veil, and entered upon her duties as a cloistered nun of the Benedictine order. The temporary chapel of the convent was very full on the occasion, the event exciting great interest among the members of the Third Order of the Congregation. At half-past ten a procession entered the choir, and the priest commenced the communion service of the Church of England, which was performed with every adjunct of imposing beauty which primitive ritual could lend to the celebration of the divine mysteries. After the chanting of the creed the young lady who was to receive the veil was led into the other chapel, accompanied by her bridesmaids.

The postulant was dressed as a bride, with bridal veil and wreath, entirely in white; the little girls who attended her wearing white dresses over blue skirts. Having been publicly questioned by the father superior, certain psalms and anthems were sung; the novice's habit, scapular, girdle and sandals, wimple and cloak, having been solemnly blessed, the habit was delivered to the bridesmaids. The superior then sitting on his seat before the altar, in full robes, as father of the order, the acolytes having spread a towel over his knees, delivered to him a pair of scissors, whereupon the young novice was brought forward, and while the novice's hymn, "Farewell, thou world of sorrow," was being sung by the sisters, her long black hair was all cut off, the black long tresses falling on the ground around her.

Her ornaments being taken off, she herself threw them also on the ground in token of having renounced the vanities of the world. She was then led out by two sisters to put aside her white dress, and soon returned habited in the Benedictine frock. The whole habit was then placed upon her by the superior, while appropriate prayers and blessings were used. Lastly, after the binder and wimple were placed on the head, the white veil was solemnly blessed and incensed, and then placed over her head. She was immediately led by the mother prioress to her stall in the choir, holding a lighted taper in her hand, until her communion. Having taken the three vows for one year, the service concluded by the choir singing the anthem, "Wise virgin, take your lamp and, come, the Bridegroom cometh, He calleth for thee."

The novice then rose and went forward to the altar steps holding her lighted taper, and while she was receiving the sacrament the choir curtain fell, and neither she nor the other sisters were any more.

The week before last a nun took the black veil in this house. The ceremonies on that occasion were still more striking and solemn. The Feltham nuns are entirely inclosed; they never go out; they only see visitors at a grating in the convent parlor, and then their faces are covered. They observe the strict Benedictine rule, and recite the ancient Benedictine office. As their numbers increase it is hoped to establish the "Perpetual Adoration;" at present only a few hours a day are devoted to this purpose. During the watch each nun wears a large flowing crimson veil over the veil of her order. We also are informed that the nuns hope to receive pupils as soon as the requisite arrangements can be made.

This house is the only strictly cloistered convent in the Church of England, in which the life of Mary, who chose the "better part," is altogether led. May the perpetual prayers and intercessions of those good sisters be of great blessing to our English church! Their prayers are to be specially and frequently offered for the approaching council of Rome, that the pope may have the boldness to make it ecumenical by inviting the Anglican and Eastern bishops to attend, and that so the outward divisions of Catholic christendom may be healed by him who is indeed the balm of Gilead. All letters desiring information respecting this house should be directed to the Very Rev. Mother Prioress, C. S. B., Benedictine Priory, Feltham, Middlesex.—Church News, September 2.

"SIR, will you please tell me where the noonday prayer meeting is held?" asked a lady of a lawyer in Nassau street, New York, the other day. The lawyer, looking every way for escape, at last stammered out, "Madam, you—you had better try a member of some other profession."

THE happiness or unhappiness of men depends as much on their humors as their fortune.

SAINT LOUIS CONFERENCE.

BISHOP KAVANAUGH PRESIDING.

This Conference was held at Jefferson city, Missouri. We extract the following from the editorial correspondence of the St. Louis Christian Advocate:

CONFERENCE STATISTICS.

These are not as yet complete, but, so far as ascertained, the following may be regarded as correct as far as they go:

The aggregate of members of the church in the bounds of the Conference is sixteen thousand one hundred and fifteen, being an increase of a little more than two thousand during the past year. Adding these numbers to those reported to the Missouri Conference, it will be seen that the aggregate number of Southern Methodists in the State of Missouri is, in round numbers, thirty-four thousand, a little over five thousand of whom joined the church during the past year. That is, the increase of the aggregate number during the year was more than five thousand. This, too, in a church that four years ago was solemnly pronounced dead—certainly and surely dead—and those so pronouncing proceeded to administer on its effects. "There is life in the old church yet."

MISSIONARY OPERATIONS.

The Conference Missionary Society held its anniversary meeting last night at the capitol. The addresses were delivered by R. A. Hatcher, Esq., and Bishop Kavanaugh. They were to the point, not sensational, but argumentative, and characterized by a deep vein of true piety. The collection taken up at the close of the addresses amounted to a little over nine hundred dollars, a large sum for the time and place, (Jefferson city,) a place where only a few years ago this Conference would not have been allowed to hold a session at all.

The aggregate of collections for missionary purposes in the bounds of the Conference was a little more than four thousand five hundred dollars.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

The interests of these have been advanced considerably, although they are by no means what they ought to be. The number of schools, teachers, scholars, etc., was increased during the year, and the reports at this Conference show an increase over the reports made at the last Conference. This year the aggregate number of Sunday schools is reported at one hundred and fifty-nine. The number of officers, four hundred and thirty; teachers, nine hundred and eighty; scholars, nine thousand and seventy-one; volumes in library, sixty-seven thousand and ninety-eight. * * * *

OTHER STATISTICS.

There are in the bounds of this Conference one hundred and fifty-nine local preachers, many of whom are men of strength and extensive usefulness.

There are one hundred and forty-six church houses—few, it is true, compared with the number needed, but many compared with what were at the close of the war. There are eighteen parsonages—very few indeed in proportion to the number of preachers to be accommodated. The number of adult baptisms during the past year was nine hundred and eighty, and the number of infant baptisms was six hundred and forty-two.

This morning six preachers, men who came well recommended, were admitted on trial in the traveling connection. Two of these were from the Methodist Episcopal Church North. So it seems that we are advancing a little in almost every respect. * * * * *

On Tuesday evening Dr. W. A. Smith delivered an address on the subject of education generally and the interests of Central College particularly, at the close of which about two thousand dollars were subscribed to the endowment fund of that college.

On Wednesday, at a little after half-past eleven P. M., the Conference adjourned, after having made the following

THE Japanese have discovered that a few seconds previous to an earthquake the magnet temporarily loses its power. They have ingeniously constructed a light frame supporting a horse shoe magnet, beneath which is a cup of bell metal; to the armature is attached a weight, so that upon the magnet becoming paralyzed, the weight drops, and, striking the cup, gives the alarm. Every one in the house then seeks the open air for safety.

NOTICE.

The fourth quarterly meeting, at Fillmore, Louisiana, takes place on the seventh and eighth of November. We are requested to call special attention to it. Any number of visitors will be gladly entertained. The worthy preacher in charge has long served the church. The brethren wish all friends to rally and be with him, maybe for the last time.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

MUTUAL AID AND BENEVOLENT LIFE INSURANCE ASSOCIATION OF LOUISIANA. Several of the directors of this institution we know to be among our very best financiers. It has the advantage of being within easy reach. We should greatly prefer risking what money we might wish to expend in insurance of any kind in one of our own institutions. The business of life insurance has in these days swollen into wonderful proportions. About a year ago a dapper gentleman from New York blandly appeared in our office and enlarged upon the advantages of life insurance. Having heard something of the sort before, we listened inaccessibly. Presently he warmed upon the moral, even the religious, aspects of the subject, and drew out of his pocket quite a neatly printed pamphlet, with an illuminated title page, and read a finely expressed opinion of Henry Ward Beecher, stating, in fact affirming, that it was a man's duty to be insured. He must have seen some giving way, for he mildly but firmly insisted that our obligations to self, to family, to country, not to mention higher considerations, all demanded this step. We assented. The only difficulty now was the amount necessary to start. We did not have it, and he could not supply it. So we were forced to part just when we had theoretically come together. But this difficulty of no funds is very nearly met by the liberal terms of this association.

A. EYRICH, successor to Bielock & Co., No. 130 Canal street, bookseller and stationer. Mr. Eyrich has a very fine and large assortment of miscellaneous books—we suppose the largest in town. On his counter are always to be found the latest English and American periodicals and publications. We are glad to know that so enterprising and experienced a business man has succeeded to so excellent a book establishment.

WIDOWS, ORPHANS AND SUPERANNUATES.

When an itinerant dies he commends his family to God and the church. The God who sent the prophet to the widow of Sarepta and her orphan son, that they might be fed, and that he might eat at their board, has declared that "pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father" shall be known by its care of the widow and the orphan. If such pious acts be neglected the performances of a man or a church are hollow, no matter how solemn the demeanor of the service—Saint James judging. And yet, by this stern rule, where should many of us stand? To instance: quite recently an appeal was made in behalf of the widow and orphans of one of the oldest ministers of one of the oldest conferences of our church. After this appeal had been kept up for weeks in one of the Advocates, it was announced that a response of something less than five dollars had been made. No man had been more devoted to the church than the father and husband. As a traveling preacher he had ventured himself and the dear ones of his bosom in the one great enterprise of "spreading holiness throughout these lands;" and now these dear ones were in sore need. Answer: five dollars! How many protracted meetings will it take to offset such a case! and how gracious is the Almighty that he does not withhold his good Spirit from such a people. This is one of the insoluble problems—a man, or a people, who really do rejoice in the "gift of God," who hope because God has "freely given" us all things, and who yet do not listen to the cry of the orphan and widow! Who can doubt, after this, that it requires a special grace to induce a Christian man to part with his property? "See that ye abound in this grace also" was the exhortation of the apostle. As this was evidently the last grace, it was the finish of all the graces. This wretched love of money is indeed the mortal defect which mars the harmony of the soul's life. But who believes it? What man was ever known to struggle with his own cravings after property, or his own satisfaction in having it, to go down upon his knees and pray God to rid him of this passion of his nature? What company of Christians at prayer was ever heard praying for the grace of liberality? The difficulty is, that a man will not pray for that which he does not want. A mere sense of the excellence of this grace cannot avail — there must be a necessity felt. The convicting power of the Holy Spirit can alone work a sense of this need in the heart of the church.

How terribly will the judgment of the last day solve this matter: "I was an hungered and ye gave me no meat!" How pitiable the plea: "Lord, when saw we thee an hungered?" It is quite possible that had they seen the Saviour perishing with hunger and know that it was the great Judge, and that he was testing them, then indeed they would have given him meat. But not knowing it they only responded—to the amount of five dollars! These orphan cries are the cry of heaven, and are more difficult to stifle than the voice of the seven last thunders. The truly good man is so affected by the claims of a common humanity that he reckons not what he has given as worth anything beyond the reward felt in relieving a fellow-being, and is amazed that the Judge should attach such a weighty value to what only sprang from the impulses of Christian charity.—"Lord, when saw we thee an hungered?" Surely that Presence pleading the cause of the widow is the most powerful of all appeals. Who can, who dare, resist it? As we hope to receive the gift of righteousness, the adjusting merit of His blood who gave himself for us, we dare not. "Give and it shall be given," but if you will not give, ask not; do not expect either food or favor at the hands of God.

So would we plead for a stranger; but what shall we say of those who provide not for their own—that they are worse than infidels? What is more sacred than that tie by which we are bound to the widow and orphans of a venerable minister of Christ who has preached to us the word of life, a brother beloved? For such widows are "widows indeed." As we hope to prosper in our basket and store, let no one neglect to send to Conference a liberal offering for "the poor of Jerusalem." The resolution of the preachers, to pass no man's character who has not taken up the Conference collection, is a good one. And so it ought to be with our members—to consider no person worthy who refuses to give to "the worn-out preachers and the widows and orphans of those who have died in the work."

The Southern Review, for October.

The contents of this number have instructed and entertained us greatly. The "Book-making" powers of Alexander H. Stevens, of Georgia, are admirably reviewed in the first article. Mr. Stevens is another illustration of the folly of putting any one in charge of a measure but its friends. After getting lamely on with the vice presidency, to which the Southern people so generously called him, he now affects a purely philosophic view of the past. He is too great a statesman to see more than the defeat of a theory in the issue of that immense struggle in which the South went down! His work is a great tub to the Radical whale.

The next article is on the "Northern Church," in which the iron and the clay that seam that huge conglomerate of the religions and the earthly are analyzed. It is, indeed, a study for the ages—"that piety which descends to the cruel and execrable acts of murdering princes, butchery of the people, and subversion of States and governments."

The article to which we feel much indebted for some excellent views upon poetic genius is the one entitled "Two Recent Poems," a review of The Spanish Gipsy, by George Eliot, and The Earthly Paradise, by William Morris. The qualities which mark the contemplative poets and those of the perceptive poets are lucidly presented.... Tennyson and Milton belong to the former—Chaucer and Keats to the latter. The author of the Gipsy is placed in the contemplative class, and the Earthly Paradise is thought by the writer to be one of the finest specimens of the perceptive since the days of Chaucer. But we do not agree with the writer's estimate of the power of George Eliot, and should be quite willing to take the opening as a test passage:

"'Tis the warm South, where Europe spreads her lands
Like fretted leaflets, breathing on the deep:
Broad-breasted Spain, leaning with equal love
(A calm earth-goddess crowned with corn and vines)
On the Mid Sea that moans with memories,
And on the untraveled Ocean, whose vast tides
Pant dumbly passionate with dreams of youth."

NOTICE.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SESSION.

Will the presiding elders please forward to me the names of both the preachers and lay delegates of their districts who expect to be present at the Louisiana Conference, to be held on the sixteenth of December next, in New Iberia?

Respectfully,

A. E. GOODWYN.

NEW ORLEANS DIST. MEETING.

We give a synopsis of this meeting, from the record placed in our hands by the secretary, W. H. Foster, Esq.

The meeting was held in Carondelet St. church, on the seventeenth. Opened with prayer by the presiding elder. But few were in attendance from the quarterly conferences of the country. The official members of the several charges of the city present. Committees were appointed on—1. The Financial Interests of the District; 2. The Periodical Interests; 3. Sabbath Schools; and 4. On the State of the Membership.

Reports, written and oral, were received from the several charges of the district, and referred to appropriate committees. Upon the report from the Book Depository and the ADVOCATE, it was resolved that the plan of a Co-operative Relief Association, presented by the presiding elder to this district meeting, receives our hearty approval.

Resolved, That a committee of four laymen, viz.: W. H. Foster, John L. Dunnica, J. G. Perham and W. H. Dameron, be appointed to confer with Revs. J. C. Keener, J. B. Walker and L. Parker, to perfect the plan and put it in operation.

The presiding elder reported the names of the nominees of the several quarterly conferences of lay delegates to the Annual Conference.

The meeting reassembled at half-past five P. M., and opened with singing, and prayer by the Rev. P. M. Goodwyn.

Reports were made by the chairmen of the several committees, and considerable discussion ensued.

FINANCE.

L. Fash, chairman.—The noticeable thing in the report was the recommendation that stewards meet early in the year, make their estimates, divide out the names of members among them, and see each member or person monthly, to obtain what he is willing to pay for the support of the ministry; to adjust their method to the times, and bring a large class of poor persons into the support of the church, who have not heretofore been looked to, by making frequent and regular collections. This subject is, of course, the alpha and omega of a Methodist business official gathering. The fear which agitated the Methodist church at the first of its existence, and every year since, that the whole structure will go to pieces, has not subsided. It has always seemed to us a great mercy that something of the sort did not happen, and we know of no continuance of anything more manifestly a matter of faith than that of the preaching of the Gospel in the free form of Methodism. Still it is true that the finances of this part of the work, just at this time, are really in a sad way. The church is in a farming, not a planting condition, and the husbanding of all resources has become necessary to its existence.

SABBATH SCHOOLS.

W. H. Foster, Esq., chairman.—The report urges that "every Methodist should be found working in them;" that "there should always be in the Sabbath school as many children as there are members in the church." It also deprecates "the employment of teachers who are not members of our church and who have no knowledge of the religion they attempt to teach." It recommends the remedy of larger classes. It was Resolved, That the officers of the New Orleans Sunday School Union be requested to call a meeting, at an early date, for the purpose of reorganizing the same and making it effective to the extension of Sunday schools.

PERIODICALS, ETC.

Rev. J. B. Walker, chairman.—The Book Depository was reported to be doing better this year than ever before. The CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, the report says, "has breasted these unpropitious times by no ordinary labor. We believe its hazards are past, and there now opens before it a career of success. Let the church bring up its whole reserve, and let the ADVOCATE go forth on a triumphant mission of good."

The German-Evangelische Apologete starts upon a sound basis, and the fostering care of the church is invoked for it.

MEMBERSHIP.

Rev. Linus Parker, chairman.—The attendance on class meetings and prayer meetings was reported to be good. The report concludes: "On the whole, we believe that the Methodists in this district are as much devoted to God and are as spiritually-minded as they ever have been."

LAY DELEGATES.

The following lay delegates to the Louisiana Conference were then elected from the nominees of the quarterly conferences: W. H. Foster, J. L. Dunnica, J. O. Fuqua, J. J. Lyons. Alternates: F. L. Mead and J. H. Keller.

The meeting then, by resolution, adjourned sine die.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

CENTRAL INSTITUTE, Oct. 15, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: I have just closed a series of protracted meetings on Carolina circuit, Montgomery Conference, in which sixty-five or seventy were added to the church, and about as many professed faith in Christ. A large proportion were Sabbath school scholars. The membership was greatly revived and encouraged. This is doing well for this country, considering the strong efforts and apparent success of the Methodist Episcopal Church last year and the year before.

When I came to this circuit I found much opposition to Sunday schools. This was not an open opposition, but in the form of indifference on the part of the parents and members. "You can't do anything. All former efforts have failed." My response was, that I intended to have Sunday schools, and if no one would teach the young people and children I would give them monthly instruction. At this decision many took courage. Five schools were gotten up. Committees were appointed to stimulate the parents and children, and a celebration was promised at the close of the term, in October, when we would suspend, and resume the same organization again next spring. This celebration was quite a stimulus to keep the school in a good condition until the close.

At the first celebration we were highly and profitably entertained by Brothers J. M. Hudson, presiding elder, and W. A Edwards, of Socapatoy circuit. At the second the children were enchanted, spell-bound and enthused by the highly-gifted agent of the East Alabama Auburn College. The young and old were also very profitably entertained by the Rev. Mr. Fey, of the Wetumpka Baptist church, who gave a fine account of his visit to the Holy Land—pointed out on maps which he had with him. This was a great treat.

Your's truly, J. P. JONES.

COLONEL POPE.

The body of Colonel Pope, recently killed in Saint Mary parish, was yesterday escorted to the boat, on which it is to be taken up the river, by quite a large funeral cortege. Among the escort were General Rousseau and General Buchanan. Transportation for the corpse, the widow and family of the deceased, and the attendant committee, was furnished by Colonel Fuller, collector of the port, and his friends, and abundant means were furnished to defray all expenses. These facts show, if indeed proof of such a kind were needed, that the reprobation visited upon acts like that of which Colonel Pope was the victim is shared equally by all classes of our people, and by all parties. If there is anything which, more than any other, is held in abhorrence by the people of Louisiana, it is the pistol and the knife of the assassin.—Crescent.

THE PROSPECT.—Dispatches from the North say that the feeling of the party is overwhelmingly opposed to the policy of the "swappers," and that the attempt to force the Democracy to the humiliation of deserting its chosen candidates, has aroused a spirit of indignation which will lead to redoubled energy and vigor in the prosecution of the canvass. We had feared that the suggestion of a surrender, coming immediately after the elections, might dispirit and enervate the party; but we believe now that the effect will be to excite renewed enthusiasm and infuse into the Democracy a feeling of determination which cannot fail to produce beneficial results to Seymour and Blair, the Democratic candidates, and they will get the vote of every Democrat in the country.—New Orleans Crescent.

CAMP MEETINGS REVIVED.

MR. EDITOR: The friends of Zion everywhere are entitled to share in the triumphs of the cause, and to be informed of the means and instrumentalities of its success, etc.—With this view I propose to publish, in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, an account of a camp meeting recently held within the bounds of my district.

Last fall the friends of the church on Lower Peachtree circuit, Mobile Conference, proposed to get up an old-fashioned camp meeting, such as our fathers used to hold twenty or thirty years ago, and which was such a power in the church in their days. The attempt was a perfect success, and the results most glorious. This fall they met again in much larger numbers — encouraged by the success of the former year. The congregations were large, and a deep interest was manifest from the very beginning. There were penitents the first night. For two days and nights there were heavy and almost incessant rains; but all these discouragements seemed not to dampen the ardor of the people. As soon as the clouds cleared away the people flocked to the stand, and crowds came in from the surrounding country. As the numbers increased the interest deepened every hour. After the rains were over crowds of colored people came in, who worshiped in the rear of the stand, as in other days. Their behavior was quiet and orderly, and they shared largely of the benefits of the meeting. The laborers were not numerous, but sufficient. The preaching was plain, pointed and spiritual, and, as might be expected, it told mightily upon the hearts of the people. At times there were not much short of a hundred penitents in and around the altar, and many of them had their mourning turned into joy. Up to the time of my leaving—that is, the evening before the close—about seventy persons, white and colored, had united with the church and had been received into full connection. A number, I suppose, joined next morning, and quite a number, no doubt, united with the church elsewhere. Upon the whole, the results of the meeting were very encouraging, and prove very clearly, I think, that camp meetings may be revived with great profit to the church. A hundred camp meetings, properly located and judiciously conducted, in different parts of Alabama, would cause the desert to "rejoice and blossom as the rose." The order was good throughout, and the effect, I have no doubt, was beneficial to the colored race generally. In the beginning some of the negroes came in and wanted a kind of partnership business by occupying the pulpit turn about with our preachers; but being denied this privilege, they soon found their proper level, and everything went on quietly.

Brother S. P. Richardson, the Bible agent for Alabama, was with us, and those who know him remember that a revival is his own true element, as much as the deep blue sea is the native element of the finny tribe. He did us good service—formed a Bible society and took up a handsome collection. Dr. Pierce used to say that a revival that could be killed by a Bible meeting, and a collection for the Bible, ought to be killed. Who will gainsay it?

An incident or two occurred worthy of remark. When we opened the door of the church to receive members, a large number of fine-looking, hopeful young men came forward, and among them one came crawling on his hands and feet, never having walked a step in his life; but with all his infirmities he had a fine face and a cheerful bright countenance. How I was impressed with the sentiment of the poet: "The mind is the standard of the man." And I doubt not many a prayer went up to God to bless that dear afflicted young man, and to give him a place in the new Jerusalem, where the inhabitants use wings and not legs.

Another small affair transpired, a little rare and racy. At an appointed hour parents were invited forward to have their children baptized. Among others, a brother came in with a child in his arms, and sat down rather by himself. After baptizing all the children near me, Brother Faust, the preacher in charge of the circuit, approached and asked the brother if he wished his child baptized. Well, he said, he didn't know; it was just as the mother pleased. He then went to the mother and asked her. She said she was willing if the father said so. He told her her husband was willing if she was. "Well, then," she said, "have it baptized." And what do you think, Mr. Editor—the father and mother are both members of the Baptist church. What are we to infer from all this? Are our Baptist brethren coming over, or was this a weak brother? I close by saying that I am a camp meeting man, and hope to see the church brought back to the old landmarks.

A. H. MITCHELL.

THE pleasure of sin is like a draft of sweet poison.

MARRIED.

In Mansfield, Louisiana, at the residence of Mr. H. L. Moss, the bride's father, on the twenty-second of September, 1868, by Rev. H. C. Thweatt, D. D., Mr. JAMES B. WILLIAMS, of De Soto parish, to Miss FANNIE MOSS.

OBITUARIES.

It becomes my painful duty to record the death of one of earth's most precious gems, in the person of little WILLIE BENJAMIN, son of Dr. W. Dee and Mrs. Lou. R. White, of Abbeville, Louisiana. He died of congestion, after five hours of intense suffering, on the twenty-first of August, 1868, aged three years and ten months.

How true it is that "things we prize are first to vanish." Willie was an extraordinary child. He was the favorite of the family and the pet of the village.—Since the death of his twin brother, which occurred two years ago, our affections have been more closely woven about him. We idolized him. Nothing could be more touching than to hear little Willie, in his sweet childish way, at the hour of twilight, lisping "Our Father" and "Now I lay me down to sleep." He knew the Child's Catechism, and could readily answer many questions about God and heaven. 'Tis truly verified here that death loves a shining mark. Weep not, fond parents; you have another "angel child," another bright beacon which beckons you heavenward. May this dispensation of Providence prompt you to live nearer the foot of the cross. M. M. W.

OPELOUSAS, La., Sept. 21, 1868.

SOLOMON JOHNSON was born in Jasper county, Georgia, January 11, 1802, and died in Pike county, Alabama, September 22, 1868, after an illness of three days.

In youth he moved from Georgia to Barbour county, Alabama. During the year 1824 he was married to Miss Cinthia Thornton, who died December 14, 1851. On March 20, 1853, he married Mrs. S. A. Sanders, with whom he lived to the close of his earthly pilgrimage. He professed religion and joined the Methodist church during a camp meeting held near Louisville, Barbour county, Alabama, in the year 1826. From that time his life was in keeping with the requisition of the Gospel of Christ. However, he was not a demonstrative Christian. His was the life of the gentle, humble, meek, forbearing, patient and faithful Christian. Therefore, whilst crossing the Jordan of death, he said to his weeping family and friends: "I am going to heaven, and I want you all to meet me there." Thus he passed gently and triumphantly from earth to heaven.

A. DOWLING.

Also, sweet little MARY ALICE, daughter of Robert and Sarah E. McMoy, died September 25, 1868, aged three years, two months and fourteen days. She was truly a promising child. Oh! how painful for parents to give up such. But the Lord takes these precious ones to himself "that they may behold his glory."

A. DOWLING.

Mrs. M. MORGAN, wife of John J. Morgan, Esq., of Opelousas, Louisiana, departed this life on Sunday night, September 13, 1868, in the thirty-second year of her age, she having been born January 15, 1837. She was a lady of a very amiable and domestic disposition. As daughter, wife and mother, none could be more faithful, and she was affectionate to tenderness. During her illness Sister Morgan was patient and resigned; she trusted in her Redeemer, and feared no evil. The evening before she died she spoke calmly of her readiness to depart this life, and testified of her hope of immortality through Christ Jesus, our Lord. While we mourn the departure of our sister from the church militant, yet we joy in the assurance we have of her translation into the church triumphant. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." J. W.

ANNIE THOMPSON, daughter of Mr. Charles Thompson, of Opelousas, Louisiana, died on the night of the tenth instant, aged —— years. She was one of the infant class of our Sabbath school—a sweet little lamb! The good Shepherd has taken her to the heavenly fold. Be it so, Lord. Thy will be done. J. W.

MR. EDITOR: In great grief I write. My beloved and now sainted mother died at ten minutes past three P. M., on the tenth instant. She was prepared, as she remarked but a few days since: "O what a blessed thing it was for me to have found Jesus when I was well! Now would have been too late."

Her age was sixty-six years last June.

Your brother in Christ,

ROBERT B. DOWNER.

FOREST HOME, Miss., Oct. 11, 1868.

Died, on the eleventh of September, 1868, near Lauderdale Springs, ADAM EUGENE, son of George S. and Nancy Prisock, aged eight years and four months.

He was sick only three days. Just before he died this lovely little boy gave very remarkable evidences of a bright testimony of his acceptance with God, and that he was going to heaven. He looked at his father, pointed upward, and a heavenly smile played upon his countenance; at the same time he clapped his hands together in ecstacy of joy. He had read the New Testament nearly through. This lovely flower only budded here to bloom forever in heaven. His parents have the consolation that they will meet again, where death never comes. GEORGE BANCROFT.

receives from the United States Government about ten millions of acres of

THE PUBLIC LANDS,

situated along the line of their Road; also a Subsidy Loan of UNITED STATES SIX PER CENT. BONDS, averaging $35,000 per mile, as fast as the sections of twenty miles are completed.—They have received, in addition, important grants from the State and cities of California, worth more than $3,000,000 in Gold. The proceeds of these Lands, Bonds, Capital Stock, Subscriptions, Subventions and Net Earnings are invested in the enterprise, to which is added the amount realized from First Mortgage Bonds. These latter have

THE FIRST LIEN UPON THE WHOLE PROPERTY,

and are issued to the same amount only as the Government advances, or to the extent of about one-third the cost value of the Road, equipment, etc., etc.

The Cash Resources are abundant for the completion of the work, and the net earnings, from the way traffic upon three hundred and twenty-five miles now open for business, are

MORE THAN DOUBLE THE CURRENT INTEREST LIABILITIES.

Besides a mileage upon all through business, this Road, having the best lands for settlement, the most productive mines, the nearest markets, and being exempt from competition, will always command larger revenues, which are wholly in Coin.

Two-thirds of the entire Loan is already marketed, and, judging by past experience, the Loan will soon be closed. Investors who desire an unusually safe, reliable and profitable security would do well to purchase before the Bonds are all taken.

☞ The Company reserve the right to advance the price at any time; but all orders actually in transitu at the time of any such advance will be filled at the present price. At this time they pay

More than Eight Per Cent. upon the Investment,

and have, from National and State laws, guarantees superior to any other corporate securities now offered.

The First Mortgage Bonds are of $1,000 each, with semi-annual Gold Coupons attached, payable in July and January. Both INTEREST AND PRINCIPAL ARE MADE EXPRESSLY PAYABLE IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN. The back interest from July 1 is charged only at the currency rates.

We receive all classes of Government Bonds, at their full market rates, in exchange for the Central Pacific Railroad Bonds, thus enabling the holders to realize from five to ten per cent. profit and keep the principal of their investments equally secure, and receive the same rate of interest for a longer period.

Orders and inquiries will receive prompt attention. Information, descriptive pamphlets, etc., giving a full account of the organization, progress, business and prospects of the enterprise, furnished on application. Bonds sent by return Express at our cost.

Subscriptions Received by Banks and Bankers, Agents for the Loan.

☞ All descriptions of GOVERNMENT SECURITIES bought, sold or exchanged, at our office and by mail and telegraph, at market rates.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

THE VOYAGE IN THE ARM CHAIR.

Oh, pa! dear papa! we've had such a fine game,
We played at a sail on the sea;
The old arm chair made such a beautiful ship,
And it sailed—oh, as nice as could be.

We made Mary the captain, and Bob was the boy
Who cried, "Ease her," "Back her," and "Slow;"
And Jane was the steersman who stands at the wheel,
And I watched the engines below.

We had for a passenger grandmamma's cat,
And as Tom couldn't pay he went free;
From the fireside we sailed at half-past two o'clock,
And we got to the sideboard at three.

But oh I only think, dear papa, when half way,
Tom overboard jumped to the floor;
And though we cried out, "Tom, come back don't be drowned,"
He galloped right out at the door.

But pa, dear papa, listen one moment more,
Till I tell you the end of our sail;
From the sideboard we went at five minutes past three,
And at four o'clock saw such a whale!

The whale was the sofa, and it, dear papa,
Is at least twice as large as our ship;
Our captain called out, "Turn the ship round about;
Oh, I wish we had not come this trip!"

And we all cried, "Oh, yes, let us get away home,
And hide in some corner quite snug;".
So we sailed for the fireside as quick as we could,
And we landed all safe on the rug

A PIG THAT HAD A CHANCE.

A STORY FOR THE WEE ONES.

Most pigs never have any chance to be respectable. They are fed on the coarsest food and shut up in a dirty pen, where they have no freedom and no society, and not even pure air and a clean bed. If a little boy should be shut in a pig pen and fed upon slops, and should have nobody to teach him, or talk to him, or play with him, he would grow up coarse and brutal if he lived to grow up at all. I once knew a pig who had a good time the first half year of his life, and as it is a true story I will tell you all about it.

When he was about a month old he was very plump and pretty, with white bristles over a pink skin, and the farmer who owned him took a fancy to him and resolved to give him a chance to improve. So he took him from his dirty little brothers and sisters, and gave him a nice little shed all to himself; in the shed was a soft bed of clean straw, and the door was left open. It was only the pig's bedroom, where he slept at night and in wet weather. In pleasant days he ran about the yard and over the green in front of the house, and he would have gone into the house if a friend of his had not taught him better. This friend was Mattie, the farmer's little daughter. She had entire charge of the pig, and fed him three times a day with sweet brown bread and milk, and often ran and played with him as if he had been a dog. He was very fond of Mattie, and when she sat down in the doorway he would come and lay his head in her lap. It was a clean head, for his bed was clean and his food was clean, and he was very often washed; I have seen boys and girls in Cincinnati who were dirtier than this little pig.

He knew a great deal, too, and he had but one fault, but that was a sad one, and made his friend Mattie a great deal of trouble. He insisted on following her wherever she went, except when she went into the house. If she picked violets or strawberries he was always with her, and she never could visit her little playmates without his "tagging," as children call it. One day she sat out when he was fast asleep, and ran down the road out of sight, round a turn. Very soon she heard piggy trotting after, so she climbed a wall and hid herself behind it, waiting till he should go by. But she could not deceive him in that way. When he came near where she was he stopped and said, "Ugh! ugh!" and began to smell in the bushes, and soon after there was a great clatter among the stones, and the head of the pig came over the wall where the child was hiding. He was delighted to find her, and she could not make him understand that he was troublesome. So at last this bad habit was the cause of his death. He grew larger and heavier than herself, and often knocked her down in his clumsy gambols, without in the least meaning it; she was obliged to complain to her father, and the pet pig went where all other pigs go. He died and was buried in the pork barrel.

THE BRAVE BOY.—As two boys were on their way home from school, one day, in passing a corn field where were some plum trees full of fine, ripe fruit, Henry said to Thomas:

"Let us jump over and get some plums. Nobody will see us, and we can send along through the tall corn, and come out safe on the other side."

"I cannot do it," said Thomas, "it is wrong. I do not want plums, if I have to steal them."

"You are a coward," said Henry "I always knew you were a coward; and if you don't want any plums, you may go without them; but I shall have some very quick."

Just as Henry was climbing the fence, the owner of the field rose up from the other side of the wall. On seeing him Henry jumped back, and ran off as fast as his legs could carry him.

Thomas, who had no reason to be afraid, stood still. The owner, having heard the conversation, told Thomas to step over and help himself to as many plums as he wished.

The boy accepted the invitation, and very soon filled his pockets with the ripe fruit.

Which of these two boys was brave—the one who called the other a coward, but ran away himself, or the one who said he was afraid to steal, and stood his ground?—Temperance Banner.

SCIENTIFIC.

IT is a curious circumstance that, while a damp atmosphere hinders the radiation of heat, it aids the transmission of light. If there be much moisture the sky is clear and blue, and distant objects are clearly seen. The explanation probably is that the large proportion of impurities in the air becomes soluble in the moisture of the air, or, becoming heavier by absorption, fall to the ground. If there be no dust in the air, as over plains of snow, or on the peak of Tenneriffe, in consequence of the east winds, the air remains clear. Common salt, according to Bunsen, is always in the air, even at a distance from the coasts.

THE fire ants of Brazil are small red insects, whose name is derived from their terrible bite, which produces the sensation of a coal of fire. Among some Amazonian tribes the Indian bridegroom is subjected to a curious test. On the day of his marriage, while the wedding festivities are going on, his hand is tied up in a paper bag filled with fire ants. If he bears this torture smilingly he is considered fit for the trials of matrimony.

THE researches of Helmholtz, a distinguished German physiologist, show that the nervous fluid or wave, whatever it may be, travels at the rate of 97 1 feet per second. If, then, a man six feet high were to step on a nail, it would take a little less than an eighth of a second for the information to be carried by the sensor nerves to the brain, and for the order that the foot be lifted to be returned by the motor nerve to the suffering member.

IT is a well established fact that stars change their color. Sirius was described as a fiery red star by the ancients; some years ago it was a pure white, while it is now becoming of a decided green color. Capella was also called a red star by the ancients; it was afterward described as a yellow star, and is now bluish. Many other instances of change of color, though less decided, have been detected.

AT Stockholm there died recently a man to whom the Bernadotte family are in a great measure indebted for the throne of Sweden. Otto Count von Moerner, who died the other day in his eighty-seventh year, was in the year 1810 in the prime of life, and a representative of one of the most aristocratic families of Sweden. He had previously been for several years in the French service, and formed many acquaintances in Paris. When Charles Augustus died, a few months after he had been elected prince hereditary of Sweden, Count von Moerner went to Paris, and, without being authorized to do so, offered the Swedish crown to Marshal Bernadotte. He persuaded the latter to consent to the use of his name in connection with that exalted position, and returned then to Sweden, where he commenced "working" for Bernadotte with the utmost zeal, and without taking any notice of the indignation with which the king and the whole official world of Sweden looked upon his conduct. After Bernadotte had set foot on Swedish soil he appointed Count von Moerner his adjutant, and Ornenstolpe, the Swedish historian, says that Moerner was the only man in Sweden whom Bernadotte, during his whole reign, addressed as "thou."

FARM AND GARDEN.

How Muck and its Composts Help the Soil.

In our last issue we noticed some of the methods of composting muck and peat and of preparing them for fertilizers. We now point out some of the ways in which they benefit the soil. They add a large mass of organic matter directly to growing plants, and supply their wants. These peat swamps are the sepulchres of dead plants, containing most of the elements of our cultivated crops. Composting puts this organic matter in a condition to be used. An analysis shows that peat contains nearly the same elements as cow dung. All our hard cropped fields in the older States need this vegetable matter. It is especially valuable upon sandy and gravelly loams, and if we add it in large quantities enough we can turn a barren sand into a fertile field. Astonishing results are shown from the application of these composts to thin, hungry soils. They are largely made up of carbon, and their decay in the soil furnishes carbonic acid gas, both to the roots of plants and to their leaves. The great luxuriance of crops upon drained swamps and fresh clearings is due mainly to the abundant supply of this gas, furnished by decaying vegetable matter. In all cultivated lands the carbon in the soil is steadily wasting by the removal of the crops, and it must be restored or the land will not pay for cultivating. But peat contains nitrogen in considerable quantities, which furnishes to plants nitric acid and ammonia, the most costly elements in all fertilizers. The average amount of nitrogen found in thirty samples of peat analyzed by Professor Johnson for the Connecticut State Agricultural Society was one and a half per cent. of the air dried substance, or more than three times the quantity usually found in stable or yard manure. When the peat is weathered and composted and distributed in the soil, this nitrogen furnishes ammonia to plants, like other nitrogenous fertilizers. A ton of sun-dried peat, according to the estimate of the professor, contains thirty pounds of nitrogen, equivalent to thirty-six pounds of ammonia, worth, at twenty cents a pound, $7 20 a ton. This may not be all available for plants the first season, but it is so much plant food stored away in the soil, certain to be wanted in due time. It is as really money to the farmer as the nitrogen which he puts into the soil in yard manure and Peruvian guano. There is almost an incidental benefit from the free use of muck compost too often overlooked. It enables the soil to appropriate the free nitrogen of the air. This is oxidized in the pores of the soil to nitric acid, and thus the farmer's crops are daily dressed with the most costly of all fertilizers. The inorganic elements of peat are also valuable. The ashes have considerable quantities of lime and sulphuric acid, and magnesia, phosphoric acid, potash and soda in less amount. These are worth as much as the same elements furnished in other manures.

Besides the plant food which is furnished directly by the peat, it helps the soil in other ways. It absorbs water, and holds it like a sponge for a long time. This property of peat makes it exceedingly valuable for thin, sandy and gravelly lands. These lands are said to be leachy, from the well-known fact that manures do not benefit them much after the first season. But the escape of the valuable properties of the manure is into the air rather than into the earth, because there is not vegetable matter enough in the soil to retain them. It is of great value to dress these lands heavily with peat composts. They hold moisture much better to guard them against drought, and they retain the ammonia furnished by other manures. So many and important are the benefits of peat that every farmer who has bogs ought to ascertain their quality and spend money freely in making composts. Very often they are the cheapest means of enriching the farm and making it pay large dividends.—American Agriculturist.

Treatment of Lawns and Grass Plots.

Many people think that the one thing requisite to produce a good turf is to sow a particular kind of seed. There is, to be sure, a choice in grasses, and we have in former articles indicated our preferences. But whatever kind of grass is sown, good keeping will tell. Frequent rollings and mowings with occasional top dressings will make good turf with most perennial grasses. The roller is an important implement in keeping a lawn in order. Where the mowers are frequently used this is not so necessary, as these implements have a roller attached; but where, as in many places, the mowing is done by a scythe, the roller must be brought into use. Every person who crosses a lawn makes the surface uneven; where a path is worn, it is a pretty sure indication that a walk is needed, and it is best to make one at once. Promiscuous trampling of a piece of grass, large or small, especially if just after rain, leaves it in a bad condition for mowing, whether by machine or by hand. Wherever hand mowing is practiced, roll the grass the day before. This removes all inequalities of the surface of the soil, and the grass will recover during the night and be ready to take the scythe. Many perennial grasses, as well as the clover, form a turf by throwing out runners, which root at the joints. If the lawn be mowed without rolling, much will be cut off, which, had the roller been used, would have been pressed into the soil and taken root.

Large lawns are really easier to manage than grass plots, such as we find in village and town yards. With these last the mowing is often delayed and the stronger varieties of grass, or if the plot is all of one kind, the stronger shoots, smother the weaker. Let any one mow a neglected lawn or grass plot and he will find, if he mows as he should, within an inch of the soil, that the remaining leaves of grass are all dead and that the runners have but little hold. It would be in most cases impracticable to use a roller on small grass plots. These can be leveled by the use of the Turf Beetle.—American Agriculturist.

TOMATOES, though not among the less known vegetables, are capable of being cooked in so many ways that we must notice them in their season. Many prefer them simply peeled and stewed, with plenty of butter, but cooked only just enough to fairly heat them through. Others stew them, rub them through a sieve, and stew again until reduced to a thick pulp. We like both these ways; they give two distinct flavors. The last mentioned manner of cooking gives a rich sauce to serve with meats of any kind. But we wish to give some of the less common modes of cooking tomatoes. Peel the fruit, cut it up and let the juice drain from it; put into a buttered pan with bread crumbs, butter, salt and pepper, and bake for half an hour in a quick oven. This is called scalloped tomatoes, and if tried once, will probably be repeated. Broiled tomatoes are relished as a novelty. Cut large ones in two crosswise, put them on a gridiron, cut surface down; when well seared, turn, put up a lump of butter, with salt and pepper on each one, and cook with the skin side down until done. Baked or stuffed tomatoes are excellent; large fruit is required; wash and wipe each one, and with a sharp knife cut out a good sized plug at the point where the stem was attached, being careful not to cut through the lower surface. This cavity may be filled with a lump of butter, a mixture of butter and bread crumbs, using salt or pepper, or with any kind of meat chopped very fine, highly seasoned and mixed with plenty of butter. Put the tomatoes thus prepared in a pan and bake for half an hour, or until well browned.—American Agriculturist.

AT THE recent session of the Illinois Conference the venerable Peter Cartwright, after representing his district (Pleasant Plains) as in a prosperous state, said he came to Conference with the determination to ask that his relation be changed. He said he knew he was in the neighborhood of his second childhood, and he thought there might be men who were more active and useful; but he was willing to do what he could yet. He had been forty-nine years in the presiding eldership, but did not wish to be a wet log in the Conference, and would prefer to retire to being a burden upon any one. His children had all married and left him, and he had raised a fine set of grandchildren, who had also left him, and he and his wife were like two old rats in a barn. He wanted to live and die in the harness. After some conversation, the Rev. J. L. Crane made a complimentary speech, referring to the doctor's age, services and popularity, and in conclusion offered the following resolution:

"WHEREAS, Rev. P. Cartwright, D. D, if he should live, will have been, at the end of next year, a presiding elder for fifty years, and as he is the only man who has ever occupied that position for so great a length of time, and in view of his age, experience and great labors among us,

"Resolved, That H. Buck, J. H. Moore and W. E. Johnson be a committee to arrange, during the Conference session of 1869, for a jubilee to be held by the preachers in honor of Dr. Cartwright's being presiding elder for fifty years."—Methodist.

SELF-LOVE is the greatest of all flatterers.

THE M. E. CHURCH SOUTH.

BY BISHOP PIERCE.

After much inquiry, observation and minute examination, I am well satisfied that our beloved Methodism is in an improving condition. The church is now a compact, active organization, recovering—perhaps I might say recovered—from the demoralization of the war, confident in her unity and resources, and very hopeful of her future fortunes. I have not time to write what I intended; but I will say, that if a few things can be rectified (and here the preachers are mainly responsible) the church will regain all she has lost, and develop a power unknown to her past history.

There must be the re-establishment of a sound, watchful, scriptural discipline. I do not mean merely by the arraignment, trial and expulsion of disorderly members, but by pastoral oversight, and a thorough use of our church meetings, to bring every member to feel his responsibility, and all to realize their mutual obligations to shield the church from reproach and maintain authority in the execution of law.

The officers of the church must have the countenance, the moral support and active co-operation of the members, to make the law "a terror to evil doers, and a praise to them that do well." Our administration has been loose, and it will take wisdom, nerve and patience to restore all the safeguards demanded by the times, and to save the church from the encroachments of the world. The mind and conscience of our people are ripening, under right views, for the installation of Gospel order in church government. The task is not so difficult as sloth and timidity have imagined. A willing people, themselves awake to the honor of the Master and to their own good name among men, will make the preacher's work, delicate and responsible as it is, comparatively easy.

In this line, one of the first things to be done is to set up, in every Methodist house, the family altar. This is indispensable to personal piety, relative usefulness, church character and ministerial success. No husband can enjoy religion without it. Children cannot be raised scripturally without it. A church with husbands and fathers who do not pray with their wives and children, cannot have prayer meetings, for lack of men to pray. For these, too, the closet has no charms. One evil involves another, and delinquency, at a vital point like this, unsettles the whole religious character. It is a fatal step toward apostacy. It is the beginning of backsliding. No man is safe in this neglect. It is a serious wrong in itself; it is a bad example. It outlives the criminal himself, and perpetuates itself in his posterity. Men and brethren, help! Let us bring our people, one and all, to the worship of God in their own houses, and their profiting will appear in the temple.

Again, let us multiply our love feasts, and hold them rigidly according to the Discipline. A love feast, with open doors and a promiscuous crowd, defeats itself. The grand object is forestalled. This is a church meeting, a family gathering. We have the unquestioned right to hold it with the world shut out. It is a time for the communion of saints, church fellowship, free religious conversation, and there ought to be no constraint from the presence of unsympathizing strangers. These meetings ought to be held at least quarterly in every church, in every circuit. More of this hereafter.

One more: Put every man to work as soon as he joins the church. Do not wait on any account. Break him in at once. While his heart is warm and his conscience tender, put the yoke upon him. Teach him that he belongs to the church, and that she has the right to his service. It is all important to commit a man in the outset, fully. Teach him to feel the responsibility of his position. Identify him with the church by every legitimate act. Let him feel that he is known and recognized as one of "the disciples." If he is excused and waited with, when called upon to pray, by and by he will back out. Conceiving that he was not to be an active member, and fortified by the example of those already spoiled by this tardy policy, he will never work at all. "As the twig is bent the tree's inclined." By unwise accommodation to the modesty and natural fears of new members, the church has been cumbered with a multitude of non-workers. Let us come back to "the old ways." Press every man into service. Then family worship will revive; prayer meetings will have more variety and spirit; a consciousness of strength will pervade every department. There will be no more dead capital. All will be life, energy and fruitfulness.—Southern Christian Advocate.

WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTITUTE, Staunton, Virginia.

The next session begins on the 21st day of SEPTEMBER, 1868, and closes on the 24th of June, 1869.

Rev William A. Harris, President, with a Faculty of twelve professors, teachers and matrons.

This is a Female College of the first rank; one of the most flourishing in the South; young ladies here from nearly all sections of Virginia, and various Southern States. Method of teaching like that pursued in the University of Virginia. Health and comfort of pupils unsurpassed. Those from the Gulf States, especially, have greatly improved in health. No social disquietude. The population of this great Valley is nearly all white. This institution is an educational home for the daughters of the South.

Charges for the entire scholastic year, board and tuition, in collegiate course, embracing

Ancient Languages	$215 00
Music	50 00
French or one Modern Language	20 00

TENNESSEE FEMALE COLLEGE, Franklin, Tennessee, situated on the Nashville and Decatur Railroad, eighteen miles south of Nashville, in a most beautiful and healthful portion of the State, with ample buildings, thoroughly refitted and refurnished, and supplied with the modern improvements for heating, ventilation and bathing. This institution, with a full Faculty, will begin its Fall Session on Monday, September 7, 1868.

In the Literary Curriculum both Latin and French are thoroughly taught, without extra charge. This Curriculum must be completed for a degree in the College; yet young ladies may pursue an eclectic course, and receive diplomas in special departments.

For Music and Painting skilled instruction and the best facilities provided.

Boarders will find a home in the College with the family of the Principal.

Prices throughout very low for the grade of the institution. The entire charges for board and the full Literary Course will not exceed $25 per month.

The climate is specially favorable to study, and hence our scholastic year is one month longer than in the Gulf States.

CENTENARY COLLEGE, Jackson, Louisiana,

was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war; but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually, in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month.

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution the Southern States.

The past history of the College is the pledge its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the Institution, are requested to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

W. H. WATKINS, President.

THE HOME MONTHLY, New Orleans, for 1867.

The HOME MONTHLY will contain forty-eight pages of reading matter, printed upon fine paper and in clear type, and will, from time to time, be accompanied by elegant steel-plate engravings. The subscription price will remain $3 per annum, or $1.50 for six months, invariably in advance. In order to build up a still larger circulation, we have concluded to offer the following

Liberal Inducements to Agents.

To any person sending us three yearly subscriptions, with nine dollars, we will send the MONTHLY six months, or allow them, if they prefer, to retain One Dollar and Twenty-five Cents of the amount.

To any person sending us six subscriptions, with eighteen dollars, ($18,) we will send the MONTHLY one year, or allow them to retain Two Dollars and Fifty Cents of the amount.

On amounts for subscription less than nine dollars, agents will be allowed to retain ten per cent.

Ministers, it is hoped, will act as agents, not so much from pecuniary considerations as from a laudable desire to assist in building up a home literature worthy of a place among the families of the South and on the center-tables of a Christian people.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as a means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally known as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. That meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

For sale only by the undersigned.

In addition to the above, I also have a large and complete assortment of COOKING STOVES, comprising all of the leading Stoves of the day, equal to any offered in any other house in this city.

TUITION.

Academic Department, per term	$35 00
Preparatory Department, per term	30 00
Contingent fee, per term	2 50

A fee of $5 is charged those who attend the schools of Chem. and Nat. Phil.

Board, exclusive of washing and lights, $16 to $20 per month. By messing it can be obtained even cheaper than at these rates.

Sons of ministers of the Gospel in the regular work, and those studying for the ministry, are admitted free of tuition.

The whole expense for the scholastic year, including everything except books and clothing, will be $250, payable one-half at the opening of the session and the remainder on the 15th of February. If the student wishes to board in a private family it will be $280. This great reduction in the price of board and tuition will bring the advantages of the University within the reach of those whose limited means have heretofore placed the highest scholastic training beyond their reach, as well as secure the patronage of those who, on the score of economy, are sending their sons out of the State to be educated.

Especial attention is called to the fact that preparatory students are taught exclusively by the Faculty.

RAVEN & BACON, (established in 1829.)

Warerooms, Nos. 644 and 646 Broadway,
NEW YORK,

Manufacturers of Piano Fortes, with the patent Combination Sounding-boards,

Patented August 14th, 1860.

This invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affects the sounding board, the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a pure liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. The sounding-board released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding-boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection, and its vibratory quality increased.

Our Pianos are first-class in every respect and purchasers will have not only our own guarantee as to their quality, but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument, obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market has exhibited no new features since our last issue. The wholesale trade has shown a moderate degree of animation. The supplies of all descriptions of goods required for country consumption are ample, and dealers are ready to meet the demand freely at a very slight advance on New York rates. Our leading staple has been offered more freely, and ruled at easier rates, and, after giving way one fourth of a cent on Saturday, closed at a further reduction to the same extent. At the same time, most of the pending orders for Great Britain are at limits which are below the ruling rates. The receipts of sugar include three hogsheads of the new crop, on Monday, from the plantation of Mr. D. F. Kenner, Ascension parish. This is nine days earlier than the first receipts last year, and ten days earlier than in 1866.

The weather was clear and pleasant on Saturday, but has since been cloudy and rainy. Our accounts from the country are of about the same tenor as last week in regard to cotton. The damage to the cane crop appears to have been confined to a few localities, and, however serious it may have been to some planters, can hardly have a very important effect in diminishing the general yield.

The river has fallen one foot since our last report, and is now eight feet seven inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the 16th instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales.. 13580
Lake	28
Alabama and Tennessee	2469
Mobile	194
Texas	142
Total	16413

We left the market, at the time of our last report, ruling at 22 to 22½c. for Good Ordinary, 23 to 23¼c. for Low Middling, 23¾ to 23¾c. for Middling, and 24 to 24¼c. for Strict Middling, since which, under an accumulating stock and the demand restricted by the ruling rates being above the limits of most of the orders for Great Britain, prices have given way one-half cent. On Saturday the movement commenced with a moderately fair demand, and during the early part of the day a considerable business was done at about previous rates, but subsequently, with increased supplies, and buyers coming forward with less spirit, factors were compelled to give way a fraction, the entire sales being confined to 2,000 bales, and Low Middling closing at 22¾ to 23c. On Monday factors were rather more stringent in their pretensions at the opening, but finding that buyers were unable to pay any fuller prices, they subsequently met the demand more freely at Saturday's decline, and the business summed up 3,600 bales. On Tuesday the market opened with a moderate inquiry, and the movement checked by factors asking full prices, but at a later hour, with abundant supplies and very heavy receipts, they met the demand freely, and the tendency was more in favor of buyers, until at the close the decline was equal to one-fourth of a cent. The sales summed up 3,400 bales.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 9,000 bales.

The receipts at this port since the first of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 106,556 bales, against 22,942 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 102,948 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 18,344 bales to Great Britain, of 12,688 to France, and of 1,263 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we now quote as follows:

Low	— to —
Ordinary	— to —
Good Ordinary	22 to 22¼
Low Middling	22¾ to 22¾
Middling	23 to 23¼
Strict Middling	23¾ to —

SUGAR.—The stock of Cuba is very light, and that of the better grades, which continue in request, is nearly exhausted. A fair jobbing business is doing at 13 to 13¾c. per pound for grocery grades of Cuba in boxes, and 12 to 14¼c. in hogsheads. Old Louisiana sugar is retailing at 13½ to 14c. per pound for fully fair. Three hogsheads new Louisiana sugar, received recently, have not been sold.

SYNOPSIS OF CHARTER.

The plan proposed by the Mutual Aid and Benevolent Life Insurance Association is as follows:

1. Each person, upon enrolling himself or herself as a member, shall pay into the Treasury a membership fee, if between the ages of

15 to 30, inclusive, the sum of	$10 00
31 to 40, inclusive, the sum of	15 00
41 to 50, inclusive, the sum of	20 00
51 to 60, inclusive, the sum of	25 00

which payment constitutes him or her a life member.

2. A Life Insurance Policy is issued for a sum equal to one dollar for each enrolled member appearing on the books of the Association, at the decease of said member.

But in no event shall the amount paid on said policy exceed $5,000.

3. On the death of any member an assessment is made upon each policy-holder for one dollar and twenty-five cents, payable at the office of the Association, within thirty days after notification thereof, by publication in one daily newspaper published in the city of New Orleans, in English and one in French, for five consecutive days, and if the policy holder resides out of New Orleans he shall be notified in writing.

4. Should the number of members exceed five thousand, the assessment of $1 25 will be reduced in proportion to the number of members exceeding five thousand.

5. Should any member fail to pay the assessment in the time specified, he forfeits all previous payments or credits.

6. All accumulations from whatever source, such as forfeitures, interest, etc., shall be credited upon the books of the Association to the members pro rata, to be withdrawn in lieu of assessments. oct17 1y

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, AT Baton Rouge, Louisiana.
ELEVENTH SESSION.—TERMS REDUCED.
The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.
The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first-rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.
There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.
Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.
SPECIAL CAUTIONS.
Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health.
A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket-money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.
It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.
TERMS—Board and Tuition per session, $300.
PAYMENTS—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.
Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.
Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.
No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 24.—The following communication has been addressed to Governor Seymour:

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, Oct. 22, 1868.

Hon. Horatio Seymour:

I see it announced in the papers this morning that you will enter the Presidential canvass in person. I trust this may be so, as the present position of public affairs justifies and demands it.

It is hoped and believed by your friends that all enemies to constitutional government, whether secret or avowed, will not be spared, and that their arbitrary and unjust usurpations, together with their wasteful, profligate and corrupt use of the people's treasure, will be signally exposed and rebuked.

The masses of the people should be aroused and warned against the encroachments of despotic power, now ready to enter the citadel of liberty.

I trust that you may speak with an inspired tongue, and that your voice may penetrate every just and patriotic breast throughout the land.

Let the living principles of the violated Constitution be proclaimed and restored, that peace, prosperity and fraternal feeling may return to our divided and oppressed nation.

(Signed) ANDREW JOHNSON

WASHINGTON, Oct. 24.—The New York Tribune says of West Virginia, that the Republicans have certainly carried two members of Congress, with a fair prospect for a third; also a good working majority of both branches of the Legislature, thus securing a United States Senator.

The World says we have continued assurances that the Democrats have swept the State, electing two out of three Congressmen.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 24.—On and after October 10 a revolving red light, visible seventeen miles, was to be exhibited on Lucretia Point, northeast coast of Cuba.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 24.—A private San Francisco dispatch says the earthquake loss will not exceed half a million.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 25.—Johnson's letter to Ewing concludes:

"It is now our boast that we have given freedom to three millions of slaves; it will then be our shame that by their own toleration of usurpation and profligacy forty millions of people have enslaved themselves and exchanged slaveholders for new task masters in the shape of bondholders and tax-gatherers. Hence the vital issue whether Congress and its arbitrary assumption of authority shall supersede the supreme law of the land, whether in time of peace the country should be controlled by a multitude of tax collectors and a standing army, the one almost as numerous as the other, making the debt a permanent burden upon the productive industry of the people; or whether the Constitution, with each and all of its guarantees, shall be sacredly preserved — whether now, as in 1789 and 1816, provisions shall be made for the payment of our obligations at as early a period as practicable, that the fruits of their labors may be enjoyed by our citizens rather than used to build up and sustain a moneyed monopoly at home and abroad.

"The contest is not merely who shall occupy the principal offices in the people's gift, but whether the high behests of the Federal Constitution shall be observed and maintained in order that our liberties may be preserved, the Union of States restored, that our federal system may be unimpaired, fraternal feeling re-established, that our national strength may be renewed, the expenditures diminished, that taxation may be lightened and the public debt once more extinguished, that it may not injuriously affect the life and energy, the prosperity and morals of the nation. Believing that for the redress of the great wrongs, and the correction of the many abuses under which this country is now laboring, we must look to the American people, and in them is our hope.

"I am, very truly, your friend,
ANDREW JOHNSON.

"To Gen. Thomas Ewing."

TROUBLE WITH THE NEGROES.

TWO KILLED, ONE MORTALLY AND TWO SLIGHTLY WOUNDED.

There was a heavy fire yesterday morning, at about two o'clock, in Gretna, during which nearly the whole business portion of the place was burnod down. Messrs. Smith and Williams were among the sufferers. Several coffee houses and dry goods stores were destroyed, and Sergeant Heaster, who was present, estimates that sixteen houses were burned down. The fire was undoubtedly the work of an incendiary, supposed to be colored.

While the flames were progressing a negro was shot, according to one account, and three or four according to another. The fire originated in a grocery store occupied by Mrs. Brown. The river police, under James McManus, acting sergeant, arrived shortly after the fire commenced. There were no engines present from the city of Algiers. Nine tenements are reported from this source to have been burned.

All accounts represent the utmost distrust as existing between the white and black population, and a general feeling of insecurity. From a gentleman immediately from the scene, we learn that a body of negroes were supposed to be marching on Gretna, and that a police force had been sent across the river by Captain Badger.—Times, September 24.

SUMMARY JUSTICE UPON TWO NEGROES.

The feeling of public indignation aroused in Carrollton and its vicinity at the diabolical crime perpetrated upon the child Antoine Cardones, who some days ago was outraged, murdered, placed in a sack, and thrown into the river, culminated on Thursday night in a visitation of summary justice upon the atrocious criminal. Peculiarly touching was the death of this poor girl. A mere child, (only eleven years of age,) sent to "glean in the fields of rice of a neighbor;" a gentle, innocent Ruth, happy in all the unconsciousness of childhood; a sparkling creature, singing, perhaps, at her work, having no fear, dreaming of no harm, and filled with no other thought than that of gathering enough to please the father who had sent her. This was the victim of a crime which has been so quickly punished—the unhappy child who, coming after the "reapers," gleaned only a nameless outrage and a terrible death.

About half-past two o'clock A. M. yesterday the jailor of the prison, Jacob Gerber, was awakened from sleep by some one calling to him to get up, that he had a prisoner for him. As this is an event of frequent occurrence, and mistaking the voice for that of one of the depnty sheriffs, Mr. Gerber unsuspectingly opened the door and asked the question, "Is that you, Gardner?" An affirmative answer was returned, and the party, many of whom had remained concealed, made a rush, in which he was overpowered and immediately carried to a room in which he was confined under guard until their purpose had been accomplished. Mr. Gerber, some four or five minutes after, heard several shots fired, after which he was released; the party, some thirty or forty in number, leaving the building precipitately. Upon his liberty being restored, Mr. Gerber went directly to the cell of Dennis, colored, whom he found lying dead upon the floor, shot through the heart. Another prisoner, Milton, colored, was also found insensible from a bullet wound in the head. So well was this planned that not the least clue has been left to the detection of the parties, Mr. Gerber attesting his inability to recogaize any of them.

About two years ago the negro Dennis stopped a German woman on the Kennerville road, above Camp Parapet, and being armed with a shot gun, compelled her to accompany him to a cane field, where he outraged her person. This was, if we remember correctly, on a Sunday evening. The woman afterward made her way to Carrollton and complained to the sheriff. He assembled a posse that evening, and, if we are not mistaken, arrested the accused that night. The prisoner was brought before the Second Judicial District Court, tried and convicted. So near did he approach the final end that a gallows had already been erected, and he was preparing his soul for another world, when General Sheridan first granted him a reprieve, and subsequently he received a new trial. Having a second time been committed, General Mower ordered him for trial before the Criminal Court of the parish of Orleans, and for this reason Judge Cazabat, who presided at both trials, resigned.—Times, September 23.

RIOTS IN NEW ORLEANS.

SATURDAY NIGHT.

We copy from the Bulletin an account of the state of affairs in this city on Saturday night last:

Saturday afternoon the people of New Orleans had not yet recovered from the shock of the outrages committed by the negro Radicals by burning Gretna, and the summary punishment inflicted by the people of Jefferson on the negro who raped and murdered a girl eleven years old was calculated to still further widen the breach between the two races and the two political parties, for one is almost exclusively white and the other almost as exclusively black. The air was laden with trouble, and everybody seemed to dread an outbreak of some kind. The negroes were evidently prepared for it and expected it. An old negro man, who is taking care of an unoccupied house near Coliseum square, said, early in the evening: "I am going home; there is going to be a fuss to-night, and I don't want to have anything to do with it."

About half-past nine o'clock the Workingmen were on Poydras street, between Saint Charles and Carondelet, and the Radical procession passed in front of them, down Saint Charles street, yelling like demons.

EXCITEMENT.

The Workingmen filed down Saint Charles street immediately in the rear of the Radical negro clubs. The latter cheered lustily in front of the Republican newspaper, and the Workingmen cheered as they passed the Academy of Music. Some of the crowd on the sidewalks, either negroes or whites—we were unable to ascertain—started the cry of riot. The Academy of Music and the Olympic were depleted, and the crowd on Saint Charles street grew dense. Negroes on the sidewalk shouted for Grant and Colfax, and white men for Seymour and Blair.

THE BEGINNING.

The Radical clubs marched out on Levee street, and taking the lower side marched out toward Rampart street. The Democrats took the upper side, marching parallel with the negroes. At Dauphine street the negroes crossed to the upper side of Canal street. Another negro club, that had been marching ahead of the Workingmen, countermarched, thus bringing the two parties face to face. The Seymour Sentinels came marching down Baronne street to Canal. Some frightened individual on the sidewalk, whether black or white we do not know, fired off his pistol, probably accidentally. A negro rushed from the Radical procession toward the Workingmen, shouting, "Let us clean them out!" A lamp exploded with some noise in the Radical ranks, and this seemed to impress the negroes with the idea that the fight had commenced. They commenced firing off their revolvers. The Workingmen kept their ranks but returned the fire, and the negroes threw down their lamps and ran.

KILLED IN THE FIGHT.

It was found after the firing had ceased that three negroes had been killed by pistol shots, and one negro boy had been trampled to death by the Radical procession passing over him.

BRUTALLY MURDERED.

After the fight on Canal street was over, Mr. James Percy Brady was murdered by a negro, who struck him with an ax, making a terrible gash from the left shoulder down into his heart.

KILLED AFTER THE RIOT.

A short time after the riot on Canal street a negro was cut over the head and face either with a hatchet or a large knife, at the corner of Franklin and Poydras streets, and died a short time afterward from the wound. Another negro was cut in the Second District and taken to the Treme station, where he died from his wound.

ANOTHER OUTRAGE.

About the time of the disturbance on Canal street, a member of the negro Zouave club, as car No. 108 of the Dauphine street line crossed Toulouse street, on Rampart, struck with an ax through one of the windows, severely wounding Mr. J. R. Small, of the firm of Small & Co. There were six passengers in the car at the time, all unarmed. No provocation had been given, and not a word spoken. Mr. John H. Bolton, first sergeant of Company I, First United States Infantry, and Sergeants O. B. Pierce and Frank Godin were among the passengers.

MASSACRE OF WHITE PEOPLE.

Up town comparative quiet had reigned, but after the affair on Canal street the negroes belonging to the Grant and Colfax Club were congregated around their club house on Thalia street, very much excited. Their torches, banners and transparencies were probably left on Canal street, and they were bent on revenge. There were very few white people on the streets in that neighborhood. Mr. Cornelius Sullivan, formerly a member of the Twenty-second Louisiana Regiment; C. S. A., and afterward sergeant of the river police, got out of his bed to go and see about the disturbance on Canal street. He met Mr. J. R. Nelson and a young man named Fay. These three, walking together, went up to a party of four white men standing on the corner of Thalia and Camp streets. Four negroes then crossed from the crowd opposite, drew their revolvers, and without any warning or provocation fired into the crowd of whites. The first ball struck Sullivan in the neck. He walked as far as the corner of Melpomene and Magazine, where he fell and died a few minutes afterward. His widow is left in destitute circumstances, and a subscription list will probably be started by the comrades in arms of her late husband for her benefit.

About the same time Mr. Blakely was stabbed and mortally wounded with a large butcher knife, near the corner of Magazine and Erato streets. A man named Leary was shot through the thigh, and the negroes had full sway in that portion of the city.—Two young men returning home were fired upon by negroes on Carondelet street, near Thalia.

THE NEGROES AS MASTERS.

About midnight the negroes had full possession of Thalia street, and were seen sharpening their knives on the sidewalks. Some advised going into the houses to murder people, but they finally compromised by agreeing to kill all white men on the streets. About one o'clock they gutted a barber shop kept by a colored man, probably for the purpose of arming themselves with razors.

THE MILITARY.

A detachment of United States soldiers, on duty as a patrol, run upon these happy darkies on Thalia street, and made them disperse and go home.

THE METROPOLITAN POLICE.

This sable body was nowhere to be found during the disturbances. All the negro policemen left their beats and left for parts unknown, and a large majority of the negro policemen failed to report for duty last night.

About three o'clock yesterday morning Policeman Sloop arrested a white man and was taking him toward the lock-up, but the prisoner was rescued, probably by the Workingmen, as one of their caps was found afterward at the corner of Saint Mary and Religious streets.

MONDAY NIGHT.—CITIZENS ON PATROL DUTY.

Between eight and nine o'clock on Monday evening about six hundred white citizens, all armed, marched to the City Hall in regular order, halted in front, and through their officers tendered their services to Mayor Conway to preserve peace and order in the city, the Metropolitan Police having failed to do so. These men were in earnest; many of them had friends and relatives among the refugees from the parish of Saint Bernard, and they did not want negroes to burn white people's houses and massacre white people as they did in Saint Bernard. The mayor informed them that there was no necessity for any special police force or patrol, as the United States soldiers were guarding the city. General Steedman then stepped out from the mayor's office, and from the City Hall steps addressed the assembly, telling them that Governor Warmoth, unable to preserve order in the State, had offered to surrender all his authority to General Rousseau, but the general had declined. This announcement caused immense cheering.

These Radicals, the speaker said, had sown a whirlwind which they now found themselves incapable of controlling and were ready to surrender their power to the military. But, he said, if this reconstruction government is a failure, let them surrender their authority to the people, from whom all power springs. In conclusion General Steedman asked the assembly to disperse and go home peaceably.

However, speaking having once commenced, the assembly cried out for more, and more speakers appeared. Mayor Conway, Hon. R. N. Ogden and others made some good old-fashioned Democratic remarks, and the people went home satisfied that the safety of the city was in good hands, Uncle Sam's white boys in blue patrolling the streets.

SPAIN.—A letter from Andalusia says:

"Much hostile feeling prevails against the priesthood, who all belong to the fallen party; and it is to their baneful influence over the queen that her present unpopularity is to be chiefly attributed. The 'vicario' here at first refused to give up the keys of the church to allow the bells to be rung, but, being told that if he did not, the doors would be forced, he gave in. At Seville the Jesuits were allowed twenty-four hours to leave the city, and their building has already been confiscated and made into a school for the children of the poor. The Seville revolutionary committee say they will have freedom in education, and that they hope soon to see Spain occupy the place she should fill among civilized nations. At Port St. Mary's, opposite Cadiz, there is a college for young priests; they were all (twenty-four in number) packed into an open boat and sent adrift, but they were picked up by a vessel passing."

IN THE GARDEN.

Sommer is dying, slowly dying;
She fades with every passing day;
In the garden alleys she wanders sighing,
And pauses to grieve at the sad decay.

The flowers that came with the spring' first swallow,
When March crept timidly over the hill,
And slept at noon in the sunny hollow—
The snowdrop, the crocus, the daffodil,

The lily white for an angel to carry,
The violet faint for its spirit-breath,
The passion flower, and the fleeting, airy
Anemone—all have been struck by death.

Autumn the leaves is staining and strewing,
And spreading a vail o'er the landscape rare;
The glory and gladness of sommer are going,
And a feeling of sadness is in the air.

The purple hibiscus is shriveled and withered,
The liquid iolis its furry tongue;
The burning pomegranates are ripe to be gathered;
The grilli their last farewell have sung.

The fading oleander is showing
Its last rose clusters over the wall,
And the tubes of the trumpet flower are strewing
The gravel walks as they loosen and fall;

The crocketed spire of the hollyhock towers
For the sighing breeze to rock and swing;
On its top is the last of its bell-like flowers,
For the wandering bee its knell to ring.

In their earthen vases the lemons yellow,
The sun-drunk grapes grow lucent and thin,
The pears on the sunny espalier mellow,
And the fat figs swell in their purple skin;

The petals have dropped from the spicy carnation,
But the heartless dahlia, formal and proud,
Like a worldly lady of lofty station,
Loveless stares at the humble crowd.

And the sunflower, too, looks boldly around her;
While the belladonna, so wickedly fair,
Shorn of the purple flowers that crowned her,
Is telling her Borgian beads in despair.

See! by the fountain that softly bubbles,
Spilling its rain in the lichened vase,
Summer pauses!—her tender troubles
Shadowing over her pensive face.

The lizard stops on its brim to listen,
The butterfly wavers dreamily near,
And the dragon flies in their green mail glisten
And watch her, as pausing she drops a tear—

Not as she stood in her August perfection!
Not as she looked in the freshness of June!
But gazing around with a tender dejection,
And a weary face like the morning moon.

The breeze through the leafy garden quivers,
Dying away with a sigh and a moan;
A shade o'er the darkening fountain quivers,
And summer, ghost-like, hath vanished and gone.

A Glance at the Interior of Catholic Educational Institutes.

FROM THE GERMAN, BY REV. J. B. A. AHRENS.

Some few weeks ago Baron Dupin declared, in open session of the French Senate, that since the beginning of this century the number of Protestants had been reduced from one million five hundred thousand to eight hundred thousand. Do not these figures furnish a subject for weighty thought and consideration? It may be that there were various causes contributing to bring about this reduction; but the following is, after all, the main one:

In France, Italy and Austria* it has become a custom among the influential and wealthy Protestants to send their children to the college of the Jesuites and the ladies du sacre cœur. It is now in the nunneries du sacre cœur that a catechism of a certain M. Gaume has been introduced—a book which, for the convenience of different classes, has been published in three different editions, and which has the pope's special sanction and recommendation. We have before us a copy of the middle-size edition. In the third part of the same, embracing the history of the church from the Lord's ascension to our time, we find, in the forty-seventh chapter, the following:

"PRESERVATION AND EXTENSION OF CHRISTIANITY.—CONTEST BETWEEN CATHOLICISM AND PROTESTANTISM IN THE SIXTEENTH CENTURY.

"Question. How was the war against the church carried on in the sixteenth century?

"Answer: The war of the sixteenth century was exceedingly formidable, and was carried on by Luther, Macchiavell, Calvin, Zwingli and Henry VIII.

"Question. Who was Macchiavell?

"Answer. He was a Florentine lawyer, educated by the Greeks, spending his talents and means in the propagation of heathen principles. All he said and did was revolutionary.

"Question. Who was Luther?

"Answer. Luther was a German monk of the Augustine order, broke three vows, fell from the faith, married a nun, and declaimed against the church.

"Question. What did Luther write before he was condemned?

"Answer. Before he was anathematized he addressed the pope, stating that he would implicitly abide by his decision, receiving the same as an oracle of God.

"Question. What did Luther do after receiving the woeful sentence?

"Answer. He abused Leo X. and all Catholic bishops and doctors of divinity, declaring that he was wiser and more learned than all mankind beside. He continued to preach schism, and after having lived a life of scandal and revelry, he died after his return from a nightly debauch.

"Question. Who was Zwingli?

"Answer. He was a priest in Maria-Einsiedeln, Switzerland.—He preached the errors of Luther in Zurich, allowed the grossest crimes, married publicly, and was finally killed in a battle.

"Question. Who was Calvin?

"Answer. Calvin was a divine of Noyon, though he never attained to the office of priest. He received Luther's errors, added his own, settled in Genf, Switzerland, where he burned Michael Servet, who had dared to oppose him, and at last died of a filthy and loathsome bodily ailment.

"Question. Who was Henry VIII?

"Answer. He was King of England. Being governed by his sinful passions, he demanded of the pope to grant him a divorce from his lawful wife. When this was refused he declared against Catholicism, and embraced and advocated the common heresy.

"Question. Whence is Protestantism?

"Answer. Protestantism is a resuscitation of heathenism. 'I have laid the egg,' said Erasmus, one of the leaders of the heresy; 'Luther hatched it out.' All the so-called reformers were modified Gentiles.

"Question. Is Protestantism, as it was introduced by Luther, Calvin and Zwingli, the true religion?

"Answer. It is not the true religion—aye, it is no religion at all—from the following considerations:

"1. It was introduced by four great lascivious free-thinkers or rationalists.

"2. Heathen principles are its basis.

"3. It permits you to believe whatever you will, and to do whatever you believe.

"4. It has created immeasurable misery.

"Question. What may we conclude from all this?

"Answer. We may conclude that it is our duty to pray for those who are so unfortunate as to adhere to Protestantism, and to abhor the preachers and books advocating the same."

The above speaks for itself. It excites our great surprise that there are any Protestant parents who send their offspring to Catholic institutions of education.

Sorrows gather around great souls as storms do around mountains; but, like them, they break the storm and purify the air of the plain beneath them.

Remember, Jesus for us is all our righteousness before a holy God, and Jesus in us is all our strength in an ungodly world.—McCheyne.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Rev. Benjamin Franklin Perry, of the Montgomery Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Talbot county, Georgia, February 13, 1836. During his early childhood his father, Simeon Perry, moved to Auburn, Alabama, where he was raised and received the rudiments of his education. As the community was eminently moral and religious, and his father's family actively and prominently connected with the Methodist church, he had influences thrown around him, in early life, well calculated to develop into activity his higher moral faculties. His subsequent life showed the seed fell in good ground. Not one seems to have been lost.

In the main his boyhood was moral—even religious to a certain extent—in its tone and character. Quite early, at a camp meeting where his father had a tent, he made a profession of religion and connected himself with the church. He never left her communion, though at one time, yielding to youthful feelings and to the influence of irreligious associates, he nearly forgot his vows, and was very far gone into the chilly mists of the backslider's unhappy condition. A kind parental admonition brought him back and restored him to himself and the church again.

In January, 1853, he entered Emory College, Georgia, and in the fall of that year was greatly blessed during one of those periodical revivals of religion which God is pleased to bestow on the students of that institution, in answer to the faithful efforts and earnest prayers of those who have it in charge. Bishop Pierce was president at the time, and his preaching and influence seem to have taken complete control of young Perry's heart and mind. Powerfully impressed by the exalted Christian bearing of his president, and the vast usefulness of his life, and also by the fervid and cheerful piety of the entire faculty, he resolved to profit by their teachings, and, as far as he could, imitate their examples in the future of his religious life. Being in the happiest spiritual mood, and in daily association with the best models of Christian and ministerial excellence, it is not surprising that his thoughts, and even desires, were directed to the ministry of the word. Doubtless God has many methods of making known to his servants his will in this regard. But he did not act with undue precipitation. While ardent, his was not a hasty nature. The ministry was a hallowed calling, and its responsibilities and labors of the heaviest character. Hence he could but pause and think. Calmly he weighed the whole matter. Life was before him, and he saw,

"Along the extended plain,
Joy after joy successive rise."

The social position of his family and friends, and the means at his command, assured him of those supports the world thinks necessary to give a young man a promising and vigorous start in life. He knew he might enter the race for worldly distinction, honor and wealth, abreast with any of his contemporaries; and he could reasonably cherish the hope of being with the first at the goal. It is not strange that he had thirstings in that direction.

But the ministry of the word, the embassage of Jesus Christ, in spite of all his efforts to the contrary, would form the chief picture in the future of his life. He well understood its responsibilities and crosses. Especially was the Methodist ministry, in some of its most uninviting and laborious forms, familiar to him. He had been reared in a new country, and the pioneers of the church, who laid its foundations so broad and so well, were frequently at his father's house. Though impressed with their cheerfulness, and often amused and instructed with their never-ending narratives of travel, and striking and ludicrous adventure, yet he could not shut his eyes to their painful toil and days of darkness. To him their compensations seemed but few and trivial in this world.

But still he could settle on no plan outside of the ministry. Consulting with his friends, and praying and meditating much, he finally determined on his course. Then, as he said to me, a burden great and heavy was lifted from his shoulders. After this his college life flowed as a river fed by perennial fountains, ever full, smooth and placid. His studies and manner of life were now directed to the greatest possible preparation for his noble work.

In July, 1855, he graduated, sharing the first honor of his class. About the same time he was licensed to preach by the quarterly conference of Oxford station. Well may those brethren feel thankful for that day's work.

At the suggestion of Bishop Pierce he determined to go to Texas. But when he returned home from college some of his friends tried to influence him to enter the Alabama Conference, then swelling with rapid flow to those vast proportions which made it in many respects the first Conference in the connection. His invariable reply was: "Bishop Pierce thinks the work in Texas needs me. My mind is made up. I will not disappoint him."

Accordingly, in 1856, he took work in the Texas Conference, being in his twentieth year, and was appointed to Plantersville circuit—very large and important. During this year he had one of those troubles and exercises of the mind which frequently fall to the lot of young ministers, and sometimes lead to their loss to the church. Being far from home, and the sympathies and supports to which he had ever been accustomed, and often cast down by discouraging appearances, his resolution began to waver as to the propriety of a longer continuance in the ministry. In addition to all this, the world around him was rushing on with eager haste to wealth, luxury and ease. The boundless prairies, stretching out on every side, but represented the means at hand for temporal success. Confused and almost maddened by conflicting motions, distressed by isolation and loneliness, and hannted by the spirit of irresolution, he sought his presiding elder, and tendered his credentials, stating he could and would preach no more. This was the most critical hour of his life. The slightest misstep would then have been fatal, perhaps, forever. Fortunately his official superior met him with the most respectful consideration, and treated him with the tenderest sympathy and kindness. For one time, at least, the right man was in the right place, and the venerable office, which it is the custom of some to esteem very lightly in these days, was the instrument in God's hands of saving this valuable minister to the church. Speaking with gentle and encouraging words, and deferring to his overtaxed feelings, he declined receiving the papers at the time, and adroitly managed to have him preach at the next hour's service. The interview took place at a camp meeting. His soul was baptized anew and fired once more for the blessed work. "Sir," said he to me, when telling the incident, "from that day till now the idea has never been entertained for a moment of leaving the ministry of the Gospel." He cherished to his dying hour a sweet memory of that devoted servant of the church, by whose prudence and kindness he was rescued from his gloom and perplexities. Oh, that the old knew always how to act with the young! How many lights would continue to burn that are extinguished almost with the lighting!

In 1857 he filled Anderson station, the center of a very wealthy and intelligent population. He was at San Antonio in 1858. On the fifteenth of December of that year he married Miss Margaret Gaither McLester, of Oxford, Georgia, a niece and ward of Dr. Henry Gaither. It proved to be a most happy and blessed union. Nobly did his devoted and affectionate wife, in every subsequent trial, sustain her part. She was "a helpmeet for him." During 1859 and 1860 he was at Chappel Hill, and in 1861 filled the Austin station. Thus, it appears that although he was one of the youngest men and members of his Conference, he filled many of the most important charges in it. Few young men have surpassed him in this respect.

The war was now in full progress. Feeling that the soldier in the field needed the Gospel and pastoral oversight and sympathy, and desiring to do what he could, consistently with his ministerial character, for his struggling country, he determined to join the army, either as chaplain or missionary. Bringing his family to Alabama, and placing them under the protection of his relatives, he joined the thirty-seventh Alabama regiment, as chaplain—Colonel (now President) Dowdell, of Auburn College, commanding.—With that regiment he spent the eventful years of 1862 and 1863, sharing all its hardships during the memorable siege of Vicksburg, and working efficiently in the hospitals and at the bedside of the sick soldier. Having resigned his chaplaincy, he was appointed, in 1864, missionary to Johnston's army. In 1865 he was transferred to the Montgomery Conference, and stationed at Lowndesboro', where he continued till his death. Two years he was in charge of the Female Institute there, during one of which he also filled the station.

The present year he devoted himself exclusively to the work of the ministry. This was his loved employ. Owing to heavy labors and an unusually oppressive season, his health began to decline about the first of June. For a time he refused to rest, though it was evident to his friends he was overtaxing his strength. Finally, about the last of July, his physical powers gave way so completely that he was compelled to desist from labor. His last sermon was on the Atonement.

He came to Auburn to die, amid the associations and friends of his youth, and in the bosom of his father's family. Rapidly dropsy of the chest was developed, and it was evident his end was nigh. He, however, bore up manfully against the disease, doing and submitting to all he could to prolong his life and recover his health. He desired to live for his family and the church.

I had the melancholy pleasure of communing with him during his last days on earth. A few days before he died, on my return from an appointment, I found a message requesting me to see him at my earliest convenience. Without delay I went to his room, and as I entered was impressed that the victor over the grave and the terrors of death lay before me. Stretching out his hand, he said: "I have sent for you to receive my last messages to my brethren of the Conference." He was perfectly calm and composed, yet exultant and triumphant.

Alluding to the immediate past of his religious life, he spoke of his last sermon on the Atonement, and of his having recently read the third volume of Stevens' History of Methodism, and of the feelings of positive exultation he experienced as he perused the graphic accounts in that wonderful book of the peaceful and triumphant deaths of the early Wesleyan preachers. Said he: "My brother, so full was I of the idea of the efficacy and completeness of the atonement made for us, that I felt I could throw myself on it—go to the judgment and challenge the justice of God to save me."

There was nothing vain or presumptuous in this last expression. It was uttered in all the meekness and humility, and yet triumph, of the most unlimited faith.

Subsequently, alone with him, I had a very protracted interview, in which, after referring to his temporal matters, all of which were satisfactorily arranged, he spoke very freely of his beloved wife and three little children, and of the church, the ministry and the Conference, giving expression to the tenderest regard for all. Said I to him: "Brother Perry, tell me what word shall I use when I tell the brethren how you died?" Pausing a moment, with emphasis he said: "Triumph." He gave me private messages for several of the brethren all of which showed his interest in them, and deep concern for the church. From this time till his death not a shadow passed over his spiritual sky. Slowly he sunk, retaining every mental faculty perfect to the last moment.

Finally, September 22, just as the sun with gorgeous splendor was gilding the East, his pure ransomed spirit took its flight. It seemed fitting there should be light when he died. We all wept, but there was joy in our weeping. We thought of Jesus, and of his getting up from the grave, and of the resurrection morning, and were comforted.

On the occasion of his funeral the community manifested their appreciation of his worth and attachment to his memory. They justly feel proud of him as one from among themselves. Nearly all the town followed him to the grave, where he was buried with Masonic honors, his funeral having been preached by President Dowdell.

Thus has passed from amongst us one of the most polished and gifted intellects, one of the purest spirits and ablest preachers in our Conference. Rapidly was he marching to the front rank, though he had been with us but a short time.

Scholarly in his habits, manly in his bearing, gentle in his manners, thorough in his investigation of any subject, and, above all, devoted to his work, he was indeed a polished shaft, fit for the Master's use. Wielding a facile pen, ever and anon the periodical press was made the vehicle of his thoughts to mankind. No one of cultivation or taste could fail to be amused and instructed by his writings. Sprightly in his diction, and happy and easy in expression, he was eminently popular as a writer. The readers of the Southern Christian Advocate have not forgotten "Leaves from the Diary of a Chaplain," written during the siege of Vicksburg, which appeared in that paper a few years ago. And during the early part of the present year the New Orleans Christian Advocate was enlivened by communications from his pen, giving "A Chat About Conference." The easy flow and quiet humor of those letters, together with their gentle criticisms of men and things, and the racy manner in which he disclosed all the inner workings of the Conference, and discovered the hidden springs by which the machinery was moved, will ever be remembered, along with his name, by the patrons of that paper. To some it seems strange he died so soon. The house was just built when it was torn down. The soldier was scarcely armed when he was called from the battle. But God's ways are not man's ways, neither are his thoughts our thoughts; and "Life is not measured by days and weeks and years. He lives longest who thinks the most, feels the noblest and acts the best."

The Christian Instructor says: "On the return of the anniversary of his marriage, a short time since, his highness, the Maharajah Dhuleep, presented to the Rev. Dr. Lansing his annual gift for the mission of the United Presbyterian church in Egypt, amounting, as usual, to one thousand pounds."

The Roman Catholics claim over one hundred thousand converts in Tonquin. The influence of France prevents a general persecution. The apostolic vicar confirmed over four thousand last year, in a tour of five months among the two southern provinces.

A NEW ENTERPRISE.

ST. LANDRY PARISH, LA., October 5, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: I have seen in several papers advertisements of "Tableau: musical and dramatical entertainment for the special benefit of the—church." I approve of the benevolent design of these entertainments, but the plan is defective, and I therefore suggest an improvement. I propose that some enterprising persons or company establish, in every place where the institution is needed, an "Evangelic Theater," to be under the direction of the patronizing churches, and for their special pleasure and profit. The advantages we expect to derive from this enterprise are manifold, but I will note only six:

1. It will make the church popular.

2. It will furnish employment for many persons now idle.

3. It will develop the talents of our young people.

4. It will enable us to import trained actors from the schools of Paris, on the principle that "the end justifies the means."

5. Drawing our patronage from the world as well as the church, we can soon monopolize the advantages.

6. The profits accruing will soon replenish our depleted treasury.

Then our dilapidated churches and colleges will, Phenix-like, rise from their ashes and glitter in the sunshine, and the rusty wheels of progress begin to roll. Sir, this is an important consideration. You know that it has ever been a difficult matter for the church to carry on her benevolent, educational and religious enterprises for the want of means. Prior to the war our men of means invested their money mainly in negroes to raise cotton, to get money to buy more negroes to raise more cotton, to get more money to buy more negroes, etc. While the thing was revolving our agents tried to get some for church improvement, and by dint of argument and eloquence did get a little. But in some places we tried the theatrical plan in a small way to amuse and bate the whales; but we could not catch them with flies. The negro business, however, proved a sad failure, as well as our dramatic device. During the war the plan was tried in the interest of patriotism, with a prospect of rich revenue. The soldiers were on the battle-field fighting. Some of their families were starving, while other patriots were busy playing Shakspeare and dancing to raise money to feed the hungry, clothe the naked, heal the sick, and grease the wheels of war. But the plan failed again, and the Lost Cause is written. I must confess that this looks ominous through the spectacles of pious old people and the patriotic shades of '76. But, sir, we live in an age of improvement. Progress is the watchword of our times. Old things and old people are passing away. Peace to their ashes. Why, sir, only a short time ago our (?) Legislature adopted the lottery institution, and placed it under the shield and seal of our State.—Gambling is now legitimate. Now what right have fogies to complain if the church will take the theater business in hand and make a good thing of that? $10,000 per annum is no bad thing.

Respectfully, P. BRULEE.

TUSCALOOSA DISTRICT MEETING

MR. EDITOR: The Tuscaloosa district meeting, held at New Providence church, Brush Creek circuit, closed a pleasant and harmonious session on Saturday, September 26. The great interests of the church within the district were examined into and discussed by the goodly number of representatives in attendance, and all present seemed to realize the profitableness, no less than the pleasantness, of these annual meetings. Our venerable and beloved Bishop Andrew presided on the occasion with his accustomed dignity.

The usual business was transacted, the particulars of which have so much in common with the transactions of similar meetings, and have been so often reported in your columns, that a repetition would be uninteresting to your readers. There was, however, one subject discussed with more than usual interest, viz: "The condition and relations of the colored people." A decided change has come over the thinking men, both in and out of the church. At first, as the colored people manifested such eagerness to set up for themselves in church matters, our people were disposed to let them go. The developments of the last few years have shown that they are by no means capable of taking care of themselves, but are practicing superstitious rites and ceremonies which, if unchecked, will result in the worst sort of heathenism. Their own preachers are too ignorant to guide them into the way of truth and righteousness, and as a matter of policy, not to say of Christian duty, we should endeavor to regain our control over these people, and extend to them all the facilities of former years for hearing the Gospel from the lips of those who are competent to teach the important truths of revelation. The following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we are bound, under the authority of the great Shepherd, to preach the Gospel to the colored people—an obligation enforced not only from the relations of a common humanity and a common redemption, but from their former and present relations to us, from which our ministers are better prepared to serve them than strangers.

Resolved, That so far as they will consent to do so, they should be kept under the care of the regular pastors of the church, and the same qualifications should be required of pastors to serve them as of those serving the church generally; and that we recommend trustees, whenever the colored people will accept of it, to make provision for their worship in the regular ministrations of our pastors.

The Southern University, the Summerfield Male and Female Institutes, and the Tuscaloosa Female College, being within the bounds of this district, received a due share of attention. It was unanimously

Resolved, That the district educate one young man at the Southern University, paying his necessary expenses.

This was a move in the right direction, and should be followed up by every district in the Conference. Now that the price of boarding at the University has been so greatly reduced, and no tuition fees are charged such young men, the expense is small, and can easily be met.

The Committee on Local Preachers, of whom quite a number were present, recommended that local ministers be required to pursue a course of study similar, but not quite so extensive as that required of itinerant ministers. The report says: "If ministerial courtesy is to be extended to them (local preachers) by the itinerancy, it is not unreasonable to expect of them such a course as will qualify them for the discharge of so important a service."

The Committee on Church Literature urge the circulation of our church papers, and the meeting pledged itself to increased efforts in this direction, which, it is devoutly to be wished, will not end in promises.

N. T. Lupton, F. F. Hemphill, M. D. Cannon and Rev. John Du Bois were elected delegates to the Annual Conference, and R. B. Allen, J. W. McConnel, B. Travis and J. H. Y. Webb alternates.

The good people of the neighborhood entertained the meeting handsomely, furnishing that generous Christian hospitality which country people know so well how to dispense.

LIFE IN GERMANY.

BY REV. DR. STEVENS.

SMOKING AND BEER-DRINKING.

I have spoken of the recreative habits of the Germans, their almost daily visit to their "Bier Gartens" for music, social reunions, smoking and beer-drinking. The high general health of the people doubtless arises, to a considerable degree, from this out-door relaxation from the habitual drudgery of their lives, for they are sturdy, though slow workers, while they do work, especially their studious men, who form a class unequaled, in number and labor, in any other country. I have promised to say something more about these self-indulgent habits, particularly their beer-drinking and smoking.

These may be said to be universal habits; for, though there can be found individual exceptions, there are too few to affect the question of the effect of beer and tobacco on the national health. Here, again, is one of those problems of which I have spoken. These Germans are among the most robust people on the earth. They appear more so here than in America, for you receive, usually, the lowest classes, worn out by excessive work and poor living. The middle and higher classes have a stouter physique than the same classes in England. They have the English robustness, without the English plethora. And yet their drinking and smoking appear, to us Americans at least, altogether excessive. It is incredible what quantities of beer they swallow daily. Four pints a day I should suppose to be about the minimum; ten twenty, or more, are not at all uncommon. They insist that beer is always "Gut;" they give it to their children; in the "Gartens" you see mothers put the glass to the lips of their infants, and the little Teutons seem to take to it by hereditary instinct. Smoking is also excessive, as well as general. The boys begin it at twelve or fifteen years of age, and puff away, with apparently no bad consequences, till they are octogenarians.

Our American notions on these habits are so rigorous that, of course, my curiosity was excited to inquire among the people themselves respecting their effects. I found that the suspicion of any serious detriment from them seemed inconceivable. When making such inquiries, accompanied by three or four of my own lean, lank, nervous countrymen, (as was often the case,) these drinking-Teutons would give us, from amidst their clouds of smoke, a grim, argumentative glance, as if tacitly saying: "Compare yourselves with us, and then make your inference."

Dr. Hurst and myself "instituted" a somewhat systematic course of inquiry on the subject, throughout our pretty extensive travels together, and the answer was one and the same everywhere. Peasants and artisans, merchants and scholars, nearly all had a good word for the "weed" and the "hop." In returning from the Hartz mountains, I stopped half a day at Quedlinburg, to see the memorials of Klopstock and Ritter, natives of the quaint old town. While waiting an hour at the depot restaurant for the cars, some six or eight venerable men dropped in, one after another, and took their seats, as if by habit, at a particular table. They were "fathers" of the city—one of them a clergyman—most of them above seventy, and none under sixty years old. A finer group of hale old men I never saw. It was their custom to meet there about sunset. They were soon all emptying their glasses, and lighting their cigars or long pipes. Here, I thought, was a good opportunity for my usual inquiries. Taking a seat with them, and asking a few questions about the town, with the intimation that I was a traveling American, I was instantly received, as it were, into their very hearts—for, since our war, there is no higher recommendation of a traveler in Germany than the announcement that he is an American. All these veterans entered warmly into the discussion about beer and tobacco. My doubts were looked upon as entirely foreign, American, and were excused solely on that ground. I ventured to be particularly inquisitive on the subject. They had been smokers from their early boyhood; they smoked whenever they "felt like it," which was usually about "all the time," except when eating or in church; some of them began before breakfast; most of them stopped only as they went to their chambers to sleep; some kept their pipes by their bedside, to puff a little if they should wake in the night. One of them admitted that tobacco might be injurious to very young boys—all admitted the truism that excessive use of it must be bad, as with everything else; but on what is excessive use of it they could give no opinion. They had about the same notions respecting beer; the oldest, however, thought that four glasses (pints) a day is a "moderate" and expedient quantum, though ten are harmless. I know not but the medical men of the country can show statistics against these popular ideas; but they show no concern for the public health on the subject. They themselves are generally hearty drinkers and brave smokers. The old German savans and professors (with some occasional exceptions) are inveterate smokers. A German's library or studio is, par excellence, a "smoking room." But the "liberty of smoking" is sacred almost everywhere—in parlors, dining rooms, cars, ecclesiastical synods, etc. I was under the care of a physician in Heidelberg, who, besides his purely medical prescription, directed me to smoke three cigars a day and drink four glasses of beer—a cigar after each meal, two glasses of beer in the morning and two in the afternoon. He is a learned man, up to all the latest science of his profession, having studied not only in Germany, but in London and Paris. I argued the matter with him from our standpoint, but in vain. I tried the beer some time, but have felt better since I gave it up; still I will not deny that it may have done me good. Being an old smoker, the cigars were not altogether an unacceptable medicament; but I had good reason to doubt them. I reduced the three to three halves a day, and at last to one, and am certainly none the worse for my abstinence.

What particularly surprises an American here is the fact that, with all this drinking, smoking, and congregating in public resorts, he seldom or never sees drunkenness, or any other indecorum. In America (especially among our Irish) or in England, these quiet, social scenes would usually end in a general "blow out." I have seen but two or three men "the worse for drink" in all my German travels. In the northern cities, where they get "Hollands" and "Cognac," there is frequent drunkenness, but the opinion of intelligent Germans, in the interior and south, is that beer and wine have saved the populace from more intoxicating liquors. A physician in the heart of Germany remarked to me that the faculty knew alcoholic diseases only from books, cases seldom or never occurring among their people. After hearing, on a Sunday morning, the celebrated preacher and poet, Gerock, I saw him the same afternoon, as I was passing a Bier Garten, seated at a little table, enjoying himself with his friends. He is one of the best "evangelicals," but the Germans have their own notions of Sunday, especially Sunday afternoons. I spoke to him on the old question. "Stick to the beer," said he; "it is gut; but the northern drinks, the gin and brandy, etc., they are poisons." Gerock is himself a splendid specimen of physique, tall, erect, vigorous, with rosy complexion, and no sign of his age, except his white flowing locks.

I am writing you a very "gossiping" letter and of set purpose, for it was in this "gossiping" way that I made my German observations on these matters, and it was the only reliable way of making them. Still it would not be safe to leave the subject in this vague state. Let me summarize these views, then, more distinctly, in conclusion.

First: The Germans are the most beer-drinking and tobacco-smoking people on the earth. There can be no question about this point.

Second: There is no appreciably bad aggregate effect from these habits on the health and morals of the people. Mark that I do not say no individual bad effect, but aggregate, or general. I allude to the physical and moral condition of the Germans, as a race, with these habits, compared with other nations having different habits. These Germans are, I reaffirm, the healthiest and most honest people in Europe, whatever may be our abstract theories of tobacco and beer. If you include in the word "morals" the more spiritual affections of personal religion, (of the general absence of which, in Germany, I have heretofore spoken,) then you will, so far, need to qualify my affirmation; for it may be that their habits have something to do with that.

Third: While it is fair that these concessions should be made as simple matters of fact, it should not be inferred that similar national habits would be expedient with us or any other people. The Germans have peculiar "idiosyncrasies," as the doctors say; and then the difference of climate is really incredible. German chemists who have been in America say that chemical processes, bleaching, even broad-making, etc., show peculiarities in our atmosphere. To a traveler from Germany, walking up Broadway, most of the people look like invalids just escaped from hospitals. Our atmosphere, if not by its direct effect, yet by the nervous, restless habits it begets, withers us to the core. How these German self-indulgent habits would affect us, physically, physiologists should be able to decide for us. I only know one thing on the subject—that, with all our whisky-drinking, oyster-eating habits, we are the most sickly and most morbidly wretched people I have seen on the globe. The German habit of mingling rest with labor, and of spending part of each day in the open air, we could well imitate. The beer-drinking is a mere incident, and could be dispensed with. But more on this subject hereafter.—Methodist.

VIRGINIA MOTHERS.

At the Alumni dinner, at the Virginia Military Institute, on the fourth of July, when the toast, "Woman—Mother," etc., was given, long and continued calls for Colonel Skeen, of Covington, brought him to his feet. After keeping the table in a roar of laughter for some minutes, he paused, and raising himself up to the full stature of his manhood, he said:

But soberly speaking, Mr. President—(laughter)—"Mother!" Ah, the magic music of that word—a name which seems to have been born of nature and baptized of God. (Cheers.) Among the first pronounced by the lips of laughing innocence, and among the last trembling from the lips of a dying God—"Behold thy mother!" (Sensation.) Only three words, but they were enough; for the evangelist records, "from that hour that disciple took her unto his own home." There is, as your own heart, Mr. President, attests, a majesty, a grandeur, a goodness hanging round and about a Virginia mother—(cheers)—which proclaims her every inch a woman. (Loud cheers.) None such comes down upon the tide of Homer's or Virgil's songs; none such appears upon the pages of Xenophon or Plutarch, and none such is found among the bright creations of Shakspeare, Dryden, Milton and Byron. Pardon me, then, Mr. President, if I make no classic allusion, no historic reference, no poetic quotations, in response to the noble sentiment you have been pleased to propose, in honor of Virginia mothers. (Cheers.) With the memories which survive "war's troubled night," creation's bright and beautiful might spring into existence, as Minerva, from the brain of poet and orator; but God alone could create mothers such as you and I have known, and loved, and honored, and worshiped, for the last seven years in the "Old Dominion." (Loud and prolonged cheers.) In the kindness and goodness of his providence, he did create for us mothers worthy to adorn the homes of Virginia gentlemen in this world, and the palaces of angels in the world to come—(cheers)—and nobly has she fulfilled the object of her creation upon earth, and still more gloriously will she fulfill it in heaven. (Cheers.) It was meet—having given her the form and comeliness of angels—that he should have made his prophets and apostles, poets and orators, that by the description of those who hung around the cross of him—of the Virgin-mother, we might have a description of those who clung around the "cross" of the virgin-mother of "States and statesmen." (Cheers.) I present to you, therefore, Mr. President, the oracles of your mother's faith, that from lips touched with sacred fire you may have a full response to the sentiments proposed, and a description of the mothers who smiled and cheered to the field, and ministered through the "shock, the shout, the groan of war," to the wants of the soldiers of the "Cross of the South," as woman-mothers did to their Lord—who clung to it when the fanatics of the North brought "three corners of a world in arms," as the Mary's clung to the cross when Jerusalem was deserted of her population, and Calvary throbbed with the beating of ten thousand hearts crying, "crucify him;" and who, when the poor soldier (whose only offence was defending his altar and hearth, and the mothers who bore him) was butchered, and went down to glory's grave "early in the morning, while it was yet dark," came "weeping to his tomb," and wrote his epitaph with her tears. (Sensation.) And who yet rising, annually, from the ashes of her homestead, goes to the green mound which marks his resting place, and wreathes with everlasting flowers—. (Cheers preventing the completion of the sentence.) Well, Mr. President, it is now over three long years since our great mother, Virginia, went back into the arms of Uncle Sam, and carried all her children with her; and yet, down to this hour, not only are all her constitutional rights denied her, but the negro is attempted to be made the political superior of her sons and social equal of her daughters. All I have to say, however, to the makers of Virginia, on this anniversary of American Independence, at an hour when every charge made in our father's declaration against George III. might be hurled with tenfold more truthfulness against the tyrants at Washington, is—"Woman, behold thy son." And to sons born of such mothers—"Behold thy mothers." It is enough. (Voices—"It is.") It is; I know it is. For if there is anything about which we are solemnly determined, it is that before the mongrels shall—in violation of the laws of God, the Constitution of Virginia, and the Constitution of the United States—make the negro the social equal of our mothers and the political superiors of ourselves, we'll "cross over the river and rest under the shadow of the trees" with Stonewall Jackson, and there behold what is denied to us upon earth—that Union of equality which makes the brightness, the gladness, the glory and the music of heaven, and without which equality there can be no union of Anglo-Saxons upon earth. (Long and continued applause.)

CHURCH MEETING.

At the close of divine service in the Saint Francis street Methodist church, Mobile, on Sunday evening, October 11, 1868, the members of the church and congregation were requested, as per previous notice, to tarry for a short time.

Dr. Neely having retired from the church, Allen H. Ryland, Esq., was called to the chair, and T. J. Carver appointed secretary. The meeting being organized, Dr. R. E. Watkins offered the following preamble and resolutions, which, after having been read by the secretary, were, on motion, submitted by the chairman to the meeting and unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, Our beloved pastor, Dr. Neely, has announced to his church and congregation that, in the opinion of his physician, his health, which has been somewhat impaired ever since he was attacked by yellow fever last year, would be improved by a change of latitude, and that, in accordance with this advice, he intends, at the meeting of the Mobile Conference next December, to ask the presiding bishop to relieve him from his present field of labor; and

WHEREAS, In view of this purpose, the probability is that the pleasant and profitable relations which for three years have existed between us will be dissolved in a few weeks; therefore

Resolved, That we desire to express to Dr. Neely our affection for him as a gentleman, our confidence in him as a Christian, and our gratitude to him as a watchful shepherd, a tender and sympathizing friend, and a wise and faithful teacher in the school of salvation.

Resolved, That we recognise the divine blessing upon his labors in the fact that during his pastorate over us one hundred and sixteen members have been added to his church; that the Sabbath school, under his encouragement and the devotion of its officers and teachers, has been quadrupled; that a large organ has been placed in the church, and various repairs and improvements made upon our church building, amounting in all to at least $10,000, which his energy, and influence, and popularity with his congregation and with the community, have aided the financial officers of the church to raise.

Resolved, That should the bishop grant his request, we beg to assure him that he will bear with him our highest esteem for him as a Christian gentleman and minister, and our earnest prayers for his health and success in the field to which he may be appointed.

Resolved, That this preamble and resolutions be published in the papers of the city and in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

After the adoption of the above, the following resolution, offered and read by Mr. G. J. L. Cavelero, was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That as Dr. Neely's health has been impaired in the service of this church and congregation, and is now very greatly improved, we, his church and congregation, who have enjoyed his pulpit ministrations for the past three years with profit and edification, earnestly desire him to withhold from the bishop his announced intention of asking to be relieved from this charge for the next Conference year, and that he leave the whole matter of his return to an expression of our wishes and the decision of the presiding bishop.

On motion, the meeting adjourned.

A. H. RYLAND, Chairman.
T. J. CARVER, Secretary.

HE is well constituted who grieves not for what he has not, and rejoices for what he has.

LET us go always beyond the duties marked out, and keep within the pleasures permitted.

HE who fears not death will start at no shadows.

A JUST man hateth the evil, but not evil-doers.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 31, 1868.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.—Any person wishing to subscribe for this paper can do so by paying the Methodist preacher in the circuit, and forwarding to us his receipt for three dollars, with the address of the subscriber upon it, stating Post office, State, Circuit, and Conference. The receipt ought to be taken in duplicate.

N. B.—Agents are requested, wherever practicable, to invest and remit funds in a Post Office Order, DRAFT, or by express. If this cannot be done, REGISTER the letter at our expense.

When money is forwarded in either of the above methods we will be responsible for it, but not otherwise.

TO AGENTS.

Please register the letter and send the money forward. We are receiving subscribers daily, with "I have the money and will keep it until I see you at Conference." Please do not keep it, but send it forward. We do not wish to advance money for subscribers. They are many; a little to each one is a large sum to us. If our agents wish us to send the paper forward, they will please send the money.

TO THE LOUISIANA PREACHERS.

All the traveling preachers who come by this way to Conference will be franked from this point to New Iberia. We are indebted to Captain Segur, president of the New Orleans, Opelousas and Great Western Railroad, and to Messrs. Price, Hine & Tupper, owners of the Attakapas Mail Transportation Company, for this very liberal arrangement. Preachers will call, upon their arrival, at No. 112 Camp street for free tickets. We have more than once experienced the liberality of these lines of travel, and have received favors from them which were conferred in a manner as pleasant as they were substantially valuable.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

Dr. J. G. Angell, dentist, No. 109 Carondelet street. The Dr. is also Professor of Operative Dental Surgery in the New Orleans Dental College. We heard a gentleman of truth say that it was a positive luxury to have a tooth pulled by the Dr. So much for the skill of the Dr. and the effect of nitrous oxide gas.

THE COUNTRY REVIVING.

The cotton crop will bring a good price. It has cost less than any crop since the war. The people, by its proceeds, by the bankrupt law, and by their inability to get credit, will soon be quite out of debt, with may be money in hand—so that the darkest time has probably passed. We trust that relief, long wished for, will immediately appear to many of our preachers and stewards.

NOTICE.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SESSION.

Will the presiding elders please forward to me the names of both the preachers and lay delegates of their districts who expect to be present at the Louisiana Conference, to be held on the sixteenth of December next, in New Iberia?

Respectfully,

A. E. GOODWYN.

BOSTON PEACE-MAKERS.

Louisiana is now in the midst of the "reconstruction" of Radical "peace-makers."—In every parish of the State men, women and children are in dread of midnight arson and murder. Armed bands of negroes are threatening the population, and in some places women have been violated, houses burned, citizens shot down, and children murdered. Our readers are referred to the news from Gretna, St. Bernard, Carrollton and this city, in this week's, and to the items from Shreveport, Bossier and St. Mary, in last week's ADVOCATE.

It is a serious question how far the religious part of the governing majority of the Radicals of the North approve of this state of affairs; whether we have yet sufficiently arrived at a fair and full realization of their ideal of "peace;" whether, when they urge the defeat of conservatism in order to avoid "war," they mean to maintain the South, as at present "reconstructed."

The Advocate of Peace, published by the American Peace Society of Boston, may be taken as at least a fair exponent of the mildest form of the moro religious part of the Radicals. The first article of its last number is headed "Chronic Rebellion," and breathes in this wise:

"In season, then, let us look the evil full in the face. It is not a mush-room of a night to be brushed away in the morning, but a principle of slow, stealthy growth, that may in time expand and ripen into a political Upas, fatal to our very existence as a nation. The germ of it all is found in the slavocracy, which first attempted to nullify such laws as they disliked, then claimed the right to withdraw at will from the government they had sworn to support, and finally drew the sword in open rebellion. After fighting us more than four years through six hundred battles, sacrificing on both sides nearly a million lives, and some ten thousand millions of property, they submitted, from sheer necessity, to the government they had so desperately sought to overthrow. In the men themselves we see little proof of any real change. Indeed, they profess none, but scout the idea of having done anything intrinsically wrong. In spirit, principle and aspiration, they even boast themselves rebels still, and gladly would, if they could, try their hand again at the same game of blood. Can we trust such conversion?"

This, coming from the organ of a society supposed to be advanced in the charities beyond the prevailing spirit of the times, suggests a doubt if the word "peace" has not acquired some new meaning since the war. Or, it may be that this bimonthly has survived both the war and the original purpose of its publication. This is not impossible. And yet its burden mainly seems to be peace: "The Cause of Peace in France—The peace movement in France is full of interest;" "International Forgiveness;" "Pre-eminence of Moral Power—In times past those men have sunk out of influence who have represented violence and passion"—(Henry Ward Beecher;) "The Peace Reform Advancing—The advocates of peace have cause of gratulation in a survey of the most enlightened portions of the world at this period;" "Favorable Omens—We can not now dwell on any of these," etc., etc. These are the millennial themes of this vehicle of Boston peace. Its "peace" is in the distance—in France. At home it breathes fire and war. "Peace," in Boston, means the control of all the public and private property in Northern and Southern States; the collecting and appropriating five hundred millions of dollars annually; the establishment of negro equality in the North, and negro supremacy in the South. It means a "game of blood," of rapine, of lust, of arson; the entire overthrow of the Constitution by the vote of the black man, the possession of the government, and the annihilation of every right, inalienable or acquired, of Southern men and Southern States. This is "peace"—the quiet of death, of ashes, of—"Warsaw."

Hordes of infuriate beings, led on by these Boston "peace-makers," are now pressing like wolves upon the farm-houses of the peaceable people of Louisiana. Women and children are flying from their homes to the towns and cities for protection. The streets of New Orleans have to be patrolled by private citizens in order to keep back gangs of negroes from indiscriminate murder and arson, who have been incited to their present conduct by the counsels of men who profess to be wholly in the interest of loyalty and "peace!"—"The words of his mouth were smoother than butter, but war was in his heart. * * * But thou, O God, shalt bring them down into the pit of destruction; bloody and deceitful men shall not live out half their days."

This professed misconception of the real attitude of the South, which calls the self-defense of the present hour "chronic rebellion," deceives no one. By this time the masses of Northern people have come to understand that these Garrisons, Greeleys and John Browns are the real murderers of the peace. And they expect every white man in the South to defend himself and his family, to the last drop of his blood, against the horrors of negro supremacy. Let the world hear, understand and record it, that four millions of slaves were freed by the sword, and now by the same sword it is attempted to place these emancipated Africans over seven millions of white men! "Shall we have peace?"

THE REV. THOMAS H. STOCKTON, D. D., of the Methodist Protestant Church, died in Philadelphia, on the seventh of October, after a protracted and painful illness. He was for a long time chaplain to Congress. He was among the greatest of preachers—our country has never produced a greater. His manner was faultless, for it conveyed to the eye of the hearer a full expression of his weighty message. He was capable of holding the attention of the largest assembly breathless, while in periods polished and strong he declared the riches of the Gospel. His popular power was not greater than his spiritual. It was the singleness of his aim, the goodness of his heart, the greatness of his faith, that entered into those marvelous sentences of rhythm and harmony which made him the Demosthenes of the American pulpit. He could repeat a single sentence with the utmost deliberation, or a single idea with the slightest variation, again and again, with an ever-increasing effect, merely by the force of his manner. It seemed to the hearer as if he were listening to a man who would be in his grave, possibly, before another Sabbath; for his form was tall and thin, and his face and eyes and finger had a sepulchral expression that greatly enlisted the sympathy of the audience. His imagination was great in its lift and sustained the boldest flights. We heard him pray in the House of Representatives during the session of 1860. At that time Congress was full of the elements of civil war—every member in a rage. Fifty at a time rose and shouted: "Mr. Speaker," until it seemed a Bedlam let loose. Sitting in the gallery, just before twelve o'clock, we saw the chaplain come in from the door next the Speaker, and thought this is no place for worship, with other such general reflections upon the mere mockery that usually passes for prayer on public political occasions. The House was called to order, and Mr. Stockton arose and prayed a prayer remarkable for its fervor. It was not an utterance of cold petition or formal thanks, but the gush of a heart charged with spirit and life; the name of Christ and of God were invoked as if the place was holy ground. And the man of God kept on until it was most manifest that he was in earnest, and that he expected to be heard and answered right there. In one second after he concluded the place became an upper Pandemonium.

Mr. Stockton was a graceful, entertaining writer, and a very laborious man. We have always regretted that he spent so much of his precious strength in trying to realize views which, it seems to us, were full one hundred years in advance of the religious world in which he lived; because that world needed all the available power of such a man for its immediate wants. It is a great satisfaction to have known and to have heard him. He had many seals to his ministry, and we doubt not hundreds who were brought to the Saviour through his preaching already greet him on the further shore.

THIS CITY.

We give much space this week to city news. During the last five or six days white citizens have been on the defense against the simultaneous and, we doubt not, concerted violence of negro clubs. The fires in Gretna; the murder and arson in St. Bernard, and the indiscriminate attack and murder of white persons in Camp and Thalia streets, at points a mile distant from any excitement, and who were merely passing in the neighborhood of the negro club-rooms, establish the fact of a pre-concerted outbreak, just in advance of the third of November, for political effect. Everything was arranged favorably for this. The control of the State was given by Congress into the hands of a few white men and a Legislature packed with negroes. They placed the Governor in complete possession of the police of the city, by taking it out of the hands of the Council and mayor, and giving it to a Board of Police Commissioners. The board appointed over six hundred negroes on the police, so that the negroes had it all their own way under the guidance of a man who, more than any other in the State, has organized the negro in declared opposition to the white man—Governor Warmoth. By him, and others like him, they have been heated and told that all land and houses, and the control of the State, belonged rightfully to themselves—"was it not all produced by their muscles," etc. Meanwhile, the temporizing policy of our people was mistaken by the negroes for an acquiescence in these agrarian doctrines, and they soon came to despise the quiet forbearance which, for peace-sake, endured all species of insult. So that, putting those things together, the negro was at last brought to attempt some part of the murderous programme which philanthropic fanatics have long since marked out for him in the South. The difficulty was the usual one—that the negro, when started, could not be stopped by the men who started him. It ended in the determined stand of all white men against these monsters and their ignorant dupes, who were ready to commit murder in order to carry an election. The negro police force has been disbanded, the police of the city is again assumed by the Council, Major General J. B. Steedman is appointed its chief, and is to be backed up by General Rousseau; and the youthful Governor sinks into his appropriate insignificance.

The following proclamation appeared on Wednesday evening, to the great relief of our citizens:

HEADQUARTERS DEP'T OF LOUISIANA,
(States of Louisiana and Arkansas,)
New Orleans, La., Oct. 28, 1868.

To the People of New Orleans, La.:

FELLOW CITIZENS: I have received instructions from the authorities at Washington to take such action as may be necessary to preserve peace and good order, and to protect the lives and property of citizens.

As the city is quiet to-day, I think it a proper time to make the above announcement, and to call upon the law-abiding citizens to aid me hereafter in carrying out these instructions, and to that end they are earnestly requested to refrain from assembling in large bodies on the streets, to avoid exciting conversation and other causes of irritation and excitement, and to pursue their ordinary avocations as usual.

The police force of the city has been reorganized, and inefficient members have been dropped from the rolls, and others appointed in their places, and General J. B. Steedman appointed chief of police pro tem., by the Board of Police Commissioners. General Steedman and his police force will be supported by the military, and assurances are given alike to the peaceful and the lawless, that everything at my command, and to the utmost of my ability, will be used in the endeavor to obey these instructions.

For the present, political processions and patrolling the streets by armed men, are prohibited.

LOVELL H. ROUSSEAU,
By't Major Gen. U. S. A., Comd'g Dep't.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

INVASION OF THE CRIMEA, its Origin and an Account of its Progress down to the death of Lord Raglan. By Alexander William Kinglake. Volume two. New York: Harper & Brothers. 1868. 12mo., pp. 632.

This elaborate work is accompanied with everything necessary to enable the military reader to realize the vast movements of that celebrated conflict between the Russian and the Englishman. But to the ordinary reader the passages are, some of them, of intense power.

One reads with bated breath the account of the celebrated and fatal light cavalry charge under Lord Cardigan. The death of Nolan, while riding full in the front, by the fragment of a shell, which killed him instantly—the "unearthly" cry—the dead man, with lifted arm, still sitting firm in the saddle—the horse, now unguided, turning back, making his way entirely through the interval of the Thirteenth Light Dragoons—all this is described with a vividness which impresses a life-long picture upon the mind of the reader

The publishers will do us a favor by sending us the first volume.—For sale by George Ellis, No. 7 Old Levee street, New Orleans.

We have received from Mr. A. Eyrich, successor to Bleloch & Co., bookseller and stationer, 130 Canal street:

A BOOK ABOUT BOYS. By A. R. Hope, author of "A Book About Dominies." Boston: Roberts Brothers. 1868. 12mo.

This is an English work; not for boys, but of them. It is a very sprightly work, full of good sense, and written in the style of one thoroughly conversant with boy-nature. It is strange to read a treatise on "boys," as if they were a distinct species of the genus homo. The author takes the side of the boys against the world, and, we think, will effect more than if the same points had been thrown into the form of fiction.

Also from A. Eyrich, 130 Canal street:

LITTLE WOMEN. By Laura M. Alcott. Boston: Roberts & Brothers. Pp. 336.

A very pleasant story book for the young.

THE SCIENTIFIC BASIS OF EDUCATION, demonstrated by an analysis of the temperaments, and of phrenological facts in connection with mental phenomena, and the office of the Holy Spirit in the process of the mind, in a series of letters to the Department of Public Instruction in the city of New York. Second edition. By John Hecker. A. S. Barnes & Co., 1868. 8vo., pp. 227.

This treats of the "spiritual group of faculties" in a man's head, and how to get at a true apostolical succession by selecting those who have an "organic predominance" of these faculties. O me! what is this world to pass through before we all get to the millennium! The only man in the city capable, probably, of understanding this book we have sent for—to take it away.

We have received, through Messrs. Stevens & Seymour, 96 and 98 Common street, the following new publications:

A RUN THROUGH EUROPE. By Erastus C. Benedict. Third edition. New York: A. S. Barnes & Co., 111 and 113 William street. 1868. Pp. 551, 12mo.

This book pretends to be only a recital of things seen—by an excellent observer and his wife. And they have, indeed, picked up a surprising amount of facts and items which lie just a little way outside of the ordinary traveler's path. Evidently two pair of eyes are better than one. The style is transparent, flowing easily, and with sprightly variation. The author expresses his opinion very fully upon the characters and things which are passing before him in the panorama of travel, and with much good sense. We read page after page with fresh interest.

FOURTEEN WEEKS' COURSE IN DESCRIPTIVE ASTRONOMY. By J. Dorman Steele, A. M., principal of Elmira Free Academy. New York: A. S. Barnes & Co., 111 and 113 William street. 1868. Pp. 312, 12mo.

This book appears opportunely. Its object is to inspire youth with an admiration for this noble science. The author has collected from larger and more elaborate works the most important results and discoveries in astronomy, and brought the whole within the comprehension of the young reader. Illustrations, diagrams and maps greatly simplify and aid his method of imparting knowledge.

For sale by Stevens & Seymour, 96 and 98 Common street, New Orleans.

THE INDEPENDENT FOURTH READER. By J. Madison Watson, author of National Readers, Spellers and Primers, etc., etc. New York: A. S. Barnes & Co., 111 and 113 William street. 1868. 12mo., pp. 240.

Some forty pages are devoted to "practical elocution," the rest of it to "select readings." These "readings" are from H. W. Beecher, Bayard Taylor, Hawthorne, John G. Saxe, H. W. Longfellow, John Pierpont, W. C. Bryant, N. P. Willis and Fanny Fern. To these are added readings from Dickens, Charles Kingsley, Shenstone, Wordsworth and Mrs Hemans. This is the fourth of a series of "Readers" called National, by the same author. For sale by Messrs. Stevens & Seymour, 96 and 98 Common street, New Orleans.

PERSONAL.

Dr. McAnally having resigned his position as editor of the St. Louis Christian Advocate, is engaged in his pastorate of Carondelet and Columbia, Illinois. He was seventeen years editor of the St. Louis Advocate. Few men have done as much hard work during the same period. He was sufficiently cautious and bold in the expression of his views, kept up with the events of the times, and through evil report and good nobly maintained the fortunes of the Southern Methodist Church in the Northwest, against "a sea of troubles." We suppose that his health was the only good reason he had for quitting a post which he filled with so much credit.

We clip the following from the St. Louis Christian Advocate:

C. N. D. Campbell, D. D., on last Sabbath, entered on his pastorate at Centenary church. We deeply sympathize with the doctor. He has, since his appointment to this charge, suffered the severest loss a man can suffer—the loss of a good wife. May God bless him and his motherless ones. Let all pray for them.

Rev. G. H. Clinton, appointed to First Church, has not yet arrived, but is expected soon, and his congregation have improved the time most thoroughly and tastefully to renovate and refurnish the church house, both inside and out.

We are sorry to see such men leave the Southwest. They will do good work in the pulpit and in every other part of the minister's calling, no matter where appointed. They might have commanded, and did, the best appointments in the Mobile and Mississippi Conferences. The prayers and love of thousands go with them.

NEGRO RIOT IN ST. BERNARD.

ARSON AND MURDER.

Sunday evening the "Bumble Bees" Democratic Club of the parish of Saint Bernard assembled near the village of Terre-aux-Boeufs for a banner presentation. They were joined by the Constitution Club of Saint Bernard and the Infantes de Seymour of New Orleans. From the statement of Dr. Frederick Knapp, corroborated with other accounts, it appears that during the time the procession was on the move, one of the young men belonging to the city became embroiled with a negro. The rencounter resulted in the negro shooting at the young man, the pistol, however, missing its aim. The young man instantly drew his pistol and returned the fire, killing the negro where he stood.

Considerable excitement ensued, and after some little time had elapsed, a member of the Metropolitan Police attempted to summon a posse comitatus for the purpose of making arrests. While thus engaged he was shot and killed, by whom it was not known.

In the evening the negroes began to assemble and became very threatening and noisy, but seemingly without any definite purpose in view. They announced that they would have revenge for the death of one of their number, in some way. Between ten and eleven o'clock their plans seem to have been matured, and they marched off to a body toward the house of Mr. Pablo Felicn, a baker, who, besides having the reputation of being a fearless, outspoken enemy of the Radical carpet baggers in the parish, was reported as having, at all times, large amounts of money in his establishment.

The attack was made upon the house in force, the white citizens who had gathered about being utterly powerless to prevent it, the negroes outnumbering them twenty to one. The black fiends made quick work of it, murdering Mr. Felicn, his son, eighteen years old, and his sister-in-law. The latter escaped, shot through the head, but died this morning from injuries received. Mrs. Felicn, the wife, escaped by a miracle, carrying a child in her arms. The negroes, after completely sacking the house, set it on fire, the flames consuming, it is said, the remains of Mr. Felicn. Some accounts had it that their bodies were found subsequently out in the back yard. In conclusion Dr. Knapp states that as he came up, yesterday morning, he met a company of United States infantry on their march down to the scene of the disturbance from Jackson Barracks. He found the negroes between his plantation and the city at work, as usual, in the fields, and not much excited by the events which had transpired over night below them.

The families in the neighborhood became alarmed, and the city was filled yesterday with refugees from St. Bernard, men, women and children fleeing for their lives. A large number came during the night in vehicles or on foot, and the steamers Waloon and T. P. May came up yesterday morning crowded with refugees. Mr. Felix Gonzalez, who left Terre-aux-Boufs Sunday night, stopped at the United States Barracks at four o'clock yesterday morning, and the officer in command, Lieutenant Hood, sent a company of infantry down to the scene of the disturbances. The excitement in the lower portion of the city yesterday morning was intense, many of the refugees being friends and relations of some of the residents. The Wide Awake club was preparing to go down by steamers, but it being ascertained that General Rousseau had ordered two companies of infantry down, under command of Captain DeRousseau, the Wide Awakes remained in the city, but prepared at any time to co-operate with the troops.

In the evening everything was again comparatively quiet. The United States troops were supposed to have quiet possession of the parish, but it is impossible as yet to gather any authentic account of the damage done by the negroes or the number killed on either side.—Bulletin, September 27.

General Rousseau, the Governor and the War Department.

On Monday last Governor Warmoth addressed an official communication to General Rousseau, asking the latter to assume the duty of preserving order in this city and the surrounding parishes. General Rousseau forwarded the communication to General Schofield. Below will be found General Rousseau's telegram, and also the reply of the Secretary of War:

[Telegram.]

HEADQUARTERS DEP'T OF LOUISIANA,
NEW ORLEANS, LA., Oct 26, 1868.

Brevet Major General Schofield, Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.:

I have just received the following official communication (which I believe to be true) from the Governor of Louisiana, and ask for instructions in the premises.

Brevet Major General L. H. Rousseau, Commanding Department of Louisiana:

GENERAL: The evidence is conclusive that the civil authorities in the parishes of Orleans, Jefferson and St. Bernard are unable to preserve order, and protect the lives and property of the people. The act of Congress prohibiting the organization of militia in this State, strips me of all power to sustain them in the discharge of their duties, and I am compelled to appeal to you to take charge of the peace of these parishes, and use your forces to that end.

If you respond favorably to my request I will at once order the sheriffs and police forces to report to you for orders.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. C. WARMOTH,
Governor of the State of Louisiana.
L. H. ROUSSEAU,
Brev. Maj. Gen. Com. Dep't of Louisiana.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, Oct. 26, 1868.

Brevet Major Gen. L. H. Rousseau, Commanding Department of Louisiana, New Orleans:

Your dispatch of the 26th, forwarding a message from the Governor of Louisiana, and asking instructions, has been received. You are authorized and expected to take such action as may be necessary to preserve peace and good order, and to protect the lives and property of citizens.

J. M. SCHOFIELD,
Secretary of War.

CITY MORTALITY.—The total number of interments in New Orleans reported last week by the sextons of the various cemeteries to Dr. G. W Dirmeyer, secretary of the Board of Health, is 108, of which 61 were males, 44 females, and 3 not stated; 78 were whites, 16 blacks, 10 mulattoes, and 4 not classified; 57 were children under 10 years, 1 between 10 and 15, 5 between 15 and 20, 9 between 20 and 30, 12 between 30 and 40, 6 between 40 and 50, 4 between 50 and 60, 9 between 60 and 70, 2 between 70 and 80, 1 between 80 and 90, and 2 whose ages were not reported.

THE wheat crop in California amounts to twenty millions of bushels—an enormous yield.

MARRIED.

By the Rev. J. C. Keener, in the Carondelet street church, on the 28th instant, Mr. FERRIS HATHORNE to Miss BETTIE NEELLY, both of this city.

On the twenty-fourth of September, at San Augustine, Texas, by the Rev. D. Shindler, Mr. CHARLES K. SWEET to Miss ELIZA WEST LOVELL. [We wish our young friends great joy.—EDITOR.]

On the thirteenth instant, in Yazoo county, Mississippi, by the Rev. John W. Jones, Mr. W. G. N. STRICKLAND to Miss MARY COLLINS.

On the first of October, 1868, by the Rev. Dr. McFerrin, the Rev. W. E. DOTY, of the Louisiana Conference, to Miss ELIZA, daughter of Dr. J. W. Nelson, of Murfreesboro, Tennessee.

OBITUARIES.

JOHN J. LAMAR died at his residence, in Madison county, Mississippi, August 28 1868.

He had been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South for many years, about one half of which time he had been a steward of the church. At the time of his death he was a steward on Madisonville circuit. He was interested in the institutions of the church, and was always ready to work where it was thought best for him to do so. He was the friend of the preachers, and felt it to be a great privilege to have them visit and stay with him.

Madisonville circuit has lost heavily in its members this year. Yet God has not left us. The workmen die, but still the work goes on! Thank God, others have come in to do their duty also.

H. H. M.

Mrs. MARGARET STEWART was a native of North Carolina, reared in East Tennessee, where she married and became the mother of seven children, and was left a widow about forty six years ago. With her trust in God, she toiled to raise her children for God, and had the satisfaction of seeing them all in the church years ago. All but two of them preceded her to the glory land. She was a quiet, firm, simple, devoted, spiritual Christian—an old-style Methodist. She had been in the church more than fifty years.

She was born March 25, 1790, and died in Madison county, Mississippi, at the residence of her son, Rev. Dr. George W. Stewart, October 18, 1868.

Many of the preachers in Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas can call up pleasant hours spent in the family with this sainted mother. What a legacy to have such a mother! H. H. M.

WILLIAM BRYANT, son of Rev. Henry P. Lewis, of the Mississippi Conference, and Rebecca A. Lewis, was born in Warren county, Mississippi, May 24, 1862, and died in Covington county, Mississippi, September 26, 1868, aged six years, five months and two days. Willie was a bright and cheerful child in health, a patient sufferer in sickness, and now a shining angel in heaven. He who said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven," has taken him to his own arms. Well, let him go, sorrowing parents. "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord." "The grass withereth, and the flower thereof falleth away; but the word of the Lord endureth forever." "Comfort one another with these words."

W. B. LEWIS.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

BLACK HAWK, October 11, 1868.

The following resolutions were passed at the fourth quarterly conference of Black Hawk circuit, Mississippi Conference:

Whereas, It has pleased almighty God, in his wise providence, to call our beloved brother, SAMUEL GALESPIE, from among us by death:

Resolved, That we do hereby express our estimation of his able counsels in our quarterly conference, and of his laborious and efficient services as steward of the circuit, and that we greatly deplore our loss in his death.

Resolved, That we do further express our sorrow at the loss of his godly life and pious example from among us.

Resolved, That we tender our heartfelt sympathies to the family of the deceased, and that a copy of these resolutions be furnished the family, and also that a copy be forwarded to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

J. M. PUGH, P. E.
S. F. OWEN, Secretary.

SAFEST AND MOST EFFECTIVE

REMEDY FOR WORMS

THAT HAS EVER BEEN DISCOVERED

This celebrated specific for Worms is used with the utmost freedom and confidence by gentlemen who have obtained eminence in the medical profession, and many of these, throwing aside their prejudices, have cheerfully given certificates testifying to its superiority. It is used extensively, for the simple reason that Nothing has yet been Discovered which can be Substituted in its Place.

And it is given without apprehension, because every one knows its perfect safety. It has now been before the public for over Forty Years, and has attested its superiority in thousands of cases, throughout all parts of the world.

It is the imperative duty of every parent to watch the health of his child, and to provide himself with this potent specific.

Be careful to observe the initials of the name, and see that you get

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

GOLD BONDS OF THE

CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

A limited quantity of the THIRTY-YEAR SIX PER CENT. FIRST MORTGAGE BONDS of the Central Pacific Railroad Company are offered to investors, for the present, at

103 Per Cent. and Accrued Interest,

IN CURRENCY.

These Bonds are secured by a Trust Deed upon the most important link of the great Inter-Oceanic Railroad, two-thirds of which is already built, at a cost of nearly

ONE HUNDRED MILLIONS,

and which enjoys already a self-sustaining way traffic. The whole line of continuous rail between will be completed by July next, when an immense through business will undoubtedly follow. More than Twelve Hundred Miles of the distance between the Missouri river and the Pacific ocean are already traversed by the locomotive; and it is probable that three hundred miles additional will be completed during the current year. The future of this Line, therefore, is unusually promising.

The Central Pacific Railroad Company

receives from the United States Government about ten millions of acres of

THE PUBLIC LANDS,

situated along the line of their Road; also a Subsidy Loan of UNITED STATES SIX PER CENT. BONDS, averaging $35,000 per mile, as fast as the sections of twenty miles are completed.—They have received, in addition, important grants from the State and cities of California, worth more than $3,000,000 in Gold. The proceeds of these Lands, Bonds, Capital Stock, Subscriptions, Subventions and Net Earnings are invested in the enterprise, to which is added the amount realized from First Mortgage Bonds. These latter have

THE FIRST LIEN UPON THE WHOLE PROPERTY,

and are issued to the same amount only as the Government advances, or to the extent of about one-third the cost value of the Road, equipment, etc., etc.

The Cash Resources are abundant for the completion of the work, and the net earnings, from the way traffic upon three hundred and twenty-five miles now open for business, are

MORE THAN DOUBLE THE CURRENT INTEREST LIABILITIES.

Besides a mileage upon all through business, this Road, having the best lands for settlement, the most productive mines, the nearest markets, and being exempt from competition, will always command large revenues, which are wholly in Coin.

Two-thirds of the entire Loan is already marketed, and, judging by past experience, the Loan will soon be closed. Investors who desire an unusually safe, reliable and profitable security would do well to purchase before the Bonds are all taken.

☞ The Company reserve the right to advance the price at any time; but all orders actually in transitu at the time of any such advance will be filled at the present price. At this time they pay

More than Eight Per Cent. upon the Investment,

and have, from National and State laws, guarantees superior to any other corporate securities now offered.

The First Mortgage Bonds are of $1,000 each, with semi-annual Gold Coupons attached, payable in July and January. Both INTEREST AND PRINCIPAL ARE MADE EXPRESSLY PAYABLE IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN. The back interest from July 1 is charged only at the currency rates.

We receive all classes of Government Bonds, at their full market rates, in exchange for the Central Pacific Railroad Bonds, thus enabling the holders to realize from five to ten per cent. profit and keep the principal of their investments equally secure, and receive the same rate of interest for a longer period.

Orders and inquiries will receive prompt attention. Information, descriptive pamphlets, etc., giving a full account of the organization, progress, business and prospects of the enterprise, furnished on application. Bonds sent by return Express at our cost.

Subscriptions Received by Banks and Bankers, Agents for the Loan.

☞ All descriptions of GOVERNMENT SECURITIES bought, sold or exchanged, at our office and by mail and telegraph, at market rates.

Accounts of Banks, Bankers and others received, and favorable arrangements made for desirable accounts.

MY BABY.

O beautiful rose-leaf,
Close folded to rest
To slumber, like dew-fall,
On mother's warm breast!

O sunbeam, swift fallen,
From hallest skies,
Still radiant and tender,
God's smile in thine eyes!

O happiest blessing
In benison given,
First-born of my bosom,
My blossom of heaven!

O tenderest flutter
Of snowy-soft hands,
Small nestling fingers—
Yet strongest of bands—

That hide in sweet resting
My bosom within.
My baby, my darling,
My child without sin. E.

Was plodding homeward somewhat late;
Rejoiced was she to keep in sight
A splendid glow-worm's useful light,
Which, like a lantern clear, bestowed
Its service o'er her rugged road,

Passing along with footstep firm,
She thus addressed the glittering worm:
"A blessing, neighbor, on your light,
I kindly thank you for't: Good-night."
"What!" said the vain though gifted thing,
"Do you employ the light I bring?
If so, I'll keep it out of view;
I do not shine for such as you."
It proudly then its light withdrew.

A traveler, as he journeyed by,
Had seen with pleased and curious eye
The beauteous lustre now put out;
But, left in darkness and in doubt,
Unconsciously he stepped aside,
And crushed the glow-worm in its pride.

An Old West of Scotland Story.

FROM A SCOTCH SUNDAY SCHOOL BOOK.

A few years ago one of the most popular characters in the west of Scotland was Dr. ——, the physician. He was a universal favorite. The extent of his knowledge, his professional skill and strict integrity, procured for him the respect of all who knew him, while the never-failing good humor, the suavity of manners and great conversational powers by which he was characterized, made him the delight of every society into which he was introduced. I wish that the summing up of his character might stop here; but truth obliges me to add that the doctor, like other men, was not perfect. Unhappily his sentiments as to religion bordered closely upon what is termed materialism. He had no belief in a state of existence beyond the present life. This gentleman was the subject of an occurrence which I am going to relate to you, and which is one of the most extraordinary in real life that has probably ever been heard of. Upon the truth of this story you may place the greatest reliance, as there are many individuals living in Glasgow at this day who were personally and intimately acquainted with the doctor, and who can corroborate my account in every particular.

One day Dr. —— was dining with a party of friends and was observed to be unusually reserved. His customary vivacity was displaced by a settled gloom, and instead of the anecdotical reminiscences with which he was wont to furnish his friends with amusement, his conversation was made up of broken and incoherent sentences. It was evident that his mind was completely carried from the scene which was before him, and though politeness for a time kept the company from prying into the circumstance which occasioned such unusual mental absence, yet in the end they entreated him to explain to them the cause of his singular behavior. Being roused from his reverie, the doctor consented to gratify their curiosity, and accordingly proceeded to give the following narrative, though not without appearing meanwhile to be affected by the most powerful feelings:

"I know not how it is," said he; "I cannot easily account for the gloom which oppresses me, for my reason strives against it; but I have no doubt that I shall add to the surprise you already exhibit when I tell you that my distraction arises from a dream. Yet I am far from being superstitious, and have never been accustomed to place any reliance upon the scenes presented during the nocturnal flights of the imagination. This dream, however, with the thoughts of which I am now troubled, was of a most remarkable description, and in order that you may have some idea of the nature of my reflections upon it I will relate it to you:

"Methought I was walking over a plain, so vast that the extent of it was unlimited. I was going on very merrily, and was accompanied by a numerous assemblage of persons who were as gay as myself. Myriads of people were traversing the same plain in different directions, all seemingly very busy, yet very joyous and unconcerned. After a little I was conveyed near to a very large building, though I remember not how it was I arrived there; neither can I exactly call to mind what kind of a building it was; but it seemed to be a vast and somewhat gloomy castle, and what I have a very vivid recollection of beholding was a large portal closed by enormous gates. As I approached the building the gates opened of their own accord, and, having passed through them, I entered an exceedingly long trance, (lobby,) which, though it was an uncommonly dull place and I was now alone, I went along with no feeling but that of careless indifference. The lobby terminated in a room, if room indeed it may be called, which was without shape, for the limits of the place were lost in a vast and gloomy vacuity which, while it presented a scene of the most imposing magnificence, impressed upon the soul that feeling of dread which ever arises from the contemplation of the extremes of grandeur or of the heights of sublimity. For a moment I gazed in silent awe upon the scene before me; but my attention was speedily directed to a table which stood hard by, and around which were sitting several of the companions of my youth—men with whom I had lived in the greatest intimacy, and with whom I had enjoyed, in the highest degree, the social pleasures of a prosperous life. Alas! those friends are now all dead. The joys I speak of were joys of other days. I instantly conceived the idea that I had met my friends after a long absence, and I felt extremely happy at it. My friends, however, did not share in my joys. They sat motionless as statues, with their eyes fixed immovably upon the table and seemed infected with the gloom which mysteriously shrouded the whole place. Nor were the dresses they appeared in less remarkable than their manner, for each was habited in a mantle of the deepest sable, by which, all but the head, he was completely enveloped. Wondering at what I beheld, and supposing that they had not noticed my entrance, I immediately addressed them in the gay, rattling, careless tone I was wont to do when we were formerly hale fellows. 'Od rabbit it! my lads, what the dickens makes ye so glum? Can't ye give an old friend a welcome? By my troth, y're mighty civil! How d'ye do, I say?' Scarcely had the words escaped my lips when they simultaneously unfolded their mantles, and I discovered the body of every individual to be one mass of living fire! The thrill of horror which shot through me at this sight still affects me. I stood rooted to the spot. They spoke not, but slowly refolding their mantles, shook their heads and gazed on me with aspects more terrible than I can describe. From the hollow sockets of those eyes, where erst had beamed the smiles of happiness, shot rays whose livid brightness made my head sunke. Merciful heaven! what unutterable pangs did I endure. I know not how I survived that awful moment—a moment in which whole ages of agony were summed together. But upon a sudden I became endued with supernatural strength. I rushed from the horrible presence of these awe-stricken victims, bounded wildly along the trance, and quickly won the portal where I had entered. But the gates, however, did not, as before, spontaneously open a passage for me. They were now closed and were guarded by a phantom, whose appearance was frightful beyond expression—fierce, shapeless, ghastly, terrible. It seemed the very emblem of destruction. Yet, notwithstanding the aversion with which I beheld this monster, such was the horror impressed upon me by the scene I had just quitted that I hesitated not a moment in demanding to be let out. 'You pass not here,' said the apparition, 'but upon one condition.' 'Name it,' said I. 'That you return hither in eight days.' With the madness occasioned by despair I made the promise he required. Instantly at his bidding the massy gates recoiled. 'Go,' said the monster, and smiled in the triumphant spirit of the most ineffable scorn; 'but remember thy promise.' I darted through the entrance of this infernal mansion. The gates closed, thundering behind me, and at the harsh grating of their hinges I awoke. Such was my dream. It is needless to comment upon it. I see that it has affected you, and therefore you will not wonder that it has affected me. And when I tell you that this is the eighth day since the period of my promise—my fatal promise—to revisit that abode of misery, I am sure that you will excuse my present melancholy. Do not repeat to me that it is foolish to place any reliance upon dreams. I am aware of all that the philosopher and the Christian can say upon the subject, and I repeat that I am not superstitious; yet, notwithstanding all my endeavors to feel unconcerned, this dream produces in my mind an effect which I can not master. My spirits are oppressed by a melancholy apprehension, which it is impossible for me to overcome."

I need not attempt to describe the astonishment produced by the doctor's narration. The whole company were affected beyond what it is easy to conceive for the farce. The earnestness with which the doctor narrated his dream was no less remarkable than was the dream itself. It was evident that the impression which had been made on his mind was one which it would be very difficult to eradicate; and though his friends exerted themselves on this occasion to dispel the melancholy to which he was become a prey, their efforts were totally unavailing.

Upon the approach of night the party broke up, and the doctor, who was at some distance from home, mounted his horse and departed. The sequel of his story is soon told. He had scarcely reached the middle of his journey when he fell from the saddle, dislocated his neck and died on the spot.

SCIENTIFIC.

HEAT AS A MOTIVE POWER.

No small amount of anxiety has been occasioned of late in Great Britain by certain estimates, based apparently upon substantial premises, going to show the probable not distant failure of the supply of coal for manufacturing purposes. But providential provisions seem likely now to anticipate such a contingency, and render the actual occurrence an event no longer to be dreaded. Captain Ericsson, an honored adopted citizen of this country, the renowned inventor of the iron-clad monitor, of the screw propeller, and the caloric engine, at the present time in his native Sweden, has brought to a successful termination a protracted series of experiments in which he has sought to avail himself of the sun's rays as a motive power.

He has prepared three engines, one of which is moved by steam, the other two by compressed air, and all of them are set in motion and continued at their work by the power of the concentrated rays of the sun. The exhaustion of the coal fields may be looked upon with complaceney if, as it seems now to be probable, the great source of light and heat can be so utilized as to provide a calorific force to keep the engines of the civilized portion of the earth in operation.

Mr. Ericsson, in a letter describing his wonderful invention addressed to the Swedish University of Lund, says with pardonable enthusiasm, "Archimedes exclaimed that his favorite device, the lever, had power enough to heave the earth out of its path. It may be more truly said that the concentration of the radiant heat of the sun furnishes sufficient force to stop the earth in its course." Steam has been one of the most powerful material agents of modern civilization; it has multiplied almost infinitely human force, and given man an extraordinary power to overcome physical obstacles. It has also increased human comforts by affording what would otherwise be beyond the reach of the poor at a cheaper rate, and it has mitigated the oppressive weight of labor by enabling machinery to perform all its heaviest tasks. The cost of fuel has ever limited the widest use of its irresistible force. But if now the inexhaustible sun, by flashing his rays upon an engine, can keep it in constant motion, it is difficult to estimate the effect that it will have upon the world's material progress. Mr. Ericsson meets the natural inquiry as to the practical difficulty growing out of long periods of cloudy and wet weather by intimating, without explanation, that skillful engineers will find no difficulty "in laying up a supply when the sky is clear, and that great storehouse is opened where the fuel may be obtained free of cost and transportation."—New York Christian Advocate.

MISSIONARY NEWS.

Serious difficulties have overtaken the Presbyterian mission in Formosa. A Chinese convert has been stoned to death, a native catechist is in prison, and a mission chapel has been destroyed.

The Baptist churches in Sweden received during the last year eight hundred and fifty members by baptism. Nine new churches were formed, and the total number of Baptists in Sweden was seven thousand four hundred and seventy-eight, in one hundred and ninety-one churches. This, however, does not give the whole number of those baptized during the year, as many of the churches have not sent their statistics. A great drawback to the increase of the denomination arises from the emigration of many members to America. The first church in Stockholm has already lost about one hundred by emigration. In Skane there had been a great revival, and one brother had baptized over two hundred in seven months.

The cathedral built by Bishop Wilson in Calcutta has come entirely under the influence of the Ritualists. Of late there has been witnessed the surpliced priest listening now to the confession of his brother priest, now to that of native Christian penitents kneeling or lying at his feet, followed by absolution as given in the service for the sick. Were English "priests" only concerned, we might pass the matter by with a smile. But the natives have become infected; and one of the preachers, Pundit Nehemiah, has become the apostle of a new Pusey ite sect, and published his "Tract No. 1." Bishop Milman, by his indecision, is strengthening the hands of Attitudinarians, striving to satisfy both parties by his contradictory letters.

On Sunday, June 26, the American consul came into the neighborhood of Antananarivo, the capital of Madagascar, expecting Sunday was still a lucky day with the Hovas. But the government refused to escort him into the city till the holy day was over; and on Monday morning an escort and military band brought him in before the court, which had just adopted the Christian religion and the Christian Sabbath. Thirty Romish priests, besides "sisters of mercy," are in Antananarivo, and attempting to take advantage of the new movement. The depressed state of their congregations led them to insert a clause in the French treaty under consideration that "the queen would bless their congregations;" but the government amended it so that it reads that she "shall protect their congregations."

Japan.—The telegraph tells us that persecution has broken out again in Japan, and that one hundred and fifty native Christians were recently taken from the city of Nagasaki and drowned by order of the Mikado, and a thousand more sent to work in the mines, notwithstanding the remonstrances of the foreign ministers. The Evening Post asks: "Whence did these one hundred and fifty Japanese Christians come?" and expresses surprise to learn that they have survived the persecutions two hundred and fifty years ago, and their supposed extinction two hundred and twenty-eight years since. The Christian Standard thinks it hardly possible that descendants from the converts of the Catholic missionaries can still exist. The modern history of Catholic missions in Japan is not familiar; and we therefore epitomize its facts for our readers. With a remarkable forecasting sagacity, Gregory XVI. erected, in 1846, a vicariate apostolic of Japan and the adjacent islands. Missionaries were kept on the watch for an entrance into the country; but did not succeed till, in 1858, a missioner acted as interpreter to the French plenipotentiary. Churches were erected for foreign residents, and a fine edifice erected, in 1861, in Yokohama; and in 1863 a new church in Nagasaki was built, having its three conspicuous steeples, adorned with as many gilt crosses. On March 17, 1865, some fifteen natives visited the church, and made themselves known as from a village of one thousand five hundred inhabitants, of whom all were Christians. In the early days of May the missioners had heard of two thousand five hundred Christians scattered in the country about Nagasaki. On May 15 the priests received deputies from another island, who assured them that there were still a great number of Christians in Japan—a few in every part. In one district there were grouped together more than a thousand families. Every month added hundreds to the number of the faithful who were reported to the priests. All these kept their faith in secret. The laws requiring the ceremony of trampling on the cross were in many places a dead letter, and at some places Christian officers substituted pictures of the god Shaka for those of Jesus and the Virgin, that the people might trample on them when that revolting practice was in vogue. We heard of persecution renewed last year, in consequence of the refusal of the Christians to submit to heathen rites at funerals. Scores were then imprisoned. In October last fifty Christian prisoners recanted, under fear of instant death. On the very day of their release thirty-eight of them went to the governor's house, and told him that their apostasy was through fear of torture; and that in reparation for their crime they were willing to resume their chains and die. They were placed under a strict guard, but not remanded to prison. At the last reports by mail there were some hundreds of Christians in custody in different provinces. On the sixteenth of last March twenty-two Christians were summoned before the governor of Nagasaki. They went, attended by a great crowd of Christians; and more than three hundred waited near the palace to learn the result of the examination. They stood firmly by their faith, and were allowed to return home unharmed, awaiting instructions from the Mikado. It was hoped that the prompt measures taken by the French, in requiring satisfaction for the wanton murder of ten sailors, would tell in favor of the native Christians, but it seems that the policy of persecution has prevailed. The old bitterness still exists; and the old Christianity is yet strong and true. Let no man say that there is not a deal of good even in a form of Christianity as much corrupted as is Romanism.—Independent.

Lawyers and Preachers.—It has been said by high literary authority, and I wish I could believe it was not true, "that lawyers make their greatest pleas and acquire their greatest influence after they are fifty years of age; but that ministers acquire their greatest reputations and make their most popular sermons before they are thirty." Now I wish that was not true; and yet, in my very heart I had liked to have said I believe it is true, and I think there is a philosophical reason for it. The lawyer, every time he stands up before a court, has to make a new plea. It is no matter whether he is forty-five or fifty; he has got a case and he must make a plea adapted to that case now. Some of us, after we get to be thirty years of age, stick to the old skeleton, and I do not object to that so much as I do object to sticking to the old sermon. Now the old skeleton may have the same exposition of the text, and may bring out its leading doctrines and general principles as well as the modern sermon, and when we give an exegesis in our modern sermon, of course we will give it similar to the one we gave twenty years ago. But the congregation we preached to twenty years ago are dead, and the circumstances of that congregation have passed away, and to stand up and talk now as we talked then is out of all reason; there is no similarity, there is no adaptedness, there is no comparison between the circumstances. Why, a lawyer might just as well get up and repeat his old plea of twenty years ago, as we to preach the old sermon we preached twenty years ago. And how many cases would a lawyer get who did that? And how many congregations ought the minister to get? The fact is, brethren, if we have vivacity, freshness and power in the pulpit, we must have it by studying. And it is no matter how old we are or how many times we have preached, if we are so indolent that we can not make the sermon that we preach this week, we ought not to preach it.—Bishop Jones.

A man who wishes to be known in the country is certainly much in his own light who does not display his name in our advertising columns.
Our terms are precisely the same as those of other weekly newspapers in this city.
We have fewer advertisements than the secular papers, but what we have are read with that conscientious regard for everything that appears in a Christian paper which takes hold—in fact, too strong a hold—and holds the editor responsible for all the patent medicines, hardware, shoes, pork, flour, and even whisky, which may be set forth in its columns.

The terms of advertising are as follows:

THE HOME MONTHLY, New Orleans, for 1867.
The HOME MONTHLY will contain forty-eight pages of reading matter, printed upon fine paper and in clear type, and will, from time to time, be accompanied by elegant steel-plate engravings. The subscription price will remain $3 per annum, or $1.50 for six months, invariably in advance. In order to build up a still larger circulation, we have concluded to offer the following
Liberal Inducements to Agents.
To any person sending us three yearly subscriptions, with nine dollars, we will send the MONTHLY six months, or allow them, if they prefer, to retain One Dollar and Twenty-five Cents of the amount.
To any person sending us six subscriptions, with eighteen dollars, ($18,) we will send the MONTHLY one year, or allow them to retain Two Dollars and Fifty Cents of the amount.
On amounts for subscription less than nine dollars, agents will be allowed to retain ten per cent.
Ministers, it is hoped, will act as agents, not so much from pecuniary considerations as from a laudable desire to assist in building up a home literature worthy of a place among the families of the South and on the centre-tables of a Christian people.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.
The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the
GOOD SAMARITAN,
by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as the means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of
At Least Thirty per Cent, as Compared with any other Stove.
and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally known as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. That meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.
It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to these Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the
BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.
For sale only by the undersigned.
In addition to the above, I also have a large and complete assortment of COOKING STOVES, comprising all of the leading Stoves of the day, equal to any offered in any other house in this city.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY, AT Greensboro, Alabama.
The next session of this Institution begins the first Wednesday in October, and is divided into two terms.
TUITION.

Academic Department, per term	$35 00
Preparatory Department, per term	30 00
Contingent fee, per term	2 50

A fee of $5 is charged those who attend the schools of Chem. and Nat. Phil.
Board, exclusive of washing and lights, $16 to $20 per month. By messing it can be obtained even cheaper than at these rates.
Sons of ministers of the Gospel in the regular work, and those studying for the ministry, are admitted free of tuition.
The whole expense for the scholastic year, including everything except books and clothing, will be $250, payable one-half at the opening of the session and the remainder on the 15th of February. If the student wishes to board in a private family it will be $280. This great reduction in the price of board and tuition will bring the advantages of the University within the reach of those whose limited means have heretofore placed the highest scholastic training beyond their reach, as well as secure the patronage of those who, on the score of economy, are sending their sons out of the State to be educated.
Especial attention is called to the fact that preparatory students are taught exclusively by the Faculty.
The Law School has been organized under the management of Hons. Judge Coleman and A. Benners.

NEW PATENT PIANOS.
RAVEN & BACON, (established in 1826.)
Warerooms, Nos. 611 and 616 Broadway,
NEW YORK.
Manufacturers of Piano Fortes, with the patent Combination Sounding-boards,
Patented August 14th, 1866.
This invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affects the sounding board, the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a pure liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. The sounding-board released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding-boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection, and its vibratory quality increased.
Our Pianos are first-class in every respect, and purchasers will have not only our own guarantee as to their quality, but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

EAST ALABAMA MALE COLLEGE
AT AUBURN, ALA.
The Fall term of this Institution will open on the FIRST WEDNESDAY in SEPTEMBER, next, and close on the 20th December. Besides the regular course of studies for graduation, large facilities are afforded for instruction in the Commercial and Agricultural branches. Separate schools for these branches, in connection with the College, were authorized at the last annual meeting of the Board of Trustees. A student not wishing to take either the regular or a partial literary course in the College, may confine himself to either of these Departments, and in a short time become qualified for business.
The Preparatory Department, with competent teachers, will be under the special supervision of the Faculty.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market has exhibited only a moderate degree of animation since our last issue. There has been less doing in the wholesale trade, country merchants, it is supposed, preferring to remain at home until after the election. The outrages committed by the negroes in various parts of the interior have excited a sense of insecurity, which prevents our friends from absenting themselves, for however short a period, from their parishes and domicils. Owing to these circumstances there has been a general falling off in the city trade. Our leading staple, nevertheless, has shown unusual activity. New sugar and molasses have arrived rather more freely and commanded full prices, but the supplies are still too light to offer any scope to purchasers. The movement in Western produce, as well as tobacco, has been on a moderate scale, operations being restricted both by light supplies and a limited demand.

The weather was clear and cool on Saturday, hot on Monday it was cloudy, and on Tuesday it was dark and rainy. Our accounts from the interior are favorable with regard to the cane, which is yielding much more satisfactorily than last year, wherever grinding has commenced. The intelligence in relation to cotton is not so cheering. In some localities previous anticipations have not been realized, and in many others it is feared that the yield will be curtailed by inefficient picking.

The river has fallen one foot since our last report, and is now eleven feet six inches below high water mark.

Cotton.—The following are the arrivals since the 23d instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales	14375
Lake		24
Mobile		160
Texas		60
Total		14619

The demand has been much more active, and factors have been enabled to establish an advance of fully ¾c. per lb. On Saturday the movement commenced with a fair degree of spirit, and although it was checked by a decline in gold at New York, and a proportionate falling off in foreign exchange, as well as more stringent pretensions on the part of factors, yet the demand became more active, and the sales summed up 4,400 bales, at about previous rates at the opening, but subsequently at an average advance of ¼c., buyers for France, Great Britain and the North participating in the business. On Monday the favorable tenor of the Liverpool accounts, and, as it was supposed, the limits being raised on some of the pending Liverpool orders, gave an additional stimulus to the demand, which, in fact, at one time was not only spirited, but even excited, and under the active competition among buyers factors were enabled to establish a further advance of ½c. The sales summed up 8,200 bales, which was much the heaviest business of the season. On Tuesday the market opened with a moderate inquiry, and the movement being checked by dark and rainy weather, and there being only a limited supply on sale, as well as by many factors asking about ½c. above the ruling rates, the business was confined to 3,100 bales, at figures generally in accordance with Saturday's prices, but in some cases more in favor of the seller.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 15,700 bales.

The receipts at this port since the first of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 129,354 bales, against 30,595 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 129,577 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 16,744 bales to Great Britain, of 24,120 to France, and of 2,119 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we now quote as follows:

SYNOPSIS OF CHARTER.

The plan proposed by the Mutual Aid and Benevolent Life Insurance Association is as follows:

1. Each person, upon enrolling himself or herself as a member, shall pay into the Treasury a membership fee, if between the ages of

16 to 30, inclusive, the sum of $10 00
31 to 40, inclusive, the sum of 15 00
41 to 50, inclusive, the sum of 20 00
51 to 60, inclusive, the sum of 25 00

which payment constitutes him or her a life member.

2. A Life Insurance Policy is issued for a sum equal to one dollar for each enrolled member appearing on the books of the Association, at the decease of said member.

But in no event shall the amount paid on said policy exceed $5,000.

3. On the death of any member an assessment is made upon each policy holder for one dollar and twenty-five cents, payable at the office of the Association, within thirty days after notification thereof, by publication in one daily newspaper published in the city of New Orleans, in English and one in French, for five consecutive days, and if the policy holder resides out of New Orleans he shall be notified in writing.

4. Should the number of members exceed five thousand, the assessment of $1 25 will be reduced in proportion to the number of members exceeding five thousand.

5. Should any member fail to pay the assessment in the time specified, he forfeits all previous payments or credits.

6. All accumulations from whatever source, such as forfeitures, interest, etc., shall be credited upon the books of the Association to the members pro rata, to be withdrawn in lieu of assessments. oct17 1y

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, AT Baton Rouge, Louisiana.
ELEVENTH SESSION.—TERMS REDUCED
The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.
The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first-rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.
There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.
Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar, etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.
SPECIAL CAUTIONS.
Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health.
A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket-money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.
It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.
Terms—Board and Tuition per session, $300.
Payments—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.
Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.
Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.
No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

FALL AND WINTER SESSION.
From the third Monday in September to January 1 ..... $16 00
From January 1 to April 1, 12 weeks ... 12 00
From April 1 to close of June, 12 weeks 12 00
Incidental Fees—First session, $2 50; second session, $2; third session, $1 50. All payments in advance.
Indigent young men can have tuition free but will be expected to pay the incidental fees.
Boarding can be had (including lodging, washing fires and lights) in the families of citizens at $5 per week.
Boys who have made some progress in Arithmetic, English Grammar and Geography can be received into the Preparatory Department. Terms, same as above named

Every boarder will furnish a pair of blankets, a pair of sheets, a pair of pillow slips, a counterlet or spread, and towels and lights.
For catalogues, containing full particulars, address the President. july25 3m

FRANKLIN SEMINARY.
THE subscriber would inform his friends and the public that he has in charge FRANKLIN SEMINARY, and has a good school, which is designed to be permanent, in successful operation, and that he is prepared to receive any number of pupils that may be entered to his care. He would board, in his own family, some eight or ten pupils.
His experience enables him to assure patrons and friends that the education of their children and wards will be secured by confiding them to his institution.
The following are his terms of tuition, payable in advance, per session of five months:

Elementary Branches	$20 00
Higher Branches	25 00
Latin, Greek, etc	30 00

French, extra.
Board can be had, in good families, for $15 per month, exclusive of lights and washing. Present session ends on the 7th of February, and the next ends on the 10th of July. No vacation until July. Pupils can be entered at any time. For further particulars apply to B. CLEGG, Principal.

WHOLE NUMBER..... 701.

NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 1868.

$3 00 A YEAR IN ADVANCE.
OFFICE—112 CAMP STREET.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

SAVANNAH, Nov. 3.—Evening.—Great excitement in the city. On account of the disturbances this morning the negroes threatened to burn the town. Only two negroes were killed this morning, and from fifteen to twenty wounded.

A large body of negroes marched toward the city, on the Ogeechee road this evening. They were met by special police and ordered to disperse; on their refusal to do so trouble ensued, and two negroes are reported killed.

AUGUSTA, Ga., Nov. 4.—All quiet here. Leading citizens are acting with the military to preserve the peace. No further trouble is apprehended.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 4.—The President to day directed the assignment of Brevet Major-General Edward R. S. Canby to the military district and department of Texas, with instructions to relieve General Reynolds of the command as early as may be practicable.

Upon assuming command General Canby is authorized, when he may find it necessary to a faithful execution of the laws, to exercise any and all powers conferred by act of Congress upon district commanders, and any and all authority pertaining to officers in charge of military departments.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 4.—Oregon returns show large Republican gains, but hopes of carrying the State Democratic.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 4.—Nevada is conceded to the Republicans.

SPAIN.

The succession to the Spanish throne remains undetermined.—Prince Alfred of England and ex-King Ferdinand Augustus Francis of Portugal have been mentioned.

General Prim is intriguing to gain the supreme power, but Espartero will do his utmost to thwart his designs.

The free schools of Spain have been reopened.

The Central Junta have issued a decree declaring that all children born of slaves after the 19th of October shall be free.

The Spanish Junta says that it is for the Cortes to decide upon a form of government.

General Prim disclaims all pretensions to royalty, and declares he would rather leave the country than accept the crown.

Mr. John P. Hale, the United States minister, has frequent audiences with Generals Serrano and Prim.

Senor Olozaga has declared in favor of a monarchy, and is supported by Serrano and Topete.

THE California Labor Exchange states that boys receive there from $10 to $20 per month and board; and that there are on its books fifty applications for them.

AS THE rivers cannot rest until they pour themselves into the bosom of the sea, so neither can renewed souls find rest till they come into the bosom of God.

THE Jewish faith in this country is represented by nine periodicals. The Hebrew population in the United States is estimated at three hundred thousand.

THE Egyptian cotton crop for this year is reported at four hundred thousand bales, against two hundred and fifty thousand last year.

LARGE associations of wine growers from southern France are coming to the United States to grow grapes.

IT IS estimated that fifty thousand persons in Switzerland are employed in making watches.

ENGLAND has three thousand steam plows, Egypt two hundred, the United States two.

THE first American vessel went to China in 1786, and the trade has increased ever since.

A MONEY order system is to be established between Germany and the United States.

AUSTRALIA has a kind of bee that does not sting, and resembles a large horse fly.

PRESIDENT JOHNSON has lost twenty-one pounds of flesh since he became President.

BISMARCK has an estate covering one hundred and sixty thousand acres.

ENGLISH engineers are to build the underground railroad in New York.

THE ELECTION.

LOUISIANA.

MONROE, Nov. 4.—Fair estimates of the Democratic majority in fifth district can not be given to-day. Vienna, Democratic majority 626; Douglas, 54; Delhi, 154—no Republican votes cast; Minden, 428; Union parish almost unanimous; Onachita, majority for Seymour 267; McGrauic, 211. No disturbance at polls.

HOUMA, Terrebonne, La., Nov. 4—The Radical majority in Terrebonne is about 192. The election passed off very quietly.

St. Helena parish—Democratic majority 1,009.

Concordia parish—Claimed by the Republicans by 1,700 majority.

SOUTHWEST PASS, Nov. 4.—Total vote 190. Democratic 183, Republican 7.

QUARANTINE STATION, Plaquemines parish, Nov. 4.—Precinct No. 8, 130 Democratic, 49 Republican. All quiet at the polls. Precinct No. 4, left bank, Democratic 33, Republican 12. Right bank did not hold an election—polls not opened.

POINTE-A-LA HACHE, Nov. 4.—No election in the seventh precinct. At the Court House, Pointe-a-la-Hache, Democratic majority 75.

FRANKLIN, La., Nov. 4.—Returns have been received from the following precincts: Stansbury 48 Democratic majority, Jeanrett 26, Doty 88, Cypremot 38, Chareuton 196, this place (Franklin) 329; Centerville gives a Radical majority of 1. Pattersonville, 91 Democratic majority; Brashear city, 23 Radical majority.

MERMENTAU, La., Nov. 4.—Democrats estimate their majority in St. Landry parish at 3,500. Mermentau precinct gives 42 Democratic majority—no Radicals.

Parish of St. Martin will give not less than 1,200.

Radical majority in Terrebonne, 152.

Democratic majority in Lafourche, 177.

BATON ROUGE, La., Nov. 4.—Colonel Macon, president Democratic State Central Committee: West Baton Rouge gives 150 Radical majority.

East Feliciana gives 767 majority for Seymour.

BAYOU SARA, Nov. 4—This parish has given a Republican majority of 460. Full vote.

Estimated Democratic majority in St. Bernard 400.

NEW ORLEANS.

Eighth Ward	13	1,632	1,619
Ninth Ward	9	1,718	1,709
Tenth Ward	33	2,608	2,575
Eleventh Ward	11	1,860	1,849
Total	271	23,796	23,525

In Algiers we learn that about 1,700 votes were polled, of which but few were Radicals.

NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, Nov. 4.—Hoffman is Governor by about 25,000 majority.

Governor Seymour carries the State by about 7,000 and the city by 59,000.

Hoffman's majority in the city is 70,000.

The Legislature is probably Democratic.

The Democratic city and county ticket in New York nets 60,000 majority.

The Democrats elect 13 and the Radical 18 Congressmen in the State.

The Democrats have carried in New Jersey the Governor and the Legislature, and four out of five Congressmen, by an average majority of 10,000.—New Orleans Times.

NEW YORK, Nov. 4.—Seymour's majority estimated at 5,000. The Legislature is Republican.

New York elects 18 Republican and 13 Democratic Congressmen. First to eleventh districts inclusive elect Democratic Congressmen.

The Times says Hoffman has carried the State by 8,000 majority.

Seymour's reported majority in Kings county is 13,189. Hoffman runs about 1,200 ahead of Seymour

NEW YORK, Nov. 4.—There seems no doubt now that Seymour has carried New York by a majority ranging from 7,000 to 10,000. Up to this hour returns show that the Republicans have the Assembly by a majority of 10 on joint ballot, thus securing the re-election of Senator Morgan.

NEW YORK, Nov. 4.—The latest Tribune extra gives New York unofficially to Seymour by 4,955.

The Telegram (Dem.) claims a majority in the Assembly and in the State, and asserts that Seymour will be the next United States Senator from New York.

ALBANY, Nov. 4.—Seymour's majority in this county is 1,900. Hoffman's, 2,200. The Evening Journal concedes the State to Seymour by 8,000 majority, and to Hoffman by 20,000. It claims the Assembly as 74 Republicans to 54 Democrats.

NEW YORK, Nov. 3.—The Post says the authorities have evidence that over 15,000 fraudulent votes were cast in this city, and Hoffman's election will be contested. It is claimed that the seventh ward in Jersey city cast twice as many votes as there are people in the ward. The Republicans defeated in that district will contest.

PENNSYLVANIA.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 4.—A special dispatch to the Evening Telegraph says additional returns from the State since morning are favorable to the Democrats.

NEW JERSEY.

TRENTON, N. J., Nov. 4.—Democrats elect Governor and 4 members of Congress.

The Democrats elect four or five Congressmen, and a United States Senator, Republicans losing.

NEWARK, N. J., Nov. 4.—The whole State is reported about 1,000 majority for Seymour.

The Senate will have 12 Democrats and 9 Republicans, and the Assembly 32 Democrats and 28 Republicans, thus securing a Democratic Senator in place of Frelinghuysen.

OHIO.

CINCINNATI, Nov. 3.—Republican majority 4,500; Republican gain 2,500.

CLEVELAND, Nov. 3.—Returns are scattering, but becoming more complete. All from Ohio and Indiana, without exception, show large Republican gains.

The Republican majority in this State will be 35,000.

All the counties in northern Indiana show Republican gains.

CLEVELAND, Nov. 3.—In Illinois the Democrats carry the seventh, sixteenth, eleventh and probably the eighth Congressional districts. Democrats make gains in central Illinois.

WISCONSIN.

MILWAUKIE, Nov. 3.—Returns from sixty towns indicate that the State has gone Republican by 5,000 majority.

KENTUCKY.

Returns from the State are very meagre, but indicate that the State has gone Democratic by about 90,000.

ALABAMA.

The dispatches received from the different parts of the State show the probability of its going for Seymour.

CALIFORNIA.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 3.—Midnight. The city has gone Democratic by about 1,500 majority. Returns from the interior come in slowly and indicate large Republican gains.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 4.—The State returns are meagre. The Times (Rad.) claims the State for Grant. Johnson and Axtell are elected to Congress.

WASHINGTON DISPATCHES.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 3.—Of eighteen points in North Carolina only six show Democratic majorities, and these are light as compared with Republican majorities at other points.

New Hampshire and Connecticut both go for Grant.

Bates is elected.

The Radical majority in Maine is estimated at 30,000.

Rhode Island gives Grant an increased majority.

All the Republican wards of Philadelphia show increased majorities for Grant.

Boston gives 4,000 Republican majority.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 4, 3 30 A. M.—The following seems to be the result from returns received up to this hour:

For Grant—Maine, 30,000 majority; New Hampshire, 6,000; Vermont, 30,000; Massachusetts, 20,000; Connecticut, 3,000; Rhode Island, 6,500; Pennsylvania, 20,000; Ohio, 40,000; Indiana, 10,000; Iowa, 5,000; Illinois, 40,000; Michigan, 25,000; Wisconsin, 15,000; Minnesota, 10,000; Kansas, 10,000; West Virginia, 8,000; Tennessee, 30,000; California, 5,000; Nebraska, 5,000; Missouri, 8,000.

The following States have gone for Seymour:

New York, 5,000; Maryland, 25,000; Delaware, 2,500; Kentucky, 90,000; Alabama, 5,000; Georgia, 30,000; Louisiana, 30,000; New Jersey, 5,000.

Whitefield's Unpublished Letters.

The following letters of the eloquent Whitefield are just brought to the attention of the public for the first time. They are all addressed to Rev. Dr. Robert Walker, of Edinburgh. We give them entire.

NEWCASTLE, August 9, 1750.

MY DEAR DOCTOR: Here will I set up my Ebenezer, for hitherto hath my God helped me. Traveling has already recruited my animal spirits; and Jesus, in the way, vouchsafes to comfort my soul. To-morrow, God willing, I move hence. I could not help writing the inclosed. Be pleased to seal and deliver it to our friend, if yet in the land of the living, or rather dying; for at the best, this is but a dying life. In heaven we shall live indeed. There I expect to meet you. Jesus can bring you there. Look to, and lean on him, and then you can not possibly miscarry. Do not stay to look behind you, but go forward. Press on, and though faint, yet still pursue.—Jesus will make you more than conqueror through his love. May this be shed abroad abundantly in your heart by the Holy Ghost! I send you, and all dear friends, a thousand thanks for all favors. And I beg you would all never cease to pray for, my very dear friend, your's most affectionately in our blessed Lord. G. W.

BIRMINGHAM, October 1, 1750.

MY VERY DEAR DOCTOR: I hoped ere now to have gotten leisure to send you a long, a very long, letter. But traveling is my lot; and by that, and frequent preaching, I am prevented writing as I would otherwise do. You must be content with a few lines, as a token of a poor pilgrim's unfeigned love. When we see dear Mr. Leveston again, our fellowship with God and one another will be uninterrupted. Do not wish him down in this lower world; this great infirmary, this Aceldama, this field of blood. We shall go to him; he will not return to us. I wish you would send me the verses he gave you. He is singing sweetly now in heaven. O! my dear friend, let us look to Jesus, and ripen for that blessed place as fast as we can. I hope you find your resolutions more invigorated, and the invisible realities of another world more impressed on your heart than ever. This is the first day of a new month, whereon I trust we have felt the sweets of redeeming love. Multitudes attend here; and many souls in these parts know the joyful sound. I purpose preaching about this country a fortnight, and return to London in about three weeks. For these four last Sabbaths I have preached at places greatly distant, namely Portsmouth, Chatham, Gloucestershire and Birmingham. I shall have time enough to rest in heaven. Help me thither by your prayers. As the Redeemer enables, the favor shall be returned. I have wrote to Lady Frances. You must remember me in the kindest manner to good Mr. Nimmo and his family, Mr. Gales, Peters, Trotter, Walker, etc. That grace, mercy and peace may be multiplied on you all, is the hearty prayer of, very dear sir, your most affectionate obliged friend and ready servant for Christ's sake.

G. WHITEFIELD.

ASHBY, January 29, 1750-1.

MY VERY DEAR SIR: It is high time to answer your kind letter. I am doing it at Ashby, whither I did post, not knowing whether I should see good Lady Huntingdon alive. Blessed be God, she is somewhat better, and I trust will not as yet die, but live, and abound more and more in the work of the Lord. Entreat all our friends to pray for her. Indeed she is worthy. Her sister-in-law, Lady Frances Hastings, lies dead in the house. She was a retired Christian, lived silently, and died suddenly without a groan. May my exit be like hers! Whether right or not, I can not help wishing that I may go off in the same manner. To me it is worse than death to live to be nursed, and see one's friends weeping about one. Sudden death is sudden glory. Methinks it is falling asleep indeed, or rather, a translation. But all this must be left to our heavenly Father. He knows what is best for us and others. Let it be our care to have all things ready. Let the houses of our hearts and our temporal affairs be put in order immediately, that we may have nothing to do but to obey the summons, though it should be at evening, cock-crowing, or the morning. Physicians that are always attending on the dying, one would imagine, in a peculiar manner should learn to die daily. May this be your daily employ! I believe it is, though, like me, you must complain that the old man dies hard. Well, has he got his deadly blow? Die then he shall, even that death which he put our Lord to. O that the language of our hearts may be, Away with him! crucify, crucify him! This is painful. But the Redeemer can help us to bear it:

Thou wilt give strength, thou wilt give power,
Thou wilt in time set free;
This, great Emmanuel, let us hope
Not from ourselves, but thee.

May this be the language of our hearts! We shall then reap in due time if we faint not. I write this out of the fullness of my heart. You will receive it as such, and remember me in the best manner to all friends. I take it exceeding kind that Mr Nimmo paid Mrs. Galatine a visit. It was acting like himself and the rest of his dear family. I begin to give my wife's case quite over. About ten days will determine. You shall hear how the Lord orders. This we know, he will order all things well. We have had good times. All glory be to Jesus through all eternity. Adieu. Your's, etc., G. W.

LONDON, November 10, 1750.

MY VERY DEAR DOCTOR: I thank you heartily for your kind letter, and the verses sent with it. They are swan-like verses, but much inferior to what the author is singing now before the throne of God. Blessed be his name that some in Holland are beginning to learn that song which he is now employed in. Can you not procure me particulars from Mr. Erskine? I am glad he has spoken out so well in his printed sermon. The times require plainness of speech—compromising matters will not do. Agitur de vita et sanguine Domini. Happy they who are called out to be confessors to the truths of Jesus in this wicked and adulterous generation. Great shall be their peace on earth. Infinitely greater shall be their reward in heaven. May my dear Mr. Walker help to adorn this blessed train! Indeed I believe you will. Fear not, dear sir, but go on in the strength of Christ. He is engaged to make you more than conqueror through his love. I long to take the field again. I am now in winter quarters, which are made very pleasant; but I shall count the days till the spring appears. I long for that unspeakably more than the birth of a child; but if the Lord shall give me one, I hope it will be trained up for his glory. Continue to pray for us. We do for you and all our other Scotch friends. You may communicate what I have wrote concerning my wife to Mr. Ramsay, Nimmo, and select friends. As we were once mistaken before, I would be more cautious in speaking. For the present I must bid you farewell. Write to me as often as you can. God willing, you shall have speedy answers from, my very dear sir, your's, etc., G. W.

P. S.—I wait upon the great ones once a week. They hear gladly. My young man returns his due respects. The Lord Jesus be with your spirit. I intend answering dear Mr. Trotter and Peters soon.

LONDON, December 17, 1750.

MY DEAR DOCTOR: I received your kind letter, and would have answered it much sooner had I not been prevented by sickness. For near a fortnight I have been confined to my room; but, through the divine blessing, I am now enabled to preach again. Praise the Lord, O my soul! My disorder was a violent fever. Jesus has rebuked it. I am raised up once more. O may it be that I may minister unto him! For to me to live is Christ. But, alas! how little do I live to his glory! Yesterday I entered upon my seven-and-thirtieth year. I am ashamed to think I have lived so long and done so little; and yet every year, day and hour of my life hath been crowned with the divine goodness.... O, my dear friend, let this be our motto—Virimus ut vivamus. It is enough when we come to our last moments to have nothing to do but to die. Blessed be God that you have courage given you to speak to the dying. A word spoken in such a season, how good is it? May the great physician take you under his peculiar care, forgive you all your sins, and heal all your diseases! Pray remember me to dear Mr. Nimmo and his family, and all my dear friends. I purpose writing to my friend Johnny Trotter and others as I get strength. At present I must content myself with sending general but cordial salutations, and begging the continued interest of your prayers in behalf of, my very dear sir, your's, etc., G. W.

My wife sends cordial love to all. I think her case yet somewhat dubious.

GLASGOW, July 12, 1751.

MY VERY DEAR SIR: Though I hope to see you by the middle of next week, yet love constrains me to send you a few lines. I hope they will find you busy for God, and determined more and more to know nothing but Jesus Christ and him crucified. I still find that he is all in all. His love is stronger than death. Fain would I say to those corruptions which made him bleed, "Away with them, away with them; crucify them, crucify them." He will take me at my word. Lord, help me to bear and cheerfully undergo the painful, salutary operation. He will, he will. As our day is, shall our strength be. Though faint, he yet enables to pursue. We have seen wonders in Ireland, and people hear as usual at Glasgow. Particulars expect when we meet. In the meanwhile cease not praying for, my very dear sir, your's most affectionately in our common Lord. G. W.

LONDON, August 30, 1751.

MY DEAR DOCTOR: With difficulty I get time to thank you for your letter, and send you a few parting lines. I am just going on board, and expect to sail to-morrow. Our friendship, though begun on earth, shall be carried on to all eternity in heaven. There will we sing endless praises to the Great Physician of souls. My heart is full. I could write much, but have not time; with parting, preaching and business, I have been almost killed. But Christ can strengthen. My very dear sir, pray for me. Beg the same favor of all my dear inquiring friends, and miss no opportunity of writing to your's most affectionately in our blessed Lord. G. W.

THE ST. BERNARD TROUBLES.

FURTHER PARTICULARS AND INCIDENTS.

It is now ascertained that Pablo Feliu alone was killed. When the negroes, numbering some four or five hundred, surrounded the house, he ordered his wife to load his guns, and a young apprentice to load those of his son, while they were to shoot. He and his son shot some twenty-five or thirty shots, killing and wounding, it is presumed, several of the bloodthirsty besiegers. When he saw that everything was lost, he told the apprentice to take his two young children and hide them in the canes. This was done heroically by the young man, whose name is Raoul Jupas, scarcely fifteen years old.

After further defense, he ordered his wife to escape with her babe. She in endeavoring to do so was pushed back several times into the flames. She finally succeeded in making her escape. Owing to the cries of the babe, which could not be suppressed in the canes, she was again caught by the merciless negroes and forced back to the burning house. She said to them: "You have killed my husband and my children (she thinking that the others had been massacred,) you have burned my house; then kill me now and be done with it." The negroes replied: "No. We will take you back to the house and burn you in it with your husband and children. Give us the keys."

They took her back to the house, and as it was by that time all in flames, and as they were intent on securing their plunder and heard of the approach of the whites, she again escaped, and is now safe with her sister, who is severely wounded in the head.

The charred bodies found next morning are supposed to be that of Pablo Feliu and some negroes whom he killed before succumbing himself. He was a very brave man, and is reported to have died fighting heroically and grasping his gun.

The son of our fellow-citizen, Major John S. Tully, was living with his grandmother, about a quarter of a mile from the scene of murder. The family were compelled to flee for protection, and the poor child some four years old, was in the road all night with his grandmother and others on their way to this city.

Major Tully saw his son yesterday; he is safe and in good health. Our friend must certainly have been laboring under a painful state of mind and anxiety as to the safety of his son. We congratulate Major Tully on the pleasure he had of receiving his child in his arms. How many sins will the Radical party have to account for?

At present everything is quiet in St. Bernard, but the houses of the whites are without women or children, the white men, who are reported to have acted very bravely, alone remaining.—Crescent, Oct. 31.

THE LAMB OF GOD.

MR. EDITOR: You will confer a favor on a number of your subscribers by publishing the following verses in your paper. The author is unknown to me. I have been singing them for fifteen years, and they are new wherever I have been. I caught them from a passing minister.

Your's, in haste, J. NICHOLSON.

I.

Behold! behold! the Lamb of God!
On the cross, on the cross.
For you he shed his precious blood,
On the cross, on the cross.
O hear his all-important cry:
Eli, Lama, Sabathani,
Draw near and see your Saviour die,
On the cross, on the cross.

II.

Come, sinner, see him lifted up,
On the cross, on the cross,
For you he drinks the bitter cup,
On the cross, on the cross.
The rocks do rend, the mountains shake,
While Jesus doth atonement make,
While Jesus suffers for your sake,
On the cross, on the cross.

III.

Behold his arms extended wide,
On the cross, on the cross.
Behold his bleeding hands and side,
On the cross, on the cross.
The sun with all his rays of light,
And heaven, are clothed in shades of night,
While Jesus doth with devils fight,
On the cross, on the cross.

IV.

And now the mighty deed is done,
On the cross, on the cross.
The battle's fought, the victory won,
On the cross, on the cross.
To heaven he turns his languid eyes;
"'Tis finished" now the Conqueror cries;
Then bows his sacred head and dies,
On the cross, on the cross.

V.

Where'er I go I'll tell the story
Of the cross, of the cross.
In nothing else my soul shall glory,
Save the cross, save the cross.
Yes, this my constant theme shall be,
Through time and in eternity,
That Jesus tasted death for me,
On the cross, on the cross:

VI.

Let every mourner come and cling
To the cross, to the cross.
Let every Christian come and sing
Round the cross, round the cross.
Then let the preacher take his stand,
And with the Bible in his hand,
Declare the triumphs through the land,
Of the cross, of the cross.

MARIANNA DISTRICT, MONTGOMERY CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: I have finished my third round on the Marianna district, and am grateful to report the district, for the most part, in an improving condition. An increase has been reported on nearly every charge, and a very important item is that most of the accessions were reported converted.—Sometimes large returns are made, which sound well, but few if any conversions mentioned. This is to be regretted. The church is often injured by large accessions of unconverted members, who, when they join the church, cease striving, sit down quietly, and are "at ease in Zion." To increase the numerical strength of the church, at the expense of its spirituality, is a great and fatal error.

The district has been smitten with drouth and caterpillar, and consequently the means of money thereby diminished. Nevertheless, we have hopes that the finances of the church will be brought up, by the session of Conference, better than our fears.

Our district meeting was held from the 3d to the 6th of September, in Newton, a town in the Haw Ridge circuit, and the county seat of Dale county, Alabama. It was a decided success. We doubt if a more interesting district meeting has been held in the connection. Bishop Wightman was present and presided; and though much enfeebled by long travel and continuous preaching, and addresses at district meetings and college commencements, to listen to his sermons and speeches one would never suppose that his strength was in any wise abated. His addresses in the district conference, full of pathos and power, and burning with zeal and holy fire, quite moved the hearts of the official members of the church, and all went away with exalted views of our Zion, and a determination to "pray for the peace of Jerusalem," and labor for her prosperity more than ever.

No one felt or expressed a desire to overhaul and reconstruct our ecclesiastical machinery; that, in the language of the Committee on the State of the Church, "success did not lie in the direction of change," but that what we need is live men, full of faith and the Holy Ghost, to work that machinery efficiently. Our church is not a "joint-snake, that flies asunder every two or four years, and then comes together again," but a beautiful, glorious, harmonious whole, "fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, making increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love."

The opening sermon was preached by the Rev. E. J. Hamill, showing clearly and forcibly the true idea of the Christian church. The sermon demonstrated clearly that infants are members of the church, and we do not think that any Methodist could have listened to it without being convinced that it was his duty to dedicate his children to God in holy baptism.—Circumcision was no mere political rite, and the Jewish church no mere political institution. The Holy Spirit was in the sermon, and the blessing of heaven was upon it, and our hearts swelled with gratitude at the thought that "the promise is unto us and to our children."

Brother Hamill presented the claims of the East Alabama Male College before the district meeting, and many thought, well, he won't do anything for that here; the college is away up yonder at Auburn; what have we to do with it? Brother Hamill told us that it was our college, and before he got through every one felt that he had a bona fide interest in it; and in less time than I have been writing it the district, through the official members, pledged itself to raise five hundred dollars in liquidation of its indebtedness.

A committee was raised to inquire into the propriety and practicability of a district denominational school. New zeal was infused into the church on the subject of parsonages, and we hope the day is not far distant when we shall have a district parsonage for the presiding elder, and a parsonage in every pastoral charge for the preacher and his family. If the people did but know how much this would lessen the rigors and hardships of itinerancy they would set about the work in good earnest, and rest not until it was accomplished.

But our district meeting is not all. We have had a glorious old-fashioned Methodist camp meeting. It was held jointly between the Haw Ridge and Geneva circuits, at China Grove, in Dale county. The multitudes were there. It was estimated that between three and four thousand persons were present. Bishop Wightman remained over and preached on Saturday and Sunday. On Sunday the bishop preached to the largest promiscuous congregation I think I ever saw. His text was Psalms 80, 1. It is the highest point of pulpit power when the congregation is led to forget the preacher in the sermon. Such was the case on the day alluded to. The high-sounding title, "the bishop," was lost in the absorbing subject—how God had "led us on like a flock;" how the two grand dispensations harmonize in the one great idea—salvation through Christ; how "he that dwelleth between the cherubim shines forth;" the holy unction, the sweet heavenly influence—O it was good to be there. That vast congregation of three thousand souls was held in rapt attention, and subdued into tenderness and tears. Long may he live to bless the church of which he is such an ornament.

We were also favored with the labors of Revs. Dr. Ellison, A. S. Dickenson, E. J. Hamill, J. W. Solomon, Augus. Dowling and W. A. Edwards.

It is estimated that about fifty souls were converted. Nineteen joined the church, among whom are some of promise. Others will join in their respective charges. The church was revived, energized, built up, and "great grace rested upon all the people."

The tent-holders unanimously resolved to continue the camp-meeting, and it is thought the tents will be doubled next year.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

The following letters speak for themselves:

MONTGOMERY CONFERENCE.

ELBA MISSION, Oct. 17, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: I propose giving your readers an account of the Elba mission during the third quarter. In that time I have received forty-four members into the church, forty-three of whom professed to have passed from death into life. As to the spiritual state of the church, it is, I believe, upward—manifested in the zeal with which children are taught the fear of the Lord. At Macedonia eight of the converts were Sabbath school scholars.—Elba, another point where there has never before been a living school, has moved forward finely since its organization. We have had four other schools—now suspended.

Financially, too, as far as Conference, mission and bishop's claims are concerned, I shall go to Conference with all claims met.

Another evidence is the building of houses in which to worship God. Three are now in progress. Others are talking of doing the same thing. In all probability there will soon be a revival in reading our church periodicals, as crops are being sold and some money getting into circulation. Your paper has been well spoken of wherever I presented its claims, and a desire manifested to take it as soon as the ability came.

To God be all the glory!

Your's, in Christ,

W. C. ROBINSON.

MANNY MISSION, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: The cause of Christ is advancing here. About one year ago, in the northern part of this parish, (Sabine,) old Brother Ford died, and upon his death-bed, while heaven was being opened unto him, he had an article written, the purport of which was that all who were willing to meet him in glory would sign it. Twenty-three persons signed it. Many were deeply affected by this incident. On the fourth Saturday in September it was our privilege to commence a meeting there. Brother H. L. Smith, a local deacon, helped us, and the Lord helped him powerfully. The church was greatly revived, fifteen having joined and three received by letter. Many were the shouts of joy sent up to heaven by lips that had been touched with living coals from off the altar. Eight of whom I know professed that Jesus was precious unto them because they believed. Our meeting lasted five days. The last night of the meeting we gave each other the parting hand, singing—

"By the grace of God I'll meet you," and tears streamed from every eye. Strong men were shaken, and had our strength and time permitted we would have continued to blow the trumpet there. The Lord is at work out here, and we hope that we will have more joyful news to communicate to you ere long. Pray for us, for we are all alone on this work.

Your brother in Christ,

RICH. H. ADAIR, P. E.

P. S.—I expect I can send you a list of subscribers, this fall, which will be gladly received by you.

NEVER enter a sick room in a state of perspiration, as the moment you become cool your pores absorb. Do not approach contagious diseases with an empty stomach, nor sit between the sick and the fire, because the heat attracts the vapor.

PHILIP PHILLIPS, now in England, says the singing in the churches is universally congregational, without any interludes of instrumental playing between the verses.

SUGAR growing is extending in Texas. In several counties a large crop will be gathered, but it will be used principally for seed.*

ORIGINAL RECEIPTS.

MR. EDITOR: It is said that a French woman can give an elegant entertainment on two lemons. We cannot expect our plain country women to equal this exploit, but we think they might place a good dinner on their tables every day, elaborated from very ordinary materials, if their minds be on their work.—Memory, experience, judgment and, above all, taste must be put in requisition.

Mary's husband is growing old, and loves to recall the pleasures of his boyhood. Last evening he dwelt lingeringly upon the goodness of a certain apple pot-pie with which his childhood used to be regaled. He descants upon the crisp and flaky crust, the rich, juicy, sugary, buttery, spicy contents. How delightful to have the dish itself set before him to-day! It is like the odor of violets after violets are gone; like a shining ray after the sun has set. Very refreshing, this after-taste of the long-swallowed sweets of by-gone years! Here is the receipt:

NO. I.

First, the pastry: Rub into a pint of flour a heaping spoonful of lard. Strew in a little salt, and work it until the mass becomes numberless little globules and balls. Then moisten with cold water, and press them together until they adhere, and your pastry is made. It must not be kneaded or worked over at all. Let any cook try this method, and he will find it the best and easiest way to make fine leaf paste, and he will never again countenance the old rolling, larding, butter-spreading system.

Now for the fruit: Pare, core and quarter one dozen apples. Put them in a baking pan, with one large cup of sugar, one tablespoonful of spices, two of molasses and one of butter. Add water until the fruit is nearly covered, and put it in the oven to bake and stew, and brown, if they will. When the apples begin to soften dredge in a little flour, for the juice, though plentiful, must not be watery. Roll out the pastry. Cut the cover to suit the pan, and make the trimmings into dumplings, which must be dropped at intervals among the fruit. Fold the pie cover in half, make several oblique incisions for openings, lay it on and brown it lightly. Serve on a dish like peach cobler. Like that substantial dessert, it may be eaten.

NO. II.—STEWED MUTTON CHOPS.

Sprinkle your chops with salt and pepper, dredge them lightly with flour, then fry them in a small quantity of lard. After they are brown pour in boiling water enough to cover them, and let them stew until tender, leaving the lard, or a portion of it, in the stew. Add sliced potatoes, several small onions, one turnip, and salt and pepper to taste. Just before serving put in a handful of chopped parsley. This mode of cooking will cause the most unpromising chops to become tender, savory and wholesome. If butter or flour is put in a stew it should be thoroughly stirred together, then dropped in and stirred until it dissolves, and not mixed with water, as that gives the whole a flat, insipid taste. A jar of browned or parched flour is convenient to have on hand for stews. After chops are cooked as above they can be made into a pie for a dinner dish.

NO. III.—ISABELLA CAKE.

One cup of butter, two cups of sugar, three cups of flour, and eight eggs. Rub the butter to a cream, roll the sugar fine, and stir with the yolks of the eggs until it is smooth and light. Froth the whites separately, and add alternately a portion of egg and a portion of flour, and lastly a little essence of lemon or rose water. This is a rich, delicate, delicious cake, which will keep moist and fresh a long time. Every housekeeper unprovided with scales or weighing conveniences should cut it out and save it for Thanksgiving, Christmas or New Year, or the next cake occasion in the house, whether christening or wedding. A small teaspoonful of soda, dissolved in the juice of half a lemon or sour orange, or even vinegar, may be used to insure its lightness.

* From the very best source.—EDITOR.

NO. IV.—OYSTER LOAVES.

Make a hole in the top of some round loaves of bread, and take out all the crumbs. Stew some oysters with the crumbs, a lump of butter and a good spoonful of cream. Then fill the loaves. Lay the bit of crust carefully on the top of each, and put them in the oven to crisp.—Serve hot. This makes a good dish for breakfast or luncheon.

LAKE PROVIDENCE DISTRICT MEETING.

MR. EDITOR: The Lake Providence district meeting, Louisiana Conference, met at Delhi, Louisiana, on Saturday, September 19, 1868, and adjourned on Monday, the 21st.

SPIRITUAL STATE OF THE CHURCH.

Rev. J. T. Davis, chairman.—"From the reports from the different circuits and stations your committee are much pleased to observe a marked change for the better. In some of the fields of labor this improvement has culminated in gracious revivals, while in others it is manifested in a prevailing seriousness and more general attendance on public worship."

COMMITTEE ON MISSIONS.

Rev. J. L. Wright, chairman.—"It is with regret that your committee have to acknowledge that the reports from the different fields represented disclose the humiliating fact that but little interest is felt on this important subject. The cause of missions has not yet been brought before the different congregations, it being too early in the season for anything to be realized from the crop of the present year. Your committee trust that the matter will be fully presented, and, with the prospective improvement in money matters, a bountiful and cheerful paying response will be made."

FINANCE.

H. W. Drake, chairman.—"The finance of the various charges within the district is in a deplorable condition. Almost nothing has been done toward the support of any of the preachers. The presiding elder's claims have been, so far, almost entirely overlooked.

"We have made the following estimate of the presiding elder's support, and apportioned it to the several circuits, as follows: Presiding elder's allowance, $850. Delhi and Floyd circuit, $150; Ion circuit, $150; Winsboro circuit, $150; Bastrop circuit, $100; Bastrop station, $150; Carroll circuit, $50; Jefferson circuit, $100.

"It will be the duty of the board of stewards in each circuit to see that this amount is collected and paid over to the presiding elder.

"We recommend that each preacher in charge take up public collections, in their various congregations, to make up the deficiency in the bishop's support."

COMMITTEE ON PERIODICALS.

Rev. P. H. Dieffenweith, chairman.—"There have been causes which have seriously operated against the increased circulation of our periodicals. The first has been the irregularity in the postal arrangements; but arrangements have been made for reopening these routes, and we may now look for more regular mail communication. The second has been the extreme scarcity of money. This difficulty will be removed by the incoming crop. We feel encouraged.

"It is with pleasure that we see the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE doing efficient work. As a family paper it stands high in our estimation, and we pledge ourselves to renewed efforts for increasing its patronage.

"We would respectfully suggest that the columns appropriated to presiding elders' appointments be filled with matter of more general interest, and that the accounts of district meetings be very materially curtailed."

THE WORK AMONG THE COLORED PEOPLE.

Rev. J. L. Wright, chairman.—"The superintendent of the work among the colored people is happy to be able to report the work in a prosperous condition. The brethren employed in this work are men of God, faithful and earnest, attending punctually to their appointments, and laboring with a degree of success, under the circumstances, truly wonderful.

"Bastrop and Ross' chapel (colored charge) is supplied by Rev. Cyrus Alexander, colored, a local deacon, ordained by Bishop Paine at our last Conference—a man who has stood firm as a friend to our church throughout the fearful revolution. He is a zealous and faithful preacher, and is doing a good work—teaching school and proclaiming the everlasting gospel of the Son of God. He has had a good number of conversions and accessions to his charge this year. Wright's chapel (colored charge) is supplied by Rev. Warren Williams, colored, also a local deacon, ordained by Bishop Paine at our last Conference. This charge is in a flourishing condition. The congregation is entirely orderly, and constant accessions are being made to the membership.

"Jefferson colored circuit is supplied by Rev. Monroe Evans, a licentiate—a man of excellent character."

Resolved, That the district meeting for Lake Providence district recommend the Louisiana Annual Conference, at its next session, to appoint a suitable person to superintend the colored work in the bounds of this district, and that he be authorized to thoroughly organize the work among the people of color, and to supply them with suitable pastors, as he may be able to do so.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Died in Jackson county, Mississippi, September 20, 1868, Mrs. EMELINE FERRILL, after a severe illness of only a few days. Of the early life of Emeline Hough we have no knowledge. Born on the 19th of October, 1823, she had nearly completed her forty-fifth year when death came upon her. Having passed nearly the half of a century upon earth, she has gone to be at rest. On the 25th of November, 1841, in Wayne county, Mississippi, she was married to John W. Ferrill. Bro. Ferrill was licensed to preach one year after their marriage, and in 1843, the year following, Sister Ferrill became a member of the church. From then until now they have gone on together in the path of life—he a minister of Christ, and she an humble member of the church, adorning her profession by a meek and quiet life.

For a long while before her death her health had been such as to keep her from going often out or to church. But frequently did she express herself to her pastor as greatly desiring the privilege, with others, of attending the house of God. In her last illness she gave to her husband such evidences of her peace with God that we are led to infer that she,

"Lightened of her fleshy load,
Hath gone to be with God."

A large family and numerous friends feel her loss. Feeling that "our loss is her gain," we submissively say: "The Lord gave and the Lord taketh away. Blessed be the name of the Lord." Amen.

A FRIEND.

THE MONK OUTWITTED.—It is related that a monk living in Peru, by his gambling practices, got into great difficulties in money matters. The native Indians in his vicinity were much attached to him, as he was of a kind and generous disposition, and they frequently sent him presents. One day, when he had lost largely in gambling, an Indian promised to assist him, and the next evening brought him a large box full of silver ore. The present was several times repeated, and the monk very naturally was anxious to discover where the precious metal was procured. He pressed the Indian so closely that at last he consented to conduct him to the mine. Accordingly one night several Indians came to his house, blindfolded him, and each by turns carried him for some distance into the mountains. At length the bandage was removed and he found himself in an opening in the rocks, surrounded by bright masses of silver, and was permitted to take as much as he could carry. While the Indians were conducting him home again, blindfolded, he unfastened his rosary, and dropped the beads at intervals along the path, hoping by their aid to find his way to the mine again alone. In the course of an hour or two his Indian friend knocked at his door, and giving him a handful of beads, said, "You dropped your rosary on the way, father, and I have picked it up for you." This was the last visit he was allowed to make, the Indians jealously keeping the secret from strangers.—American Agriculturist.

ERRATUM.

MR. EDITOR: I wish to correct one of several typographic errors in my account of the district meeting of Camden district, Montgomery Conference, published in the ADVOCATE of August 8. In my abstract of the report of the Committee on the Support of the Ministry the types make me say the preachers on the district are talented. This may be moderately true; but my sense of propriety revolts at being understood to characterize a small circle of preachers, of which I am one, as talented. Devoted is the word. I took my adjectives from the report.

I regret that a paragraph on the necessity of increasing our episcopal corps was edited out of my article, not because of any special merit in the paragraph, itself considered, but because it would have shown that we lodge no complaint against our beloved Bishop Wightman for dereliction of duty in not attending our district meeting—a construction that the communication, as published, will bear. No, we lodge no complaint. I repeat what I have before said: No age, since the apostolical, has given to the church a more consecrated, laborious episcopal corps than now leads the Methodist Episcopal Church South in her assaults upon the empire of sin. While the Janeses, the Simpsons, the Kingsleys, et al., of the Northern church are closeted with political leaders, thundering anathemas against senators for not violating their oath to sustain the most disgraceful farce that ever blotted a nation's escutcheon, mingling in political nominating conventions, preaching loyalty to a political party as a test of religious character, running blasphemous analogies between a man murdered in a theater and the atoning Son of God upon the cross—our beloved bishops, in the true spirit of pastors, are going into the by-ways and hedges, carrying the balm of gospel peace to the crushed hearts of God's down-trodden poor.—Would to God we had more such! I write this with my eye upon the apostolical admonition: "Let no man glory in men," and that other admonition: "We beseech you, brethren, to know them which labor among you, and are over you in the Lord, and admonish you; and to esteem them very highly in love for their work's sake." May we all be full of the inspiration that moves them. Then our complainings will be hushed, and our success in winning souls far more abundant. E. S. SMITH.

BISHOP MARVIN'S LETTER.

The St. Louis Christian Advocate says: We are kindly permitted to make the following extracts from a private letter written by the bishop. We are thankful to God for the merciful preservation of the life of this laborious servant of the church, and pray that his health and life may be precious in his sight, that he may accomplish great good in his visit to the Pacific States, and return in physical health and vigor. Let our self-sacrificing bishops share in the united prayers of the church:

CORVALLIS, Oregon, Sept. 12, 1868.

I am now in the beautiful Willamet Valley. It is by far the largest tract of level country in Oregon. You can't imagine how completely the whole face of the country is covered with mountains. There are little narrow valleys scattered about among the mountains in every direction, and people living in them.

I entered this valley at the very upper end of it. At the widest point it is fifty or sixty miles wide, but generally the mountains are in view on both sides from the center of the valley. From this town it is only three miles to the foot of the mountain on the west. It is a valley of very rich land, and the little valleys among the mountains are generally rich. There is an abundance of game among the mountains, such as bear, bear, etc. The people living up there often kill bears, and I have heard a great many exciting stories of fights with bears, when a wounded bear would fight the dogs, and the hunter come up with his big knife and stab the bear to the heart.

I am at Brother Cauthorn's house. He used to live at Mexico, Missouri. Your mamma will remember the family. They were well acquainted with Cousin Mary Ann and her family. They wept for joy when they met me. The war broke them up, and they are very poor, but living in comfort. I find old acquaintances everywhere. I have been with Brother Sears for the last week, and expect to visit him at his home next week. I have seen people in Oregon from the three first circuits I traveled. Two days ago I dined with a man whose house was one of my preaching places on my first circuit—a Mr. Van Dozer. He was then a young man—thirty years old—now he is beginning to look old. I will soon be getting old myself.

The Conference which met last week was held on a camp ground at a camp meeting. I took cold and was laid up two days with a swollen face. It really made me sick, but I went to the house of a Brother Moffat, and was very comfortably provided for. All the trouble I had was from the fact that I could not make trouble enough to satisfy the family. I think if I could have found about forty things an hour for them to do they would have enjoyed it. But I wanted nothing and they were distressed about it. I had to submit to have a good many things done just because I could not hold out from morning till night saying no.

From this point I expect to go to Salem, which is the capital of the State. There I expect to spend a Sabbath, and then go to Portland and take steamer for San Francisco. I expect to spend the winter and spring in California and the summer in Oregon, if life and health be spared. My plan is to hold the Conferences early next fall, and then strike for home by the railroad, which will be nearly if not quite completed by that time, I suppose.

We had a precious time at the Conference. Great grace rested upon the preachers and people. We had a feast of fat things. We had the sacrament of the Lord's Supper the last thing before the appointments were read out. The Lord was present with us indeed, and the preachers went to their work with a feeling of entire devotion to their holy calling. I trust God will give a great blessing upon the work this year. I thought of the sacrament at the Centenary church, where we all communed together just the day before I left home. O, that we may all love God with a perfect heart, and serve him with a willing mind.

My health is now tolerably good, though I doubt if this climate is going to be very favorable to me.

May great grace abide with you all.

Yours, etc., E. M. MARVIN.

THE GREAT SOLAR ECLIPSE.—In England they are now beginning to receive some details of the result of the observations of English astronomers sent out to two localities to watch the progress of the eclipse of the sun, which took place on the 18th of August. Major Tennant from one party, and Lieutenant Herschel from the other, have sent to the Astronomer Royal and to the Royal Astronomical Society an account of the photographical and spectroscopic work performed by the two principal English observing parties.

Without going into particulars which would not be generally intelligible, we ascertain from these observations, among other things, that Major Tennant deduced from certain spectroscopic experiments that there was proof that the solar protuberances consist of burning hydrogen and sodium. As sodium seems to be an important constituent of many meteoric bodies, the appearance of sodium in the solar protuberances seems confirmation, to a certain extent, of the theory, which has lately been held by many students of solar physics, that the sun's heat is derived from the continual impact of meteoric bodies upon its surface. Lieutenant Herschel, writing in 1866 on the peculiar condition of the August meteors, said: "The spectral examination of the August meteors has most certainly brought to light the existence of an extraordinary quantity of the vapor of sodium in the luminous streaks; so that many of the streaks, and especially the most conspicuous and the most slowly fading among them, consist of nothing else but soda flames for a great proportion (that is to say the latter portion) of the time that they continue visible. Their condition then is exactly that of a flame of gas in a Bunsen's burner, freely charged with the vapor of burning sodium; or, of the flame of a spirit lamp newly trimmed and largely dosed with a supply of moistened salt."

Major Tennant draws from his observations the conclusion that the atmosphere of the sun consists mainly of non-luminous or faintly luminous gas at a short distance from the body of the sun.—New York News.

TENNESSEE CONFERENCE.

The Tennessee Conference held its session at Shelbyville, Tennessee, October 14–21, Bishop McTyeire presiding. There was a good attendance of clerical and lay members, and business was performed with due deliberation, thoroughness and dispatch. There were a number of visiting brethren present, among whom was the excellent editor of the Memphis Christian Advocate, who was most cordially received by his old yoke-fellows, he having been once a member of this Conference. By the way, he made us visits in Nashville before and after the session, and returned to his important post with our best wishes for himself personally, and for the valuable paper which he edits. Brother Gardner, author of a work on the Apocalypse, which we recently published for him, was also present, though in very infirm health. He is a worthy man, and we hope his book will meet with a ready sale, though we are not prepared either to indorse or repudiate his scheme of interpretation, as we are not much seen in Apocalyptic studies. Brother Taylor was also present, promoting the interests of the colored people, which he has in special charge. He speaks encouragingly of his undertaking, and he was assured of the sympathy and co-operation of the members of the Conference. Brother Holland accompanied us to the Conference, having been pressed by the brethren to attend the session. He preached on Sunday night to an overflowing congregation, in the Presbyterian church, and lectured to a crowded house on Monday night, in the Methodist church. He repeated, by request, his admirable lecture on Jerusalem, which he delivered October 16, with so much eclat, to the largest audience we ever saw at a lecture in Nashville. In this lecture he described, in his own inimitable style, the salient localities in and around the Holy City, mingling with his descriptions the most eloquent, poetic and devout utterances, which such scenes would naturally elicit from a nature so fine-strung and susceptible as his. We should like to hear him on other of the sacred localities, and on the wonders which he saw in the land of Ham. He left for Louisville, October 20, but we understand he contemplates returning to Tennessee to preach and lecture in sundry places, before he goes to his pastoral charge in Baltimore. One of the most interesting incidents of the session was the semi-centennial sermon of Dr. Maddin, delivered October 19. It was an eloquent discourse on Isa. lxii, 1. The peroration consisted of autobiographical passages of extraordinary interest, which produced a great effect upon the audience. The venerable preacher told us that he was born in Philadelphia, of Romish parents—that when a boy he served the priest at the altar—began the studies for the priesthood—fell in with the Methodists and was converted—in consequence, was reprobated by the priest and ostracised by his father—left Philadelphia with his pack on his shoulder for the West—became a preacher in Kentucky, and joined the Tennessee Conference in 1818—and after fifty years' hard service in the ministry, felt as young, and vigorous, and happy as ever in prosecuting his great work, which he hopes will not be laid aside till his death, which everybody else hopes will be long, long deferred. He gave the names of those who joined the Conference with him—Bishop Paine being one of them—perhaps the only survivor besides himself.

But as we expect Dr. Maddin to furnish us with the substance of that interesting sketch of his life and labors, we shall not attempt to reproduce it in this place. There was excellent preaching at this Conference, by Bishop McTyeire—whose ordination sermon is said to have been a masterpiece—by Drs. Hanner and Holland—whom we had the good fortune to hear at the Presbyterian church—Drs. Kelley, Young, Redford, West and others, whom we had not the pleasure of hearing. The missionary meeting was largely attended, and eloquently addressed by Drs. Young and McFerrin—the handsome collection at the close attesting the success of their efforts. Notwithstanding the large number in attendance, the Conference was entertained in princely style—the citizens of nearly all ranks and creeds vying with one another in their generous hospitality. Brothers Hughes, Kelley, Jackson, Owen and the editor of this paper, were specially favored in being the guests of Mr. W. G. Cowen and family, who are members of the Presbyterian church, which enjoys the pastoral services of our excellent friend, the Rev. Mr. Bryson. We were most favorably impressed with the people of this charge—the congregation is large, they have a good organ and choir, which discoursed to us excellent music of the fine old type—and we are mistaken in the appearance of things if the pastor of that church is not happy in his present settlement. Our own church has been steadily improving, in all respects, under the labors of Dr. Maddin, and we were delighted to hear our Presbyterian friends speak in so high terms of this venerable minister, and with his return to Shelbyville—a wish which has been happily realized. Brother M. R. Jones, presiding elder of the Salem district, Illinois Conference, was at Shelbyville, recruiting volunteers for that field, and not without success. He speaks in a most encouraging strain of our prospects in that great State, and promises, in due time, to let our readers hear from him. He assured us that their mission in Illinois was not to disintegrate other churches, much less to covet their houses of worship, parsonages, etc., but to collect into church-fellowship the thousands in that region, who can not join any other than a Methodist church, and are debarred from the Methodist Episcopal Church North by its fearful apostasy from the original scriptural platform of Methodism. Were it otherwise, we are free to say we should not encourage the operations of our brethren in that field. We do not think we shall be censured for saying that whenever the Northern church will return to the old platform, and show a disposition to abide by its own stipulations in the Plan of Separation, we will say of that as Laban did of the Galeed monument: "This heap be witness, and this pillar be witness, that I will not pass over this heap to thee, and that thou shalt not pass over this heap, and this pillar unto me, for harm." But see whither our galloping pen has carried us—revenons a nos moutons. From the minutes, courteously furnished us by the secretary, Dr. Young, we condense the following interesting items: J. O. Blanton, J. H. Strayhorn, D. C. Miles, H. S. Ledbetter, W. Ward, W. C. McCoy, H. D. Hogan, W. McQuinn, R. T. Moore, D. M. Booth, J. B. Jordan, W. W. Jared, A. J. Ford, were admitted on trial. J. H. Richardson, P. T. Martin, E. F. Lyons, F. F. Fagan, T. A. Scruggs, S. L. Orman, E. F. S. Roberts, R. P. Gannaway, were admitted into full connection. H. B. North, G. W. Martin, were readmitted. R. K. Hargrove, D. D. Moore, A. Mizell, W. H. Hughes, received by transfer. P. T. Martin, E. F. Lyons, F. F. Fagan, T. A. Scruggs, J. Nichols, (traveling,) S. Gunn, D. Brown, W. F. Davis, A. J. Walker, (local,) ordained deacons. J. P. McFerrin, P. G. Jamison, (traveling,) T. M. Jackson, G. W. Jackson, (local,) ordained elders. H. J. Hulsey, F. M. Hickman, A. L. Barbee, located. J. A. Jones, T. N. Lankford, J. McCurdy, A. J. B. Foster, G. D. Taylor, F. P. Scruggs, J. D. Winn, S. Lassiter, J. W. Tarrant, G. Green, superannuated. H. H. Brown died. The next Conference to be held at Murfreesboro.

Transferred—E. M. Bounds to Mobile Conference; W. G. Davis to Illinois Conference, and stationed at McLeansboro; T. A. Scruggs to Illinois Conference, and stationed at Fairfield; G. L. Staley to Kentucky Conference, and stationed at Shelbyville.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

The Earthquakes at San Francisco.

THE VOLCANIC CHAIN OF AMERICA.

We copy as follows from the New York Herald of the 23d:

The earthquakes at San Francisco on Wednesday last, some twelve or thirteen in number, extended, as it appears, pretty much along the whole coast line of California, and back to the foot hills of the Sierra Nevada, or snowy mountains, which are part of the great volcanic chain of the American continent. Earthquakes come from some volcanic disturbances, and we dare say that all these volcanic perturbations in both hemispheres, since May last, may be traced to the grand eruption of that month of the terrible Mauna Loa of the Sandwich Islands, the king of all the earth's volcanoes. That eruption, we conjecture, caused such a commotion of the fiery fluids inclosed within the thin shell of our globe that they have been, from time to time, breaking out at various chimneys and shaking the earth more or less severely at various thin places ever since.

It is a remarkable fact, while from the 13th to the 15th of August last those fearful earthquakes came upon Ecuador and Peru, involving in ruins numerous towns and cities along the coast for hundreds of miles, that on the 15th of August the same phenomena were felt and seen at Yokahoma, in Japan, and along the southern and eastern coasts of Australia, and that on the 20th a pretty severe earthquake shook down a number of buildings at Peshawur, in India. These almost simultaneous disturbances were doubtless the result of the pressure of the infernal liquid fire from one side, right through the heart of the earth, against the other side of the shell. These shakes which they have had in California came from the agitation imparted to the lava which underlies the comparatively thin crust of the western section of our continent. East of the Mississippi river we repose upon a thick, solid and reliable crust. We have no volcanoes in this section, because we have no use for these safety valves and escape pipes. We are all right. But in 1814, it will be remembered by some, there was an earthquake at New Madrid, on the west side of the Mississippi, from which some forests went down and some little lakes were created.—From the west side of the Mississippi, therefore, we may assume, the crust of the earth to the Pacific, especially in the valleys, is comparatively thin, and the two sections otherwise are as widely different as Europe and Asia. The continent east from the Mississippi is like Europe, and west like Asia.

But we have spoken of the great volcanic chain of America. This chain of mountains and subterranean fires extends from Cape Horn and Terra del Fuego, or the land of the fire, up to Mount St. Elias, in Alaska. Through South America it is the backbone of the continent; through Central America and Mexico it is scattered about, but abounds in volcanoes and earthquakes. At the southern boundary of the United States two great chains branch off to the northward, the Rocky mountains and the Sierra Nevada. The Rocky mountain chain is the backbone proper of North America; but it is no longer volcanic. It was in ages gone by, but its craters have become extinct, and are lakes. West of this backbone chain, on the way to Great Salt Lake, we have Fremont's great basin, an isolated region of some five hundred miles wide and seven hundred miles long, the water courses of which are lost in the sands of the desert, or, expanding into lakes, are evaporated by the sun. This great basin, from the water marks on the mountains of the rim, was at one time an arm of the ocean or an inland sea like the Caspian, but was at a later period lifted up by the fiery forces inside the earth and made dry land. All this vast and inhospitable region, with the region northward to Oregon, was aptly described by Fremont as a volcanic region hardly yet cooled down—"a land of fracture and violence and fire." The numerous hot springs in the mountains and valleys, and the volcanic chemicals of the ashy soil of the plains, support Fremont in this description.

On the west side of this great basin we have the Sierra Nevada, or the continuation of the living volcanic chain from South America. It runs along parallel with the Pacific coast, a hundred miles off, more or less, all the way to Mount St. Elias, in Alaska. This chain has numerous peaks, rising from twelve to seventeen thousand feet above the sea, and two of them, Mount Hood, in Oregon, and Mount St. Helena, further north, were reported to be smoking last autumn from volcanic combustion. At all events, under this mountain chain in its whole length the volcanic forces of the earth are comparatively near the surface, and so, for centuries to come, perhaps all the countries on both sides will be liable to earthquakes. Hereafter five and six story buildings will be rather a risky business in San Francisco, at least for a year or two, though such a shaking as they had on Wednesday last may not occur again, perhaps, for fifty years to come.

EPISCOPAL CONVENTIONS.—Just before the meeting of the National Triennial Convention, which commenced its session last week, the Diocesan Convention of this State held a meeting. Two matters of interest connected with it deserve chronicling. The one is the address of Bishop Potter, who deplored agitation in the old style to which all reformers of abuses are doomed to listen, and who gravely asserted that extreme ritualism had not yet been introduced into this diocese. What further development he could have been looking to it is hard to say, unless it be the carrying of pigs' heads unrubrically blessed in harvest-home processions, as has been done in England, with the universal derision even of most of the ritualists. Certain it is that the Romish festival of Corpus Christi has been lately celebrated in one of the chapels of Trinity parish; while the elevation of the host, the burning of incense, lights on the communion table, the wearing of strange vestments, hymns addressed to the Virgin, and the setting up of the confessional, are matters of common notoriety, known by everybody but the bishop, to be practiced or defended in various places of worship under his own supervision. The convention then showed its further animus by voting to express to the General Convention its desire to have a federate council of dioceses in the State, which shall have supreme power. This was opposed by many, on the ground that it would endanger the freedom of the churches, adding another to the shackles which bind them to Trinity parish, which now rules the city. The natural result would be the appointment of an archbishop or metropolitan, and the introduction of the complete English hierarchy. The measure was adopted by a clerical vote of 113 to 22 and a lay vote of 59 to 22.

The General Convention is still in session. It will take time for its deliberations. The opening sermon was by Bishop Lee, of Delaware, who gave little comfort to the ritualizing party. "A minister," said he, "is not ordained to be master of ceremonies, to value the cut and color of garments, and to bow down in foolish pantomime." The present assumption of a sacrificial priesthood he stigmatized as a pitiful mimicry of the Aaronic priesthood. Such a theory should find no countenance in the Protestant Episcopal Church. The motion to print the sermon called out considerable opposition; but was finally adopted, as an act of courtesy. Several memorials and petitions have been presented, among which was one offered by Dr. Goodwyn, and signed by Drs. W. A. Muhlenberg, J. O. Smith, A. H. Vinton, S. H. Tyng, and many others, petitioning the repeal or modification of the canon, for a breach of which Rev. S. H. Tyng, Jr., was tried.—New York Independent.

NEW SPANISH COMPLICATIONS.

Affairs in Spain are likely to be more complicated than was apprehended by mere lookers on during the progress of the well-planned revolution. Every day brings a new aspirant for the throne; and the last who has engaged attention is the Count de Montemolin, who, it appears, entered Spain as his relative Isabella left it. He, we suppose, will be the candidate of Austria. Then we have Prince Napoleon, son-in-law of Victor Emanuel and cousin of the Emperor of France, who will have the support of France and Italy; and there is the Duke de Montpensier, the representative of the Orleans branch of Bourbons proper by his marriage with the Infanta; but what power will support his claims? Not Napoleon, who is his hereditary enemy; not England, who was checkmated by Guizot and Louis Philippe in bringing about the Spanish marriage; and not Prussia, who has as yet given no indication of a preference in the disposal of the Spanish crown.

What European powers are to be served in this momentous question? This generation has been already startled by the far-sighted and wily Bismarck. Why may it not again hear from him, and perhaps in this very Spanish succession? Republican government out of the question, and the people of Spain favorable still to a monarchy, who knows that Bismarck will not nominate the next Spanish ruler? The French papers accuse him of having fomented the Spanish revolution; of having furnished the funds that enabled the insurgent generals to overturn the reigning dynasty; and that those funds were realized by pledging in London and Cadiz the securities which were transferred by Italy to Prussia in payment for needle guns. It was with this money that General Serrano, so the French papers assert, liquidated to the Spanish troops their large arrearages of pay, and thus secured the sympathy and co-operation of the army in the movement that accomplished the revolution. If this was true—and there is no good reason to question it—Spanish affairs will assume a new complexion; and the Peninsula may yet be the battle ground upon which the mutual jealousies of France and Prussia will be settled.

The latest advices are that the junta have issued an address on the future form of government, in which they state that it will be the duty of the Cortes only to decide what that form shall be, but that all the people will have the right to express their opinions. Olozaga, Serrano and Topete have declared for a monarchy, and that will most probably be the form of government for which the people will declare. When the form shall have been determined by the people, then will begin the war of diplomacy; and in that war Prussia, perhaps backed by England, will be a conspicuous and formidable actor, if we correctly read the signs of the times.—New York News.

HE WALKETH WITH GOD.—Oh, happy man that walks with God, though neglected and contemned by all about him! What blessed sights doth he daily see! What ravishing tidings, what pleasant melody, doth he daily hear! What delectable food doth he daily taste! He seeth, by faith, the God, the glory which the blessed spirits see at hand by nearest looking upon. He seeth that in a glass, and darkly, which they behold with open face. He seeth the glorious majesty of his Creator, the eternal King, the Cause of causes, the Composer, Upholder, Preserver and Governor of all worlds. He beholdeth the wonderful methods of his providence; and what he can not reach to see, he admireth, and waiteth for the time when that also shall be open to his view.

SATURDAY NOVEMBER 7, 1868.

To SUBSCRIBERS.—Any person wishing to subscribe for this paper can do so by paying the Methodist preacher in the circuit, and forwarding to us his receipt for three dollars, with the address of the subscriber upon it, stating Post office, State, Circuit, and Conference. The receipt ought to be taken in duplicate.

N. B.—Agents are requested, wherever practicable, to invest and remit funds in a Post Office Order, DRAFT, or by express. If this cannot be done, REGISTER the letter at our expense.

When money is forwarded in either of the above methods we will be responsible for it, but not otherwise.

TO AGENTS.

Please register the letter and send the money forward. We are receiving subscribers daily, with "I have the money and will keep it until I see you at Conference." Please do not keep it, but send it forward. We do not wish to advance money for subscribers. They are many; a little to each one is a large sum to us. If our agents wish us to send the paper forward, they will please send the money.

MISSIONARY NOTICE.

The pastors on the several circuits and stations in the Louisiana Annual Conference, will remember the mission collections for foreign and domestic missions.

The missionary treasury is in great need. The field is wider and more hopeful than at any period since apostolic times. The times are hard, but improving. Considerable crops of cotton and sugar have been made, while subsistence of home production is more abundant than for years past. Brethren, make general and faithful efforts. While few may give much, many may give a little to send the Word of Life to those who are perishing for lack of knowledge.

J. B. WALKER,
Chairman Com. on Foreign Missions.

WE ARE indebted to Mr. James A. Gresham, 92 Camp street, for the Riverside Magazine, for November. The table of contents is varied and entertaining, and the illustrations numerous and striking. The present number is not inferior to any that has preceded it, in literary and typographical finish and excellence.

PERSONAL.—Bishop Marvin is in Oregon. We publish a letter from him, which we find in the St. Louis Christian Advocate. He is in good health, and, as usual, hard at work.

NOTICE.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SESSION.

Will the presiding elders please forward to me the names of both the preachers and lay delegates of their districts who expect to be present at the Louisiana Conference, to be held on the sixteenth of December next, in New Iberia?

Respectfully,
A. E. GOODWYN.

WINNING SOULS.

The world is full of lost souls, who must be lost forever, unless speedily brought to Christ through the agency of believing men and women. Not only are these fallen souls in the world, but they are in the households and in the communities where the Christian dwells. It is a business more than angelic to which we are called, and for which we should be commissioned and qualified. The agency of believers is essential, and generally their personal agency is required. However great the benefit of Bibles, tract and religious literature, few, if any, souls are ever converted without the intervention of the living Christian. Not only is the salvation of sinners dependent upon the efforts and enterprise of the church in its benevolent organizations, but it is also made to depend upon individual influence exerted upon the unconverted.

All Christians are called to the work of saving souls, not only by giving their money to support and spread the Gospel, but by personal efforts to win to Christ some who are within their reach. It is a responsibility of the greatest weight, because the eternal welfare of souls is involved. It is a privilege of the highest dignity, because we become "workers together" with God. Herein God puts a higher honor upon the humblest believer than if he were invited to assist in the creation of a world. The probability is strong that not many followers of Christ are fully alive to their duty in personal effort to save souls. To give, and to pray, and to unite in social enterprises for this end are obligations more easily and more generally met; but we are apt to come short in free, individual and direct effort. We expect ministers to do this, while others are perhaps thought to be clear of any such obligation.

This point needs to be clearly impressed upon every Christian—that he is called to win some souls; and that if he be faithful, God will bless his exertions. Everything else ought to be held as secondary to this great business, in our estimate of the objects and purposes of life. That is a very low form of spiritual life which does not feel the burden of souls, and does not do something to rescue them. We may suppose that a Christian has done his duty to the church and missions and other channels of giving and doing, whilst at the same time he is making no personal efforts to save his neighbors and acquaintances, or the members of his own household. He has, perhaps, never thought of himself winning a soul, and is not conscious of ever having been instrumental in saving one. Christians, from the least to the greatest, have an account to give in this matter; not only of all indirect endeavors, but of direct attempts to lead sinners to Christ.

How shall this fearful responsibility be met? There is a cross in it, if faithfully discharged, such as is not encountered in other duties. To reprove, to warn, to persuade an ungodly friend or acquaintance often requires more courage than to tell an experience in a love-feast, or to preach a sermon to a whole congregation. Where the intimacy is greatest there the most courage is required, and there it is most frequently wanting. Boldness is a qualification of the first importance and a grace of the rarest attainment. Boldness in the faith to declare the whole counsel of God, and to persuade sinners, is a special gift, without which the believer is sure to fall in his duty. There are parents who are afraid to speak to their own children about their souls; and Christian men and women who have associated for years with unconverted persons, without venturing a word with them on the subject of their salvation. We fear there are few believers who feel altogether clear in this thing. True, their silent example has been given, and their unconverted friends and families have had the Gospel, churches, and all necessary means of grace; but have we so discharged our whole duty that we can meet these lost souls in the judgment? In too many instances we have shrunk from the disagreeable task, and have been guilty of a cowardly silence, when plain but loving words should have been spoken.

Personal expostulation with sinners must be associated with the wisdom of the serpent and the harmlessness of the dove. Faith and power with God, and deep spirituality qualify the Christian for this great work. Specially important is prayer—prayer not in its general and comprehensive scope, but specific, and for particular individuals. Where the desire to win souls possesses the heart, special means will be sought to compass the salvation of individuals. They will be approached directly, earnestly and affectionately, and there will be importunate prayer and wrestling for them before God. The wise win souls—those who are themselves endowed with the heavenly wisdom of faith and love, and who realize that this is the work to which every believing man is appointed.

Souls are to be won—not driven or forced into the kingdom, but persuaded, allured, even to Christ. This indicates an eminent feature in the plan of salvation. God endeavors to win man back to himself by his infinite love, and by all long suffering and patience. He expostulates, warns, beseeches, persuades with tenderness, and with a pathos which disarms rebellion and overcomes the natural enmity of the human heart. So must the children of the Father do in their measure. They must realize the emphatic truth that the lost soul is to be won in order to be saved. By them religion must be displayed in the attractive colors which belong to it. Their spirit must partake of the love of Christ, and all means and methods be imbued with the sweetness, sympathy and humility of the great Teacher. But the means and qualifications will be apparent when the duty and privilege of winning souls are fully impressed upon our convictions. Then it will become the study of life. Divine help and guidance will be sought, and the hitherto fruitless Christian will rejoice in seeing souls brought to God through his instrumentality.

THE ELECTION DAY.

As we write (Tuesday) the election is going on. Not a negro at the polls. This is just as it should be. They never should have been there. Let the negroes now come out of the Legislature, and let us have a white man for lieutenant governor, and there will be some reasonable prospect that this State will again become a strength and an equal among the United States. If no negroes vote it will teach the politician exactly where the colored man is, and how far he can be controlled by his Southern friends. The publication of the decision of the Supreme Court in the McCardle case will make the vote of Mississippi, of Texas, of Virginia, and of every other State available in the electoral college, because it decides the Reconstruction Act unconstitutional. Let negroes and Chinamen and Indians suffer the superior race of white men, to whom Providence has given this country, to control it. A good government for the white man will be good enough for the Mongolian, the African or the aboriginal American.

"GREAT FISHES."

GULF COAST, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: Sometimes "I go a fishing." I have often wished I could hear you say, "I go along with thee." Four mornings of October I captured, with a single hook, line and pole, four red fish, weighing ninety-seven and three-quarter pounds. This is one of the advantages, these times, of being so near the "good Lord's great storehouse," which, like his own glorious gospel, is "free to all, without money and without price." So am I.

THE SUGAR REGION.

This fertile part of Louisiana is gradually recovering from the war. The crop of 1861 was ground up, seed-cane and all, by the rapacious "brother" of General Butler. Next came the more enlightened General Banks. He at once conceived the idea of turning all lower Louisiana into a cotton field; because the world needed cotton more than sugar. In the character of a public benefactor he set the example of planting largely himself. He added the cares and labor of agriculture to the severer toil of arms, and demonstrated that the rage of war may be tempered by the mildest of human pursuits. After expending thousands he derived no pecuniary advantage, but only a loss, and shared the usual fate of those who lead the people into new fields of enterprise. The General then first learned, by experience, a fact which every Louisianian already knew, that a latitude and a climate may be too tropical for the cotton plant. These military chieftains found the State a garden; they left it a jungle. They sowed the seeds of that loyalty which now yields so generous a return; but beyond this they succeeded in no other crop. Formerly the eye of the traveler saw from the deck of the steamer, on each bank of the Mississippi, an alternate flood of corn and cane for two hundred miles above New Orleans. When the war closed nothing remained of all this thrift and beauty. General Butler had gone, General Banks had gone, the seed cane had gone, and the dry cotton stock alone remained to tell the story. By patient continuance and through unprecedented discouragements our planters have again introduced and multiplied the cane, until hundreds of acres may be now seen in a body waving with the luxuriant dark blades of this rich plant. In a year or two more this crop will probably be equal to what it once was. Indeed, we think that the sugar crop of Louisiana promises to be a more certain and valuable source of wealth than any other agricultural product of this country. With the return of prosperity to this region there will be a restoration of its stations, circuits, churches and schools. During the past four years, and until the present moment, preaching has been kept up only at a great sacrifice upon the part of the preacher. Long rides and no pay require the zeal of an apostle if they last long. Four years have as yet brought but little relief. But now we believe that the tide of affairs is turning. During all this dreary period there have been a faithful few who gladly received the preacher, and were ready to share with him of their poverty. The Holy Spirit will doubtless honor these labors, and those who, through evil report and good report, have stood by the cause of the Saviour, and they will yet see the work of God prospering in their own families and in their own church.

These reflections were suggested by a recent visit to the lower part of the Thibodeaux circuit. The town of Houma had three brick and one frame churches, and had just finished a fine academy building as the war began. It was largely injured by the Federal troops, and it still wears a dilapidated expression. But there are in it many very hopeful symptoms of a rapid return to prosperity; among them we especially note the academy under the Messrs. Bugby and Mr. Murray. It has some seventy scholars in attendance, and from the excellent reputation which its teachers have, we doubt not the number will soon advance to a hundred.

We were struck with the large number of negroes on the road in carts and buggies, and on Creole ponies. Never have we seen laborers so much at leisure. We suppose they were getting ready for "election." The sugar making season has begun, and every planter is looking for "hands." But what does that matter to a freedman who has a carryall and a horse of his own? The end of sugar is, after all, nothing but leisure. Why then take three steps when one will put you where you want to be? The negro is a conservative of the straightest sect. He is the brake providentially attached to the progressive steam impulse of the white man. The planter was boiling over with the thousand things to be done preparatory to grinding—the negro was riding about in the sublimest waistcoat and top boots, at peace with the world. These two diverse characters have to come together and work together. It is certain they will not die together.

The planter needs the muscle of the black man for this stiff soil and warm latitude; and the black man will starve without the skill and energy of the white man. Fully one-half of the negroes do nothing—one third of the men, four-fifths of the women, and all the children are idlers. It has demanded much experimenting and patience to get along with such elements. One of the most successful planters told us that he employed by the hour—that is, for a first-class "hand," fifteen dollars a month, six pounds of meat and a peck of meal per week; second class, thirteen dollars, etc.—on the condition that ten hours are a day's work, and twenty-six days a month. If the hand works over or under the ten hours, the credit or debit is made; payments are monthly, one-half retained till the end of the year. No goods sold to the "hand" by the employer—a fruitful source of dissatisfaction.

We wish that the religious condition of the black man was as hopeful as even his physical. But, alas! every negro is his own prophet. He is impatient of any religious teaching excepting as his fancy, for the time, may be pleased. Practical godliness is out of the question. He is incapable of teaching and is unwilling to be taught. His idea is, that the church is an open field, and that his emancipation has brought him room in every direction, but especially in the direction of holding meeting. It is not extravagant to say that he has been in a "protracted meeting" for the past four years, and it is still going on. And who can wonder at it? He stands on the shore and sees a million of men and horses struggling and going down in the dark waves of civil war, while he has escaped safe to land! Now he is "going to Canaan." Well, we should have shouted too, if not as long, certainly as loud as the negro. Maybe he'll get through some of these days, and discover that freedom is not heaven.

LETTER FROM BISHOP ANDREW.

DISTRICT MEETINGS.

MR. EDITOR: A very important portion of the work of a district conference or meeting is the giving in by the pastors a report of the state of the work on their several charges, and much of the interest of the meeting depends on the manner of presenting these reports. Sometimes the preacher is quite prolix in his report. He tells you not only how many appointments he has on his work, but the probable population, the number of families in his circuit, the probable number of children that will be born there in the next year, and a dozen other things, just of like character, which may all be well enough; but as it will take up much time, the only certain effect will be to put a large portion of the audience to gaping and yawning—a sure sign that there is not much interest felt in the preacher's revelations. It will perhaps be well for the presiding officer to draw out the information desired by special questions, and if the preacher has anything of importance on which he wishes to enlarge, let him do so, but no long, dry harangues. There are in every subject discussed a few prominent and important points, which will embrace all that is worth hearing. To these let the speaker confine himself, and he will be happier himself and produce a much better effect on his hearers. Some preachers are slow of speech, and can't get on without the most wearisome repetitions. In such cases might it not be well to present his report in a written form?

I will notice a defect in nearly all the district meetings which I have attended. The meeting begins about Friday morning, or perhaps on Thursday evening, and members begin by Saturday noon to make arrangements for leaving, and then there is considerable danger of Sabbath breaking—not a few on the route home. Why not begin earlier, and take ample time to go through your work deliberately. I learn that the district meeting for Montgomery district, at its late session in Tuskegee, resolved to secure a suitable place for a camp ground as a permanent meeting place for the district meeting, and a camp meeting, both at the same time. This movement strikes me favorably, and I shall rejoice to see the plan adopted of holding district meetings at camp meetings. Try it, brethren. The grand object of the district meeting is the increase of spirituality in the church, and to this end let all our movements be directed. Let us feel that we are acting as in the immediate presence of God. Let us improve our time in the holding a sort of individual annual class meeting. Let us have a sort of district meeting love-feast on Sabbath morning, where, in the good old-fashioned way, we shall talk to each other of God's love to us, and of our love for him and for our brethren and sisters. This has been done at some of these meetings, and with eminent success; and let the love-feast be closed with a solemn communion at the table of the Lord. Thus shall we be best prepared, both preachers and people, for the further services of the holy day. I suggest that the Friday of the meeting be always a day set apart for solemn prayer and fasting. And now, Doctor, if these hints don't take up the room which might be better employed, I will possibly trouble you again some of these times. Affectionately your's,

JAS. O. ANDREW.

ROMAN CATHOLIC.

THE POPE'S LETTER TO THE PROTESTANT CHURCHES.

The following is the text of the apostolic letter addressed by the pope to all Protestant and non-Catholic bodies:

PIUS, Sovereign Pontiff, Ninth of the Name, to all Protestants and other Non-Catholics:

You must already all know that we, who, despite our unworthiness, have been raised to the throne of Peter, and, therefore, have been advanced to the supreme government of the whole Catholic church, and to its administration, which has been intrusted to us in divine fashion by Christ himself, our Lord—we have judged it fitting to summon before us all our venerable brethren, the bishops of all the world, and to convene them into an Œcumenical council, which is to be celebrated next year in such a manner that, with those same venerable brethren who have been summoned to take part in this subject of our solicitude, we may be able to adopt all the most opportune and necessary resolutions to dissipate the shadows of so large a number of pestilential errors which daily are extending their power and license, to the great prejudice of souls, and daily more and more to establish and strengthen among the Christian peoples committed to our watchful care the reign of the true faith, of justice, and of the true peace of God. Relying, then, with firm confidence upon the close and affectionate bond of union which unites those our same venerable brothers to our person and to the Apostolic See, and who have never ceased at any period of our pontificate to give to us and to the Apostolic See the most striking evidence of faith, of love, and of respect, we truly hope that, as it has been in times past with other general councils, so it may be in the present, and that this Œcumenical council convoked by us may bring forth, with the help of the divine grace, the most rich and the most fertile fruits, to the great glory of God and the eternal welfare of man.

Therefore, in that hope, and instigated and encouraged by the charity of our Lord Jesus Christ, who laid down his life for the salvation of the world, we can not forbear, on the occasion of the meeting of the next council, addressing our apostolic and paternal word to all those who, while recognizing that same Jesus as our Saviour, and rejoicing in the name of Christians, yet still do not profess the veritable faith of Christ or follow the communion of the Catholic church. And if we do so, it is, before all, to warn, exhort and supplicate them with our zeal and all our charity to consider and seriously examine if they in truth follow the path prescribed by our Lord Jesus Christ, and which lends to eternal happiness. In fact, no one can deny or doubt that Jesus Christ himself, in order that all future human generations should enjoy the fruit of his redemption, built up here below his church in the person of Peter—that is to say, the church, one, holy, Catholic and apostolic—and that He granted to him all the necessary power, in order that the faith should be preserved intact and entire, and that the same faith should be transmitted to all peoples, to all races, and to all nations in such a manner that men should be able to be united in His mystical body in baptism, and always to preserve in themselves, until the entire development, that new life of grace without which no one can ever merit or obtain life eternal, so that the same church which constitutes the mystical body shall remain, until the end of time, firm and indestructible in its own constitution, developed in vigor, and furnishing to its children all that is necessary to life eternal.

Now, whoever wishes well to consider and examine with attention the different religions societies divided among themselves, and separated from the Catholic church, which, since the time of the Lord Jesus Christ and his apostles, has always uninterruptedly exercised, and still exercises, by means of its legitimate pastors, the power intrusted to her by our Lord himself—whoever, we say, shall thus examine will easily convince himself that not one of those religious societies, nor all the religious societies together, constitutes, or in any way can be considered as the one and only Catholic church which our Lord Jesus Christ founded, constituted and desired—should see that they can not in any way be regarded as a member or as a part of that same church, because they are visibly separated from all Catholic unity. As, in fact, those societies are deprived of that living authority established by God, who pointed out to mankind, before all things, the matter of faith and the rule of morality, who directed and presided over them in all things affecting their eternal welfare, therefore those societies themselves constantly varied in their doctrine, and thus this instability is unceasing.

Every one can easily comprehend that this state of things is altogether opposed to the church established by Christ our Lord—a church in which the truth must always rest unaltered, without being the subject of any change, as a charge intrusted to that same church, in order that she may preserve it in all its integrity, a charge for the care of which the presence of the Holy Ghost and its aid has been granted forever to this church.

No one can ignore the fact that these differences of doctrine and opinion give rise to the social schisms, and that therefrom spring those innumerable sects and communions which are daily increasing, to the detriment of Christian and civil society.

Whoever, in fact, recognizes religion as the foundation of human society can not refuse to admit and avow the influence exercised over civilized society by those divisions and disagreements of principles of that nature, and religious societies struggling one with the other; and also with what power the denial of authority established by God to regulate the convictions of the human intelligence, and to direct the actions of men, both in their social and private life, has excited, has developed and has fomented those unfortunate troubles, those events and those disturbances which agitate and affect almost all nations in a most deplorable manner.

Therefore, in order that all those who are not instilled with the principles of the unity and truth of the Catholic church should seize the occasion offered to them by this council, in which the Catholic church, to which their ancestors belonged, shows a proof of its complete unity, of its vigor, and of its inextinguishable vitality; that they should obey the necessities of their hearts; that they should strive to bear themselves away from that state in which they can not be assured of their salvation; that they should address without ceasing the most fervent prayers to God that he should dissipate the cloud of error, and that he should bring them back into the bosom of the church, our holy mother, where their ancestors received the salutary nourishment of life, and alone preserves in its integrity the doctrine of Jesus Christ, handing it down, and dispensing the mysteries of celestial grace;

We, therefore, who ought most zealously to fulfill all the duties of a good pastor, in accordance with the charge of our apostolic ministry, intrusted to us by Christ our Lord himself, and who ought to embrace all men in the world in our paternal charity, address this letter to all Christians separated from us—a letter in which we exhort and supplicate them to hasten to return to the fold of Christ.

It is because we heartily desire their salvation in Jesus Christ, and fear one day to have to render an account of their souls to that same Jesus Christ, our Judge, if we do not point out to them and open to them as in us the way which they must follow if they would gain their salvation.

Also, in all our prayers and supplications, and while performing acts of grace, we never cease humbly to ask for them, both by night and day, the celestial light and the abundance of grace from the eternal Pastor of souls. And, whereas, despite our unworthiness, we fulfill upon earth the functions of the vicar of Christ, we await with open arms the return of those wandering sons to the Catholic church, in order that we may be able to receive them with all affection into the dwelling of the celestial Father, and make them participators in his everlasting treasures.

It is that much-wished-for return to the truth and communion of the Catholic church upon which depends not only the salvation of each one in particular, but of the whole Christian society; and the world will never enjoy true peace until it forms one flock under one pastor.

On the 22d of September, by Rev. H. C. Thwentt, Mr. James B. Williams to Miss Fannie Moss, both of Mansfield, Louisiana.

OBITUARIES.

IN MEMORIAM.

Died, at her residence, Forest Home, Pike county, Mississippi, Mrs. Catharine M. Downer. She was born June 27, 1802, and died October 10, 1868.

Converted from Catholicism to Methodism in 1835, while residing in Quincy, Illinois, under the ministration of the Rev. Abijah Mattlox, she became a close follower and servant of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ, and it was her constant aim to grow in grace and the knowledge of her blessed Master, and was an active, prayerful and cross bearing disciple of her Lord.

Her evidence as to her conversion was always clear and bright—not a doubt of her acceptance with God; and though her path was not "o'er flowery beds of ease," redeeming grace ever enabled her to keep her eyes fixed upon the prize set before her, and to trust in the love of a Heavenly Father who ever ordereth all things well, and who will never suffer the trials to more than refine and purify the heart.

A loving mother, a true friend, a faithful wife—she did not confine herself alone to these duties, but felt that her mission in life was to do good wherever her hand found it to do, and her record will be abundant. In her the widow and orphan have lost a friend whose ear was ever attentive to their call, and whose hand was ever ready to assist.

Under the weight of over sixty-six years of active life she had for some time past felt that it would not be long ere her loved Saviour would call the exile home. In her last illness she remarked to a young unconverted friend: "Oh, what a blessed thing it is that I found Jesus when well. Now it would be too late." She took every opportunity to press upon those around the necessity of seeking the favor of God and an acceptance at his hands.

Surrounded in her last moments by her two surviving children and many friends, she passed down to the brink of death's cold flood, and as the waters deepened her last words were: "Jesus, precious Jesus!" Thus a mother in Israel fell asleep in Jesus. Not dead, but gone before. R.

Nicholas Rann, a native of Adams county, Mississippi, born March 29, 1799, and a resident of Jefferson county for several years, and of Madison county since 1841, died, in great peace, August 25, 1868.

He was educated and brought up in the Roman Catholic faith; but when he reached manhood's age he read the Holy Scriptures and became a Protestant. He united with the Methodist Episcopal church, and was a lover of class meetings and love-feast meetings. For many years it was his custom to ride seven miles every week to meet with his class on Wednesday. He prayed much, and was a sweet-spirited Christian. His example was bright. May those who knew him be induced to walk as he walked, to live as he lived, that their peace may flow as a river, and their end be as his was. H. H. M.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

GOLD BONDS OF THE

CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

A limited quantity of the Thirty-Year Six Per Cent. First Mortgage Bonds of the Central Pacific Railroad Company are offered to investors, for the present, at

103 Per Cent. and Accrued Interest,

IN CURRENCY.

These Bonds are secured by a Trust Deed upon the most important link of the great Inter-Oceanic Railroad, two-thirds of which is already built, at a cost of nearly

ONE HUNDRED MILLIONS,

and which enjoys already a self-sustaining way traffic. The whole line of continuous rail between will be completed by July next, when an immense through business will undoubtedly follow. More than Twelve Hundred Miles of the distance between the Missouri river and the Pacific ocean are already traversed by the locomotive; and it is probable that three hundred miles additional will be completed during the current year. The future of this Line, therefore, is unusually promising.

NEW YORK AND SAN FRANCISCO

The Central Pacific Railroad Company

receives from the United States Government about ten millions of acres of

THE PUBLIC LANDS,

situated along the line of their Road; also a Subsidy Loan of United States Six Per Cent. Bonds, averaging $35,000 per mile, as fast as the sections of twenty miles are completed.—They have received, in addition, important grants from the State and cities of California, worth more than $3,000,000 in Gold. The proceeds of these Lands, Bonds, Capital Stock, Subscriptions, Subventions and Net Earnings are invested in the enterprise, to which is added the amount realized from First Mortgage Bonds. These latter have

THE FIRST LIEN UPON THE WHOLE PROPERTY,

and are issued to the same amount only as the Government advances, or to the extent of about one-third the cost value of the Road, equipment, etc., etc.

The Cash Resources are abundant for the completion of the work, and the net earnings, from the way traffic upon three hundred and twenty-five miles now open for business, are

MORE THAN DOUBLE THE CURRENT INTEREST LIABILITIES.

Besides a mileage upon all through business, this Road, having the best lands for settlement, the most productive mines, the nearest markets, and being exempt from competition, will always command larger revenues, which are wholly in Gold.

Two-thirds of the entire Loan is already marketed, and, judging by past experience, the Loan will soon be closed. Investors who desire an unusually safe, reliable and profitable security would do well to purchase before the Bonds are all taken.

☞ The Company reserve the right to advance the price at any time; but all orders actually in transitu at the time of any such advance will be filled at the present price. At this time they pay

More than Eight Per Cent. upon the Investment,

and have, from National and State laws, guarantees superior to any other corporate securities now offered.

The First Mortgage Bonds are of $1,000 each, with semi-annual Gold Coupons attached, payable in July and January. Both Interest and Principal are made Expressly Payable in United States Gold Coin. The back interest from July 1 is charged only at the currency rates.

We receive all classes of Government Bonds, at their full market rates, in exchange for the Central Pacific Railroad Bonds, thus enabling the holders to realize from five to ten per cent. profit and keep the principal of their investments equally secure, and receive the same rate of interest for a longer period.

Orders and inquiries will receive prompt attention. Information, descriptive pamphlets, etc., giving a full account of the organization, progress, business and prospects of the enterprise, furnished on application. Bonds sent by return Express at our cost.

Subscriptions Received by Banks and Bankers, Agents for the Loan.

☞ All descriptions of GOVERNMENT SECURITIES bought, sold or exchanged, at our office and by mail and telegraph, at market rates.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

LULLABY.

BY MRS. SARAH E. HENSHAW.

Baby, what do the blossoms say,
Down in the garden walk?
They nod and they bow in the twilight gray;
Pray, can you hear them talk?
They say, "O darling baby, bright,
We are going to sleep. Good night! good night!
For the lullaby breezes have come to sing,
How God takes care of everything."
Sleep! sleep!

Baby, what does the robin say?
Do you hear his evening song?
He sits and sings his sunset lay
With a heart all blithe and strong.
He sings, "Good night, my baby dear!
Sleep soft, sleep well, and do not fear,
For somehow I know, as I sit and sing,
That God takes care of everything."
Sleep! sleep!

Baby, what does the cricket say?
Do you hear his measured voice?
He says, "The sun has gone away,
And I've come out to rejoice.
For the cool dew falls upon the grass,
And the fireflies whisper, as they pass,
'Cricket, cricket, come out and sing,
How God takes care of everything.'"
Sleep! sleep!

Baby, what does the katydid say?
Do you hear its hoarse, loud tone?
It says, "I sleep the livelong day,
In my nook so cool and lone.
But now the stars no more are hid,
And I'm telling them what Katy did—
Katy, my daughter, who loved to sing
How God takes care of everything."
Sleep! sleep!

Baby, what are your mother's words,
As you nestle upon her breast?
She says, "Come hither, my sweetest of birds,
For you must seek your nest.
The flowers and the robins have gone to sleep;
The crickets and katydids their watches keep;
And your mother will sit by your cradle and sing,
That God takes care of everything."
Sleep! sleep! —Little Corporal.

The Rocky Mountain Expedition.—No. I.

BY W. H. DANIELS.

After leaving Denver, the first camp was made among the mountains, beside a swift stream called Bear Creek. It was a beautiful spot, with high peaks of rock shutting it in on all sides; a high table land, of about half a mile square, making a fine pasture for the animals, "with a fence of mountains all around it," as Goodfellow said. The banks of the stream were lined with alders and other small trees, over which climbed the wild grapevines, making a thick curtain of foliage, through which little glimpses of the foaming water might be seen. Wild currant bushes, loaded with bright red berries, grew among the rocks; there were also wild gooseberries and raspberries in the canon, which perhaps accounted for the name of the stream, as bears are very fond of berries, and of course would be found where their favorite fruit abounded.

Here the tents were pitched for a fortnight, and the real work of the expedition was fairly begun.

Many kinds of rare and beautiful birds were added to the collection; the entomologists of the party bagged curious grasshoppers, beetles, spiders and butterflies; and the hunters gave good account of themselves, in squirrels, rabits, coules, and other small game.

One day Reynolds, the pioneer, an old hunter and trapper, proposed to go on a grand hunt about sixty miles farther up into the mountains, to a region near the Blue river, where large game of all sorts was to be found in great abundance.

True and Goodfellow were to go with him, and were in high glee at the prospect of shooting antelope, bagging elk and Rooky mountain sheep, and, no doubt, treeing a cinnamon bear or two, or paying their respects to a grizzly.

"Rabits and squirrels are all very well, but I want some big hunting," said Goodfellow.

The major approved the plan, and, by way of encouragement to the young hunters, promised a new pair of boots to that boy in the expedition who should kill the first bear.

The major's leather medal, as the prize was called, was regarded as the most useful gift which could be offered under the circumstances.

Many a time the boys discussed the question who was likely to get it. And when little Bob Sharp asked permission to go on the grand hunt, some of the big fellows, by way of teasing him, and knowing he had never killed any game larger than a Rocky mountain quail, declared that it was settled who should have the boots if Bob was to go out bear hunting.

But Reynolds had taken a liking for the lad, and agreed, with the major's consent, to take him along; and, as he had never fired a rifle in his life, he was advised to take along his "Parker," as he called it, a beautiful little double-barreled, breech-loading fowling piece, given him by his friend, the inventor, and to devote himself to grouse and squirrels, and also to his usual occupation of keeping everybody jolly.

Great preparations were made for the hunt; rations were cooked, bullets run, guns put in trim, haversacks packed, blankets strapped to the saddles, and then they mounted, promising to meet their comrades at Empire City in a week, and, with a rousing cheer, that made the rocks ring again, they put spurs to their ponies and disappeared up the winding trail.

A rapid march of two days brought them into a wild and heavily wooded country, along the base of "The Range," as the line of snow peaks is called, to distinguish it from the outlying hills and mountains. Here they made their camp, in a little valley, where a stream made its way between high peaks, which, at this spot, were some twenty rods apart, with steep precipices facing each other, as if the mountain had been split down through the middle, and the two halves had been pushed apart by some great convulsion of nature. There was green grass for the animals in the little meadow, and the face of the precipice on one side had been cut away by the water, so that there was a kind of cave in the rock, which the old hunter said would make as good a house as anybody could wish.

The saddles and packs were taken off, the animals picketed, and then, after a splendid supper of trout, from the stream, a couple of sage hens, that True had shot on the march, and some hot flap-jacks and coffee, which he had learned to cook in the most approved style, the hunters lay down under the shelving rock and went to sleep, with their feet to the fire, and their trusty rifles tucked under the edge of their blankets.

Very early the next morning the old hunter called up the lads, who were ready in a minute, for the morning hunt.

Reynolds took Goodfellow with him, and started to climb the mountains, while True and Bob went down to the bank of the stream, crept into a thick copse of alders, which concealed them completely, and waited some time before it was light enough to see the sights on their guns.

Presently they heard a tramp, tramp, along through the weeds, and a full grown buck came down to the stream, stopped and looked sharply round, and then put his nose down to the water, stopping every second or two to look up, as if he imagined there was danger near.

The sight was so exciting that neither of the young hunters could command his nerves. Indeed, Bob was quite unable to speak or move, with the "buck fever," as the old hunters call the wild excitement one almost always feels at seeing this splendid game for the first time within the reach of his rifle. But True happened to remember that the boys in the bird department, who had read about the buck fever, had declared that he could not hit a deer the first shot he fired at one. This put him on his nerve at once, and shutting his teeth tight together, which had been fairly chattering, and taking a firm grip of his rifle, he raised it slowly to his eye. The buck heard the slight rustle of the bush, and was off like a flash; but quicker than a flash True's bullet was after him. He gave a tremendous leap into the air, ran with incredible speed for fifty yards or so, stopped, trembled all over, and fell dead, shot through the breast, the ball piercing him just behind the fore leg, and coming out in front of the shoulder, on the other side.

When the others came back to breakfast, carrying a Rocky mountain sheep, on a pole between them, they found the lads busy broiling venison steaks; and when Reynolds came to examine the skin of the deer, which True had carefully taken off, to stuff for the museum at home, he declared the shot to have been placed as well as an old hunter could have done it.

The sheep he had shot was a curious kind of animal, with longer legs and thinner body than the common sheep, and with horns so large and heavy that one would think the poor thing would be tired to death with carrying them. They sometimes grow to the length of nearly two feet, curving backward toward the shoulder blades, and are as large at the base as the tusks of a middle-sized elephant.

"These clumsy things are very useful sometimes," said Reynolds, "for when the sheep want to get down a precipice where they can't walk, (and that must be a very steep one, where these fellows cannot walk,) they balance themselves on the edge, as if to calculate the distance, and, giving a leap, they come down half a hundred feet or more, and strike on the butts of their horns without the least injury."

Bob looked as if he thought it was a pretty big story, but True said he had read that very thing in a book of natural history, and the old hunter assured them he had often seen it done.

After breakfast the game was put on the pack mule, which they had brought for that purpose, and the hunters started on their march to the Blue river country.—Little Corporal.

SCIENTIFIC.

PHOTOGRAPHY SIMPLIFIED.—How often, in the course of a country walk, we meet with objects we long to have the power to record with the pencil—picturesque combinations that may never occur again, which we would fain fix upon the paper for after consultation. It is true there are the photographic appliances which place all men with equal technical skill upon a level; but we don't go out willingly for a stroll with bag and baggage—hamper ourselves with impediments that give us the appearance of being out upon a surveying expedition. Hitherto this has been the drawback to the exercise of a most beautiful art. But I am glad to find that the pencil of nature is now placed at our disposal in a manageable form. A camera is now invented for taking landscapes, not bigger than an opera glass; a stand is improvised out of an ordinary walking stick, and a supply of dry plates, prepared on the plan proposed by Major Russell, in which bromised collodium is used. Such plates develop, with an alkaline preparation, without the aid of silver. No blackened fingers, no laboratory of bottles are any longer needed, and the method of printing, while it is clean, enables enlarged proofs to be taken at home at leisure. The tourist may carry in his shooting-coat pocket and in his trusty staff all the means necessary for taking transcripts direct from nature in her most interesting scenes. When we see what miles of foot-clogging clay a sportsman will cheerfully carry his fowling-piece over for the chance of a shot at a partridge, can we doubt that the artistic pedestrian will in future provide himself with his camera, with which, in a day's walk, he may fill his folio with recollections which will give him pleasure for a lifetime?

THE NEW ELECTRIC LIGHT.—Many visitors have been attracted to the French steamer St. Laurent, lying at Pier 50, North river, during the present week, by the beautiful electric light which is exhibited on board every evening. This light is produced by the burning of carbon pencils in currents of electricity. The latter are furnished by induction, and without the use of batteries, by an improved form of Nollet's apparatus. This consists of forty series of horse-shoe magnets set in a circular frame, within which is an axis bearing sixty four reels of copper wire, and revolving before the magnets at the rate of three hundred turns a minute. A double current of electricity is thus induced in the copper wires, the one direct as they approach the poles, the other reversed after they have passed them. No device for breaking the current is used, as it is found that, though the current is interrupted at each reversion, the light is not perceptibly affected unless the interruption exceeds one-twentieth of a second.

The magnetic apparatus is about four feet six inches square; it stands in the engine room of the St. Laurent, and is driven by a donkey engine of one or two horse-power. The electricity is conveyed to the lantern by wires. The cost of the light is about twelve cents an hour; the same amount of light by gas would cost two dollars. The light is displayed on the St. Laurent through a Foucault lens, which can be turned by hand in any direction, placed on the bridge above the deck.—New York Sun.

ARTIFICIAL STONE.—The concrete stone manufactured in England has for years now—since 1861—been subjected to every test that ingenuity could devise—to heat and frost—to water, fresh salt and impure, to wash and attrition, and to every atmospheric exposure, and it is found that very few natural stones are as durable or as uniform, and the best of them are costly, and, in many localities, inaccessible. But the comparative cheapness and durability of the artificial stone are of no greater importance in engineering than to architecture as a fine art. The enormous expense of cutting rock into exact and elaborate forms prevents the general adornment of structures. But when the beautiful form may not only be cast in a mould, but endlessly reproduced from the same mould, and when the most florid ornamentation may be more cheaply moulded than the plainest and most unrelieved outlines can be cut, there will be no further excuse for the monotonous and ugly buildings that characterize street architecture at present.

THE Emperor and Empress of France are announced to be converts, to a certain extent, to the homeopathic system.

A MOOSE was recently captured at St. Mary's, Nova Scotia, which weighed eight hundred pounds. The antlers extended nine feet.

FARM AND GARDEN.

A SETTLED POLICY ON THE FARM

The whole secret of the successful farmer often lies in his having a fixed plan of operations. Multitudes have no plan but to meet their immediate necessities and make money by the easiest and seemingly shortest methods. If wool brings high prices, they will gradually give up dairying and work into sheep, with the expectation of making their fortunes. If wool and mutton raising for a time does not pay, they sell their flocks at a great sacrifice. If hops are sixty cents a pound, they invest in hop poles and kilns for drying, and expect sudden wealth. If, when their yards come into full bearing, the prices fall off one-half or more, they are disgusted, and ready to plow up their yards, concluding the business will not pay. There are men who are always taking up a good thing a little too late to make money by it. The farmer cannot afford this continual change. His business is less speculative than any other, and, after providing for the wants of his family and stock, he should give his attention steadily to the production of a few animals, crops, or other products, on which he can rely to raise money. Any branch of farm industry, steadily followed, will be found profitable. Dairying, in a year of short grass, might not pay very well. But the years of drought are exceptions, and the man who makes first-rate butter or cheese will find them a reliable source of income. Where a specialty is made of some one crop, it is particularly important that he should follow it steadily. The raising of hops or of tobacco requires fixtures that are useless in any other branch of farming, and the change of crops involves a considerable loss of capital. Besides, we are always learning in a business to which we give habitual attention, and this knowledge is as much a part of our capital as the money invested in tools and buildings. If a man should make potatoes his leading crop, he would study to lessen the cost of production, and would resort to devices in the preparation of the seed and the soil, in the use of manures, and in cultivation, quite unknown to the farmer who pursues a careless style of husbandry. He could raise potatoes cheaper than his neighbors, by means of his improved methods, and if he sold at the same price, make more money. Whatever branch of farming you follow, stick to it, if it is moderately profitable. Lay your plans far ahead, and be prepared for the exceptional years, when large profits come from high prices, or losses from unfavorable seasons. A mixed husbandry is always the safest, and is not at all inconsistent with the cultivation of commercial crops, as tobacco, hops, flax, onion seed or vegetable seed of any kind, garden vegetables for market, fruits, etc. The introduction of these requires close calculation, definite plans, and thorough business management, if success be attained.—American Agriculturist.

WOOD ASHES AS A FERTILIZER.—This is one of the most valuable fertilizers within reach of the farmer. The unleached article has the more potash, but the leached is thought to be quite as valuable. In leaching they shrink a good deal, and lime is usually added, which increases their value. They are generally sold, too, at a less price. Ashes are well suited to all farm crops, and are very beneficial in the fruit yard and orchard. Most farmers still sell wood in the cities and villages, and rather than go home empty, they should carry back ashes and other fertilizers, to replace the potash, lime and phosphoric acid that have been carried off in the crops and animals sold. Ashes show immediate effects from their application, and at the same time last long in the soil. They are very highly appreciated in the onion growing districts, but may be applied with equal advantage to ordinary farm crops. They should be kept as near the surface as possible, spread and harrowed into the seed bed, or applied directly to the growing crops. Make a business of saving, buying and storing ashes during the winter for the next season's operations.—American Agriculturist.

SPAIN.—Another week has passed without seeing the least disturbance of order and quiet in any part of Spain. Many of the leading men of the Conservative party have given in their adhesion to the provisional government. No general has taken the field in favor of the Bourbons. Only a few bishops have attempted to create trouble, but have been promptly put down. It now appears certain that all the political parties, except the Democrats, have declared, or will declare, in favor of retaining a monarchical form of government. The Democrats, who are unanimous in favor of a republic, begin to display a respectable strength, and the appointment of one of the leading men, Colonel Escalante, as commander of the National Guard of Madrid, gives them a power on which the other powers look with some distrust. Serrano and Prim, however, endeavor to keep up a good understanding with the leading Democrats, and Serrano has just made a speech at Saragossa, in which he expressed regret that Rivero, one of the leaders of the Spanish Republicans, had not accepted a place in the cabinet. As soon as the constituent Cortes meets, the provisional junta of Madrid will resign. There are no indications yet as regards the election of a king. Prince Alfred of England is said to be out of the question, as a Protestant. In addition to the candidates already announced, it is now stated that the name of Ferdinand, the father of the King of Portugal, is favorably mentioned. No one thinks of the Bourbons. The protest of Queen Isabella against the revolution is everywhere treated with contempt. The Spanish provisional government takes pains to circulate it throughout the kingdom, regarding it as one of the best means to convince the people of the rottenness of the Bourbon dynasty.—Methodist.

THE PUBLIC DEBT.

INCREASE IN THREE YEARS.

We copy as follows from a special dispatch to the Cincinnati Enquirer, dated Washington, October 5:

The Intelligencer prints an article this morning on the finances, by Robert J. Walker, compiled from the books of the department, with the approbation of Secretary McCulloch. It is authentic and accurate, as it contains no conjectures or estimates, but only recorded facts. Referring to it the editor says: From this table it appears that our debt on the 31st of August was greater by over $160,000,000 than on the 1st of April, 1865, the subsequent rate of increase exceeding $4 000,000 a month or nearly $50,000 000 a year.

The debt is greater by over $35 000,000 than it was on the 1st of May last, being $35,850,486. On this basis the yearly rate of increase of debt would be over $150,000,000. If to this annual rate of increase we add interest at the rate of six per cent. a year, compounded annually for twenty years, the debt, instead of being paid, would be more than double, and would largely exceed $5,000,000,000.

The monthly increase of the debt for four months past was at the rate of $8,700,000 per month, and in August was upward of $12,000,000. This increase, it should be noted, is during the great quarter when the average rate of revenue from imports exceeded about one-third the rate for the fiscal year.

But this table exhibits a still more alarming fact, that while the debt bearing interest in currency had decreased on the 31st of August last $629,940,728, from the 31st March, 1865, the debt bearing interest in coin had nearly doubled, having increased on the 31st of August last $996,180,508 since the 31st of March, 1865. Thus, on the 30th of April, 1865, the annual interest payable in coin was only $68,978,414, while on the 31st of August last this annual coin interest had reached $123,576,821; the increase of annual coin interest being $5,959,529.

Now, the total annual interest on coin and currency, as shown by the table, was $102,836,531 on the 31st of March, 1865, and $127,938,611 on the 31st of August last, showing an increase in the annual interest payable in coin and currency on the 31st of August last of $25,112,080.

But this, as is shown by the table, is not the only real increase. Thus we have seen that while on the 31st of April, 1865, the annual currency interest was $45,127,936, it had fallen on the 31st of August last to $4,374,099, while the annual coin interest had increased nearly $60,000,000. The account would then stand thus: On the 30th of April, 1865, coin interest converted into currency, $93,418,481; currency interest at that day, $4,127,936; total annual interest in currency, $138-726,417. On the 31st of August, 1868, coin interest converted into currency, $180,417 986; actual currency interest, $4,374,990. Currency interest 31st of August, 1868, $184,792,976. Currency interest after the close of the war, 31st of April, 1865, $138,736,417. Increased interest, 31st of August, 1868, $46,058,559.

Thus we see that since the close of the war the annual interest of the public debt has increased upward of $46,000,000. This increased annual interest would represent a principal sum exceeding $750,000,000.

REUBEN WALTON, Esq., living near Newport, Page county, Virginia, has been offered $5,000 for his orchard, which was planted only five years ago, and covers seventeen acres and contains one thousand trees.

FIVE HUNDRED SOUTHERN METHODIST PREACHERS,

Who are both the agents and owners of this sheet.

¶A man who wishes to be known in the country is certainly much in his own light who does not display his name in our advertising columns.

Our terms are precisely the same as those of other weekly newspapers in this city.

We have fewer advertisements than the secular papers, but what we have are read with that conscientious regard for everything that appears in a Christian paper which takes hold—in fact, too strong a hold—and holds the editor responsible for all the patent medicines, hardware, shoes, pork, flour, and even whisky, which may be set forth in its columns.

The terms of advertising are as follows:

SQUARES.	1 MO.	3 MOS.	6 MOS.	12 MOS.

THE HOME MONTHLY, New Orleans, for 1867.

The HOME MONTHLY will contain forty-eight pages of reading matter, printed upon fine paper and in clear type, and will, from time to time, be accompanied by elegant steel-plate engravings. The subscription price will remain $3 per annum, or $1.50 for six months, invariably in advance. In order to build up a still larger circulation, we have concluded to offer the following

Liberal Inducements to Agents.

To any person sending us three yearly subscriptions, with nine dollars, we will send the MONTHLY six months, or allow them, if they prefer, to retain One Dollar and Twenty-five Cents of the amount.

To any person sending us six subscriptions, with eighteen dollars, ($18,) we will send the MONTHLY one year, or allow them to retain Two Dollars and Fifty Cents of the amount.

On amounts for subscription less than nine dollars, agents will be allowed to retain ten per cent.

Ministers, it is hoped, will act as agents, not so much from pecuniary considerations as from a laudable desire to assist in building up a home literature worthy of a place among the families of the South and on the center-tables of a Christian people.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as the plan of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

At Least Thirty per Cent, as Compared with any other Stove.

and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally known as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. That meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

For sale only by the undersigned.

In addition to the above, I also have a large and complete assortment of COOKING STOVES, comprising all of the leading Stoves of the day, equal to any offered in any other house in this city.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY, AT Greensboro, Alabama.

The next session of this Institution begins the first Wednesday in October, and is divided into two terms.

TUITION.

Academic Department, per term	$35 00
Preparatory Department, per term	30 00
Contingent fee, per term	2 50

A fee of $5 is charged those who attend the schools of Chem. and Nat. Phil.

Board, exclusive of washing and lights, $10 to $20 per month. By messing it can be obtained even cheaper than at these rates.

Sons of ministers of the Gospel in the regular work, and those studying for the ministry, are admitted free of tuition.

The whole expense for the scholastic year, including everything except books and clothing, will be $250, payable one-half at the opening of the session and the remainder on the 15th of February. If the student wishes to board in a private family it will be $280. This great reduction in the price of board and tuition will bring the advantages of the University within the reach of those whose limited means have heretofore placed the highest scholastic training beyond their reach, as well as secure the patronage of those who, on the score of economy, are sending their sons out of the State to be educated.

Especial attention is called to the fact that preparatory students are taught exclusively by the Faculty.

The Law School has been organized under the management of Hons. Judge Coleman and A. Benners.

NEW PATENT PIANOS.

RAVEN & BACON, (established in 1829.)

Warerooms, Nos. 644 and 646 Broadway,
NEW YORK.

Manufacturers of Piano Fortes, with the patent Combination Sounding boards,

Patented August 14th, 1860.

This invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affects the sounding board, the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a pure liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. The sounding-board released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding-boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection, and its vibratory quality increased.

Our Pianos are first-class in every respect, and purchasers will have not only our own guarantee as to their quality, but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument, obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

EAST ALABAMA MALE COLLEGE

AT AUBURN, ALA.

The Fall term of this Institution will open on the FIRST WEDNESDAY in SEPTEMBER next, and close on the 20th December. Besides the regular course of studies for graduation, large facilities are afforded for instruction in the Commercial and Agricultural branches. Separate schools for these branches, in connection with the College, were authorized at the last annual meeting of the Board of Trustees. A student not wishing to take either the regular or a partial literary course in the College, may confine himself to either of these Departments, and in a short time become qualified for business.

The Preparatory Department, with competent teachers, will be under the special supervision of the Faculty.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

We have again to notice only a moderate degree of animation in the general market. Country merchants wishing to be at home during the election, the business in the wholesale trade has been mostly confined to the execution of a few orders from correspondents in the interior, and the regular local trade. Operations in our leading staple have been restricted by factors claiming a greater advance, predicated on the accounts from Liverpool and New York, than buyers are willing to pay, but still a liberal amount has changed hands at a net improvement of about ⅛c. Sugar and molasses have come forward more freely, and sold at easier prices for the former and a decided decline for the latter. Western produce has continued quiet, with light stocks and a limited demand, but more liberal receipts have increased the supplies.

The weather has been clear and bright, and, with a favorable picking season, our accounts from the interior are more encouraging with regard to cotton, as well as cane. In relation to the former, we learn that the intelligence from the Red river and the Washita is decidedly cheering, and some parties who have counted on a reduction from last year's crop, now anticipate an increase, raising their figures to 2,500,000 and 2,600,000. We notice that Messrs. Neil Bro. & Co., who gave these figures as their estimate a few days since, now raise them to 2,700,000.

The river has fallen one foot six inches since our last report, and is now thirteen feet six inches below high water mark.

Cotton.—The following are the arrivals since the 30th ultimo:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales.. 11823
Lake	9
Arkansas	1450
Mobile	247
Texas	317
Total	13846

We left the market, at the time of our last report, ruling at 21 to 21½c. for ordinary, 22 to 22½ for good ordinary, 22¾ to 23c. for low middling, 23¼ to 23½c. for middling, and 23¾c. for strict middling, since which, under the favorable accounts noted above, prices have improved fully ½c. On Saturday the movement commenced with a fair business, at comparatively full prices, but on the receipt of a false telegram, buyers were unwilling to go on unless at concessions, which factors found themselves compelled to admit. Then came the correction of the error, and notice of an actual advance, under which the demand became unusually active, and prices here paid showing an irregular advance of from ⅛ to ½c per pound. Buyers for Great Britain, the Continent and the North participated in the business, and the sales summed up 9,100 bales, low middling closing at 23 to 23½c., and middling at 23¾c. On Monday operations were checked by factors further advancing their pretensions ¼ to ½c., but still the business comprised 3800 bales, at fuller prices during the morning than were subsequently accepted, but the closing rates showing a net improvement of ¼c. On Tuesday, in the general suspension of business, the sales were confined to 1,400 bales, at easier prices, middling ruling at 23¾c.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 13,300 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 155,324 bales, against 40,805 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 142,802 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 21,232 bales to Great Britain, of 36,036 to France, and a decrease of 758 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we now quote as follows:

Low	— to —
Ordinary	21½ to 22
Good ordinary	22½ to 22¾
Low middling	23¼ to —
Middling	23½ to —
Strict middling	— to 24¼

Sugar.—The new crop of Louisiana is now coming in more freely, and the tendency of prices is in favor of buyers. The sales on Saturday and Monday comprised 75 hogsheads, at 7½c. per pound for very inferior, 11½c. for good common, 12½c. for fair, 13¼ to 14¼c. for seconds, and 14¼ to 14½c. for yellow.

SYNOPSIS OF CHARTER.

The plan proposed by the Mutual Aid and Benevolent Life Insurance Association is as follows:

1. Each person, upon enrolling himself or herself as a member, shall pay into the Treasury a membership fee, if between the ages of

16 to 30, inclusive, the sum of $10 00
31 to 40, inclusive, the sum of 15 00
41 to 50, inclusive, the sum of 20 00
51 to 60, inclusive, the sum of 25 00

which payment constitutes him or her a life member.

2. A Life Insurance Policy is issued for a sum equal to one dollar for each enrolled member appearing on the books of the Association, at the decease of said member.

But in no event shall the amount paid on said policy exceed $5,000.

3. On the death of any member an assessment is made upon each policy holder for one dollar and twenty-five cents, payable at the office of the Association, within thirty days after notification thereof, by publication in one daily newspaper published in the city of New Orleans, in English and one in French, for five consecutive days, and if the policy holder resides out of New Orleans he shall be notified in writing.

4. Should the number of members exceed five thousand, the assessment of $1 25 will be reduced in proportion to the number of members exceeding five thousand.

5. Should any member fail to pay the assessment in the time specified, he forfeits all previous payments or credits.

6. All accumulations from whatever source, such as forfeitures, interest, etc., shall be credited upon the books of the Association to the members pro rata, to be withdrawn in lieu of assessments. oct17 1y

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, AT Baton Rouge, Louisiana.
ELEVENTH SESSION.—TERMS REDUCED.
The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.
The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first-rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.
There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.
Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.
SPECIAL CAUTIONS.
Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health.
A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.
It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.
TERMS—Board and Tuition per session, $360.
PAYMENTS—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.
Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.
Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.
No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

FRANKLIN SEMINARY.
THE subscriber would inform his friends and the public that he has in charge FRANKLIN SEMINARY, and has a good school, which is designed to be permanent, in successful operation, and that he is prepared to receive any number of pupils that may be entered to his care. He would board, in his own family, some eight or ten pupils.
His experience enables him to assure patrons and friends that the education of their children and wards will be secured by confiding them to his institution.
The following are his terms of tuition, payable in advance, per session of five months:

Elementary Branches	$20.00
Higher Branches	25 00
Latin, Greek, etc	30 00

French, extra.
Board can be had, in good families, for $15 per month, exclusive of lights and washing. Present session ends on the 5th of February, and the next ends on the 10th of July. No vacation until July. Pupils can be entered at any time. For further particulars apply to

ORGAN OF THE M. E. CHURCH SOUTH FOR THE MOBILE, MONTGOMERY, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES

VOLUME XIV.—NUMBER 43.
WHOLE NUMBER..... 705.

NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1868.

$3 00 A YEAR IN ADVANCE.
OFFICE—112 CAMP STREET.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

NEW YORK, Nov. 9.—It is rumored that Congress next month will authorize new issues of greenbacks.

The ultra Radical members of Congress propose to call up Wilson's proposed Constitutional amendment, enacting negro suffrage in all the States.

Reconstruction is far from settled as a finalty by Grant's election. His hobby is said to be free speech in the South, but no negro supremacy.

Returns show unmistakably that Northern voters have discriminated between Presidential and Congressional candidates, voting for Grant and at the same time for the Democratic Congressional candidates. The Democrats will have at least ninety members in the House, leaving the Radicals fifteen less than two-thirds.

NEW YORK, Nov. 9.—The tenor of Washington specials, and the bulk of opinion in monetary circles, is decidedly indicative of an expansion of the volume of currency; whether by the reissue of legal tenders or the issue of three per cents, does not appear.

At present the probabilities are that Stanton will be Grant's Secretary of War, he being supposed to be available to deal with the complications of reconstruction.

TALLAHASSEE, Nov. 9.—Nothing of importance has transpired, since the report of Saturday, in the impeachment matter or the suit against Lieutenant Governor Gleason and Secretary Alden.

No indications of a disturbance of the public peace. About half the arms thrown from the cars were recovered in good order, and are in possession of the United States troops.

All the judges of the Supreme Court are here waiting the action of the Circuit Court.

MONTGOMERY, Nov. 9.—The Legislature is engaged on local business.

Governor Smith sent in a message to-day relating to appropriations in aid of clearing out and making navigable the rivers leading into the coal and iron regions of the State.

The returns form thirty counties give Grant ten thousand majority. The remaining thirty two counties, with the exception of four, will all probably give Seymour majorities. The State is still classed as doubtful.

Hundreds of white men did not vote because they did not have an opportunity of registering, while many others would not take the voter's oath.

NEW YORK, Nov. 9.—Money in demand at 7 per cent. Sterling 109¼. Gold 131¼. 5-20s of '62, 108¾.

LIVERPOOL, Nov. 9.—Afternoon.—Cotton quiet. Corn, 38s. 6d. Lard dull at 66.

HAVRE, Nov. 9.—Cotton 139 on the spot, 125 afloat.

NEW YORK, Nov. 9.—N. C's 65¾; Va.'s ex coupon 55¾; do. new 57; Tennessee 69; do. new 68¾.

Flour and wheat dull. Corn a shade firmer. Pork unsettled at $27 75 to $28. Lard dull.

Cotton quiet; middling uplands 25. Turpentine 44½. Rosin dull; common $2 25; strained $2 40 to $2 50.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 10.—A full cabinet present at the meeting to-day.

Replying to Mayor Bowen and the Reception Demonstation Committee, Grant said:

"GENTLEMEN: I am very glad to meet you all and receive your congratulations, but hope you will spare me any public demonstration, as I live here in this city, and will be glad to receive my friends at any time without display. I much prefer having none, and none will be held with my consent. To receive you at any time, either here or at my residence, without any demonstration, will be much more agreeable to me, and I hope will be agreeable to you. I shall take the demonstration all for granted, and appreciate your motives the same."

WASHINGTON, Nov. 10.—The New York World says a series of expeditions are preparing against Cuba, and that the leaders are in communication with the Cuban insurgents. The article has a sensational look. After describing the New York and Boston branches of the expedition the article continues:

"But the main and most important movement will be from New Orleans, the Mobile contingent cooperating with the principal column from Louisiana. Three thousand men will leave New Orleans in fifteen days from this date. They will be conveyed by a large and fast screw steamer, and with her, or on a different day or night, another fast vessel will sail, carrying stores, artillery and provisions for five thousand men. This body will be under General Harry Hays or General Charles F. Henningsen, of Nicaragua and Hungarian revolutionary fame.

Colonel James Kerrigan, formerly of the Twenty-fifth New York Infantry, is to have a separate command in the New York contingent. Colonel Gibbons has been the recipient of ninety-four letters, offering assistance, within the past few days, and two well known merchants in this city have offered $60,000 worth of shot and ammunition toward the cause.

LONDON, Nov. 11.—The proclamation dissolving Parliament, writs for an election, and the order for the assembling of the new Parliament on the 10th of December, have been promulgated.

VIENNA, Nov. 11.—The Presse says negotiations are afoot amending the Paris treaty, making the sultan's sovereignty over the Danubian principalities less illusory.

LONDON, Nov. 11.—The Imaum of Muscat has been dethroned without a struggle. The chief of the Wahabees succeeds him.

NEW YORK, Nov. 11.—A filibuster ing movement against Cuba is believed to be preparing in this city, under the leadership of some officers of the Union army, in the late war, and Napheygi, Santa Anna's business agent.

Wade for Secretary of the Interior, and A. T. Stewart for Secretary of the Treasury, may be regarded as pretty certain to be in Grant's cabinet.

The Cincinnati Enquirer, of yesterday, says the greenback issue is not dead, and that sooner than have the national debt as a permanent institution, the great West will throw off the burden altogether.—New Orleans Times.

THE GROWTH OF THE EARTH.

Professor Huxley read a paper before the British Association, at its recent meeting at Norwich, "On a Piece of Chalk," in which he takes this, one of the oldest of the formations which make up the crust of the earth, to illustrate the slow processes by which, through unknown ages, the world was made ready for the habitation of man.

"A great chapter," he says, "of the history of the world is written in the chalk. * * I weigh my words well when I assert, that the man who should know the true history of the bit of chalk which every carpenter carries about in his breeches pocket, though ignorant of all other history, is likely, if he will think his knowledge out to its ultimate results, to have a truer, and therefore a better, conception of this wonderful universe, and of man's relation to it, than the most learned student who is deep-read in the records of humanity and ignorant of those of nature. * * * *

"It is certain that the chalk is the mud of an ancient sea bottom, but it is no less certain that the chalk sea existed during an extremely long period, though we may not be prepared to give a precise estimate of the length of that period in years. The relative duration is clear, though the absolute duration may not be definable. The attempt to affix any precise date to the period at which the chalk sea began or ended its existence is baffled by difficulties of the same kind."

After showing the nature of chalk, and demonstrating its origin, he speaks of subsequent formations:

"The drift of boulder clay, in comparison with the chalk, is a very juvenile deposit. You need go no further than your own seaboard for evidence of this fact. At one of the most charming spots on the coast of Norfolk, Cromer, you will see the boulder clay forming a vast mass, which lies upon the chalk, and must consequently have come into existence after it. Huge boulders of chalk are, in fact, included in the clay, and have evidently been brought to the position they now occupy by the same agency as that which has planted blocks of syenite from Norway side by side with them.

"The chalk, then, is certainly older than the boulder clay. If you ask how much, I will again take you no farther than the same spot upon your own coasts for evidence. I have spoken of the boulder clay and drift as resting upon the chalk. That is not strictly true. Interposed between the chalk and the drift is a comparatively insignificant layer containing vegetable matter. But that layer tells a wonderful history. It is full of stumps of trees standing as they grew. Fir trees are there with their cones, and hazel bushes with their nuts; there stand the stools of oak and yew trees, beeches and alders. Hence this stratum is appropriately called the 'forest bed.'

"It is obvious that the chalk must have been upheaved and converted into dry land before the timber trees could grow upon it. As the bolls of some of these trees are from two to three feet in diameter, it is no less clear that the dry land thus formed remained in the same condition for long ages. And not only do the remains of stately oaks and well-grown firs testify to the duration of this condition of things, but additional evidence to the same effect is afforded by the abundant remains of elephants, rhinoceroses, hippopotamuses, and other great wild beasts, which it has yielded to the zealous search of such men as the Rev. Mr. Gunn.

"When you look at such a collection as he has formed, and bethink you that these elephantine bones did veritably carry their owners about, and these great grinders crunch in the dark woods of which the forest bed is now the only trace, it is impossible not to feel that they are as good evidence of the lapse of time as the annual rings of the tree stumps.

"Thus there is a writing upon the wall of cliffs at Cromer, and whoso runs may read it. It tells us, with an authority which cannot be impeached, that the ancient sea bed of the chalk sea was raised up and remained dry land until it was covered with forest, stocked with the great game whose spoils have rejoiced your geologists. How long it remained in that condition cannot be said; but 'the whirligig of time brought its revenges' in those days as in these. That dry land, with the bones and teeth of generations of long lived elephants hidden away among the gnarled roots and dry leaves of its ancient trees, sank gradually to the bottom of the icy sea, which covered it with huge masses of drift and boulder clay. Sea beasts, such as the walrus, now restricted to the extreme north, paddled about where birds had twittered among the topmost twigs of the fir trees. How long this state of things endured we know not, but at length it came to an end. The upheaved glacial mud hardened into the soil of modern Norfolk. Forests grew once more, the wolf and the beaver replaced the reindeer and the elephant; and at length what we call the history of England dawned".

WHY?—A bale of cotton can be transported from here to New York by rail for only a trifle more than it can by water. Therefore, a bale of cotton can be sent from Jackson, Mississippi, or Vicksburg, or Memphis, to New York direct by rail cheaper than it can be sent to New Orleans and thence to New York. Now as the grower of the cotton pays, in the difference of price, the freight bill, is it not evident that the planter in Mississippi, Louisiana or Alabama, who can send his crop to New York direct and there sell it to better advantage than he can send it to New Orleans and there dispose of it, will do that which gives him the most money? Now why is this so? Water transportation must always be cheaper than rail, and yet the freight hence to New York is very nearly identical by both routes. Unless this matter is remedied—unless we can run steamers and sailing vessels out of this port cheaper than cars be run—New Orleans will lose day by day that cotton trade which she is now too apt to fondly imagine can never be taken away from her. Let our factors and merchants look to this. It is not a subject that can long be let alone with safety.—Crescent.

A NEW CREED.—Dedicated (without permission) to the Pall Mall Gazette.—We believe there is no God, but the matter is God, and God is matter, and that it is no matter whether there is any God or not. We believe also that the world was not made, but the world made itself, or that it had no beginning, and that it will last forever. We believe that man is a beast, that the soul is the body, and that the body is the soul, and that after death there is neither soul nor body. We believe that there is no religion, that natural religion is the only religion, and all religion unnatural. We believe not in Moses. We believe in some of the philosophers. We believe not in the prophets, nor in the evangelists. We believe in Hobbs, Voltaire and Bolingbroke, though all these men differed, and we differ too. We believe not in St. Paul. We believe not in Revelation. We believe not in Christ. We believe in ourselves. And lastly, we believe in all unbelief. Amen.—R. W. Castleman.

LETTER FROM BISHOP MARVIN.

SACRAMENTO CITY, Oct. 20, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: I have been out from home now about two months and a half, and in that time have traveled, according to the best information I could get, seven thousand six hundred miles. I have traveled by rail, by steamer, by steamboat, by stage, hack, wagon, buggy and on foot—almost every possible mode except in the saddle. I have not been on horseback since I left home. I have added a good deal to my stock of information. I have seen Gotham, the Atlantic, Cuba, the Caribbean sea, Aspinwall, the Isthmus, Panama, the "Tropic Isles," the Pacific ocean and its shores from the Isthmus to the mouth of the Columbia, the beautiful Willamette and its valley, the mountains of southern Oregon and northern California, the valley of the Sacramento, the river and the city of the same name, and the great city of the Pacific, San Francisco, with its bay and the Golden Gate. And this does not begin to be an enumeration of the important objects which I have seen. But I will not undertake to be more minute.

This side of the continent is developing in the most amazing manner. It is in advance of anything I had expected, in several respects. Its agricultural capacity is greater than I had supposed. In manufactures it is making grand progress. The city of San Francisco is a place that would do credit to a country that had been settled a hundred years. It is immensely vital.

The moral and social condition is about what might be expected. There are many of the characteristics of a new country. There is a good deal of restlessness and moving about, and society is not well compacted. People have not been together long enough to grow into a very well defined unity.—There are many well established and excellent families, and the nuclei of many excellent communities. But there are the interruptions of irregular and floating classes, and there is the suspicion and friction of strangers getting to their places in social life. There are also a good many adventurers, and perhaps an undue proportion of bad men.—There are a good many robberies in the mining regions, and stage and express robberies have not been unfrequent in the mountains. I felt a little ticklish going over the mountains to Oregon in the stage. However, it is said that these occurrences are not so frequent as they were a year or two ago.

The country is settling up with great rapidity. All these western Territories will soon be populous States. For the last one hundred years or more the West has been the great objective point of immigration. It has afforded the last hope to unlucky men. It has constantly invited such as had a large stock of energy, with a small stock of everything else. It has been the Elysium of all imaginative adventurers. And many a man has realized all he hoped for in the West—that is, all he hoped for in a sober, rational way. And the West has seemed inexhaustible. Time was when the West was east of the Alleghany mountains. Then it was the valley of the Ohio river. Then it was the Mississippi. Then it was the Missouri. And still there was a great abundance of it. It was plenty. But the West is now piling itself up on the shore of the Pacific ocean. It will soon be in the ocean—it will soon be used up! There will be no West left!

There is a catastrophe for you. Where will this agitated wave of population go then? Well, there is Alaska. After all that has been said about its worthlessness, and the waste of money in the purchase of it, men begin to say that it will support and furnish cereals to feed quite a heavy population. Who knows how soon Alaska may be one of the States of this Union? Then there is all British America on one side, and all Mexico on the other, to be overrun. This may afford scope for the wave arrested on the west, and the northward and southward expansion may require about a hundred years. Then the continent of North America will be full. Then the packing will begin—the experiment, how many can live on the products of a quarter of an acre. Then the poor will delve, and strive, and squirm, and hope, and despair, and die. Then from the ten thousand rivulets of labor the rich will turn the "per cent." into their reservoirs, and build palaces, and feast, and frolic, and struggle for a yet greater per cent., and watch their "securities," and fatten, and chuckle, and—die. What a harvest death will have! And all the dead will go to the bar of God to be judged.

It is twelve days since I wrote what is written above. Eleven of those days were fully occupied with Conference labors. I have never held so laborious a session. I was in the chair of the Conference and of the Judiciary Committee all day, and with the presiding elders or some public meeting nearly every night. The business was of a painful and trying character, and the stationing work unusually complex and perplexing. But an admirable spirit of patient devotion to the cause of God was shown by the preachers in the main, and the appointments, as they were finally made and announced, met with general approval. I trust for a brighter day than ever has already dawned upon the church here. There are many indications of prosperity.

The financial and statistical reports show a better state of things than any former reports have exhibited since the war began. If it had not been for the special troubles just at this time, we would have had a session wholly auspicious. As it is we are greatly encouraged. God has been with the preachers during the past year, and most of them go to their work this year newly consecrated, and with a deeper baptism than ever.

I was pained to hear a brother say, soon after I landed at San Francisco, that such and such things must be done, if we are to maintain an existence on this coast. I soon found that in many minds this if had a discouraging significance. It is a most unfortunate and damaging word. I heard it again at Conference. It annoyed me. It had the aspect of an enemy. I immediately resolved to attack it, which I did with vigor and apparent success. We ostracised the word. We sent it out into the land of Nod, a vagabond, with the brand of Cain upon it. I hope I shall never hear of it again.

And really there is nothing in the condition and circumstances of our church in this country to justify a doubt as to its future. We are the second church in point of numbers, both in California and Oregon.—And in most places our members are of a very substantial and reliable class of men. Yet in many places the societies are weak and scarcely able to support a preacher. Many of the circuits ought to be missions, both here and in Oregon. But the amount raised for the support of missions is so meager that but little can be done in that way. If the parent board had a few thousand dollars to spare it might be very profitably used here.

Some preachers in the South intimate a desire to come here if the church here would only pay the expense of moving. The church is not able to do so. Indeed, brethren coming here must not expect large salaries at present. There is not a station nor circuit here that is able to pay a large salary, nor to do more than support the preacher in more comfort. Most of the preachers have to practice close economy. A few self-denying young men could be usefully employed by presiding elders at any time. Men of families should notify me beforehand, and would not find work that would support them before the next session of the Conference.

Upon the whole my impressions of this country and of our church are favorable. Of late years our advancement has not been so great as it was at one period. But we are better compacted, and moving forward, I trust, more steadily and surely.

E. M. MARVIN.

AUSTRIAN PROGRESS.

The educational influence of war has seldom furnished so remarkable a proof as that offered in the case of Austria. Sadowa, whatever may prove its results to the victor, has certainly done more than all previous events for the advancement of the vanquished. Centralization has almost totally disappeared from the empire of Maria Theresa since her descendant took a vulnerable lesson from General Moltke. Hungary has again become a kingdom; and the scepter which had been placed at its disposal by an Austrian emperor has been given back to a Hungarian king! And all the races of the south of central Europe are about to receive the right of self-government from the abdicating Kaiser, if we may reason to that conclusion from the fact that, in addition to the recognition of the Hungarians, Francis Joseph has ordered that each regiment raised in Hungary shall be officered by natives of the place in which it shall have been raised, a man speaking the mother-tongue of the men of whom it shall be composed! Magyars, Croats, Poles, Sclavonians, stand thus separated in the royal recognition; and, under the liberal policy inaugurated by the emperor, may be regarded as each in his ancient nationality, on the high road to the enjoyment of local and general self-government.

Baron Beust has done much for liberalizing the government of Austria. The Parliamentary system that he has developed in the kingdom of Hungary and in Austria proper, promises to go on to a complete triumph of popular rights. It has already commended itself to the throne by having given assurances of doing for Austrian greatness what nothing else has done—the good service of giving it a full treasury. In west Austria alone the revenues of the government present, in the returns just published for the six months ending with the first of July, 1868, a most universal degree of prosperity. They exceed the expectations of even the men who head the reform in Austria, by nearly four millions of florins! The exports and imports for the same time present an increase, in comparison with the corresponding period of last year, to the extent of thirty per cent. The gain to the treasury on the first six months of this year sums up, in all, to an aggregate that, in a land of deficits and declining income, is a harbinger of good things for free government—eight and a half millions of florins! Liberty pays!

Austrian rule has heretofore been a synonym of despotism. Sadowa has impelled it on the high road of political liberty and industrial greatness. Let not the world consider the house of Hapsburg any longer among the curses of the earth! Let all free men give their sympathies to the reformers who have done so much to conform that great monarchy to the spirit of the age, and learn to watch the progress of the ancient peoples of the south of central Europe, in the living hope of the universal brotherhood which underlies the spirit of democracy all the world over.—New York News.

THE CLOUD OF WITNESSES.

"Are they not all ministering spirits?"

I leaned upon a burial urn,
And thought how life is but a day,
And how the nations each to turn
Have lived and passed away.

The earth is peopled with the dead,
Who live again in deathless hosts,
And come and go with noiseless tread—
A universe of ghosts.

They follow after flying ships,
They flicker through the city's marts,
They bear the cry of human lips—
The beat of human hearts.

They linger not around their tombs,
But far from church yards keep aloof,
To dwell in old familiar rooms
Beneath the household roof.

They waken men at morning light,
They cheer them in their daily care,
They bring a weary world at night,
To bend the knee in prayer.

Their errand is of God assigned
To comfort sorrow till it cease,
And in the dark and troubled mind
To light the lamp of peace.

There is a language, whispered low,
Whereby to mortal ears they speak,
To which we answer by a glow
That kindles in the cheek.

Dear shadows, fairer than the day,
With heavenly light they wrap us round,
Wherein we walk a gilded way,
And over holy ground.

O what a wondrous life is theirs!
To fling away the mortal frame,
Yet keep the human loves and cares
And yearnings still the same!

O what a wondrous life is ours!
To dwell within this earthly range,
Yet parley with the heavenly powers—
Two worlds in interchange!

O balm of grief!—to understand
That whom our eyes behold no more
Still clasp us with as true a hand
As in the flesh before!

No longer in a gloom profound
Let memory, like a mourner craped,
Sit weeping by an empty mound
Whose captive hath escaped!

So, turning from the burial urn,
I thought how life has double worth,
If men be only wise to learn
That heaven is on the earth.

TENNESSEE CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: The Tennessee Conference held its fifty-fifth annual session in Shelbyville, Tennessee, October 14–21, Bishop McTyeire in the chair, carefully calling the attention of erratic members to "the law," which he is ever ready to read before action is taken by the Conference.

The attendance of both lay and clerical members was unusually large, and the Conference was handsomely entertained. Peace and harmony prevailed during the proceedings of the body. Thirteen were admitted on trial—only one from "Giles county" this year. Two were readmitted, three discontinued, and three located, all at their own request. Four were transferred and four received by transfer. Brother E. M. Bounds, who transferred to the Mobile Conference, is a most worthy young man, of devout piety, a true and faithful pastor, greatly beloved of the flock at Franklin, to whom he has ministered the word of life for nearly four years, with great success and acceptability. Brother R. K. Hargrove, late of the Mobile Conference, is the successor of Brother Bounds in Franklin.

Such men as R. K. Hargrove, D. D. Moore, W. H. Hughes and A. Mizell will ever receive a warm welcome into the Tennessee Conference, while younger men will go far hence from our bounds to preach the Gospel in the regions beyond. Two go to Illinois, and one far up into Kentucky, near the border of Ohio, this year.

Our Conference has grown so large that it is thought a division of our territory is necessary. A committee was appointed to consider the propriety of severing our compact territory and harmonious brotherhood into two bounds. It may be right, but we will submit with sadness to such a separation. Before we decide the matter let us hear from members of the Mobile and Montgomery, and North and South Georgia Conferences in reference to the benefits or disadvantages of a division. They can write disinterestedly, from experience, for our advantage, through the Nashville Christian Advocate.

Among the interesting incidents of our Conference was the semi-centennial sermon of Dr. Thomas Maddin, preached to the Conference by request. Our venerable father closed his impressive discourse by a recital of a few of the striking events of his life. He was born of Catholic parents, in the city of Philadelphia; assisted the priest in the services of the altar in early boyhood; commenced the studies preparatory to entering the priesthood; influenced to attend Methodist churches; was soon convicted and soundly converted; boldly confessed his change of heart before his sister and the ridiculing priest, the latter advising cruel punishment, and his father banishing him from home because he would not recant; joined the Methodists, and trudged on foot for hundreds of miles with a single companion. From Pittsburg they took a canoe and floated far down the river; soon licensed to preach, and admitted into the Tennessee Conference in 1818, with Robert Paine, Sterling and Hartwell Brown, and a long list of others whose names have been memorable in the history of Methodism; the speaker the only survivor now a member of our Conference; Hartwell Brown died this year; Bishop Paine yet lives. Dr. Maddin, after fifty years' experience, yet rejoices in his loved employ of preaching the Gospel, and has been efficient the past year as preacher and pastor in Shelbyville, and is retained for the ensuing year.

The young man eloquent, R. A. Holland, was with us two or three days. Words will not convey an adequate idea of our estimate of his excellence as a pulpit orator. The splendid materials composing his sermon on Rom. 1, 16, and lecture on "Jerusalem," were admirably managed. He is an extraordinary elocutionist—fluent and forcible, rapid yet remarkably distinct in enunciation, accurate in pronunciation, exuberant in fine figures and appropriate illustrations, rich in imagination, and rare in the power of delineation, but, above all, he preaches the Gospel in its purity and power, with the "unction from the Holy One."—We were impressed with his true worth and greatness when listening to his wonderful words of eloquence six years ago, in Kentucky. Bishop Kavanaugh then pronounced him a great prodigy. Nothing proves more satisfactorily his genuine greatness than his still preserving his child-like simplicity, modesty and humility, exhibited when a youth of eighteen. He is only twenty-four years of age now.

An animated discussion arose on the subject of receiving members into the church. The point at issue was whether any but converted persons should be baptized and received into full connection in the church. Some earnestly contended that candidates for church membership must give satisfactory evidence of "the genuineness of their faith," which they interpret as conversion—saving faith in Christ—before they become members of the church.—Others are willing to receive true penitents, seekers of salvation, into the church, and to baptize them, if they will answer the questions contained in our disciplinary "form of receiving members into the church." In our portion of the Conference I have not known, since our last General Conference, an applicant for church membership, save those professing faith in Christ to their salvation:—Should not the church be composed of converted persons alone?

The net increase of our church membership is two thousand two hundred. Sabbath schools increased, in number of teachers and scholars, ten thousand—more than doubled in the number of attendants. There is an improvement in the amount paid for the support of the preachers.

From the minutes of six of our conferences, held near the border, we notice a net increase of fifteen thousand white members. Thus the work of disintegration goes on, to God's glory and our prosperity, in Missouri, Kentucky, West Virginia and Tennessee.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

THE DOUGLAS CAMP MEETING.

MR. EDITOR: This meeting was held at the Douglas camp ground, located in Pike county, Alabama, commencing on Friday night, October 16, and closing on Tuesday morning at sunrise, October 20.

The day of commencing was cloudless and serene. The very heavens seemed to smile upon the enterprise. Consequently most of the tents were occupied the first night. The next day, however, witnessed the filling up of all the wood tents and the erection of many cloth tents; and still the people came, so that by Sunday, at eleven o'clock, there were between fifteen hundred and two thousand whites, and from five hundred to one thousand negroes on the ground. By the by, in the erection of this camp ground, three years ago, we built an arbor for the colored people, some three hundred yards from that erected for the whites. Hence our colored brethren have their own tents and arbor, and we supply them with preaching as regularly as we do the whites, all being regulated by the same trumpet; and I say it to the honor of the colored people, that they have preserved the best of order at this camp meeting from year to year, and many have been saved from their sins, and some have been saved in heaven by this agency—the camp meeting.

This year our meeting was only moderately good among the whites till Sunday night, when there were manifestations of saving power.—On Monday we were favored with frequent displays of divine goodness, and especially on Monday night, whilst Brother E. J. Hamill was leading us in prayer for mourners. Some of us had realizations of divine love and purity and power that we never had realized before. And whilst this was so with many of the believers, the power of the Highest came upon the mourners, and in a few minutes five professed conversion. The meeting resulted in great benefit to the servants of God, and the conversion of eight whites and the accession of seven to the church. Thank God for camp meetings! A. DOWLING.

MOBILE CONFERENCE.

LYTTLESVILLE CIRCUIT, Oct. 31, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: I am now closing my second years' labor on this work. I found this circuit mostly disorganized by the late war—overrun by both armies, and in the midst of the fury-fires which always followed the movements of the armies. The church was in a very bad condition, with only two hundred and twenty-five members on the entire circuit. The power of God was with us, both in conviction and conversion. So we have had an accession of about four hundred members in the two years. We have several new churches of considerable promise added to the circuit, so that it is now in a very prosperous condition. I am closing a series of protracted meetings—thirteen in number, with one camp meeting. At nearly all of them the Lord was with us in power and demonstration. Some of these meetings were the most powerful I have ever witnessed in all my life. The young, old, middle-aged—in a word, the best and most influential men in our country—were converted and joined the church. Thanks to the great Head of the Church.

The Center camp meeting, which we closed last week, was a season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. It was also our fourth quarterly meeting. Our presiding elder, Rev. U. L. Thompson, was present. He preached with his usual power on Saturday and Sunday. Rev. T. N. Shelton, of the Tennessee Conference, was present and did good, very good, preaching. Brothers Scruggs, McCoy, Warren and others, local ministers, were present and preached well. We had twenty-seven conversions and nineteen accessions to the church. We have had ten Sabbath schools on this work, all in a spiritual condition. We are doing well in all departments, except in the financial. The failure in this department is owing partly to the depressed condition of this mountain country, and partly to ignorant teachers in our midst, who oppose the support of the ministry. (Thank God, they are not Methodists!) We look for better days. Pray for us, brethren. We are about to take our leave of these babes in Christ, and give them up into the care of the Chief Shepherd, praying that he may keep them from the devouring wolf, in the shape of false teachers and proselyting preachers, who use greater efforts to take from our church her members than from the devil his captives. We have had some difficulty of that kind to contend with here; but so far we have held the field, and mostly all that were ours, and put the enemy to flight.

Your brother in Christ,

J. C. BROGAN.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

MARY BURDINE, consort of James T. Burdine, Esq., and daughter of Alexander and Hannah Martin, was born in Union district, South Carolina, September 15, 1805, emigrated with her parents to Pickens county, Alabama, in 1821, was married June 18, 1822, and departed this life, after a protracted illness of eight months, at her residence near Yorkville, Alabama, on the 8th of September, 1868, at 7 o'clock A. M., aged sixty-two years, eleven months and twenty-one days.

Sister Burdine was the mother of seven daughters, six of whom are still living, and left, with an affectionate husband, many grand-children and numerous friends to mourn her loss. She was converted in South Carolina while listening to a sermon from the text, "Strive to enter in at the strait gate, for many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in and shall not be able," at twelve years of age, and joined the Presbyterian Church; but after her removal to Alabama, not being convenient to the church of her choice, she connected herself with the Methodist Episcopal Church in the States South, and became remarkably attached to its doctrines and discipline, and lived a devoted and faithful member of the same for thirty years.

As a Christian she flourished like the palm tree and grew like the cedars of Lebanon. Her piety was deep toned, her consecration to God thorough, and her faith wonderful, amounting frequently to assurance, as she often had the witness of the Spirit that her children would be converted before they were. Her custom was to fast and pray every Friday for their conversion, and carry them out for private devotion every Saturday evening, and pray with them till they were all saved. The result of this course was that they were all converted in her presence, except one, before they were fourteen years of age, and one of them at nine. Her noble example, her prayers and godly instruction still live in her children and grandchildren, and will doubtless bring forth yet richer harvests for good in time to come. "Their works they do follow them;" "She, being dead, yet speaketh;" "He that liveth and believeth in me shall never die"—shall never die in the gracious influence that shall live after them.

One of her daughters, Sue, is the widow of our youthful, beloved and lamented Brother Belton, who went as missionary to China several years ago. Elizabeth is the present wife of our energetic and zealous presiding elder, Rev. S. H. Cox. Ann is the consort of Rev. E Gore, an esteemed and useful Baptist minister of this county.

Sister Burdine was the devoted friend of our preachers. Her house was their home, and no one knew better than she how to anticipate and provide for their wants. Indeed the same tenderness and almost heavenly kindness she had for her own household was extended to every one about her. Her love and friendship for the poor and needy was manifested in acts of kindness she was continually bestowing upon them.

One of her poor neighbors, near by, once lay sick with consumption. She visited her much, carried her alms, talked to her about her soul, and prayed for her. The woman was converted under this influence, and died a happy Christian. To visit the sick and befriend the needy was her habitual practice through life.

As a wife she was everything a husband could desire. As a neighbor she was kind, and as a member of the church she observed all its rules. I speak the truth when I say that she was as near a model woman as I ever knew.

Her last illness was long and her bodily suffering often intense. Her desire to depart and be with Christ was at times very strong, but it was always accompanied with a fervent prayer for patience and entire submission to the divine will. Every time I saw her during her last sickness she talked of death and dying with as much composure as she would direct her household affairs. Once she said to me: "I think it would be easy, sweet, to me to die. There's nothing good in me, save by grace. Jesus died for me! Blessed Jesus, sweet Jesus!" These last words, "blessed Jesus," were often upon her lips.

She selected the very spot where she desired her body to be laid away, gave directions about her coffin and burial clothing, requested her pastor to preach her funeral from the text, "Strive to enter in at the strait gate," under which she was converted when a little girl, and at last, as she thought, died easy, almost without a struggle or a groan.

Thus lived and died our dear Sister Mary Burdine. We can poorly spare her these troublous times; but our loss is her eternal gain. Till our change come we must toil on, suffer on, strive on, as she did.—With her, however,

The Christian's course is run,
Ended is the glorious strife;
Fought the fight, the work is done—
Death is swallowed up of life.
Borne by angels on their wings,
Far from earth her spirit flies,
Finds her God, and sits and sings,
Triumphing in Paradise.

HENRY CENTERFIT died at his residence, in Lowndes county, Alabama, on the 24th day of September, 1868; in the sixty-ninth year of his age. He was born in Lexington district, South Carolina; married Nancie K Gaffney, April 24, 1823; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1826, and lived in Christian communion until his death.

I scarcely know how to speak of the holy battle in his life, or the triumph in his death—to select among all his virtues as a Christian, or his excellent qualities as a neighbor and citizen. I do not know how firm a foundation is that which has been settling down for so many years upon the Everlasting Rock, or judge the sweetness of fruit from a branch that drew daily a better life, through so many seasons, from the true and faithful Vine. The deeds of his many-functioned life savored the varied traits of the whole community. Being generally known, worthy of trust and advice, he became a Christian peace-maker, and seldom came short of a deliverance for the innocent and a reformation of the guilty, obtaining the latter by his firmness, kindness, self-possession, and that power to govern human nature with which God had so abundantly possessed him. His fine judgment, made better by observation, was sought, heard and relied upon. He was a manifold blessing to his family, church and community. But God administered his last ordinance to men—death; and the good man gave up one world to live in two—laid down one life to grasp two. The body fell—the only partition wall between earth and heaven—and the very grave became the mother of a twin existence! The one lives back in his deeds of goodness, prayers and songs; the other lives in a place that befits the presence of Christ. He was good, his brethren say—sinners repeat it. The head that bleached under the sun of ago was a fit emblem of his soul, with garments whitening in the light of a brighter day—a day whose length was improved, whose going down was pursued, until other shores and fields, a higher continent and a better location were gained.

Mr. Centerfit leaves at home four children without a mother! To them are given the kindly sympathy and prayers of many friends.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT

To the memory of our beloved Brother S. J. KIDD, by the Fourth Quarterly Conference, held at Salem, Tallassee Circuit, Wetumpka District, Montgomery Conference:

The Lord, in his providence, has seen fit to remove from our midst Brother S. J. Kidd, a member of this quarterly conference, since our last meeting. We miss thee, our beloved brother, in our councils as a faithful steward, a superior Sunday school superintendent, and an humble and faithful Christian.

Our heartfelt sympathy and prayers are extended to the surviving widow and children of our deceased brother.

Therefore, be it

Resolved, That a copy of these proceedings be sent to his family, and that the same be spread upon the minutes of this conference.

And be it further resolved, That the secretary forward a copy for publication to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

A true copy.

JUSTICE.

EASTERN SHORE,
Mobile Conference, Oct. 31, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: Please allow me the use of your columns to correct a mistake made by Rev. J. A. Parker, in a letter published, last spring, in the N. ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, which he promised to correct, but has failed to do so. He says: "The bell at Pollard (Montgomery Conference) was given by the friends in Mobile," etc. That bell was given by Brother William Otes. I was present when he shipped it.—Would that every town, city and village teemed with such men as he! Then, indeed, would Zion prosper.

At a more recent date I had a letter from some friends in Meridian, wishing assistance in procuring a bell for their church.—Knowing the generosity of his heart in all things pertaining to the cause of Christ, I went to Bro. Otes, asking help; and he intimated that they should have the bell. True to his word, last week a fine bell, weighing nearly eight hundred pounds, was shipped to the church at Meridian.

Now, brethren, we are soon to meet at the annual session of the Mobile Conference, which convenes at that place: and as the mellow tones of that bell fall on our ears, let the donor be remembered, and a prayer ascend to the throne of grace from each heart for Brother William Otes and his sweet-spirited wife, whose house is ever the home of the minister of the gospel of Christ.

FARM AND GARDEN.

AN AGRICULTURAL ODE.

BY JOHN G. WHITTIER.

This day, two hundred years ago,
The wild grapes by the river's side,
And tasteless ground-nut, trailing low,
The table of the woods supplied.

Unknown the apple's red and gold,
The blushing tint of peach and pear;
The mirror of the pow-wow told
No tale of orchards ripe and rare.

Wild as the fruits he scorned to till,
These vales the idle Indian trod;
Nor knew the glad, creative skill,
The joy of him who toils with God.

O, Painter of the fruits and flowers
We thank thee for thy wise design,
Whereby these human hands of ours
In nature's garden work with Thine.

And thanks that from our daily need
The joy of simple faith is born—
That he who suites the summer weed
May trust Thee for the autumn corn.

Give fools their gold and knaves their power;
Let fortune's bubbles rise and fall;
Who sows a field, or trains a flower,
Or plants a tree, is more than all.

For he who blesses most is blessed;
And God and man shall own his worth
Who toils to leave as a bequest
An added beauty to the earth.

And, soon or late, to all that sow,
The time of harvest shall be given;
The flowers shall bloom, the fruit shall grow,
If not on earth, at last in heaven.

MAKE MORE BUTTER.

Butter is very high, and it is desirable to increase the supply of an article in such general use.

There is but one way of doing this. We can not increase the number of cows so as to meet the demand this fall and winter, but we can by liberal feeding enable the cows that we have to give more milk, or at least we can get milk containing from one-third to one-half more butter. That liberal feeding will do this there can be no question. What extra food to give depends on circumstances. The quality of the grass at this season is apt to deteriorate, and even when there is an abundance of it, a little richer food can be given to the cows with great advantage. When grass is short, there is still greater necessity for, and advantage in, providing extra food. In many sections there is much corn imperfectly eared, and there can be no better way of disposing of it than to feed it out, stalks and all, to milch cows. This will save husking. If well cured and put in small stacks, or in a barn, with layers of straw between the corn, very few of the soft ears will mould. A liberal supply of such fodder will keep up the flow of milk until Christmas, and if the cows are provided with warm stables, butter may be made nearly all winter.

When there is no fodder of this kind on the farm, feed ordinary corn stalks, or hay and straw, with a liberal allowance of some kind of grain or of oil cake. Probably corn meal is the cheapest food that can be used, and so far as the writer's experience extends, he has never found any trouble in using it. Four quarts a day to each cow have been used with great advantage, and at the present price of butter such feeding is quite profitable. Some dairymen prefer to feed half corn meal and half bran. When peas can be obtained at about the same price as corn, a mixture of equal parts of corn and pea meal is perhaps the very best food that can be given to a cow. If wheat-bran was cheap, say but a little higher than hay, we would feed that also.

But our object is not so much to say which is the best grain to feed milch cows, as to urge farmers to feed grain of some kind. It does not so much matter what—only give the cows a liberal supply of food, and they will return a liberal supply of butter. The kind of grain and the way of feeding is left to the judgment and good sense of the readers. When it is convenient it is better to "slop" the cows, but if not convenient the fodder may be chaffed and moistened with water, and a due proportion of meal mixed with it, care being taken that the mangers are so constructed as to avoid waste. With a good supply of food, regularity in feeding, comfortable stables cleaned out daily, proper ventilation, and water easily accessible, there is no trouble in doubling the ordinary quantity of butter from now until mid-winter or later.—American Agriculturist.

SCABBY LEG IN FOWLS.—"G. P.," Amite, Louisiana, writes: "My fowls have been troubled in this way. We call it gout. My remedy is turpentine, applied, say twice a week, with a small brush or swab. Whoever makes the application must be careful not to let the turpentine run down along the toes, as it is apt to make them bleed. Three weeks will be about the time required for the entire disappearance of the scab."—American Agriculturist.

THE gold mines of North Carolina now yield $500,000 per annum.

POLITICAL PREACHING.

From this time the churches of the North became the centers of political influence, and the clergy the most strenuous and violent among political declaimers in the cause of abolition. When John Brown was hanged for treason and murder, the bells of its churches were tolled during the hours of his execution. With appalling blasphemy, his death was likened in the pulpit to that of the crucifixion. And when the contest, which proved so bloody, followed, no sound of healing peace was heard from the pulpit of the North. If peace, without subjugation, or any alternative was proposed by it to war, it escaped the vigilance of one who sought industriously to discover the temper and signs of the times. If, at this juncture, the Northern church and ministry had been seized by an ambition to merit the remarks which those who are now their leaders and allies, formerly made concerning them, it is not easy to conceive by what conduct and language, other than those which they adopted, they could better have entitled themselves to be so distinguished.

Slavery and political preaching bear similar relations to Christianity. The exercise of the powers of each may safely be trusted to a genuine disciple of Christ. The Apostle Paul might preach politics, and he knew that his brother in the Lord, Philemon, might well be trusted to hold even a slave, who had been a fugitive. The same rigor which would forbid the existence of slavery on account of its liability to abuse, would for the same reason forbid indulgence in political preaching.—But if the divine law is silent upon this latter subject, of which it is not our purpose to say anything, human law is not, and the introduction of politics into the pulpit is a violation of it. True, it is commonly justified by saying that a clergyman has the same right with any other citizen to express his opinions. It is just so: he has the same right, neither more nor less. The error arises from the minister claiming to do officially what, like every other citizen, he has a right to do in his private capacity, and not otherwise. It is not within the terms of his contract. In attempting it, he arrogates to himself a right to teach in a matter where no such right has been conferred upon him. He may in this manner, in some cases, defeat the ends of his ordination, for if he preaches as a partisan he makes the house of God an offense to those who differ from him, and fills those who agree with him with conceit, contempt and rancor. Any one of his hearers has upon this theme as good a right to the pulpit as he has. It is by the assertion and admission of this right only, that political equality between the clergy and laity will be maintained. Otherwise than this, the minister will gain over his flock the same supremacy in politics which he has in religion, and he will be at once vested with civil, as well as ecclesiastical authority. If a preacher, who insists upon his right to deliver political discourses, does not mean to deny and subvert his equality, and be guilty of usurpation, he will never close an exercise into which political discussion or illustration has been introduced by him, without inviting any desirous of it to continue upon the spot the consideration of the subject by open addresses. Let but this rule be introduced and observed in the Northern church—and the present is a favorable season for its adoption—and it would tend strongly to restrain the evils which have been very flagrant, arising from political harangues, or from sermons abounding in political allusions, delivered to congregations who are supposed to assemble for divine worship.

None of these remarks apply to the ministers of an invaded people. At a period of common danger, like this, the instincts of self-preservation, the right and duty of defense supply the rule of action for all classes. The pastor, however humble, who, in such an exigency carries to his countrymen the consolations of religion, animates them to add to their faith, constancy to their cause, and gives to patriotism the supports of piety, offers a sacrifice which he may meekly trust will be accepted sooner than the noblest offerings of eloquence and devotion, presented in times of peace and tranquil safety. What veneration then is due to the names of Palmer, and of a noble army of martyrs, who brought to it and expended in such a service the noblest gifts of genius and culture? Here was not the first place where resort had been made to arms, under the pretence to introduce and establish "liberty, equality and fraternity," against the claims of national freedom and independence. The pastors of Switzerland, of Tyrol, Spain and La Vendee had set the example of the resistance due to such an attempt; our countrymen followed it with no halting steps. Here, indeed, it was for the first time that the church was found to be a party to such an association, and engaged in such an enterprise. The late invasion of the South was a crusade made by this combination, whose rallying cries, mottoes and platforms were such as we have given in the preceding pages from Garrison, Foster, Whitson, Phillips and Wright. It was a prophetic spirit which animated the Southern pulpit at this crisis; nor will their labors be as water spilt upon the ground. They were the defenders of the truth, which, preserved by them, shall yet illuminate the whole land. They were the universal protectors against the horrors disclosed in the passages we have quoted. In these extracts are seen the spirit and temper in which the controversy was provoked by these assailants, their authors; in which they carried on their assaults; in which they set aside laws, the oaths for their support, and at the same time defied order, and all that pertained to society; in which they made the war; in which they stimulated its violence, and counseled atrocities before unheard of; in which they prosecuted it on their part, reducing falsehood in their accounts of it to a habit and a system; in which the South was subjugated, and by which they govern it. Such have been the conduct and such the designs of the Northern church and its abolition allies in the war, and in the measures that have followed it.—Southern Review.

A DISH OF FRUIT.

After the refined and complicated luxury of a good recherche dinner, we seem to go back, when the fruit comes on table, to the primitive simplicity of the earliest ages. We consume our entremets, and our friandises, our soups and our made dishes, and then our host, as if the repertoire of delicacies had been exhausted, steps out into his orchard and his garden, and brings us in a simple handful of fruit; a bunch of golden grapes, some apples painted red and yellow by the soft pencil of the summer sunbeam, a dusty velvet peach, or some honey-fleshed apricots. He is doing what King Alcinous may have done to Ulysses and the storm-beaten Greeks; it is patriarchal, it smacks of the golden age and the old mythologic times; yet it is a custom that does not wither, and will never grow unfashionable. How things alter! The salad, once all that the hermit had to live upon, has become a relish for the gourmand; cheese, once the shepherd's only food, is now an entremet after many courses; fruit, once the only food of the early denizens of a world, is now the mere crowning pleasure of a dinner.

Fruit requires no human cooking; the great stationary fire has cooked it to a turn. It has been basted with dews; the soft balmy summer rain has been its sauce. Its flavor has been mixed by the ministering spirits of garden and orchard; its color and shape are of a lasting fashion; it contains essences never discovered, and wines as yet undreamed of; it is older than the entrée, and anterior to the fricandeau; its seed blew to us from Eden, or it fell sublime to us from the amaranthine gardens. Turtle soup is sublime, and there are ragouts which exercise a moral and psychological influence over the world; but they are earthy, their component parts are known; there is not the mystery about them that appertains to fruit.

The finest orchard in the world is Covent Garden Market. A gorgeous sight in the season, it conveys a vast sense of the greatness of England and the distance her far grasping arms can reach. Those leather coated chestnuts are from the mountainous woods of Spain; those gray flattened figs are from the hills behind Smyrna; those orange golden pines, with the bristly plumes, grew at the foot of the Blue mountains; those pale green flashy grapes came from Portugal; those scorched-looking bananas from the Bermudas; those enormous pears, like pantomime pears (only fifteen guineas the dozen!) are from Provence; those nuts from the Kentish copses jostle their browner and oilier brethren from Barcelona and the sunny shores of Spain. Pomona and Vertumnus (now in the fruit business, and talking with a strong Hebraic accent) have summoned them from every quarter of the globe. Look at Pomona; she is trying to induce a young guardsman to give two guineas for a ball-room bouquet for a lady, while Vertumnus, refreshed with a light luncheon of fried fish, is arranging some filberts in a heap, to give a beauty and tenderness by contrast to a basket of peaches next them.—Artful Shadrach Vertumnus. One ought to be charged for walking down that central avenue; the flowers are so beautiful, the smell of the fruit is so delicious. As a boy, we sometimes thought of living for a day on fruit, and spending the whole twelve waking hours here under cover. A watermelon for breakfast, with some dates to wind up; plums, apples and nuts for dinner; a tea of bananas and filberts; a supper of grapes and Normandy pippins.—All the Year Round.

DOLLS.

We have sometimes wondered that more has not been written about dolls, who are surely very important members of the family. For they are nothing less than the children of the children, of the mothers of the future, who rehearse with them the delights and cares of after years. There is no play, not even the business-like plays of manhood, that is more serious. To careless older observers, even to some children, it seems a peculiarly senseless amusement; it really is a miniature life, earnest, and even anxious, to a degree which is sometimes alarming. "There never," writes a friend, "was a more sobered, care-crazed mother than I, from a mere baby child up to the lamentably advanced age of sixteen." The relation between such girls and their dolls, girls to whom they are not playthings but children, is worth study, full as it is of psychological and moral interest, and affording sure tests and prognostics of character. Few things are more curious than to see how the little creatures, sometimes before they are able to articulate, pitch upon some object which is to satisfy the maternal instinct in them. The strangest object it often is. Like savages when they worship, they are content with the rudest imitation of the human figure.

One young lady of our acquaintance, then not two years old, set her affections on a stone seltzer-water bottle, which she wrapped in flannel, and staggered about with, to the alarm of her mother, who was in constant fear for the little one's toes. Another has adopted a hot-water can, on which she bestows a passionate affection, and with which she holds endless dialogue. These objects, of course, are exchanged, as time goes on, for others which better satisfy newly developed tastes and feelings. A girl of six will generally not be satisfied except her baby bears some resemblance to her mother's. Helped by this concession to reality, the imagination knows no bound in its inventions. But it is checked, on the other hand, by too studied an imitation of life. The splendid, elaborately dressed creature of wax is never really loved. Its tameness chills the fancy. It is imposed upon the affections, not created by them. And too large a doll is seldom much liked. Of course there are exceptions; but a small doll, not too handsome, is generally the favorite. With these darlings about them, some girls, like actors, who are said to look upon the world as a show and upon the stage as a world, live a life which is more real to them than is their daily existence.

There is nothing remarkable in these experiences, beyond the grace and skill with which the writer has given expression to them. They may be matched in households without end; our own limited inquiries have given us an embarrassing choice of materials. Of these phenomena the first and chief cause is obviously the mother-instinct.—Hence the satisfaction of the very young child, whose faculties of observation and comparison are as yet feeble, with the rudest effigies of the human form, and hence the partiality—a touching suggestion of a familiar fact in real life—on the part of older children; for the weakest and least favored of the doll family. Sometimes other feelings, the sense of beauty, for instance, in an unusually early development, comes into conflict with this instinct. So it was with one young lady of our acquaintance. She, being then two years old, had placed her dolls in a row, and among them one, Miss Betsey by name, of preternatural ugliness. She was seen, as she held a spoon with food to the mouths of each of her family in turn, to administer a slap on the face to her ill-favored daughter. A short time, however, wrought a marvelous change. About a year after this event she had placed her little family, after their Sabbath wash, to warm before the fire. One, who had a delicate India-rubber constitution, shriveled before the blaze. Returning to them, she caught sight of the horrible face of her once comely child. With a shriek of grief and terror, she ran to her mother, crying: "Take it; don't let me see it again; O my poor Mary!"

An observer of course asks, how can an affection so passionate contrive to maintain itself, in spite of the utter passivity of the objects on which it is bestowed? Doubtless this is the crux. Where the imagination of the child is less active, it is overpowered by the difficulty. In the genuine lover of dolls it is vigorous enough entirely to overcome it. "I was never desillutionnee," writes the friend whom we have quoted before, "because my dolls did not eat. I had a wash of my doll's clothes every week, and they did get really dirty." If they would only have worn out as well, everything would have been perfect. "I rubbed the tiny socks very hard, and dragged the dolls' shoeless on the ground, in the hope I might but once before I died have to darn 'baby's' socks." How genuine and thorough the illusion was in this case may be judged from a little trait which every mother will appreciate. "I never woke in the night without getting up to turn my dolls in their beds." But even so lively an imagination as this did not disdain assistance from without. There was a sister very clever at imitating sounds. "When, at my own request, she would imitate for me a sick or suffering, fretting baby, I declare I felt my heart ache, and felt aged and worn with care as I lulled my 'Freddy' or 'Selina' on my lap." We can not refrain from giving one more extract from the letter of our friend, who, we ought perhaps to tell our readers, has had from babyhood a passion for books at least equal to her passion for dolls. "I once cried myself nearly ill because my brothers had to perform a surgical operation on my doll. Its winking machine would not go, and total blindness or permanent leer and hopeless squint were threatened. I would not abandon my doll, but, mother-like, stood by while my brothers, with infinite skill, beheaded my baby, and wound up its eyes to go right, and then sewed the head and shoulders on for me. I do not think agony is too violent a word for my grief at the sight which my headless babe presented."

The purely domestic life to which these experiences belong satisfies most children. Some, indeed, like to realize in their dolls the wider interests which are awakened by their reading, to reproduce incidents of travel or of history. "He," said a young lady of our acquaintance, when questioned about the disappearance of a favorite doll, "he has fallen down that crack, but they (the other dolls) don't know it. They think that he has gone to India." We have heard of the niece of a distinguished historian, accustomed to hear of great personages, who identified her dolls with kings and queens, and who, when the revolution of 1848 occurred, promptly accepted the situation, and treated her Louis Philippe with indignity, as a monarch who could not keep himself upon his throne.—The Spectator.

MISSIONARY NEWS.

We copy the following items from the New York Independent:

REV. F. W. FLOCKEN, Methodist missionary among the Bulgarians, writes that he has apprehensions that the revolutionary movement in Bulgaria will unfavorably affect evangelistic labors.

THE English Baptist Missionary Society supports fifty-eight brethren and assistant brethren laboring in Norway, Africa, India and the West Indies. There are under its care one hundred and five native churches and six thousand two hundred members, of whom six hundred were added last year. The income last year was £35,000.

THE Liberal Christian says: "The Congregational and Presbyterian churches sustain one foreign missionary to about every thirty-one ministers and three thousand members; while the Covenanters have one in foreign lands for every seven ministers at home, and the Moravians have one for every sixty members of their church. In the same proportion, how many ought the liberal Christians of America to sustain?"

IN A dispatch of Mr. Seward, of October 7, 1867, he directed Mr. Van Valkenburgh, of the United States legation at Yedo, to confer with the representatives of other powers, and with them to press upon the Japanese authorities, as he had already done, the policy of discontinuing the persecution of native Christians. Mr. Van Valkenburgh had previously remonstrated with the Governor of Nagasaki for his imprisonment of sixty-three native Christians.

THE United Presbyterians are rejoicing over the prosperity of their work in Osiout, in Egypt. In this important town the Copts have split into parties favoring or opposing the Evangelical faith. Some native converts started an evening Bible class, attended by quite a number of priests, and two of the bishop's nephews, themselves priests. The opposition was great; but the leading members of the laity said that it was a laudable thing to study the Scriptures, and should be encouraged. Hereupon the bishop appointed a meeting to be held each evening from two hours before till an hour after sunset, for the study of the simple word of God in the vernacular Arabic. This was to be open to all; and the Protestants agreed to give up their meeting on condition that no other book should be read except the simple Bible—a condition that was agreed to by all. The meeting was kept up until they came to the study of Paul's Epistles to the Romans, which were found to be so evidently a Protestant treatise that they broke the compact, and now the two parties meet separately.

THE Bible, complete, has now been printed in the Tahitian, Samoan, Rorotongan, Tongan, Fijian and Hawaiian dialects—all branches of the Polynesian language. Portions of the Bible have also been printed in the Marquesan, New Zealand, Gilbert Island, Marshall Island, Ponapean and Strong's Island languages. To accomplish this enterprise has required an amount of literary and linguistical labor which can scarcely be appreciated except by those who have spent years in acquiring a foreign language, and additional years in the work of patient translation and revision; yet all this has been done exclusively by the English and American missionaries in the Pacific, besides all their other labor. A new revised edition has just been printed by the American Bible Society. It is sold as cheap as $3 per copy. Rev. E. W. Clark has spent two years in New York, reading and correcting the proof sheets.

IN August, 1866, Mr. James Cassels, a young English gentleman at Oporto, began to hold meetings for reading the Scriptures and prayer, on Sunday afternoons, with a few Portugueso. The number attending gradually increased, until at the close of the year 1867 it amounted to one hundred and twenty, notwithstanding threatenings from the priests and taunts from the disaffected. To prevent these gatherings, twenty or thirty constables were placed at the door of the house; and for three months the meetings were held with closed doors, only twenty persons being admitted at one time. The constables, however, were, after three months, withdrawn, and the people in large numbers attended the services. The bishop caused those to be excommunicated who continued steadfast, and warned all good Catholics to have nothing to do with them. Six or seven months ago a prosecution was commenced against Mr. Cassels, under an article in the penal code of Portugal, which awards the punishment of banishment to any foreigner found guilty of proselytizing from the Romish faith; and in June he was arrested, and carried before a criminal judge, but released on bail, and is now awaiting trial at the session in October. He is now building a chapel, which, when free from debt, he intends to present to the Methodist connection.

SPAIN.

BY SINCLAIR TOUGEY.

"I have traversed Spain from north to south, from its center to its eastern bonads; have seen its small, dark-haired, fiery-eyed women; its somber faced, cigarette-smoking, cloak-wrapped men; its magnificent highways, and its miserable roads, wheelless and hoof-trodden; have noticed the absence of shrines at road-crossings, so common in other Catholic countries; have eaten of its miserable butter; have eaten of its tolerable mutton, and tried to eat its poor beef; have drank its excellent wines, and suffered from its bad water; have eaten its luxurious grapes, and inhaled its mountain air; have seen its blue, cloudless sky, its wonderfully great and magnificent cathedrals, splendid churches, and the comfortless-looking dwellings of the poor; its barren plains, and beautiful orange groves; its waterless river beds and the work of its sweeping torrents; its thousands of fat, well-clad priests, and its thousands of ragged, starving beggars; its comfortably-clothed, handsome military officers, and its stupid-looking, shoeless, stockingless, common soldiers; its well-to-do hundreds, and its illy-clad, poorly-fed thousands; have missed the middle class seen in other lands; have seen its snow-capped mountains, and its sun-warmed valleys; its granite-backed, bowlder-covered hills, and crop growing plains; have seen its great picture gallery, and absence of art appreciation among its people; have seen its horse-murdering, bull-killing shows, and the gorgeous vestments of its clergy; have slept in its good, clean beds, and shivered by its cold, smoky fireplaces; have looked on many a reminder of its great past, and something of the dead life of its present; can see in the life promising of tall factory chimneys signs of a better life; can hear in the click of the telegraph and the whistle of the locomotive sounds that shall usher her to glory again—to greater glory than was ever dreamed of by any Philip, or Charles, or Isabella that wore her crown or led her people to battle; and now, land that sent forth the discoverer of a new world—a world greater than you can ever be—land of genial clime and fertile soil, land of fruits and flowers, of the olive and the palm, farewell!"

THE lowest death-rate in any considerable city of Great Britain is 20 in the 1,000; while in the country it does not exceed 17 to the 1,000. Thus, among the 3,000,000 of London, at least 9,000 lives are annually sacrificed to the passion for a city life.

SATURDAY NOVEMBER 14, 1868.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.—Any person wishing to subscribe for this paper can do so by paying the Methodist preacher in the circuit, and forwarding to us his receipt for three dollars, with the address of the subscriber upon it, stating Post office, State, Circuit, and Conference. The receipt ought to be taken in duplicate.

N. B.—Agents are requested, wherever practicable, to invest and remit funds in a Post Office Order, DRAFT, or by express. If this cannot be done, REGISTER the letter at our expense.

When money is forwarded in either of the above methods we will be responsible for it, but not otherwise.

TO AGENTS.

Please register the letter and send the money forward. We are receiving subscribers daily, with "I have the money and will keep it until I see you at Conference." Please do not keep it, but send it forward. We do not wish to advance money for subscribers. They are many; a little to each one is a large sum to us. If our agents wish us to send the paper forward, they will please send the money.

ATTENDING CONFERENCE.

We expect the pleasure of being present at the Mississippi, the Mobile and the Montgomery Conferences, and hope thereby to add largely to the subscription list and the receipts of the ADVOCATE.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

Messrs. Fleming & Brother, at the corner of Natchez and Magazine streets, wholesale druggists at Pittsburg and this place.—The articles advertised by this house, McLane's Pills and Vermifuge, have become staples among patent medicines. We recollect them well—having had some knowledge of pills and powders in years gone—as well tested and approved forms of physic. The patent medicine department has, like everything else during the past twenty years, developed into great proportions, and Messrs. Fleming & Brother have a three-story warehouse full of every sort.

PHILIP WERLEIN, music store, and wholesale and retail dealer in pianos and all kinds of musical instruments, No. 80 Baronne street. Mr. W. is successor to Mr. P. P. Werlein, his father, who for thirty years has been in the business. He has just received fresh invoices of church organs, melodeons, harps, and keeps constantly a supply of the latest music and all else connected with this branch of trade. We have known long the father and the son, and most favorably.

NOTICE.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SESSION.

Will the presiding elders please forward to me the names of both the preachers and lay delegates of their districts who expect to be present at the Louisiana Conference, to be held on the sixteenth of December next, in New Iberia?

Respectfully,

A. E. GOODWYN.

SUPPORT OF OUR BISHOPS.

The rule of Methodism seems to be this: the higher a minister is in office the greater his responsibility, the more arduous his labor, and the less and more uncertain his pay. The last General Conference did something toward increasing the allowance of our bishops, but nothing toward securing its payment. Possibly we go too far when we say "nothing," for it distributed their estimated allowances among the several Conferences for subdivision and collection. We feared then that this wheel within a wheel would be attended with too much friction to work well. To be sure it was the old way, and our people believe in the "good old ways." So do we, in the main; but when we get new bottles we need new wine, and vice versa; and we having greatly enlarged our episcopal board, needed something beyond the gaunt provision of the old system. There was but one way to effectually put responsibility upon a Conference—that is to charge it to each member of the Conference.—Assess him according to the resources of the station or circuit he fills. This was thought to be too onerous upon the preachers. There remained one other way, and that was a direct assessment upon each congregation, a per centage upon its annual expenses or receipts, for the support of the bishops. This located and defined accurately the amount of the responsibility, and in case of failure the deficiency could be traced to the parties where it occurred, which would obviate the present evil of distributing the fault of a deficiency again and again among those who have already paid more than a fair proportion of the general assessment.—This plan the General Conference also rejected. A third plan was to hold each church member responsible directly for a specific amount for the support of the bishops.—This is the one now recommended, and "resolved," by the Louisiana Conference, to wit: each preacher in charge is ordered to "collect one dollar ($1) from each member for the bishops." In some few cases, if a member is not able to give the dollar—and this is hardly supposable excepting in the case of little children—then let some other member be called on to supply the deficiency. Our people love their superintendents, and will do all that is needed to support them; but without system they cannot know what sum is expected of each person.

It is certainly humiliating to the whole church, and doubtless to our beloved "fathers" themselves, to see this present arrangement requiring repeated supplementary calls and appeals for their moderate sustenance. It is a key-note that affects the entire rendering of church finance. We know that some wise and good men attribute the defeat of the General Conference plan to the marring of the scheme which contemplated a bishop to every Conference. "If we had more bishops we could support them easier than we can the present number." We certainly have added to the number of the superintendents somewhat—only, however, so many as the work needed—but we have not increased relatively the certainty of their pay. It seems to us that both logic itself and the sterner logic of facts are against such apologists. If six cannot be supported, eight can be; or if eight are not, then twelve or twenty will be. We may ask, how and why? The answer is, each Conference will then know the man and feel the direct responsibility. The main point in this reply is, the feeling "the direct responsibility." That, we have shown, may be secured without radically changing the entire system of a general superintendency. It places the money as the end, and the diocesan system as the means. But we suppose that forty bishops could not be sustained any better than forty presiding elders, unless Methodist people can be made to feel personally and directly their obligation to support the Gospel far more than they now feel it. It is grace they need, full as much as diocesan episcopacy.

THE REV. DR. P. P. NEELY.

On Tuesday last the announcement of the death of this eminent minister reached us, in the following note from Dr. Hamilton:

MOBILE, Alabama, Nov. 9, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: Dr. Neely died this A. M., at nine o'clock, after an illness of eight days. He died of one of those attacks to which he has been subject for years, sudden nervous prostration. The whole community sorrow at his death.

Your's, etc., J. HAMILTON.

Though not unexpected to his intimate friends, this sudden termination of the career of this distinguished man, while in the very prime of his life and maturity of his powers, will be to the Methodist community of Alabama as startling as it is sad. We doubt not he dies a victim to that severe mental labor which has characterized his pulpit ministrations during the past twenty years.

It was this continued intense toil, united with natural gifts of a high order, that placed him among the first pulpit orators of this country. It is just thirty-one years ago since he first joined the Tennessee Conference. In this Conference he continued some ten or eleven years, and had already achieved a great reputation as an effective speaker and preacher, and had filled the best stations in the State, when he was transferred to the Alabama Conference. He has, we believe, been appointed successively to the most important places in the bounds of this Conference, and has everywhere sustained his reputation, and increased the number of his friends and admirers. The Holy Spirit has honored his ministry in the awakening and conversion of many persons through it; and congregations that listened to him for years together were still desirous of retaining him. We published, only two weeks ago, testimonials to his worth and service, of a high order, from the church in Mobile.

The only occasion upon which we ever heard him preach, excepting once in his last station, was at the Annual Conference at Greensboro, some years since. His person was tall, commanding and well proportioned; his manner was remarkable for its ease and natural grace; his voice soft and clear; and his appreciation and selection of words indicated that instinctive regard to the measure and order of syllables which makes the orator almost a poet. His memory was of accurate and strong grasp, his fancy vivid, and his imagination wrought in a continuous glow. Long use and cultivation placed him in the full possession of his powers while standing in the presence of a large audience. We recollect that some of his brightest periods, for the moment, lifted and carried us forward at the will of the preacher, and we then thought him beyond question in the foremost rank of effective pulpit speakers. We feel the loss of these gifts to the church of God, and most heartily sympathize with his bereaved family in their deep affliction. At the approaching session of the Mobile Conference a memoir of this distinguished member will doubtless be prepared by those who have had the opportunity to know particularly the history and results of his itinerant labors.

FIRST FRUITS.

Not long since, in the country, we were present at the gathering of the first sheaf of the year's crop. Father and mother and children, and indeed the whole family, rejoiced over many needed and beautiful things which had just been bought with the proceeds of the first shipment. It was a thrilling realization of what was yet in store, when all the bales should be packed and the full account sales of the year's labors be received. We saw the various shapes in which this "first fruits" appeared—dresses, toys, bridles, bonnets, shoes, hats, and even medicines. Things long wanted for three years had at last come. The farmer's house was happy all over. The farmer had scarcely a cent left—had spent all—had not reserved even enough to pay quarterage. Alas! thought we, there is the preacher and his wife and little ones—they, too, have been waiting long, these long two years just past. Shall they have no taste of the first of the year's harvest—must they wait until the last bale is sold, and then come in only to glean? It used to be different—when the best and the first of the flock and the field were brought to the Lord in gratitude and hope. That was in an obsolete dispensation; now we live amid the richer abundance of the Christian period, where all is generous fullness and overflowing grace from the divine Father, who having given a Son, with him freely giveth us all things. Who, then, shall limit the prompt offerings of a filial heart to the first sheaf!

If the reader has handled any part of the yield of his year's labor let him at least share it with his preacher; and when the farewell visit is made do not forget to hand him a year's subscription to the ADVOCATE.

PERSONAL.

The Rev. L. Pearce was in the city during the week. He is just from Honduras, looking very well, and, as we hear, in excellent spirits. He is hopeful of the entire success of the American settlement in Honduras, and speaks in warm commendation of the climate, soil, etc., of that country. We have received a letter from Dr. D. W. Foster, giving some account of the farming operations of the year. He and his family have not enjoyed good health at Toledo, but he attributes it to merely local causes. We will publish his letter hereafter.

Since writing the above we have received from Brother Pearce the following:

BRITISH HONDURAS.

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 11, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: Permit me, through your paper, to say to my friends that I have just arrived in this place, en route for the Mississippi Conference, to meet in Vicksburg on the 18th instant. While in this country I shall be pleased to give to those who feel interested the result of ten months' experience and observation in that country of perpetual verdure. Letters directed to Vicksburg, any time between this and the 20th of this month, will be attended to. After that my post office will be Canton, till the 20th of December. L. PEARCE.

ODD FELLOWS' HALL.

Among "City Items" we notice the dedication of this new building on Tuesday last. Appropriate ceremonies and a speech by Alexander Dimitry, Esq., were the events of the occasion.

Mr. Thomas Murray was the builder of the hall. It is of the most substantial and convenient arrangement, and reflects great credit on the builder for the rapid and thorough manner in which he has executed the contract.

The establishment of Odd Fellowship dates from 1821, in which year a lodge was organized in Baltimore, Maryland. Almost simultaneously there were lodges in New York, Pennsylvania and Massachusetts. For three years they existed as separate organizations, and it was not until 1824 that the formation of a Grand Lodge was contemplated. This was decided upon finally, and instituted in Baltimore on the 22d of February, 1825. Nine lodges were then in existence—three in Maryland, three in Pennsylvania, two in Massachusetts, and one in New York.

At the present time the order embraces two thousand eight hundred and sixty-eight lodges, and two hundred and fourteen thousand five hundred and sixty-one members.

THE Royal Academy of Music at London was founded in 1822, and since then there have been graduated fifteen hundred pupils, four hundred of them receiving their instructions gratis, or at reduced prices. Of the $870,000 expended by the Royal Academy during forty-six years, $500,000 have been received from tuition, and the rest has been raised by private subscriptions.

THE Atlantic seaboard of the United States extends about three thousand five hundred miles, and the Mississippi and its tributaries open up an inland navigation of about thirty thousand miles.

RICH gold fields have been discovered on the northern frontiers of Norway and Russia, stated to surpass those of California.

THE JESUITS.

We publish below the order for the suppression of this order of ecclesiastics throughout Spain, dated the 12th of last October.—This is not the act of a Protestant community, but of a Catholic. It should be considered by those of our citizens who can see no difference between Jesuits and Catholics, and those Protestants who are so cruel to their own children as to place them in the hands of this order. Its rapacity and tyranny, love of power and of money, its systematic attack upon all other organizations, whether social, political or religious, that it may profit by every disturbance; its unlimited, unwearied abuse of every person not in its own interest, and its ceaseless praise of every one in any degree connected with itself; its unscrupulous methods, and readiness to attain its ends by the sacrifice of every principle which men have been taught by God's word to hold, have rendered this the most hateful body of men that ever appeared in a civilized country, or fastened upon the vitals of society. It has at the last been spewed out of every State where it has ever been tolerated. Yet at this very hour, in this city, its churches are crowded, and its representatives are found in the City Council, in the school board, and at other important points. The Jesuit ring must be discovered, watched and headed before any city or State interest can be advanced. It has already come to this. Wherever money is to be controlled, or power, there its hand is at work. It knows no country, no person, no principle, but the advancement of the order. It has subsidized at least one city paper. Nearly every day there appears in its columns, in some covert form, a commendation of Jesuit schools, or Jesuit churches, or Jesuit asylums.

Let the American reader learn a lesson from the Catholic Spaniards, who have had far better opportunity to know these people than we have.

THE SUPPRESSION OF THE ORDER OF JESUS IN SPAIN.—The following is the order recently issued in Spain relative to the society of the Jesuits, which was in 1764, about a hundred years ago, by a bull of Clement XIX, suppressed in all the States of Christendom. In Spain and Portugal the members of the order were driven into exile. The society was completely rehabilitated by Pius VII in 1814, and even in Spain their ancient possessions were restored them. They were again suppressed by the Cortes in 1820, and again restored in 1825. In 1835, under revolutionary influences, they were again suppressed in Spain by royal decree, but its provisions were never effectively carried out:

MADRID, October 12.

I decree the suppression throughout the peninsula and the adjacent islands of the regular order called Company of Jesus. All the colleges and training schools for priests shall be closed in three days, and the temporalities taken possession of by persons appointed by the authorities of the provinces in which these establishments are situated. In this latter measure will be included all the property and effects of the order, movable and immovable, buildings and revenues, which shall form part of the national wealth, in conformity with the provision of the royal decree of the 4th July, 1835. The members of the Company shall no longer be able to meet as a body or a community, to wear the dress of the order, nor to be in any way answerable to the superiors of the body existing in or out of Spain. Those not ordained as priests shall remain entirely subjected to ordinary civil jurisdiction. I charge the archbishops, bishops and all those who exercise ecclesiastical or civil authority, to aid each in what concerns him, the faithful execution of the present enactment, in conformity with the Pragmatic Sanction of the 2d April, 1767, and the brief of his holiness of the 21st July, 1773.

ANTONIN ROMERO ORTIZ,
Minister of Grace and Justice.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION.

This event has left the country without "occupation." The silence of General Grant has supervened throughout its length and breadth. The main point now is, the animus of this military President—will he be conservative, feel himself the executive officer of the Constitution as it is, or will he return us to the Grant and Stanton condition, and give himself up to the absolute control of intense Radicalism. We suppose that of all men a military man is the most powerless when in the Presidential chair. He can no longer say go, and he goeth. The order issued ceases to command the presence or the services of any man; not even as a member of the cabinet. General Taylor died in making a transition from a military to a civil status. Men had so to be consulted, conciliated, begged and bought, that he presently died of vexation, indignation and honesty. The independent promptness of the soldier is the very opposite of the cautious balancings and half positive decisions of the statesman. So that no man is so completely at the mercy of those about him as the man from the camps is when he finds himself presiding in a cabinet made up of adroit, classic, trained Congressional diplomatists. The probability is that the country at this moment knows what the mind of General Grant is about as well as he knows it himself. He is as overwhelmed in his new character as a teacher who never taught would be at the opening of a large school. We certainly, of the South, can not expect for worse things of General Grant than we did expect from the election of Andrew Johnson. Men are changed, but the King of men and angels is the same, yesterday, to-day and forever.

EXPEDITION TO CUBA.

There is intense excitement in New Orleans among certain portions of the population with regard to important movements contemplated against the Island of Cuba. The recent insurrections in that island have revived the spirit of filibusterism among the Americans, and excited the hopes of vengeance and liberty amongst the Cubans now living in the midst of us, who have expatriated themselves either through fear of punishment from the Spanish authorities, or from disgust at the subordination of themselves and their families.

Several very prominent men, who were engaged in the unfortunate expedition of General Lopez, which landed at Bahia Honda, and which was, with few exceptions, annihilated between that port and the Moro Castle, are now in New Orleans consummating, it is popularly believed, a formidable movement from this port and Mobile. We repeat public rumor only; and public rumor says that a very able and distinguished soldier, well known for his adventures in Hungary, Spain, Nicaragua and the Confederacy, is connected with the movement.

Several meetings have been called and held, in different quarters of the city, with regard to the movement, but none except the initiated were allowed to enter the meeting rooms. Their proceedings are, therefore, secret, and we have been unable to get at them. But enough has leaked out that one expedition is certainly fitting out, and that one or, may be, two more are in embryo—the one, composed of Cubans and their friends, looking to the liberation of Cuba from Spanish dominion; the other on the part of Spaniards, who wish to aid an abet the ruling powers of Spain in the continuance of the vice royalty.

The third party, and the principal one, it is hardly necessary to state, is the one composed of North Americans, who, imbued with the warlike spirit engendered by the late civil war, see now a rich and untried field in the golden key to the Gulf of Mexico, and have the strongest confidence in the ability and the fixed policy of the United States government, under General Grant, to seize upon that key and upon Mexico, and annex them as portions of the Republic.

The rumors pervading the city are of the wildest nature. There is little doubt that a good many men have already left for Havana by sail and by steam, properly fortified with passports from the Spanish consul; that a species of joint stock Cuban enterprise has been started in which a good deal of money has been subscribed by wealthy and responsible men, both in New York, New Orleans and other great cities; that the filibustering project against Mexico, which has long been gathering to a head along the shores of the Mississippi, has been turned into a new channel, and been merged into the project against the Spanish authorities in Cuba.—New Orleans Crescent.

THE steamer Grent Republic will be sold at public auction on the 27th inst., at St. Louis, by the United States marshal.

A PROPHETIC writer predicts that Meridian, Mississippi, will have fifty thousand inhabitants in six years.

MARRIED.

In the Methodist Church in Columbus, Mississippi, November 5, by Rev. W. C. Hearn, Mr. JAMES S. BILLUPS and Miss WILDIE SYKES.

OBITUARIES.

COLONEL RICHARD SPENCER.

Died, on the 31 of September, at Cottage Hill, Alabama, Colonel RICHARD SPENCER, my father-in-law. He was the son of Perry Spencer, and was born in Talbot county, on the eastern shore of Maryland, on the 29th of October, 1796. He was educated by the Rev. Dr. Joseph Spencer, an Episcopal clergyman, studied law under General Winder, and was engaged in its practice subsequently until 1835. He was twice chosen to represent his county in the State Legislature, and in 1832 was elected a member of Congress from his native district. Previous to this time he for several years edited a Democratic paper, published in Easton, called The Whig. In 1835 he moved to Baltimore, and in 1837 he came out to Alabama, and began to plant in the neighborhood of Tuskegee. Thence he moved his servants to Dallas county, where, in 1841, he was joined by his family from Maryland. He subsequently planted for some years near Demopolis. In 1852 he moved to Cottage Hill.

On the 19th of October, 1819, he was married to Anna, the daughter of William Baker, of Baltimore county, Maryland. Mrs. Spencer died in 1853, of yellow fever. In 1855 he was married to his second wife, Mrs. Margaret Root. By his first wife only he had children—a son and two daughters. William was killed at the battle of Shiloh. The two daughters still live.

These are the prominent points of his life; and yet they tell nothing of his true life. That began in 1840, in the city of Baltimore. Up to that time he was a man of the world, an ardent politician, and seemingly very far from Christ. But God prepared a train of providences, of all the most likely to win his heart. His wife was already a decided Methodist, and at this time was attending, with her daughters, a protracted meeting then being held in Eutaw street church, by the Rev. C. B. Tippett. The daughters had been converted the previous year. Mr. S. was a very fond father; and it was while reading aloud to his family a lesson from Jay's Exercises, on "The Barren Fig Tree," that he became convicted thoroughly. He was presently found at the altar. At that very time, while kneeling as a penitent in the house of God, he was to have addressed a political meeting in Monument square. After several days' attendance upon these services he was converted at the altar.—Christ was then formed in his heart, and his whole nature, his pursuits, tastes, and aim of life, were immediately, essentially and permanently changed. From that moment to the very end he was a consistent, active, constant follower of the Saviour. The ardor of the politician was turned into the fervor of the Christian. He instantly declared the work which God had wrought in him, and in all his subsequent intercourse with men he distinctly avowed his Lord. His polished manners and long acquaintance with fashionable life gave him an easy access to the irreligious world. This he never failed to employ for doing good and in upholding the church. His character was marked by great liberality of sentiment and a strong sense of justice; and he was singularly free from bigotry and prejudice. Of a very hopeful and sprightly mind, he was specially interesting and agreeable to young persons. He was a conscientious and kind master, and the religious welfare of his servants was faithfully cared for. Wherever he lived he was prompt to build or to repair the house of God, and to discharge all the duties of a steward. Many Methodist preachers will recollect his generous services in this useful and trying office, for he was never happier than when entertaining or aiding his beloved ministers.

He came to his grave "in a fullage, like as a shock of corn cometh in his season." By a severe and protracted sickness the graces of the Christian were strengthened and perfected in him. He accepted all as from the hand of an all-wise and all-loving Father. "I am," he writes in one of his latest letters, "in the hands of the Lord. Let him do with me as seemeth good. All will be well if my end is peace. He hath dealt with me through life in great mercy. I can trust him for the future. * * * Our sufferings here are all in mercy, and designed to prepare us the better for the enjoyment of that rest prepared for the faithful. May the Lord help me to improve mine!"

This was the habitual state of his mind. He approached his end steadily and consciously, and with unwavering faith in Christ. He entreated those dear to him not to grieve at his departure, for he should then be beyond suffering. For twenty-eight years he walked, as seeing Him who is invisible; and, now that he is gone, we all feel that our affection to father, our noble and true friend, is surely in heaven. His children and grand-children are honored by his memory.

J. C KEENER.

Miss ARAMINTA DEEN died at the residence of her father, on Coule Creche, St. Landry parish, Louisiana, October 26, 1868, aged seventeen years and twenty-one days.

The subject of this memoir was born in Rankin county, Mississippi, October 5, 1851. I received her into the church about three months since. She was possessed of an unusually sweet disposition, and enjoyed the love of all her associates. She took considerable interest in the success of the gospel, and I think was a devoted follower of our blessed Saviour. She had experienced conversion in 1865, and on reuniting with the church renewed her vows. Her death was full of triumph, she even joining in the hymns sung by the friends around her bedside. There is every reason to believe that, freed from earthly sorrows, she is now singing the songs of the redeemed above. F. T. R.

On the same day, and at the same place, THOMAS JACKSON BRADY, grand-child of Thomas Deen, Esq, aged one year and nine months.

Tommy had been sick all his short life, till a few months before his death. His grand parents were just rejoicing in his apparent recovery, when pneumonia suddenly snatched him from them. But his little soul is now safely housed with God. F. T. R.

MARY LOU., daughter of Augustus W. and Alice Taylor Little, of this place, died of croup, on Sunday, October 25, 1868, aged two years and seven months. She was the joy of the household—a sweet little cherub. But now she is with the angels. The Lord took her, and in taking He drew heavenward two souls who had been wandering from grace. How like the shepherd of the East: when one of the sheep is given to straying, and will not come to the fold at his call, he takes away her little lamb in his arms, and then she follows. Ah! the Lord is truly a good shepherd. He doth not afflict willingly; only in love does He chasten. "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord," is now the language of pious submission which rises up from the twain-heart of these bereaved parents. J. W.

OPELOUSAS, La., Oct. 28, 1868.

MISS LOUVENIA GIBSON, daughter of Rev. R. C. Gibson, was born in Sumpter county, Georgia, and died in Coffee county, Alabama, in the latter part of the month of August, 1868.

She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South when quite a child, and was happily converted in 1861. She ever after adorned her profession by a pious walk and a godly conversation. Her father told the writer of this sketch that he never remembered seeing her out of temper but once. Her gentle and kind disposition gained the admiration and won the love of all who knew her. She seemed to have a premonition of her death for three months before it occurred, and frequently spoke in calmness of her approaching dissolution. She was one day observed by her father kneeling secretly in prayer in a grove near by, and after her death it was observed that she had worn a path to this consecrated spot, chosen for private communion with God. Weeds may now grow up undisturbed in that little path that led to her bower of prayer, and silent may be that sacred spot forever; but her prayers are turned into praise with "an innumerable company of angels, and the general assembly and church of the first born, which are written in heaven."

About two weeks before her death she clipped two locks of her hair, and gave them to her two little sisters, telling them to keep those locks in remembrance of her when she was dead. She gave directions about her funeral, requesting her pastor, Brother Waugh, to preach the sermon.

After calmly and peacefully giving charges to all the family, she embraced her father and exclaimed: "Now, pa, I'm safe! I'm safe!" and sweetly fell asleep in JESUS. WESLEY B. DENNIS.

CHARLIE BALDWIN, son of the Rev. E. Baldwin, of the Alabama Conference, was one of the noblest youths I have ever known. He died in Selma, on the 27th of August. He was only twelve years old, but his character was developed into a beauty and strength rarely to be found in those much older than himself.

When the writer knew him—nearly ten years ago—he was often impressed with his thoughtful intelligence, and manly, dignified bearing, together with the deep, earnest interest he ever manifested for his mother's comfort and happiness. His remarks and questions were sometimes such as exhibited rare genius, and a mind eager to possess itself of information. He sometimes alluded to his father in touching terms, and while hearing his mother speak of him great tears would chase each other down his cheeks, proving the depth and warmth of his noble young heart. His mother often looked to him for counsel and advice; while he, ever considerate and unselfish, seemed to live only to do good, and would often yield his desires to those younger, in order to afford them pleasure. Was it strange, then, that his mother should almost idolize this darling boy, and upon such evidences of worth build bright hopes for his future? With his character softened and refined by the tender influences of home, and at the same time fortified by his mother's careful teaching and his own natural abhorrence for anything mean or wrong, his morals would have sustained spotless the rude touch of the world, while his pure ambition would have prompted efforts sure to secure an exalted position in any walk in life.

But he has gone! A mother's heart is left mourning over the ashes of its great desolation! Her hopes for her darling boy's success are buried with him, while the sad, bitter reality of death is left brooding o'er her heart. Does it not seem an idle task to comfort this bereaved mother? Can she realize the glorious change for the better her Charlie has made? Though no more may she see him, yet his angel spirit hovers o'er her life, and, could angels whisper to mortals, would breathe sweet words of comfort to her heart, and once more restore the smile to her wan cheek.

May God comfort her in her great sorrow, and when she reflects that her precious boy is with Jesus, who has said, "of such is the kingdom of heaven," may she be happy once more, and resignedly say: "Thy will be done."

C. M. S., OF VINONIA.

Died, in Hampden, Marengo county, Alabama, October 21, 1868, Mrs. CARRIE HUDSON, wife of Mr. F. Hudson and daughter of H. W. Hatch, Esq., in the twentieth year of her age.

Early instructed in the ways of truth, she in the days of her youth "remembered her Creator," and cast in her lot with the people of God. She lived a pious member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and died as none but a Christian can die. It was the melancholy yet delightful privilege of the writer, as he held her dying hand and endeavored to cheer her with words of comfort as she passed through the vale of death, to hear her calm expressions of faith, and her confident assurances of everlasting life. "I know I shall be happy in heaven" was one of her expressions, after which she took an affectionate leave of her husband, and others around her, exhorting them to meet her in heaven. Her father, lying sick in another room, unable to see her, was remembered by her. She said: "Take good care of my father. Do not let him want for anything."

There was no ecstatic joy, but the calmness of confident assurance, not clouded by a single fear or doubt.

So passed away this pure and humble servant of God. Who could witness the happy departure of such a Christian without prizing more highly than ever before our holy religion?

J. C. HUCKABEE.

MRS. LAURA HALEY ALFORD, wife of the Rev. E. M. Alford, of the Mississippi Annual Conference, was a native of Madison county, Mississippi. She was born October 1, 1835, and died, at the old family homestead, October 13, 1868.

She united with the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at Pearl River church, in 1850, but did not enjoy much of the life and power of religion until 1858, when she made a full, unreserved and perpetual offering of herself—spirit, soul and body—to the Lord, through Jesus Christ, and in this was accepted. God set his seal upon her, and from that time her faith was strong, unwavering and realizing.—She was a faithful and happy Christian. She was a working Christian, zealously affected in a good cause. It has been my privilege to know but few ladies whose piety, walk, conversation, and whole Christian life seemed so entirely to look to the glory of God in everything as did that of our late Sister Alford. She was a burning and a shining light.

A lady who had known her from her childhood remarked to me: "I have often read of women in whom the sanctifying grace of God had produced such effects in holiness, but I never saw it to this extent except in Sister Alford." And a brother remarked: "Her's was the simple, unwavering faith we read of in the Bible, producing wonders." Her life yet speaks to those who knew her. I thank God that it was my privilege to know her and be her pastor.

O that God may smile upon and bless the six motherless children and bereaved husband. H. H. M.

Died, of congestive fever, in Wilkinson county, Mississippi, on the 3d of October, A. D. 1868, Mrs. SARAH CAVIN, wife of Moses Cavin and daughter of Walter and Tabitha Shropshire, in the forty-ninth year of her age.

Sister Cavin was born January 23, A. D. 1820. She professed to know the Lord in the pardon of her sins in the year 1841, and united herself to the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which she lived and died—an active, consistent and zealous Christian.

In the year 1842 she was united in holy matrimony to Brother Cavin. She was a loving, affectionate wife, a tender, loving mother, and a kind and feeling mistress. She became the mother of ten children, three of whom are dead. She lived to see sons that are now living converted to God and on the way to heaven. She was a child of suffering and great affliction. She was seized with rheumatism, conjoined with erysipelas, in the year 1865, of the most acute and painful character, from which she never fully recovered. The pain left her partially paralyzed and a cripple for life. Notwithstanding all this, her patience and cheerfulness spoke volumes for the life of her Christian character. Truly, in her case, the suffering the will of God, as well as doing it, was clearly exhibited. But she is gone, leaving a disconsolate husband and seven children, with a large number of relatives and friends, to mourn her loss. The church, too, will much lament her departure, as one of the most active and working members within her pale. Oh, may the great Head of the Church prepare us all for a more glorious meeting in a happier clime, where loved ones may sing:

"Earth has no sorrow that heaven can not heal."

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

FRANKIE'S FIRST STEPS.

BY EMILY HUNTINGTON MILLER.

So you've found your feet at last,
Merry little one!
'Tis a long and weary path
You have just begun.

Now the gold of morning shines
Through your skies so blue,
And the blossoms wait your tread,
Fresh with early dew.

Now a father's guiding hand
Leads thee on thy way,
And a mother's watchful love
Guards thee night and day.

By and by the little feet
Rougher paths must tread,
When the morning gold is dim,
And the roses dead.

Will you battle for the right,
With a purpose strong?
And your feet, in spite of thorns,
Bravely press along?

None can tell what life may bring,
Little child, to thee;
But the Father's tender love
Cares for you and me.

We can trust His sleepless eye,
Though our sight be dim;
Safe in any path we tread,
If we walk with Him!

Little Corporal.

The Rocky Mountain Expedition.—No. 2.

BY W. H. DANIELS.

The pony Reynolds' rodo was as wild as a deer, as beautiful as she was wild, and as ugly a piece of horse-flesh, at times, as could be found in all the mountains of Colorado. As they rode along the edge of a high table land, the pony suddenly commenced "bucking," that is, jumping with stiff fore legs, trying to throw her rider. It was an old game, and he understood it too well to be unhorsed by it, but the vicious animal at length came so near the precipice in which the table land terminated, that he was obliged to dismount in a hurry. He was not a minute too quick, for the instant he struck the ground the pony made a leap over the precipice, and actually rolled down, over and over, endways and sideways, for as much as two hundred feet; and the pack mule, stupid thing, catching the spirit of rebellion, followed the pony, and plunged down, pack and all, to the very bottom of the ravine.

Everybody was frightened except Bob, who called out,

"I say, boys, those animals have been taking lessons of Reynold's Rocky mountain sheep."

The party dismounted and made all haste down the steep, rocky bluff, expecting to find the poor beasts both dead, but strange to say, they were only a little bruised, and somewhat astonished, for they got on their legs again, in a few minutes, and it was not many days before they were as well as ever.

On the Blue river, geese and ducks swarmed in countless numbers, and both woods and water were alive with game.

But here a great misfortune befell the party. One night a mountain lion, as he is sometimes called, a huge animal of the panther tribe, made a rush into their camp, seized and carried off what was left of the carcass of the sheep, and gave the animals such a fright that they tore the picket pins out of the ground and stampeded in every direction.

Wasn't that a pretty fix for the corporal's squad? Nothing but nerve and muscle for it now, and no horse or mule muscle to help them. Some hundreds of miles of mountains to cross, before they could rejoin their party, and such climbing that a man could hardly carry his gun, to say nothing of blankets and rations; beside, what were they to do with their saddles and packs, and what were they to do without them, on all the rest of the expedition? The night was pitch dark, and there was nothing to do but to wait till morning.

At daybreak the hunters were up, and after a hasty breakfast they packed away all the camp outfit, saddles, etc., and taking nothing but the bridles, and their guns, with a small stock of powder and ball, off they started on their weary tramp over the wild mountains, to find the lost animals.

For three days they wandered about, and for three nights they slept with not even a blanket to cover them, but not one of the party lost his courage or good nature.

On the third afternoon, as they were pushing their way through a swamp, where the trees were large and overgrown with vines, and the ground covered thick with bushes, they were startled by a low growl, within a few feet of them. The old hunter, who knew what sort of a beast the grizzly bear was to handle, quickly raised his hand, as a signal to halt, but Goodfellow had caught sight of the huge beast, and forgetting the advice Reynolds had given them so often, never to fire on a bear without first looking for a tree into which you could retreat, in case the shot did not kill him instantly, which was, indeed, rarely the case, he took careful aim, just behind the bear's fore leg, and the woods rang with the echoes of his shot.

Instantly a great crashing was heard through the bushes, and the old hunter, seeing the danger, called out, "run, run for your lives."

The ground was soft, and the bear could not make his best time through the tangled vines, so they had a better chance of getting back to a clump of small trees, which they had passed a few minutes before, too small for the bear to venture on, but large enough to hold a man.

But they were too weak and tired with their hard march; the bear was gaining on them, and they could hear him pant, as he tore through the bushes in hot pursuit, though he was so concealed that no one could get another good shot at him, even if he had dared to risk the loss of time in stopping to try it.

Poor Bob was too weak to run very fast, and Reynolds, who loved the lad almost as well as if he had been his own son, saw the terrible danger, and stopped short, determined to give the bear a bullet, even at the risk of certain death, if he should not kill the beast at once.

Bob saw the movement, and instead of pushing ahead, as the old hunter shouted to them all to do, he stopped to see the bear killed, as he was certain he would be, if his good friend sighted the rifle.

With his own little "Parker" clutched tightly in his hands, not because he supposed there was any use in a couple of charges of fine shot, that he had put in to shoot a curious little humming bird for the museum, (but which had got out of sight before he had time to fire,) but because of the intense excitement of the moment, Bob stood watching for the bear, and for the shot that was to finish him.

Never was a braver man, never a better eye, never a steadier nerve, but all the chances were against the man; the light was not very clear, the bushes might glance the ball, the game was on the full run, and there was a question of life and death to set his heart jumping.

He drew up his long, heavy rifle, and with the mad beast within twenty feet of him, he fired.

It was death and not life, for the bear came on. There is no use in clubbing a rifle with a grizzly bear, so he drew his knife and prepared to fight to the last, when a noise behind him caused his heart to leap into his throat; it was the click, click, of the locks of a double barrelled gun; Bob's gun, of course, for there was no other in the party. Was the boy mad?

The boy was not mad, but that quick instinct, that never failed him, was now to save his life, and that of his friend.

A miracle, almost, and yet easy enough if one could think quick enough, and shoot steady enough.

Jumping behind a tree, at one side of the bear's path, he gave him one charge of fine shot right in his left eye.

The bear stopped for a moment, for the close shooting little weapon, at a distance of not more than fifteen feet, had fairly blinded him. He gave a fierce growl, rubbed his blinded eye with his fore leg; then, turning his head and catching sight of his little enemy he was just about to rush upon him, when the little "Parker" sent its other charge into the other eye, and brought him fairly at bay. Catching the minute while the bear was roaring with pain and fright at being suddenly in the dark, Reynolds and Bob plunged through the woods toward a small stream, knowing the bear would be on their track, in an instant, by his sense of smell.

They reached the stream, and crossed it. Reynolds hastily loaded his rifle, and when the bear came down to the water and stopped, he gave the rifle to Bob, saying,

"Here, that is your game; now finish him."

Bob took the heavy rifle, rested it over the limb of a tree, aimed at the butt of the bear's ear, and fired. There was a great splash in the water, but when the smoke cleared away, there lay the bear dead, in the middle of the stream.—Little Corporal.

THE Austrian government lately commenced a prosecution against the bishops who had refused to obey a recent law passed by the Reichsrath, intrenching themselves behind an article of the Concordat which exempts them from civil jurisdiction. The question being submitted to the Tribunal of Prague, that body has decided in favor of the priests. This decision, it is thought, will lead to the entire suppression of the Concordat at the next meeting of the Reichsrath.

THERE are reports of Dr. Livingstone being within a week's journey of Zanzibar. This is where Sir Roderick Murchison expected that he would appear. It is earnestly to be hoped that the news may be confirmed. If so, he will probably bring with him satisfactory information as to the true water-shed of South Africa.

SCIENTIFIC.

NEWS FROM SIRIUS.—No. I.

BY R. A. PROCTOR, B. A., F. R. A. S.

There are certain problems in astronomy which have never been satisfactorily solved, though they seem at first sight to present no features of special difficulty, or even to be quite similar in character to other problems which have been found easy of solution. For example, astronomers were for a long time unable to determine the weight of the planet Mercury; and the estimate now accepted is far from being a satisfactory one. Similar difficulties have been encountered in the attempt to estimate the weight of Venus and Mars. Yet these are the nearest of the planets; and Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus and Neptune, which are so much farther from us, have long since been accurately weighed. We have seen, also, that the features of Mars—has oceans, continents and polar ice caps—have been satisfactorily delineated, while those of Venus, our nearest neighbor among the planets, remain altogether unknown. Again, we have learned what elements exist in many of the fixed stars, although the nearest of these bodies is more than two hundred thousand times farther from us than the sun; yet we know nothing of the physical constitution of the planets, or even of our near neighbor, the moon.

Amongst other problems which have hitherto appeared insoluble is that of determining whether the stars have any motion directly toward or from the earth.

We can form an estimate of the star's transverse motions, because these result in apparent change of place. And in the few instances in which we are acquainted with a star's distance, the knowledge of its apparent transverse motion enables us to ascertain the real rate (in miles per year) at which the star is speeding onward through celestial space. It has been noticed, for instance, that a certain star called sixty-one Cygni has an annual motion so considerable that in about three hundred and fifty years the star would be shifted over a space in the heavens equal to the moon's apparent diameter. Now it happens that this star is one of the few with whose distance from us we are acquainted. In fact, so far as observation has yet gone, this star is nearer to us than any in the northern heavens. Knowing the star's real distance, we can translate the star's apparent motion into real transverse motion in miles per annum. When this has been done, it results that the star is moving over nearly one thousand four hundred and fifty millions of miles annually, in a direction at right angles to the line of sight. This motion is equivalent to about forty miles per second.

But the star may really be moving much more rapidly through space. For besides this transverse motion, it may have a motion of approach or recession with respect to the earth. A motion of this sort would, of course, produce no effect on the star's apparent position. The only effect it could have would be to increase or diminish the star's apparent brightness. But so enormous is the distance of the fixed stars that no effect of this sort could be expected to take place. For, let us suppose that sixty-one Cygni is approaching us at the rate above assigned of the star's transverse motion—that is, at the rate of one thousand four hundred and fifty millions of miles in a year. This space, enormous as it seems, scarcely exceeds the fifty-thousandth part of the star's distance; so that in a thousand years the star would not be nearer to us by more than one-fiftieth part of its present distance.

It seems, therefore, quite hopeless to look for information respecting any motions of this sort among the fixed stars. For if no evidence of motion toward or from us can be detected in the case of a body which is certainly one of the nearest among the fixed stars, it is still less likely to be afforded in the case of other stars.

Yet the problem here presented is precisely the one whose solution we have to record. The manner in which the problem has been solved is deserving of careful study. We shall have to make some preliminary remarks, which at first sight seem scarcely to bear on the subject we are dealing with.

It is known that light travels in a series of waves of extreme minuteness, and propagated with extreme velocity through an ethereal medium which occupies all space and the interstices of solid bodies. We know little of the habitudes of this ethereal medium; in fact, we only know of its existence through its quality of transmitting light and heat. So long as light and heat were supposed to travel directly from the sun and stars to the earth, the existence of a fluid occupying the interstellar and interplanetary spaces could hardly have been suspected. But the case is different now that the undulatory theory of light has been established. For, just as the transmission of the tidal wave from the Southern ocean to our own shores is an evidence (and would be, of itself, a sufficient evidence) that the waters which wash our shores communicate with the southern seas, so the fact that light-waves from the sun and from the stars reach our earth affords sufficient evidence that the medium in which they travel occupies—without break or interruption—the interplanetary and interstellar spaces.

The waves of light are, as we have said, exceedingly minute. It has been proved that their average length is about the fifty-thousandth part of an inch. But they are not all of the same length; and light-waves of different length produce light of different colors. There are some light-waves so long as the forty-thousandth part of an inch; waves of this length produce red light. And we may remark, in passing, that this is doubtless the reason why green light is so agreeable to the eye; for the light-appreciating powers of the eye are called into fuller exercise in dealing with waves belonging to either extreme.

It is not to be supposed that there are sudden limits to the length of the waves we are dealing with. Just as there are sounds which are too grave or too acute to be appreciated by the ear, so there are light-waves, or rather, we should say, there are forms of light, which the eye has no power to appreciate as light. Such waves produce effects—heating, actinic and chemical; but the eye does not recognize them as light-waves.

Light travels at the rate of one hundred and eighty thousand miles per second, and the question may here arise—and will be found to have an important bearing on the subject of our paper—whether waves of different length travel at the same rate. This question must be answered, it should seem, in the affirmative. For, since light takes nearly an hour in traveling from Jupiter to us, it would follow, if there were any appreciable difference in the rate at which the longer and shorter light-waves travel, that the satellites, on emerging from eclipse, would not appear white. Suppose, for instance, that the longer light-waves traveled fastest, then a satellite immediately after eclipse would appear red, and gradually, as light of the other colors of the spectrum came to reinforce the red light, the color of the satellite would change from red through orange, buff, fawn-color, and finished white to pure white. Similarly, if the shorter light-waves traveled fastest, the color of the satellite would change from violet through indigo, olive, russet and greenish white to pure white. As no such changes occur, we may assume with considerable confidence that light-waves of different length travel at the same rate.

We now have to consider a circumstance which may be aptly illustrated by the waves of the sea. If we imagine a stout swimmer urging his way amidst a wave-tost sea, or rather, amidst a sea crossed by a succession of long rollers, we shall see that, according to the direction of his motion, he would be apt to form a different estimate of the rate at which the waves were traveling. It is clear, that in the case only of his swimming in a direction parallel to that of the wave-fronts would the waves seem to pass him at their true rate. If he swam facing them, they would seem to travel more quickly, and if he swam with them, they would seem to travel more slowly than they would if he were at rest. Now, if he were not to consider his own motion, he would be led by these varying appearances to form varying estimates, not merely of the velocity of the waves, but of their breadth. The faster the wave-crests passed him, the narrower would the waves appear to be, and vice versa.

It is obvious that similar considerations apply to any system of waves whatever. Take, for instance, the waves in air which produce sound. These travel at the rate of nearly one thousand two hundred feet per second. If a sound be maintained at a given pitch—that is, by air-waves of given length—this sound will appear to vary in pitch according as the auditor is at rest, or moving toward or from the source of sound—if only, in the latter cases, the observer's rate of motion bears an appreciable proportion to the rate at which sound travels. It was stated by the late Professor Nichol, of Glasgow, that the experiment has actually been tried. "On the railway uniting Utrecht with Maarsen were placed, at intervals of something upwards of a thousand yards, three groups of musicians, who remained motionless during the requisite period. Another musician on the railway sounded at intervals one uniform note, and its effects on the ears of the stationary musicians have been fully published. From these certainly—from grave and the more acute, and vice versa, confirming even numerically what the relative velocities might have enabled one to predict—it appears justifiable to conclude that the general theory is correct, that the note of any sound may be greatly modified, if not wholly changed, by the velocity of the individual hearing it," or, he should have added, by the velocity of the source of sound itself.

Let us apply the same consideration to light-waves. We must first consider the velocity of light. It will appear, at first sight, hardly conceivable that any orb in the celestial spaces should be moving with a velocity bearing an appreciable relation to the enormous velocity with which light travels. Even the velocity of sixty-one Cygni—about forty miles per second—would almost be rest as compared with a velocity of one hundred and eighty thousand miles per second. We may compare the relation between these unequal velocities to that between the velocity of the swiftest express train and a velocity of about twenty yards per hour, or one foot per minute—a velocity scarcely exceeding that of the snail. If, therefore, we supposed the star sixty-one Cygni to shine with light having a constant wave length, in other words, with monochromatic light, we could not expect to detect any difference in the color of its light on account of any motion the star may have toward or from the earth.

But a consideration connected with the words we have italicised renders the solution of our problem in this way altogether hopeless. Returning to our swimmer, if waves of every possible length between certain limits were passing him, and he were only capable of noticing those which seemed to lie between much narrower limits of length, it would clearly make no difference whether he swam with or against the course of the waves. And this case exactly corresponds with that of the observer on earth. The astronomer, M. Doppler, who first suggested that the colors of the stars, and especially of certain double stars, might depend on the star's motions of recess or approach, omitted to take this important circumstance into consideration. If we assumed that a star were approaching us so rapidly that the waves of red light were apparently reduced in length so as to produce the effect of orange light, then the orange part of the star's light would produce the effect of yellow light, the yellow of green, the green of blue, the blue of indigo, the indigo of violet, and, lastly, the violet part of the light would become inappreciable. So far, then, there seems to be a change—in the loss of all the red part of the light. But as it is certain that there are light-waves of greater length than those which produce red light, and that these waves by being apparently shortened could become appreciable to the sight and give the effect of red light, we see that there would be absolutely no change whatever in the color of the light received from a star moving toward us even at the tremendous rate indicated by our supposition.

Thus we seem to be no nearer the solution of our problem than we were before.—Frazer's Magazine.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

THE style of missionary labor carried on by the Basle missionaries, combining the secular with the religious, and making missions self-supporting, is seen in a description of their work in Accra, in West Africa, as given by Mr. Horton, in his "West African Countries and People." He says:

"The Basle missionaries have completely renovated the aspect of the country, and the extreme savage and barbarous habits of the people, wherever they have labored; they have established the literature of the language, and made the rising generation to feel the beauty and pathos of their mother tongues when reduced to writing; they have introduced the cultivation of new plants in the country, and taught the people how to prepare them, some of which are now becoming staple articles of commerce—such as coffee, cocoa, Virginian and Kentucky tobacco; they labor continually in the country, and many of them marry lawfully with the native ladies, which increases their influence and power over the native population; they make good, open roads in the interior, dig deep and expensive wells in their stations where water is scarce, and supply good wholesome water for their own use and that of the inhabitants of the towns, who, consequently, highly appreciate their efforts for their welfare; they introduced European horses, which, unfortunately, could not withstand the climate of the country. Besides teaching the people the value of agricultural pursuits, and affording them every opportunity of realizing the value of their produce, they teach the mechanical arts; they send out shoemakers, tailors, wheelwrights, carpenters and coopers, to teach the people these useful employments, so that vast improvements are being made by the natives."—Independent.

TENNESSEE FEMALE COLLEGE, Franklin, Tennessee, situated on the Nashville and Decatur Railroad, eighteen miles south of Nashville, in a most beautiful and healthful portion of the State, with ample buildings thoroughly refitted and refurnished, and supplied with the modern improvements for heating, ventilation and bathing. This institution, with a full faculty, will begin its Fall Session on Monday, September 7, 1868.

In the Literary Curriculum both Latin and French are thoroughly taught, without extra charge. This Curriculum must be completed for a degree in the College; yet young ladies may pursue an eclectic course, and receive diplomas in special departments.

For Music and Painting skilled instruction and the best facilities provided.

Boarders will find a home in the College with the family of the Principal.

Prices throughout very low for the grade of the institution. The entire charges for board and the full Literary Course will not exceed $25 per month.

The climate is specially favorable to study, and hence our scholastic year is one month longer than in the Gulf States.

THE HOME MONTHLY, New Orleans, for 1867.

The HOME MONTHLY will contain forty-eight pages of reading matter, printed upon fine paper and in clear type, and will, from time to time, be accompanied by elegant steel-plate engravings. The subscription price will remain $3 per annum, or $1.50 for six months, invariably in advance. In order to build up a still larger circulation, we have concluded to offer the following

Liberal Inducements to Agents,

To any person sending us three yearly subscriptions, with nine dollars, we will send the MONTHLY six months, or allow them, if they prefer, to retain One Dollar and Twenty-five Cents of the amount.

To any person sending us six subscriptions, with eighteen dollars, ($18,) we will send the MONTHLY one year, or allow them to retain Two Dollars and Fifty Cents of the amount.

On amounts for subscription less than nine dollars, agents will be allowed to retain ten per cent.

Ministers, it is hoped, will act as agents, not so much from pecuniary considerations as from a laudable desire to assist in building up a home literature worthy of a place among the families of the South and on the center-tables of a Christian people.

All communications on business should be addressed to

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING

STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as by means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

At Least Thirty per Cent, as Compared with any other Stove.

and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally knows as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. That meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

For sale only by the undersigned.

In addition to the above, I also have a large and complete assortment of COOKING STOVES, comprising all of the leading Stoves of the day, equal to any offered in any other house in this city.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY, AT Greensboro, Alabama.

The next session of this institution begins the first Wednesday in October, and is divided into two terms.

TUITION.

Academic Department, per term.....$35 00
Preparatory Department, per term..... 30 00
Contingent fee, per term..... 2 50

A fee of $5 is charged those who attend the schools of Chem. and Nat. Phil.

Board, exclusive of washing and lights, $16 to $20 per month. By messing it can be obtained even cheaper than at these rates.

Sons of ministers of the Gospel in the regular work, and those studying for the ministry, are admitted free of tuition.

The whole expense for the scholastic year, including everything except books and clothing, will be $250, payable one-half at the opening of the session and the remainder on the 15th of February. If the student wishes to board in a private family it will be $280. This great reduction in the price of board and tuition will bring the advantages of the University within the reach of those whose limited means have heretofore placed the highest scholastic training beyond their reach, as well as secure the patronage of those who, on the score of economy, are sending their sons out of the State to be educated.

Especial attention is called to the fact that preparatory students are taught exclusively by the Faculty.

The Law School has been organized under the management of Hons. Judge Coleman and A. Benners.

For further information apply for circular to

NEW PATENT PIANOS.

RAVEN & BACON, (established in 1829.)

Warerooms, Nos. 614 and 616 Broadway,

NEW YORK.

Manufacturers of Piano Fortes, with the patent Combination Sounding boards,

Patented August 11th, 1868.

This invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affects the sounding board, the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a pure liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. The sounding-board released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding-boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection, and its vibratory quality increased.

Our Pianos are first-class in every respect, and purchasers will have not only our own guarantee as to their quality, but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument, obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

EAST ALABAMA MALE COLLEGE

AT AUBURN, ALA.

The Fall term of this Institution will open on the FIRST WEDNESDAY in SEPTEMBER next, and close on the 20th December. Besides the regular course of studies for graduation, large facilities are afforded for instruction in the Commercial and Agricultural branches. Separate schools for these branches, in connection with the College, were authorized at the last annual meeting of the Board of Trustees. A student not wishing to take either the regular or a partial literary course in the College, may confine himself to either of these Departments, and in a short time become qualified for business.

The Preparatory Department, with competent teachers, will be under the special supervision of the Faculty.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market has exhibited more animation since our last issue, a fair business having been done in most branches of the wholesale trade, but thus far only a limited number of merchants have come in from the country, and more activity is anticipated next week. Our leading staple has not shown much movement. Buyers have been unwilling or unable to go on at previous rates, and factors reluctant to make the concessions asked. Sugar and molasses have come forward more freely, but the additional scope offered to buyers has increased the competition, and prices have ruled more in favor of sellers, especially for the better qualities. Western produce, on the contrary, continues extremely dull.

The weather was clear and pleasant on Saturday and Monday, but on Tuesday it was cloudy, with indications of rain. For some time past it has been remarkably favorable for cotton picking, and has no doubt enabled planters to gather a much larger amount than would have been picked under other circumstances. Owing to this, more than to any error in their previous calculations, there has been a pretty general raising of crop estimates in our cotton circles. Nothing has transpired to modify the sanguine views of the sugar trade with regard to the cane, the prospects of which are highly cheering.

The river has fallen six inches since our last report, and is now thirteen feet below high water mark.

Cotton.—The following are the arrivals since the 6th instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi ..... bales..	12471
Tennessee and Alabama	600
Lake	34
Arkansas	2254
Mobile	376
Texas	312
Total	16047

On Saturday prices showed considerable irregularity, but after some fluctuations stiffened, under the influence of an improvement in foreign exchange, caused by an advance in gold at New York, and closed more in favor of factors, low middling being quoted at 23¼c., and middling at 23¾c. The sales were to a fair extent, amounting to 4,200 bales, and buyers for Great Britain, the Continent and the North participated in the business. On Monday unfavorable telegrams from Liverpool and New York, and the discouraging tenor of the foreign correspondence, together with a reduction of limits on many of the pending orders for Great Britain, checked the demand and caused an unfavorable turn, the business being confined to 3 500 bales, mostly for France, and prices at the close showing a falling off of ⅛ to ¼c., low middling being quoted at 23c. and middling at 23½c. On Tuesday the market opened with a fair inquiry, but buyers contending for further concessions, which factors were reluctant to make. At a later hour, however, the latter were compelled to yield to the unfavorable telegrams from Liverpool and New York, and the improbability of effecting sales unless at easier prices, and the figures paid indicated a further decline of ⅛ to ¼c. This, however, brought out more buyers, and the sales summed up 5,100 bales, taken mostly for France, other continental markets and the North, buyers for Great Britain operating sparingly.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 12,800 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 188,804 bales, against 53,863 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 170,032 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 11,729 bales to Great Britain, of 33,887 to France, and of 816 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Low	— to —
Ordinary	21 to 21½
Good ordinary	22¼ to 22¾
Low middling	22¾ to 23
Middling	23¼ to 23½
Strict middling	— to 23¾

SYNOPSIS OF CHARTER.

The plan proposed by the Mutual Aid and Benevolent Life Insurance Association is as follows:

1. Each person, upon enrolling himself or herself as a member, shall pay into the Treasury a membership fee, if between the ages of

16 to 30, inclusive, the sum of $10 00
31 to 40, inclusive, the sum of 15 00
41 to 50, inclusive, the sum of 20 00
51 to 60, inclusive, the sum of 25 00

which payment constitutes him or her a life member.

2. A Life Insurance Policy is issued for a sum equal to one dollar for each enrolled member appearing on the books of the Association, at the decease of said member.

But in no event shall the amount paid on said policy exceed $5,000.

3. On the death of any member an assessment is made upon each policy holder for one dollar and twenty-five cents, payable at the office of the Association, within thirty days after notification thereof, by publication in one daily newspaper published in the city of New Orleans, in English and one in French, for five consecutive days, and if the policy holder resides out of New Orleans he shall be notified in writing.

4. Should the number of members exceed five thousand, the assessment of $1 25 will be reduced in proportion to the number of members exceeding five thousand.

5. Should any member fail to pay the assessment in the time specified, he forfeits all previous payments or credits.

6 All accumulations from whatever source, such as forfeitures, interest, etc., shall be credited upon the books of the Association to the members pro rata, to be withdrawn in lieu of assessments. oct17 1y

ELEVENTH SESSION.—TERMS REDUCED.

The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first-rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar, etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.

SPECIAL CAUTIONS.

Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health.

A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket-money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.

It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

Terms—Board and Tuition per session, $300.

Payments—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.

Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

Incidental Fees—First session, $2 50; second session, $2; third session, $1 50. All payments in advance.

Indigent young men can have tuition free but will be expected to pay the incidental fees.

Boarding can be had (including lodging, washing fires and lights) in the families of citizens at $5 per week.

Boys who have made some progress in Arithmetic, English Grammar and Geography can be received into the Preparatory Department. Terms, same as above named.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

GRANT'S POLICY.—A BROTHER'S STATEMENT.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 10.—Every little straw is gathered now to show the probable policy of the general after his inauguration. Here are two of them: In the railroad car from Chicago the other day a gentleman said to Grant, "General, I hope when you are in office you will let us have peace in fact as well as in name." To this the general answered, "You may be sure I will, sir. I shall make peace, and a solid peace, which will satisfy all good men, North, South, East and West." A brother of General Grant, who lives in Chicago, is reported to have said a few days ago that Grant intends to enforce the reconstruction laws to the very letter, so far as that duty may be bequeathed him by the present administration. Perhaps by the time of his inauguration the whole business of reconstruction will have been disposed of, but if not, according to this fraternal authority, Grant will execute them strictly. The reason alleged for this is that Grant holds that "the will of the people is the law of the land," and that in the election just decided the people expressed their will to have these reconstruction measures enforced by indorsing the measures and platform of the Republican party. From his natural modesty he does not presume to think that it was his personal popularity that impelled the people to give the Radical ticket a majority so decided, but rather that it was due to their indorsement of Congress and its policy. So says Grant's brother.

SMUGGLING IN THE NEW ORLEANS DISTRICT

Judge N. Sargent, Commissioner of Customs, has received a report from a special agent of the bureau, who is stationed in the New Orleans district, which gives an account of the capture of a notorious leader of a smuggling gang, called Captain O'Rourke. O'Rourke has long defied the customs' officers, and has shot at every officer who attempted his arrest, and wounded several. This agent, hearing that a lot of cigars were to be landed at Corpus Christi Bay, Texas, started for Bayou Black, where he knew that O'Rourke's brother-in-law kept a store. When he arrived there he learned from a negro that O'Rourke had recently left in a skiff, with the intention of bringing back another load of goods. After waiting until next day without seeing anything of the smuggler, the agent took a skiff and a negro to accompany him, and started down the bayou in search of him. After sailing about fifteen miles he suddenly saw, rounding a curve, a skiff containing three men and a number of boxes. On observing the agent the men in the skiff put for the shore, and one of the men got out and ran into the high grass, while the other two surrendered. Believing that the man who escaped was O'Rourke, the agent left the negro to guard the two men and the boat and pursued the fugitive. He overtook him, and when within two hundred yards of O'Rourke, fired at him and shouted that he was a government officer, ordering him to throw down his pistols, and approached, holding his hands above his head. This demand was complied with, and the agent put handcuffs on the dreaded smuggler and brought him into town. The two men left with the boat had threatened the negro with death, and had escaped with their cargo. O'Rourke was taken before a United States Commissioner, where he stated that his schooner was grounded near the shore at the mouth of the Nemento. He was held under arrest until the agent went to the schooner and burned her. The vessel, which was named the Hero of Mobile, he found was admirably arranged for smuggling, being constructed with a false bottom, capable of holding about five hundred boxes of cigars. The agent obtained other valuable information which led to other detections. On his return he consented to the release of O'Rourke, the latter having taken an oath never to attempt a landing on the Gulf coast except in a legitimate manner. The agent reports that coast now clear of all the old smugglers. He further states that he found the coast from Opelousas to the crossing patrolled by armed bands, and it is extremely dangerous to venture into that part of Louisiana.

THE LONDON TIMES ON SECRETARY SEWARD.

LONDON, Nov. 13.—The London Times, in an article on the settlement of the Alabama claims, alludes to Secretary Seward in the following terms:

"The official career of Mr. Seward is now drawing to a close. The favorable result of the late war is largely attributable to his skill and energy. His foreign policy has been successful; foreign strife has disappeared. He must naturally wish, in common with Lord Stanley, to terminate, before retiring, a dispute, of all the details of which he is master. The convention is especially important because at a time when national jealousy weakens the confidence, it establishes a freer precedent for resorts to peace, instead of war, for the settlement of differences."

THE PARLIAMENTARY CAMPAIGN OPENED.

Lord Stanley opened the parliamentary canvass in the borough of King's Lynn with a speech to his constituents. After reviewing and defending the policy of the ministry, he proceeded to consider the state of Europe. He said the mutual jealousy and overgrown armies of France and Russia were a source of uneasiness; but believed if peace were maintained, France would become reconciled to the Union of Germany.

He feared Turkey was in danger from internal causes. Returning to the question which agitated England, he declared himself in favor of Reform, but opposed to the disestablishment of the Irish church. In course of his address he announced that the differences with the United States were so far settled that the arrangement made wanted only the ratification of the government at Washington.

MINISTER JOHNSON'S ACTION.

Those who are dissatisfied with Reverdy Johnson's action with reference to the question in dispute between this country and Great Britain, say that he is acting under instructions given him prior to departing for England by President Johnson. It is said that Secretary Seward, during an interview with prominent gentlemen of this city, plainly intimated to them that Minister Johnson must have been authorized to pursue his present course by the President, or he would have requested instructions from the State Department before assuming such, as he termed it, extraordinary authority in conceding such vital points to the British minister. Some fear that the action of Reverdy Johnson will produce a rupture between the President and Secretary Seward, as the Secretary is but human after all, and can't bear the idea of these questions being settled without playing a prominent part in the business.

HELMBOLD INSANE.

NEW YORK, Nov. 12.—H. T. Helmbold, of "Buchu" notoriety, was taken violently insane this morning, and sent to the insane asylum. He is said to have been insane for some weeks.

NEW YORK MONEY AND STOCK MARKET.

NEW YORK, Nov. 13.—The money market and stocks are again disturbed, and the feeling is very unsettled. The recent panic and decline of values at the Stock Exchange foreshadows a movement of prices of real estate and of all articles of produce and merchandise. A feeling of distrust pervades the community, and business is at a stand-still in almost every department. Capitalists with money to invest prefer to lend it on call to buying anything. The speculative prices of railway shares are very moderate as compared with prices that have been made on real estate and the advance of domestic produce consumed in every household.

Real estate speculators have taken the benefit of the superabundant currency to advance prices two hundred to three hundred per cent, and many storehouses in New York now rent for as much per annum as they sold for ten years ago. The bubble has been blown to an extent exceeding Wall street operations, and has reached its maximum for some years at least. This vicious working of a depreciated currency has also run into the smallest articles of produce, which, with abundant crops over the whole country, are dearer to-day than they were with gold at two hundred and eighty, and four to five times the prices before the war.

CUBA.

HAVANA, November 12.

It recently came to the knowledge of the government that a band of fourteen persons had started from Havana for the purpose of creating an insurrection in the Varetta Abeja region. On the 10th instant the officers succeeded in arresting twelve of the party at San Cristabol.

Senor Aguiaro, a merchant of Yara, who is charged with receiving arms and ammunition for the revolutionists, has been arrested, and was brought to this city yesterday by government officers. General Boluesdo has arrived at Manisella, where he issued a proclamation, giving the revolutionists eight days to lay down their arms and cease hostilities against the government.

FROM ROME.—PROPOSED REFORMS IN THE CATHOLIC CHURCH.

NEW YORK, Nov. 14.—Cable specials say that the pope, through his nuncio at Madrid, still refuses to recognize the new government of Spain.

At a meeting of French bishops and cardinals, in Rome, several reformatory measures were, to the great surprise of conservative members, favorably received by a majority. Among the measures was one to reverse the Council of Trent concerning the celibacy of the Catholic clergy, and allowing them to marry. Another was to abolish the Latin liturgy and adopt the language of the nation in which the service is performed. These measures will be submitted to the coming Ecumenical Council.

REVOLUTIONARY CONSPIRACY IN FRANCE DISCOVERED.

PARIS, Nov. 13.—At a council of ministers held at the Tuileries, proof was adduced of the existence of a conspiracy for the overthrow of the existing order of affairs in France, and a resolution was adopted providing for the use of the most vigorous measures for its suppression. The public journals will be exempted from interference if they refrain from inciting the people against the government.

MADRID, Nov. 16.—An immense demonstration was made on Saturday in favor of a monarchy; fifty thousand people were present. Olozaga, Martos, Serrano, Prim and Lapete spoke. Much enthusiasm was exhibited.

PARIS, Nov. 16.—Baron James Rothschild, head of the house of Rothschild, is dead.

INDIAN ATROCITIES IN TEXAS.

THE NORTHERN FRONTIER BEING DESOLATED.

The Galveston Civilian contains the following:

Colonel S. H. Starr has issued a military order prohibiting the organization of independent companies on the frontier, to operate against the Indians. His order concludes as follows:

The military authorities, in the efforts to suppress Indian depredations on this frontier, are desirous of the co-operation of the citizens as guides, scouts, and small organized bodies co operating with, and under the control of officers of the United States army; but all military bodies organized without the above mentioned authority are hereby declared unlawful, and hostile to the government and interest of this State.

In the meantime a correspondent of the Rusk Observer, writing from Weatherford, Parker county, says:

The Indian alone is the objection to this country. A few evenings ago I was called on to visit a little girl, shot by the Indians, (Apaches,) nine miles west of this place. The first object my eyes rested upon, on entering the hall, was the murdered father, awfully mangled, and totally covered up with his own gore; I passed the dead frontiersman at once, and proceeded to business, that of dressing the wounds of the poor little sufferer—the only remaining one of that unfortunate family. She was almost insensible from the loss of blood, but after the dressing and a stimulating potion, she recovered sufficiently to relate to me the whole story, which was horrible beyond description. I then had time to look around the room. On a bed near by was the dead mother and babe—they were both dressed when I arrived. The whole of her scalp was removed. The babe was sleeping in her arms—and both in the arms of death. I have frequently witnessed sights of horror in the army, but never have I been called on to view so sad, so awful a scene. The little girl is improving and will get well.

If the government would permit the frontier to organize a company for the purpose of defending this frontier, we could to a certain extent get rid of them; but alas, this powerful government is too timid to risk arms and ammunition in the hands of a few frontiersmen.—Heaven speed the day when the yoke of oppression will be lifted from the neck of Southern people. All the people ask is permission to defend themselves.

The McKinney Enquirer, of November 7, states that the Indians murdered a Mrs. Vicks, a few miles from Decatur, also a young man, whose name is not given. The Indians were dressed in blue blouses, with Spencer rifles swung to their persons, in the same manner as worn by United States cavalry troops. A party of citizens, numbering about forty persons, pursued the Indians from Denton, but on coming up with the Indians were forced to retreat on account of the superior numbers of the enemy. A Mr. Fortenberry was killed and another person was wounded. A man was killed by the Indians at Chisum's ranche, on Clear Creek. The Enquirer says that our frontier is likely to have all the hostile Indians, driven by General Sheridan from Kansas and Mexico, turned loose upon it. One-half of the population of Wise county has left it. The same may be said of Montague and the western part of Cook. The same remark applies to other frontier localities farther south. For many months past the Indians have been more bold and daring than has been usual with them. They have come into the settlements in larger bodies, and penetrated to neighborhoods where they have not been seen for twenty years past.

Mr. Charles Webb gives the following particulars of the raid into Denton and adjoining counties:

On the 29th ultimo a party of Indians, about one hundred strong, made their appearance at Mr. John Bailey's, four miles from Denton, and killed him while working in his field. A son of Mr. Ball was captured, but afterward made his escape. The Indians then went to Mr. Vick's, about one mile distant, where they shot and killed Mrs. Vick while washing in the yard. They then went to the town of Denton, and captured two hundred head of horses which Mr. McCormack had under herd, ready to drive to a place of safety. After taking Mr. McCormack's horses they were pursued by about forty citizens, who overtook them about the head of Hickory Creek. The Indians turned and made a charge on the whites, killing one man, wounding several, and compelling the remainder to retreat.

On the night of the 30th another party of Indians, numbering one hundred or more, passed Decatur, bound down the country; nothing heard from them yet.

The Sherman Courier having mentioned a rumor that Governor Throckmorton had been arrested, by order of General Reynolds, for assisting in organizing volunteers to repel the Indians, the McKinney Enquirer says that the report was incorrect. "He is now at home, but there is no telling how soon he or any one else may be arrested by the military, it by no means being necessary in this part of the 'best country' that a person should commit an offence to subject himself to arrest."

We are glad to see, by subsequent news, that Colonel Starr, of the United States army, commanding at Fort Richardson, Texas, has issued an order authorizing the citizens of Wise and Denton counties "to embody a sufficient number of their people to protect themselves from depredating Indians."

TITIAN'S VENUS.—A correspondent of an English journal calls attention to the present state of Titian's Venus. It has been retouched but a little, yet it is in danger of complete destruction at present. The strainer on which the canvass is placed has warped and shrunk to such a degree that the picture is liable to assume a convex or concave position. The consequence is that the picture, in almost every square inch, is covered with cracks. These are so serious that a touch by a dust brush or by the fingers, or even the shaking of the picture, is calculated to remove the precious coloring. It is thought that a mechanical process, such as the application of a thin coat of glue to the cracks in such a manner that the glue might penetrate beneath the scales, and placing at the back of the picture a panel of well-seasoned wood, together with a new strainer, may "preserve the picture to ages as remote from us as Titian's is from the present."—*N. Democratic State Convention.

The chairman of the Committee on the Condition of the State read the following report, which was adopted:

To the President and Members of the State Democratic Convention of Louisiana:

Your Committee on Resolutions and the Condition of the State respectfully submit the following report:

Since your adjournment the great political battle, which determines the character of the national government for the next four years, has been fought, and resulted in the decided triumph of our opponents. Deeply as we deplore this result, injurious as we believe it will prove to the best interests of our country, it is our duty at once to accept the decision which has been made, and carefully to refrain from making any factious or merely partisan opposition to the incoming administration. The condition of our own State demands our first care, and its restoration to prosperity and good government are objects which rise infinitely above all mere party considerations. We rejoice to know that the signal triumph of the Democracy in Louisiana gives us the assurance that these objects are now within our reach, and that sooner or later the present corrupt and imbecile State government must cease to exist. But though this is a great triumph; though much has been done, much yet remains to be done. Our success was an overwhelming declaration of the popular will, an unmistakable show of strength. It yet remains to clothe that will with the forms of law, and to make that strength effective for our relief from evils too great long to be borne by any people who deserve to be free.

To this end it is most earnestly recommended that throughout the State we maintain our organizations, with only such modifications as will render them more effective, and that we continue with unabated zeal our efforts to overthrow the miserable faction that is daily oppressing and plundering us. We do not propose now to go into a history of this faction, or present any detailed statement of the wrongs we have suffered, and are now suffering, at the hands of the present State government.

Unfortunately no such statement is necessary, for their extravagance and corruption have been so open and shameless that they are known to all. But the men who, by military power, have been thrust into office here, in opposition to the wishes of ninety nine hundredths of the taxpayers of the State, are not content with merely plundering us for their own advantage—they seem to be inspired with a vindictive hatred of those whom they are robbing. Possessing no property themselves, and conscious of the opposition of those who do, they have inaugurated a warfare against property itself, which, if not successfully resisted, must result in the speedy ruin of every interest in the State.

The Constitution of 1868 provides that in all sales of land made under any order of court, the land shall be sold in lots of from ten to fifty acres. This provision covers all sales made under writs of seizure and sale, and fieri facias, and all succession sales. Thus, no matter what may be the opinion of the parties most interested as to the best mode of selling their property, in all sales under execution these parties are deprived of any voice in the matter, and the same arbitrary rule is established in all sales made by executors, administrators, and the tutors of minors. Such a provision would be ruinous anywhere. It is peculiarly so in Louisiana. A large portion of the State is engaged in the production of sugar. These estates, with their sugar houses and machinery, costing frequently from twenty to fifty thousand dollars, their quarters, dwellings and other buildings, and their due proportion of cleared and wood land, are valuable as a whole, and are slowly but surely increasing in value; but suppose that they are divided into lots of ten or fifty acres, with perhaps the sugar house and its expensive machinery on one lot, the dwelling, costing perhaps as much, on another, the quarters on another, one lot all wood land and another all cleared land, what would any or all of these lots bring if sold on such terms, and what would any one of them be worth to the purchaser?

When it is remembered that our people are deeply in debt, that a large number of sales under execution must necessarily take place, and that, according to the estimate of a former distinguished judge of the Supreme Court, all the property of the State passes through the probate courts once in twenty years, some idea may be formed of the extent of the ruin that will be wrought by this most iniquitous provision. Surely never was a more mad and reckless scheme for the ruin of a whole people devised by any set of political adventurers. The whole legislation, and almost every act of this State government, are characterized by the same spirit. Lottery schemes, printing schemes, and railroad schemes, and every conceivable device for wasting money and increasing taxation, form the staple of their legislative enactments, the burdens of all which fall with crushing weight upon the property of the country. In this state of things it is imperatively necessary that the property holders and taxpayers of the State, without distinction of party, should combine for their own protection, and to save themselves from speedy and irretrievable ruin. The people of the city of New Orleans have already taken the initiative in this direction by forming an association of property owners for the purpose of resisting, by all legal means, the payment of illegal and unconstitutional taxes, and for the general protection of their rights against similar legislation in the future. We most earnestly recommend the immediate formation of similar associations in every parish of the State, and that as soon as formed they proceed to establish a central committee at the seat of government. With such organizations, having a central head, and engaged in correspondence with each other, we should not only be able to test the constitutionality of all taxes already imposed, but a sound public opinion would soon be formed, which could not fail to have great influence in bringing the government to a wise, honest and economical policy.

JAS. O. FUQUA, Chairman.

The Committee on Permanent Organization offered the following rules and regulations in regard to the election of the Parish and State Central Committees, which gave rise to considerable discussion, but was finally taken up and adopted seriatim.

The rules thus adopted read as follows:

RULE 1.—In each parish of the State the present parish committee shall proceed, as soon as practicable, to order an election under such rules and regulations as they may provide, of a parish committee, to serve for the term of one year, to date from the third Monday of November, 1868, or until their successors are elected; and immediately after the organization of the parish committee, it shall be their duty to communicate the names of their officers and to furnish their address to the State Central Committee.

RULE 2.—Immediately after the organization of the parish committee, as provided for above, they shall proceed to elect one delegate from each country parish, and one delegate from each ward of the parish of Orleans, whom, together with five to be appointed by the president of the State Convention, to constitute a State Central Committee, located in the city of New Orleans, seven of whose members shall constitute a quorum. The State Central Committee to serve for one year from the third Monday in December, or until relieved by their successors in office.

RULE 3.—The parish committee shall have full power to provide for the time and manner of all primary elections, and to control all financial matters within their respective parishes.

RULE 4.—The State Central Committee shall have power to call all State or congressional conventions through the various parish committees. It shall be their duty to supervise and control the general welfare of the party, and to communicate all matters of interest to the parishes.

RULE 5.—As soon as a quorum of the Central Committee is appointed, as heretofore provided, they shall proceed to organize and enter upon their duties.

FRETTING.—Two gardeners had their crops of peas killed by the frost, one of whom, who had fretted greatly and grumbled at the loss, visiting his neighbor some time after, was astonished to see another fine crop growing, and inquired how it could be.

"These are what I sowed while you were fretting," was the reply.

"Why, don't you fret?"

"Yes, but I put it off till I have repaired the mischief."

"Why, then there's no need to fret at all."

"True, that's the reason I put it off."

THE FLOWERS OF THE FIELDS.

Sweet nurslings of the vernal skies,
Bathed in soft airs and fed with dew,
What more than magic in you lies
To fill the heart's fond view?
In childhood's sports companions gay,
In sorrow, on life's downward way,
How soothing! In our last decay
Memorials prompt and true.

Relics ye are of Eden's bowers,
As pure, as fragrant and as fair,
As when ye crowned the sunshine hours
Of happy wanderers there.
Fallen all beside—the world of life,
How is it stained with fear and strife!
In reason's world what storms are rife,
What passions rage and glare!

Ye fearless in your nest abide—
Nor may we scorn, too proudly wise,
Your silent lessons, undescribed
By all but lowly eyes;
For ye could draw the admiring gaze
Of Him who worlds and hearts surveys;
Your order wild, your fragrant maze,
He taught us how to prize.

Alas! of thousand bosoms kind
That daily court you and caress,
How few the happy secret find
Of your calm loveliness!
"Live for to day; to-morrow's light
To-morrow's cares shall bring to sight;
Go sleep like closing flowers at night,
And heaven thy morn will bless."

"A LITTLE EARTH FOR CHARITY"

Mr. Editor: I see by the letter of your correspondent, "P. Brulee," that the giving of musical concerts and tableau entertainments, and devoting the proceeds of them to the improvement of church houses, has stirred the slow blood of one "fogy's" soul, and sent it tingling to the finger ends, until they are made to give relief to the quickened pulse by dashing off a nervous letter, which was intended to be a sarcastic rebuke of this practice. And lest there should not be found matter enough in the one item for a letter of respectable length, the brother threw in the "negro question" and the "lost cause" to help it out. Now this may all read very well in a letter, but it is not meeting the question involved in this subject. It is an easy matter to satirize and denounce these concerts, etc., but quite a different thing to coolly and logically dispose of the points contained in this subject. In the first place, neither "P. Brulee" nor any other reflecting Christian will deny the fact that there are and should be amusements and entertainments suited to the pious, other than the actual duties and services of religion. We seek relaxation from the more serious employments of life in social conversation, in reading books of history, delineations of human character, poetry and sentiment, in listening to sweet music, vocal and instrumental, and in viewing sights and witnessing displays that appeal to our sense of the beautiful, the novel and the grand. The verdant visitor to your great city is a more entranced and delighted sight-seer than he would be if sitting in one of these concert rooms. Nor need we go to the city for an illustration upon this point. There have recently been exhibitions, in the streets of almost every town and village in the State, of torchlight processions, with transparencies containing significant and humorous mottoes and devices, with beautiful flags and banners and uniforms and music, accompanied with presentations of wreaths, banners, etc. And to these exhibitions thousands of pious people have flocked from town and country, with all their children, and eagerly strained their eyes, and held up their little ones, to see all that could be seen and to hear all that could be heard—then have gone home, said their prayers, and slept soundly and sweetly, without even dreaming they had committed any sin.

Now, for the life of me, I cannot see how pious nerves can be so composed under the one exhibition, and yet so disturbed under the other. Surely there is as little harm in listening to thrilling music and looking upon instructive and impressive tableaux in the concert rooms as there is in attending the show upon the streets. The only substantial difference I see is that one is a free show and the other costs fifty cents.

I am not insensible, I trust, to the importance of all those divine counsels about conformity to the world, etc. But I submit the question to the candor of the pious heart, is there no amusement that may be safely addressed to the eye and ear of the Christian—nothing that may be lawfully used to gratify the cheerful buoyancy of youthful piety? Every man must feel in his heart and realize in his own experience the fact that we were endowed by our great Creator with capacities for pleasure, and that we may be delighted with many things and subjects not directly connected with religion. But it is objected to these concerts, etc., that they are after the fashion of this world. Query: Have not "the children of this generation" shown themselves "wiser than the children of light" in seizing upon this well known and lawful disposition of human nature to seek amusement and entertainment suited to the hours of relaxation, and making it a means of alluring countless victims, and among them those who were once pious, to public balls, the theater, the coffee house, the gambling saloon, and such like schools of vice, where all the baser passions of human nature are developed, to the loss of property, health and character? Your correspondent's caricature of an "Evangelical Theater, to be under the direction of the patronizing churches, and for their special pleasure and profit," is only one of the many ways church people have of turning over the rest of mankind, and especially the young, to the tender mercies of the wicked, to seek, amidst the corrupting influences of the world, that lawful pleasure which, if the church may not provide for them, it may at least countenance, and even encourage. There is another feature of this subject I wish to notice. It seems to afflict some that the money secured by these lawful entertainments is devoted to the improvement of our houses of worship. Now I respectfully ask, what harm can there be in this? A few persons, by combining the talents with which God has blessed them, afford this entertainment at a given price. Those who patronize them get the worth of their money in pleasure and such wholesome refreshments as are furnished on such occasions. They are satisfied. The money has been fairly earned, and the generous persons who labored for it turn it over to the church, and it is devoted to the improvement of the house of the Lord. The patrons of this lawful entertainment have made no contribution to the church. Their money has been fairly earned, and those who earned it are now enabled to do what their poverty would not allow them to do before.

This is a subject, I know, upon which much may be said on either side. I have merely touched upon its borders, and now commend it to the intelligence of the church, under a deep conviction that it is worthy the pious study of all who love the church and who desire that she may not, by any unnecessary harshness, drive or repel any from her fold. Respectfully,

New Iberia.

BRITISH HONDURAS.

Toledo, British Honduras,
October 24, 1868.

Mr. Editor: Please allow me a column in your paper to redeem my promise to report, about this time, the progress of our colony of nineteen good Southern families, now settled near Toledo.

As previously stated, after entering the unbroken forest here, about the middle of March last, we planted our crops in June. Our rice in four months—while we, in the meantime, were engaged in making further improvements—has yielded us about twenty bushels per acre, and we have discovered that by planting it thicker a larger yield may be obtained. The stubbles are now ratooning vigorously for another crop, which, we are told, will be as good as the first. Our corn, also, without cultivation, has yielded us from twenty to thirty bushels per acre. We will very soon plant corn again, and we expect to gather, in about five months, another and better crop than the present, as the ensuing season is the best for corn. We also have such vegetables as beans, peas, squashes, tomatoes, ochre, cucumbers, etc., succession crops of which grow very rapidly; and pumpkins weighing thirty to forty pounds, and yet the best season for all kinds of melons is just setting in. We have rice and corn of the present crop to spare for our friends who may join us in the next few months. One man, seventy years of age, went into the woods here six months ago, and has with his own labor made more supplies than he can consume in two or three years. We have an abundance of plantains, yams, cocoa, potatoes, etc., growing, but they require a longer time in which to mature, though the yield of the plantain and yam is immense. The plantain bears all the time after it once begins, which is about ten or twelve months from the time they were planted. The yam, weighing from five to thirty-five pounds and upward, is a good substitute for the Irish potato. But we have a kind of Irish potato down here which, if planted by an arbor, will run upon it, and bear large potatoes on the vines, like butter beans; and after the vine has exhausted itself and died, another will spring up from the roots. One planting is sufficient. The sweet potato and cocoa, once planted, are very difficult of extermination. We have sugar cane planted to make seed-cane for next year, and it is growing finely. We tried very hard to have tobacco plants, to raise small crops this year, but our seeds all failed to germinate from some cause. Tobacco of a very fine quality grows here. We will soon extend our crops of coffee and the various fruits, etc. Poultry thrives remarkably well. Scarcely one young chicken out of ten fails to mature rapidly. Stock also does well, and we can have the best of perpetual pasturage on a very small area.

Those families which moved out early to their plantations, back in the country, have enjoyed good health, but those who remained in Toledo, on the sea coast, have suffered from chills. They have been light, and there has been scarcely any other sickness here.

I suppose there are about seventy-five Southern families in British Honduras at this time.

D. W. Foster.

BOOKLESS HOUSES.

We form judgments of men from little things about their houses, of which the owner perhaps never thinks. Flowers about a rich man's house may signify only that he has a good gardener, or that he has refined neighbors, and does what he sees them do. But men are not accustomed to buy books unless they want them. If, on visiting the dwelling of a man of slender means, we find that he contents himself with cheap carpets, and very plain furniture, in order that he may purchase books, he rises at once in our esteem. Books are not made for furniture, but there is nothing else that so beautifully furnishes a house. The plainest row of books is more significant of refinement than the most elaborately carved sideboard.

Give us a house furnished with books rather than furniture. Both, if you can; but books at any rate! To spend several days in a friend's house, and hunger for something to read, while you are treading on costly carpets, and sitting upon luxurious chairs, and sleeping upon down, is as if one were bribing your body for the sake of cheating your mind.

Books are the windows through which the soul looks out. A house without them is like a room without windows. No man has a right to bring up his children without surrounding them with books, if he has the means to buy them. It is a wrong to his family. Children learn to read by being in the presence of books. The love of knowledge comes with reading, and grows upon it. And the love of knowledge in a young mind is almost a warrant against the inferior excitement of passions and vices.

Let us pity those poor rich men who live barren in great bookless houses. Let us congratulate the poor that, in our day, books are so cheap that a man may every year add a hundred volumes to his library for the price of what his tobacco and his beer would cost him.—Among the earliest ambitions to be excited in clerks, workmen, journeymen—and, indeed, among all that are struggling in the race of life—is that of owning, and constantly adding to, a library of good books. A little library, growing larger every year, is an honorable part of a young man's history.

It is a man's duty to have books. A library is not a luxury, but one of the necessaries of life.—Episcopalian.

LETTER FROM CHINA.

Shanghai, September 14, 1868.

Mr. Editor: Schools being so numerous and teachers ready to take charge of them, boys of all ranks and grades of society are sent, and many at the age of five and six. They begin their alphabet, as it were, by learning separate characters, which are written on small bits of red paper cut into squares. From four to eight of these are given a day to a boy. The teacher then gives him the sound, and then the tone, until the shape of the character is indelibly fixed upon the mind of the child. The meaning is not given, and it is not intended that they shall know it until some future day, after they have been five or more years in school. For this they must pay an extra sum of money to the teacher. And it is always required that the boy shall greatly respect—I may go farther and say almost adore—the man who thus imparts this knowledge to him. And if in after-life the boy is ever raised to any position of honor or emolument, his teacher is never forgotten, and, indeed, the parents of the boy enjoin this duty upon them. The teacher of his youth thus comes in for a share of his esteem and regard, and becomes a most important personage. As the boy advances in learning these characters, until he has committed to memory about five hundred, so that he can discern their shape and give the name attached to them, he is looked upon as prepared to go into the primer, a small three-character classic, the first sentence of which is, "Man is good by nature," etc., and in this way they are carried through the four books of Confucius, each page with text and comment being committed to memory without knowing the meaning, unless the teacher is hired for that particular purpose. Even then he will not give the meaning until the boy has mastered the sound and the shape and tone of the character. It is quite deafening to enter one of these school rooms, and they become quite a nuisance to all persons in the neighborhood, except it be to Chinese themselves, and they look upon it as a matter of course. In fact, they say unless the boys do pursue that course of loud reading and swinging of the body, it is utterly impossible for them to make any advancement in their studies. I have heard them express themselves to that effect. The pupil is thus conducted by his teacher from one book to another, and occasionally preparing a thesis upon some particular passage, until he is able to attend a local examination.—When that is completed he is then conducted to an examination of the department, and obtains some inferior rank, if successful in this examination. These two examinations are about equal to our matriculation pass into college. A great number are rejected, and but few selected. No degree is conferred upon any of them, and it is more frequently the case that those who do succeed owe it in a great degree to the recommendation of some influential friend. The few selected are then conducted to the provincial capital, where the literary chancellor presides over the examination. He is very strict, and does not allow the student to enter the cell prepared for each one, in which to write his thesis, without undergoing a thorough search, no book or writing of any kind being allowed him, but simply a bit of paper, ink and pencil. How different from the custom in our own land. The Chinese pupil undergoing an examination must trust alone to his memory. If he can quote readily from the classics in illustration of the point in question, it is looked upon as deserving of honor, and accordingly he is selected and his name is posted the next day, with others, for the benefit of those interested in their sons or brothers.

THE FELICIANAS.—No. I.

BY MARY S. WALL.

Mr. Editor: East and West Feliciana are situated in District No. 5. They used to be called the "Florida parishes." Before the war these parishes would compare favorably with any portion of the South as to the wealth, talent and education of their inhabitants. In West Feliciana the people had residences that would remind one of the palaces of the old world. Flowers were almost sacred in West Feliciana.—Bayou Sara is the largest town in that parish. Most of the influential people around Bayou Sara are Episcopalians of the highest church. Grace Church, in that town, is a splendid building, or was before the ravages of war injured it. The people of East Feliciana are simpler in their tastes and manners than those of their sister parish. The Felicianas are capable of being made, by intelligent, patient workers, "as the garden of the Lord." No need to emigrate to Brazil or Honduras in order to find a fertile country—if we could have reasonable taxation, peace and safety. With a moderate attention the soil here produces cotton, corn, potatoes, sugar cane, rice, Irish potatoes, sweet potatoes, peas, beans, pumpkins in abundance, with at least fifty other kinds of vegetables; while pears, plums, peaches, apples, raspberries, strawberries, huckleberries and grapes yield a rich return to those who cultivate them. We have a pear tree that produced wonderfully one year, I thought, and said that the yield was "about a hundred bushels," and have been teased more than a little about "that extravagant story I told about the pear tree." Like the man who said he "was chased by a million of Indians," and then fell to fifteen, and at last said, "Well, there were two," I say I am sure the tree bore thirty bushels, though I still think there were more than that. We ate pears, we sold pears, we baked pears, we gave away pears, we preserved pears, and the newly enfranchised helped themselves liberally. All that is needed is a willing, industrious, virtuous working class of people, to make the land to teem with the bounties of the field, vineyard and orchard. As to flowers, their abundance and the facility with which they are cultivated make them seem almost the spontaneous productions of the soil. Early in the year we have snowdrops, hyacinths, Narcissus, bridal wreaths, hearts-at-ease, and sweet violets; then come roses, jessamines, honeysuckles, lilies, glandiolas, pinks, etc., to brighten the scene and perfume the air. Now nearly every one has a garden, which receives a goodly share of attention. I can stand on my gallery and see three gray-headed white men at work in their gardens. These men once were not obliged to work in their gardens, and used to handle other implements than the shovel and the hoe. Yet they do good work, and raise a fabulous amount of vegetables from their gardens. One of these men is seventy years old, and the others not much behind him. Their wives propose that the lazy and inefficient young men of the parish be formed into line, and forced to look at these men at work. It will not do to call them old men, as they all have young wives.

Clinton, in East Feliciana, is, or was, a city, having a mayor and aldermen. I do not know what we have now, though I know a great many things that we do not have. It is emphatically a rural town, and, unlike the little girl, we can hardly see the town for the trees and shrubbery.

We have a beautiful court house, which is good to look at, and which is useful to strangers on their arrival in Clinton. It serves to introduce a conversation—"You have a very handsome court house here." We have always numbered among the lawyers at the Clinton bar some very talented men—Z. S. Lyons, James H. Mure, Judge Saunders, Mr. Bullard, and others, in by-gone days. Judge E. T. Merrick was for many years a prominent man at the bar here. We now have some very talented and able lawyers in Clinton.

Clinton is a very democratic place. Everybody knows everybody else. There is less of that disposition to set up aristocratic circles here than anywhere else that I have been. In most small towns there are generally about sixteen sets of aristocracy, every set thinking that the true jewel is found in their set. The younger portion of the ladies of the parish have enjoyed good opportunities of being educated, and are therefore intelligent and accomplished, as a general thing. The young men lost their chance for book learning, as they lost many other good things, by the war. But we don't care for that. We like our boys anyhow.

HOW SHE DID IT.

A young mother, surrounded by a group of restless, impatient spirits, was once the theme of admiring remark in the circle of her acquaintance, on account of her wonderful calmness and patience. 'How Mrs. Gale can get along with her five noisy boys, and her husband always absent, and yet never seem put out or worried, passes my comprehension,' said one of her nearest neighbors.

'Does she govern them?' was the reply.

'Govern them? No! she hasn't the slightest faculty for that, and besides, they are all uncommonly strong-minded, while she is naturally timid and yielding. Her authority would have little weight with them, I fancy.'

'How does she manage them?'

'That I cannot tell you. She doesn't seem to try to rule them much. But they all love her, and appear sorry to grieve her; and though they are full of spirit and naturally turbulent, she keeps them from any serious outbreaks. I confess I don't understand it.'

Possibly, had Mrs. Gale's neighbors put the same queries to her children, the mystery had been solved.

'Mamma,' said little Edwin, one morning—the youngest and the brightest of the busy group—'mamma, I ain't asleep always when you come to bed, though I keep my eyes shut and lie still. What do you whisper so long in your dressing room for? And who is there with you? I got up last night, and peeped through the door, but I couldn't see anybody.'

His mother told her boy of the nightly errand to the mercy seat, and he repeated the story to his brothers.

'I could have told you myself,' was the reply of Jamie, the oldest of the boys. 'Mother prays just so every morning, before we are up; I found her doing it. And sometimes when we get very wild and out of sorts, you know she slips away for a few minutes and prays again. I followed her softly once or twice to see what she went up stairs for; that's how I came to know about it.'

'She's a dear, good mother, and I don't mean to trouble her any more,' sobbed out the second son—usually more willful and passionate than the rest. And to this statement and purpose they all gave a tearful and ready assent. It is not pretended that their promise of amendment was strictly kept; but their mother had gained a new hold upon their hearts, and they learned to watch for the sweet and peaceful countenance which she brought from the place of prayer.

How to be Able to Give.—A poor blind girl brought to a clergyman thirty shillings for the missionary cause. He objected, saying: "You are a poor blind girl, and cannot afford to give so much." "I am indeed blind," said she, "but I can afford to give these thirty shillings better, perhaps, than you suppose." "How so?" "I am, sir, a basket-maker, and I can work as well in the dark as in the light. Now, I am sure, in the last dark winter, it must have cost those girls who have eyes more than thirty shillings for candles to work by, which I have saved; and therefore hope you will take it for the missionaries."

Formation of Character.—Have you ever noticed an icicle as it is formed? You noticed how it froze one drop at a time, until it was a foot long or more. If the water was clean, the icicle remained clean, and sparkled brightly in the sun; but if the water was slightly muddy, the icicle looked foul, and its beauty was spoiled. Just so our characters are forming. One little thought or feeling at a time adds its influence. If each thought be pure and right, the soul will be lovely, and will sparkle with happiness; but if impure and wrong, there will be a final deformity and wretchedness.

"AN EXTRAORDINARY LETTER."

Mr. Editor: It is by no means pleasant, at any time, to be forced into a newspaper controversy, and there are times and circumstances which render the situation exceedingly painful. If your antagonist be hopelessly afflicted with "the writing disease" the embarrassment is greatly increased.—Such is my very unenviable position at this time, and nothing but a conviction of duty could induce me to ask a place in your columns.

In your issue of September 12 Brother Joseph B. Cottrell has very unexpectedly arraigned me before the public, in a manner which is neither justifiable nor strictly true. It is unjustifiable because there can be no reason why he should feel himself called upon to chastise every man who dares to utter an opinion differing, as he supposes, from his views of church economy or ministerial obligations. In the Nashville Advocate he gave the church a graphic account of his district meeting, or rather, the report of the committee in which the "indefinite extension of the pastorate" was advocated—"an extraordinary" document in point of ability, sustained by some of the ablest men of the church in speeches so logical and convincing that others could make nothing more than a little caveat in reply; and yet no one questioned his right to make his report and express his opinions, although an unofficial body had assumed the prerogative of dictating to the General Conference, which was loudly applauded by Brother Cottrell. Still no objection was raised. But as soon as my communication found its way to his house he felt it his duty to arraign me before the whole church in the Advocate.

In reference to what I said of the importance of "a meeting of a board of trustees of a college," he says: "Just now is one of the most vital and important incidents in the whole range of church enterprises; and a Methodist bishop who would not let a half dozen or more district meetings be held by the presiding elders, rather than fail to attend, at a critical time, the meeting of the trustees of our colleges, would evidence a strange misapprehension of his duty." I, with many others, feel as deeply as Brother Cottrell the importance of the whole range of church enterprises, but cannot see the paramount importance of "the meeting of a board of trustees" to the spiritual advancement of the church. Whence this vast importance? Is it true that a board of trustees, composed mostly of laymen, whose special business is to attend to the finances of the church, sustained by the president and professors, and others, whose master minds, like the eye of the well-schooled architect, takes in the entire building—walls, pilasters and beautifully proportioned columns—cannot manage the educational interests of the church without the presence of a bishop? The insinuation is by no means complimentary to the trustees and other officers of colleges. I desire to be distinctly understood not as underrating the services of our bishops in the management of our colleges or any other church enterprise; but I do contend that when the pulpit, the administration of discipline and the spiritual interest of the church demand their services, they should leave the management of the colleges in the hands of those to whose special care they are entrusted, and discharge the higher duties of a bishop.

St. Paul's charge to bishops is: "Take heed unto all the flock, to feed the church of God." Brother Cottrell says: "Let a half-dozen or more district meetings be held by the presiding elders, rather than fail to attend the meeting of the trustees." Whether it is better to take the admonition of Paul or the advice of Brother Cottrell, I leave to the judgment of those interested.

Ever since I became acquainted with the economy of Episcopal Methodism it has been a pleasure to my heart to respect and honor our bishops for their devotion to and sacrifices for the church, not only for what they are doing "just now," but for what they have done ever since their consecration to the holy office. But I have nothing to retract.

As Lafayette is a new name for a district in the Montgomery Conference, I thought proper to refer to some of the changes which had absorbed the Talladega and created the Lafayette district, and said it was done "for the convenience of others." As Brother Cottrell was not accused of having anything to do in the arrangement, I cannot see that it would have been a compromise of his duty if he had left that untouched. But he must needs go into "a retching and severe paroxysm of piety," and inform me that in the cabinet is the place to "overhaul this: and if a bishop is found to truckle to dominating influences, notify him that he has to answer at the General Conference, and follow him up to that tribunal." Without an "oblique insinuation," if any man should feel himself aggrieved to complain against a bishop, Brother Cottrell, "without being obsequious to bishops," would "throttle him" in the General Conference, and demand that "this must be retracted by him immediately." My remarks had no reference to the action of the bishop, and injustice is done me in the "retching" effort to make the impression. As he has become my adviser, it is to be hoped he will "pluck the beam out of his own eye," and when I err in the future, admonish me privately; and if there are no signs of repentance, notify me that I "will have to answer at the" Annual Conference for my faults, and not go before the country in the Advocates.

Of what I said of "the evidences of an improvement of the spirituality of the membership" in the district, and the general "decline of the spirituality of the church," he says: "This is remarkable.—That to divide circuits and secure, as far as practicable, Sunday preaching, etc., should induce a gradual decline, where, at the same time, there is a gradual improvement, suggests a difficulty." I did not say "that to divide circuits and increase pastoral labor" induced "a gradual decline," nor is it just to place such a construction on my language. I said all these "had been demanded of and obtained at the hands of the General Conference, and yet there is evidently a gradual decline."—They had all failed to correct the evils they were intended to remedy.

That there is a general decline in the spirituality of the membership is attested by the ablest and best men of our church. Doctors Pierce, Boring, Drake, Garrett, Shaeffer, Levert, and many others, have for the last quarter of a century admonished the church of "a gradual decline in her spirituality." Are these men, who saw and rejoiced in the spiritual power of the church when they first consecrated themselves to the ministry, mistaken, or are they "fair specimens of genuine conservatives, so called?"

Brother Cottrell is rather hard pressed when he "suggests a difficulty" in reference to what I said about "a general decline in the spirituality of the" entire "church," and the evidence of an improvement in the district.—Surely he will not deny that there may be a decline in the church as a body, and at the same time "some evidences of improvement" in a society, circuit, district or conference. Will Brother Cottrell deny that he is "retching?"

"In conclusion," he says, "let me say to Brother Curry, and to all who seem astonished that recent changes of economy have not spiritualized the church, that we do not modify our agricultural implements to enrich the soil. The piety of a church is dependent wholly upon other conditions than its effectiveness as a system." If the economy of the church has no more to do with its spirituality than a plow or hoe with enriching the soil, then we have no use for church discipline. One form of government is as good as another, and none at all as efficient in spiritualizing the church as the best rules adopted by the great reformers of the church in different ages of the world.

He speaks of "the effectiveness of a church as a system." What is "the effectiveness of a church" if it is not the piety of its members? A church may be effective in the propagation of its tenets, the gathering of members into its communion, until, as Bishop McTyeire says, "It will be glutted with sinners," and a disgust to the world—in the extension of its influence until the ecclesiastical predominates over the civil power, under which the country groans, and men despise the services of God's house—all of which are the legitimate results of the "changes of economy," and the practical workings of the system.

He adds: "What has the proper set of the wheels of a wagon to do with the contents?" "Much, every way." If the wheels are improperly set there will be friction, heavy and slow moving, and the crushing of the wheels. And the same with the economy of the church. If it be unwise and oppressive the grand design of the gospel—the salvation of men—will be a failure; instead of peace there will be strife; instead of harmony there will be discord: instead of union division: instead of love hatred, and wickedness instead of piety.

"There is," Brother Cottrell says, "a time of melancholy, the tone of an antique pathos, in the reverence which some men have for old things." This was true of Jeremiah, for he exhorted the people to "ask for the old paths, and walk therein." And they possessed sufficient disgust for old things to rebuke his "melancholy, of an antique pathos," and reverence for old things, for they said: "We will not walk therein." What a pity they had never heard that inimitable sentence: "Old bottles are a great institution." Christ had "a reverence for old things." When a certain ruler asked him: "What good thing shall I do that I may have eternal life," he said: "Thou knowest the commandments"—walk in the old paths. There was no new plan given him. The commandments were as old as Israel's journeyings from Egypt to the land of promise, and yet Christ had a profound reverence for them.

THE JESUITS IN CHINA.

In a letter sent from Canton, mention was made of the cathedral going up there, which is to cost $3 000,000. We learn that another, quite as magnificent and costly, is being erected at Pekin; also that, in nearly every important city of the empire, churches are being erected. The Jesuits are in China in great force. Here comes one of their priests, a Frenchman, wearing Chinese clothing, with a pig tail hanging down his back. He has become a Chinaman, following to the letter the apostolic example and precept—becoming all things to all men, to accomplish the end in view. The Jesuits throughout the empire have adopted the dress, the habits and customs of the Chinese—eating as they eat, sleeping as they sleep, shaving the forehead and not the crown, just as the Chinese shave theirs.

Your readers will remember that two hundred years ago the Jesuits were numerous throughout the empire, but upon the accession of a new dynasty they were driven from the kingdom, and their property confiscated. But through all these long years Rome has had her eyes open. When the French brought forward the treaty lately signed between France and China, one article stipulated that all the property confiscated two hundred years ago should be restored to the Jesuits.

"It is impossible," said the emperor's ministers.

"It must be done," was the reply of the French commission.

"Who can tell where it was situated? How can it be identified? There have been great commotions—a great many changes since then. We cannot find it," said the ministers.

"Of course there may be some difficulty, but if the fathers of the church can identify the property, your highnesses will restore it," said the bland commissioners.

"O, yes; if they can show that it was once owned by the church," was the reply, and the article went into the treaty.

A few months later the "fathers" appeared at Pekin with a great bundle of title deeds and documents, yellowed by time and mouldy from their long repose in the archives of the Propaganda at Rome.

The emperor's ministers were confounded, but there was no help for it, and so the church to-day is in possession of immense estates in nearly every city of the empire.

The other day, while walking through the streets of the old city of Shanghai, Rev. Mr. Yates pointed out long ranges of buildings which had been restored to the Jesuits under that article of the treaty. The income from these estates is enormous. No estimate can be made of the amount, which is known only to the "fathers," who keep their own counsel.

The Jesuits are having great success in this empire. The forms and ceremonies of the Buddhist religion are so much like those of the Roman Catholic that one can hardly tell the difference. A Chinaman entering a Protestant church sees no gods, images nor pictures, and he comes to the conclusion that the Protestants are altogether godless; but he enters a Jesuit church and sees a better class of images than he is accustomed to worship, pictures more pleasing than those upon the walls of his own temples. He sees the priests of the altar in gorgeous robes, inhales sweeter incense than that ascending from the joss sticks. The music of the choir, the deep toned organ, is more pleasing than the rub-a-dub of drums. Is it any wonder that the churches are thronged at morning mass, or at the hour for vespers?

Rome takes long looks ahead. She is educating for the future. Foundlings are picked up by the hundred and the thousand; poor parents sell their children for a trifle, parting with them that they may be educated by the priests. A few years hence these foundlings will be traversing the hills and valleys, stopping at all the villages, setting up schools, carrying on the work of the church.

A gentleman at Shanghai, one who has been long in the country, who can speak the language, who has traveled through several of the provinces dressed as a Chinaman, in search of coal, and iron, and other minerals, has had excellent opportunities for observation, and his opinion is worthy of consideration. He says:

"Of the missionary effort put forth in China, at least ninety per cent. is by the Catholics."

The restoration of the confiscated property has given the church of Rome great vantage ground. The priests have been pressing the imperial government in another direction. The French minister has obtained an imperial decree permitting the priests to decide all questions of law between Chinese Catholics and those who still adhere to the Chinese religion. Secretly and persistently, constantly they are laboring to obtain possession of China. So high a personage as Sir John Browning, who was here for a long while, and whom I had the pleasure of meeting last August at the meeting of the British Association, expresses the opinion that Romanism stands a fair chance of obtaining possession of this vast empire. Certainly Rome is working with a zeal, energy, singleness of purpose, and far-sightedness which may challenge admiration.—China Correspondence of the Boston Journal.

Work of the Spirit.—Some are brought to Christ by fire, storms and tempests; others by the more easy and gentle gales of the Spirit. The spirit is free in the work of conversion, and, as the wind, it blows where and how it pleases. Thrice happy are those souls that are brought to Christ, whether it be in the winter's night or on a summer's day.

True repentance consists in the heart being broken for sin, and broken from sin. Some often repent, yet never reform; they resemble a man traveling a dangerous path, who frequently starts and stops, but never turns back.

THE REJECTED PILLS.

In a certain town the board of selectmen, who governed its local affairs, was composed of Universalists (or men who contended for the final happiness of all mankind, whether Christians or not) and a pious physician. They acted through the year in great harmony as to the business of the town, but at their last meeting it was determined to attack the religious doctor. After they had finished their transactions, one of them said:

"Doctor, we have been very happy in being associated with you the year past, and that the business of the town has been conducted in harmony, and to the satisfaction of our constituents. We have found you to be a man of good sense, extensive information, unbending in tegrity, and of the purest benevolence. It is astonishing to us that a man of your amiable character should believe in the doctrine of future punishment."

The doctor replied:

"Gentlemen, I should regret very much the forfeiture of the good opinion which your partiality has led you to entertain of me. Will you have the goodness to answer candidly a few questions? Do you believe in a future state?"

They replied, "We do."

"You believe that death will introduce all men to a state of perfect happiness."

"Of this we have no doubt."

"Are you now happy?"

"We are not; we are far from it"

"How do men act when they are unhappy, and know that happiness is within their reach?"

"They endeavor to attain that happiness."

"Do you believe that I understand the nature and operations of medicine?"

"We have no doubt, doctor, of your skill in your profession; but what has that to do with the subject?"

"In this box," said the doctor, taking a tin box in his hand, "are pills, which, if you swallow each of you one, will, without pain, carry you, within one hour, out of this world of trouble; and, if your doctrine be true, place you in a world of perfect felicity. Will you accept one of them?"

"No, sir."

"Will you?"

"No, sir."

When they all refused, the doctor said:

"You must excuse me, gentlemen, from embracing your doctrine, until I have better evidence that you believe it yourselves." This closed the debate.

HINTS FOR EMERGENCIES.

1. If a man faints, place him on his back and let him alone.

2 If any poison is swallowed, drink instantly half a glass of cold water, with a heaping teaspoonful each of common salt and ground mustard stirred into it; this vomits as soon as it reaches the stomach, but for fear some of the poison may remain, swallow the white of one or two raw eggs, or drink a cup of strong coffee, these two being antidotes for a greater number of poisons than any dozen other articles known, with the advantage of their always being at hand; if not, a pint of sweet oil, or lamp oil, or "drippings" of melted butter, or lard, are good substances, especially if they vomit quickly.

3. The best thing to stop the bleeding of a moderate cut instantly is to cover it profusely with cobweb, or flour and salt, half and half.

4. If the blood comes from a wound by jets or spirts, be spry, or the man will die in a few minutes, because an artery is severed; tie a handkerchief loosely around, near the part between the wound and the heart; put a stick between the handkerchief and the skin, and twist it around until the blood ceases to flow; keep it there until the doctor comes; if in a position where the handkerchief cannot be used, press the thumb on a spot near the wound, between the wound and the heart; increase the pressure until the bleeding ceases, but do not lessen the pressure for an instant until the physician arrives, so as to glue up the wound by coagulation or cooling of the hardening blood.

5. If your clothes take fire, slide the hands down the dress, keeping them as close to the body as possible, at the same time sinking to the floor by bending the knees; this has a smothering effect upon the flames; if not extinguished or great headway gotten, lie down on the floor, and roll over and over and over; or, better, envelope yourself in a carpet, rug, bed cloth, or any garment you can get hold of, always preferring woolen.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Prayer doth not always procure for us the thing we pray for, but then it procureth something; nor is the prayer always granted at the time of its being offered up, but then it is sure to be granted at a more expedient time.

FARM AND GARDEN.

MANURE.

The best, and cheapest, and only manure for a large field, in our present condition, cannot be by purchase of tons of guano, or superphosphate, or bones, or in home yard or stable manure. Why? Because, if it were economical, we have not the means.

We are fully aware that we write for the Southern Farmer, and that we are altogether, in and out, a Southern farmer, and we advisedly urge the only thing, safe and certain, North or South—red clover, plaster of Paris and gypsum.

Admit, red clover will only give its full benefit on good land, yet it will aid all land that is not wet, or on a sand bank. We appeal to any improver, North or South, who has ever tried fairly and fully this world-renowned source of wealth. We have tested it for twenty, aye, thirty years, within twelve miles nearly east of Vicksburg, Mississippi, latitude 32 degrees.

We affirm it, plow deep, harrow well, and sow down on the surface twelve pounds of good clover seed, well wetted with strong brine, and dried off with plaster; then to be lightly brushed in. We prefer about the 1st of December, or a little before, in latitude 32 degrees, and ten to fifteen days earlier further north, and ten to fifteen days later further south. All the better to use a light roller—decidedly an advantage In the spring sow on it one bushel of plaster, and again in the fall.

The clover can be cut for hay in June in latitude 32 degrees, and late in May below. The second growth will protect from sun, and give a good manuring, if plowed under in November, equal to that of manure, so to say. If land be thin, we would plow it under in June, and sow down peas; then plow them under in October or November, before a killing frost. We must bring up land to producing a fair crop. It is a waste of labor to be always depending upon a mere return for labor. We must make farming profitable, and to do this, manure land high.—Southern Farmer.

Extinction of Races in the Animal Kingdom.—It is sad, at least to the naturalist, to contemplate the phenomenon of animal extinction. From the days of the plesiosaurus and megatherium, what a magnificent variety of zoological specimens has been lost to the world! Imagine the feelings of an enthusiastic naturalist who, having ventured to Mauritius in the early part of the last century, on the strength of a sailor's yarn, to catch, or at least behold, the last living dodo, arrived only in time to find a solitary skeleton in bad repair, and two eggs, both addled. It appears, however, that we are now threatened with another, and, in many senses, a more serious case of extinction. There is reason to apprehend, at no great distance of time, the total disappearance from the animal creation of the elephant. This is owing to the enormous destruction of these grand old beasts, which has been and is still going on year after year, for purposes of commerce, for self-protection and for mere sport. In a single province of Ceylon over three thousand five hundred elephants were killed in three years by the natives for the sake of a few shillings bounty per head. Many thousands are annually destroyed in India and Africa for the sake of the ivory, the demand for which is so great that to supply the manufacturers of Sheffield alone requires the slaughter of over twenty thousand elephants every year. The elephant is not prolific, its rates of increase being less than that of man. The race cannot, therefore, hold out much longer against such wholesale destruction, and it is by no means improbable that the child is now born who may live to see the last elephant. Nor is this pachyderm, though the noblest and one of the most valuable, by any means the only valuable animal slowly but surely dying out. The whale and seal, the buffalo, moose, elk and deer are yearly growing more and more rare. If the world, as it is not probable, according to Dr. Cummings, should last a thousand years longer, and the same unequal combat between man and brute continues, it is safe to predict that the former will have the universe entirely to himself, or that it will be shared only between him and such of the animal creation as are either too insignificant to excite his anger or covetousness, or too intimately associated with his daily needs and labor to be included in the general destruction.

The cross of Christ is the sweetest burden that ever I bore; it is such a burden as wings are to a bird, or as sails to a ship, to carry me forward to my desired haven.

Time is given you to use for God's glory, and every talent to employ for the Redeemer's honor.

An Appeal to the Preachers of the M. E. Church South.

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 17, 1868.

BRETHREN OF THE MINISTRY: Within the bounds of your several fields of labor there are a great many Germans who, in many instances, are members of our Church. Will you now be so kind as to bring to their notice that, duly authorized, I am publishing in this city the EVANGELICAL APOLOGIST, a semi-monthly church journal, solely devoted to the interests of our German Zion? I am sure they will be delighted to subscribe for a church paper edited by one of their own countrymen, and written in their own mother tongue.

Brethren, help! The EVANGELICAL APOLOGIST must be supported, as the thousands of dollars devoted to missionary purposes among our Teuton population will have been spent in vain. The Methodist Episcopal Church North gives indications of exceeding greediness, if possible, to reap the harvest of your abundant labor of love. May the great Shepherd of souls help you to will and to do what I have requested! Subscription for the APOLOGIST only $1 per annum.

Your's, in Christ,

THANKSGIVING DAY.

By proclamation of the President, and also of the Governors of most of the States, Thursday, the 26th instant, has been set apart as a day of thanksgiving and prayer. A few reflections suggested by the occasion will not be out of place.

"Neither were thankful" describes the darkest aspect of human depravity. Ingratitude is a crime against God of the greatest magnitude, because the reasons of thankfulness are so obvious to all. God is the giver, the source of all benefits. "Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above." Temporal blessings are dispensed by the divine hand; food, raiment, health and life are from this fountain of good. Even to the heathen these are a testimony, because "he left not himself without witness, in that he did good, and gave us rain from heaven, and fruitful seasons, filling our hearts with food and gladness." There can be no adequate sense of the goodness of God apart from the simple and scriptural view, that he is the giver of all; and that to his providential care we owe our preservation and the supply of our wants. His gifts embrace everything temporal, and are sent for our grateful acceptance. We are surrounded with things to remind us of our obligations, in all the world and universe of sense.

In spiritual matters there are reasons why every living soul should be thankful. It is much to the ungodly and to the barren, that they still live where they may find mercy. The unconverted, besides being spared, have been to some extent under the restraints of divine grace. They live, and are not abandoned of God forever. The curse of Ephraim has not yet overtaken them, but the Spirit lingers about their hearts, and the way to Christ is still open to them. The Christian who enjoys present peace and acceptance, certainly has occasion of thanksgiving. This is the highest of all mercies, to have found this great salvation, and to have been preserved in the possession of it. Here the believer, who rightly values his spiritual blessings, will find the chief ground of gratitude. The day of thanksgiving will call up the favor of God, as exhibited in his religious history; and here he will set up his Ebenezer, because the Lord hath helped him hitherto.

To those who endeavor to call up the benefits of a single year, will recur instances of special and great deliverances. They have been near to death by sickness, and have been raised up; they have been in peril, and have escaped as by miracle, and some who were dearer than life itself have been brought low, and then given back to them, as from the very grave. In both grace and providence, to many there have been wonderful demonstrations of the power, wisdom and love of God. Where so many blessings and special interpositions are open to our sight, we may be sure there are many more which we do not now know.

Besides looking at the gifts, we should also consider our unworthiness to receive them. The most faithful are to say: "We are unprofitable servants." But what, then, are the claims of the sinner and of the unfaithful believer? God's benefits are enhanced by the conviction that we have not deserved them, and that we have rather merited condemnation and wrath. A sober view of our sins helps to explain, in some cases, the afflictions which have been mingled in the cup of our blessings. These troubles may be the direct fruits of our sins; or, as chastisements, they have been made necessary by our forgetfulness of God. The murmuring disposition in some hearts is increased by the mention of giving thanks. The past year has been a time of suffering, of failure in business, of family bereavement. Before we curse God, or charge him with folly, let us think of our sins, and compare them with our afflictions. Have we lived so as to place ourselves within the range of the promises?

Where a rebellious spirit is cherished, or a sense of wrong at the hands of God is felt, there must be an utter misconception of our guilt, and of the divine character. View all in their true light, our afflictions are the occasion, if not the ground, of the purest and deepest gratitude. The reason of them is in the love of God, their mission is to "work out" a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory," and they have shown us the adequacy of Gospel consolations. If a dear friend has died in peace and triumph, will there ever be so much to be thankful for again, until we go to heaven ourselves? In our troubles we have had the comforts of religion, we have been sustained in trial, and songs in the night have been given to sorrowing hearts. Sanctified suffering displays the most thankfulness; and where unbelief sees nothing but a dark and cruel dispensation, the submissive soul finds incentives to adoration and praise.

Gratitude always seeks and demands expression. This is true as between men; it is also true when God is the object. "What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits toward me?"—This is the continual question of every one who is truly thankful. Gratitude must and will find expression—in the song of praise, and in every suitable act of worship. Where it exists it will move us to consecrated religious lives. The mercies of God will constrain men to present their bodies "a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." The heart touched with real gratitude will find expression in bounty to the poor, and in offerings of the most generous measure to the cause of the Gospel. This principle of grateful love to Christ will count no gift too valuable, and no sacrifice too severe. Tears will flow, the precious ointment will be poured forth, and the heart will be given. Nothing but a devoted religious life, marked by earnest giving, and doing for Christ, truly expresses Christian thankfulness. In this general sense, and besides, in some special directions of piety and benevolence, let there be an expression of gratitude.

The want of gratitude is great in the world. "Were there not ten cleansed? but where are the nine?" Forgetful of God's benefits, and basely ungrateful are the most of us. Men, for the most part, are content to receive and enjoy the bounties of the Creator, whilst they despise "the riches of his goodness, and forbearance and long suffering." We are prone even to forget special mercies and deliverances, and the vows which have been made in the time of trouble. These have been obliterated from memory. The soldier from the battle, the sailor from the wreck, and those who have passed through the pestilence unharmed, have not returned to give glory to God. All sin seems to be embraced in this ingratitude, and yet it is found apparently united with moral excellence, and certainly sometimes with the forms of religion. Where we should suppose overflowing prosperity would bring the highest gratitude, there is none whatever; and where we least look for it and expect it, there is the most perfect exhibition of thanksgiving.

We would suggest self-examination with reference to gratitude and its expression. We may look upon it as a grace to be particularly cultivated, whilst we banish from us every feeling of distrust and dissatisfaction with reference to divine providence. The grace of thankfulness brings contentment, resignation, and a lively appreciation of God's goodness. The grateful heart is happy. *

WEBSTER'S UNABRIDGED, NEW ILLUSTRATED EDITION.—As the traveler at the eternal city gazes with rapture upon the wondrous dome, and upon each recurring visit beholds something new, some new feature he had not seen before, so it is with the student of Webster. The oftener one turns over its almost endless pages, the more his admiration is challenged. It would be superfluous to speak in detail of the merits of this great work; yet it would be impossible to say a word too much in its praise.—Charleston (S. C.) Gazette.

SOCIAL MEETINGS.

The number and variety of our social meetings are unequaled outside of the pale of Methodism. Some churches have scarcely anything of the kind, whilst there are none so largely blessed in this respect as our own. The church meeting, prayer meeting, class meeting and love-feast form a most complete system for the promotion of spirituality, and the development of individual gifts and usefulness. Together they are the training school of the membership, and most powerful in the moulding of religious character. Those who use them all will be growing and stable Christians, and capable of promoting every good work.

The influence of these meetings upon our church, its wonderful extension and vitality, is not calculable. In one point of view they are the result of Methodism, as a revival of Scriptural holiness. Where there is zeal, life and power in the church, they are demanded, and if not already in existence, they will be created. Under the revival influence of primitive Methodism these social meetings sprang up, because they were a necessity, and they have continued amongst us for the same reason. A fervid piety and a glowing spirituality must and will have them. Deep and burning convictions and emotions are bound to find expression and a field of activity.

Then farther, our social meetings are not only the product of a great vitality, but they are also the preservers of our religious life. Where they are all in full operation there is the highest measure of prosperity. They are indeed the gauge of our spiritual condition. The visitor needs no further evidence than is afforded by a glance at the weekly prayer meeting, or the number in attendance at the classes. Ten minutes spent in a love-feast tells the whole story to any one conversant with our economy. The decay of these meetings would, therefore, be a serious indication, showing a decline in religious power. Their importance, both as the expression of the life of the church, and the means of fostering it, is superlative.

That any one social meeting should be made a test of membership, whilst perfectly lawful, may not be expedient. It may be better that all should stand upon the same footing, and that the obligation should be the same as in any other religious duty. Except in times of unusual religious interest, it is difficult to secure a good attendance upon these meetings. A great many of our members are seen only at the services on Sunday, whilst they are practically strangers to our rich and unrivaled system of social meetings. Possibly we are losing ground in this particular direction, and our people are declining in their love for social religious exercises.

The duty of speaking in love-feast and of praying in public is not felt, perhaps, to be so generally binding as it once was.

Whether the present is better or worse than the past, there is certainly room for improvement. All our people need the training of these meetings, the development of religious gifts in prayer and exhortation, and the improvement of the spiritual life which they afford. No individual member can thrive under their neglect, and our young converts must have the instruction and other helps which they can give. *

THE purest and sweetest Cod Liver Oil in the world is Hazard & Caswell's, manufactured by them upon the sea shore from fresh and healthy livers; it is perfectly pure and sweet. Patients who have once taken it can take no other. After years of experimenting physicians have decided it better than any of the brown oils. Sold by all the druggists.

A GREAT NEWSPAPER ENTERPRISE.—As will be observed by reference to prospectus, Moore's Rural New Yorker is to be nearly doubled in size and otherwise materially improved. The Rural is already the most popular national weekly of its class, but the proposed change must largely extend its circulation and influence.

LETTER FROM CHINA.

ABINGDON, Virginia, Nov. 7, 1868.

MR EDITOR: I send with this the last letter received from Rev. J. W. Lambuth. You will see from the report of his labors that Brother L. eats no idle bread. I know him well. He is an excellent man, and a faithful missionary. I do hope his friends in the South will help him in his blessed work. He wants funds to keep up schools. If any friend would raise $150 in greenbacks, it would pay the expenses of two schools for one year. Will some Sabbath school not take one of these heathen schools under its care? The money can be sent through our treasurer, or in any other way the persons giving it may wish. Who will undertake this work?

Your brother in Christ,

W. G. E. CUNNYNGHAM, Sec'y.

SHANGHAI, September 14, 1868.

Rev. W. G. E. Cunnyngham, Secretary of the Board of Foreign Missions:

MY DEAR BROTHER—I am truly rejoiced to see you doing your utmost for the China mission, and I know you feel deeply interested in this work, as you have ever felt. In your letter to Brother Allen and myself you request us to make a joint report in regard to mission affairs and the work generally, which we will do by the next mail. You also request us each to give an individual report. I fear, my dear brother, I shall not have much to report of an encouraging nature, though I do feel greatly encouraged myself. Although I am not as fully engaged in the work as is my sincere desire, yet I feel it is the will of God, and I am willing to suffer his will. I shall give my report in a few words.

I have been engaged the past quarter in teaching an Anglo-Chinese school, to supply the necessities of my family. The school opens at nine A. M. and closes at one P. M. There are seventeen or eighteen boys, three of whom are considerably advanced, and four others read in English quite well. The remainder, including one Japanese, are just commencing. For the three months they have been coming, they read tolerably well, and spell remarkably correct. Some of them are very promising boys. Some of these boys constitute a Bible class, reading one chapter in the Old Testament one day, and one chapter in the New Testament the next day. Each verse is explained when they do not understand, and I am truly happy to say that they all seem deeply interested in the study of the Scriptures. One boy I have observed reading in advance in his leisure moments. The introduction of the Bible into the school was at their own request, and each boy is required to commit a verse of Scripture each morning. What they are being taught now can never be forgotten.

Closing the school at one P. M., I have the afternoon to do my regular missionary work. As I am now situated I cannot get away from Shanghai. Sabbath is the only entire day I have.

Brother Allen and myself alternate in preaching in the city and out of the city. I have also a small place, just inside of the north gate of the city, where I have preaching on the Sabbath and on Wednesday. We have each had applications from several Chinese to be admitted into the church. They are on trial, and some give good evidence of faith and sincere belief. We hope in a few days to admit them.

I am also engaged in study and in translating. If the church can send out more help, I shall hope to be relieved by some brother taking the school while he is learning the language, and allow me to go to other cities. How much we need traveling preachers in China! We need that kind of work very much. The people in the interior are more susceptible of being taught Christianity, and we have not the disadvantages with which to contend there that we find every where at the open ports. I do think we ought to have one missionary from each Conference; and let us have a Conference here. Each Conference can and would support its missionary, and it is certain great good would be the result if each missionary would come expecting to meet and ready to endure all privations, and determined to trust alone in the Lord for help. The country work around this place is greatly neglected, and simply because the missionaries, or at least some of them, are so situated that they cannot engage in this work. We have young men in our native church who would be useful if we had the means to help them. I have written on several occasions about this part of our work, and I hope now the church at home will take an interest in raising up a native ministry in China.

This work is still as dear to me as ever, and now that the Lord has restored to me my health, I have an earnest desire to live and die in his service, pointing the heathen to the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sins of the world. Will Christians pray for us? I know they will. The Lord has graciously preserved me and family, and why should it not be in answer to the prayers of God's people? Glory be unto Him who redeemed us! My hopes for heaven are brightening every day, and I am waiting for the coming of the Lord Jesus. Pray always for us, that we may be saved.

J. W. LAMBUTH.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

CHOCTAW MISSION, MONTGOMERY CONF.
MARIANNA DISTRICT, Oct. 26, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: This mission was left by the Conference to be supplied. As you will see by the minutes, I was employed by Brother W. B. Dennis, the presiding elder of said district. This mission is situated in west Florida, embracing Holmes county and a part of the counties of Washington and Walton. There are fourteen appointments—two hundred miles travel to fill them. I have preached once a month at each appointment, and received one hundred and forty-nine members into the church, baptized fifty-one adults and twenty-four infants, expelled thirteen and dismissed five. This mission is in a prosperous condition, and we recommend the ministerial labors to be continued on it. The people received me kindly, and have treated me with Christian hospitality.

Your's in the bonds of Christian love, JAMES PAUL.

The Pacific Railroad in Winter.

Nature and the seasons seem to favor the Pacific Railroad. The working season has been so far prolonged that it is estimated that by the end of the current month there will not be over three hundred miles of the through line remaining incomplete; and of that distance a good part of the grading will be done. The great question of fuel seems also to be satisfactorily settled. Rich beds of coal have been discovered on the head waters of the Humboldt river, and on the slopes of the Wasatch mountains, where the eastern and western links of the road unite. Next summer will undoubtedly witness the binding of the Atlantic and Pacific waters by a continuous line of railroad three thousand three hundred miles in length.

By the advertisement of the financial agents of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, in another column, it appears that great success has attended their negotiations of the first mortgage bonds, issued under the authority of Congress. The important aid granted by the nation, together with excellent credit, enables this company to push on the work with undiminished vigor. Fifteen thousand men and three thousand teams are engaged on the line. Three hundred miles of iron have been laid since the 20th of June last, or at an average rate of two and one-half miles per working day. From Salt Lake to the Pacific ocean the line rises once only (in crossing the Sierra Nevada Range) to the altitude of heavy snows. Over this stretch of about thirty miles, substantial sheds have been built, which will enable the line to be worked at all seasons, in spite of drifting snows. The business on the Pacific end of the line is already greater than the present facilities will accommodate.

SINNERS sometimes say they would be Christians if they thought they could "hold out;" but do they ever think of whether they will be able to long "hold out" in the course they are pursuing?

MORAL as well as natural waves are checked and bounded by divine power. "Surely the wrath of man shall praise thee, and the remainder of wrath thou shalt restrain."

Prayer Throughout the World.

From the 3d to the 10th of January, 1869, a week of prayer is besought, under the authority of the Evangelical Alliance, over the whole world. The following is the Evangelical edict:

Beloved Brethren in Christ of Every Land:

In prospect of the coming New Year, and mindful of the great blessings graciously vouchsafed by God, in answer to the united supplications of his people, the Evangelical Alliance cordially renew their invitations to Christians throughout the would to observe a week of prayer in January next.

Very gratifying reports have been received of the observance of this annual week of prayer in different distant countries; still there is reason to know that in many towns and cities of our own and foreign lands Christians have not in this way been brought into sympathy with the universal church of Christ The Evangelical Alliance, therefore, desirous of manifesting the union of of all true Christians and of extending the benefits which in various ways have attended these annual assemblies for united prayer, affectionately call upon the children of God everywhere to take counsel and to make arrangements for observing it in their respective localities. The Alliance feel assured that thereby the hearts of Christians will be refreshed and the hands of those brethren strengthened who in other places, at home and abroad, plead before God for the gifts of his grace and the outstretching of his arm to bless his church and convert a perishing world.

Fellow Christians! Let us with one accord, if spared to see the commencement of a new year, encircle the world with our faithful, fervent and united prayers. Let us then gather around the throne of our heavenly Father, forgetful of our different language, nation and ecclesiastical system. Let us plead in the name of our one Lord, Redeemer and Intercessor for blessings which the circumstances of our times show to be most needful, urgent and important.

If two of you agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven.

O Thou that hearest prayer, unto Thee shall all flesh come.

The following topics, among others, are suggested as suitable for exhortation and intercession on the successive days of meeting:

Sunday, Jan. 3.—Sermons—Subject: The intercession of the 'High Priest over the House of God,' the motive and model of the united prayer. Heb. x, 19-22.

Monday, Jan. 4.—Confession of Sin and Thanksgiving for special and general mercies during the past year to nations, churches and families.

Tuesday, Jan. 5.—Nations: For their temporal and spiritual prosperity; edifying intercourse, and the maintenance of peace; for increased openings for the Gospel; for the removal of social evils; for the better observance of the Lord's day, and for Kings and all in authority.

Wednesday, Jan. 6.—Families: For children of Christian parents; for a blessing on home influences; for all seminaries of Christian learning—universities, colleges and schools; for Sunday schools and private instruction; for our youth abroad, and for a blessing on Christian literature.

Thursday, Jan. 7.—The Church: For more knowledge of God's word and increase of spiritual life; for sound and faithful preaching adapted to rich and poor; growing love to Christ; a more earnest love to Christians of varied name and all nations, and for the sending forth of more laborers into the harvest.

Friday, Jan. 8.—Missions: For the conversion of the heathen and Mohammedans; for the growth of missionary zeal; for the removal of hinderances to preaching; for recent converts, and for all who are suffering persecution for the truth.

Saturday, Jan. 9.—General: For the conversion of Israel; for the circulation of the Holy Scriptures; for Christian and philanthropic societies, for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit on Christians and Christian churches throughout the world.

Sunday, Jan. 10.—Sermons—Subject: The duty of the Christian Church in relation to the religious wants of the world.

Enjoy the blessings of this day if God sends them; and the evils bear patiently and sweetly. For this day only is ours; we are dead yesterday, and we are not born to-morrow.

There are three things we should continually keep in view, namely—what we once were, what we now are, and what we shall be hereafter.

Rightly to estimate the value of any thing, is to view it in connection with God, his glory and eternity.

There are eleven thousand three hundred and fifty-three school houses in Ohio.

The Great Eastern is being overhauled to lay the new trans Atlantic cable.

The first house in San Francisco was built just twenty-three years ago.

If you would not fall into sin, do not sit by the door of temptation.

The pleasure of sin is like a draft of sweet poison.

MARRIED.

On the 11th of November 1868, by the Rev. T. K. Armstrong, Mr. John W. Caatch to Miss Emma Huff, all of Wilcox county, Alabama.

November 8, 1868, at the residence of the bride's brother, Rev. J. A Spence, by the Rev. D. M. Hudson, Rev. E. A West, of the Montgomery Conference, to Miss Jane W. Spence, of Pleasant Hill, Dallas county, Alabama.

OBITUARIES.

Died, in Warren county, Mississippi, on the 24th day of October, 1868, Wesley Woodroof Neely.

Brother Neely was born in Western Virginia, in 1782, came to Mississippi in 1796, was married in Jefferson county, Mississippi, in 1819, to Esther Hackler, joined the Methodist Church in 1833, and was converted in 1837.

In the death of Brother Neely the church and community, as well as his family, have sustained a great loss. His house was for many years the house of the Methodist preachers on this circuit, and many of them will deeply mourn when they hear that he is no more on this earth But the laborer is worthy of his hire. Brother Neely was afflicted a year or more before his death; but he bore all with Christian fortitude. I visited him last winter for the first time since the war. He was confined to his room, and suffered much pain. He spoke of his losses during the war, and especially the burning of his house, and the necessity he was under of living in the parsonage. "But," said he, "the Yankees have destroyed all I had except my religion." While we were at prayer with him, on this occasion, his soul was made happy in a Saviour's love. I again visited him a few days before his death. I said to him, "Brother Neely, you have been successful in the Christian warfare in life. How do you feel that you can stand the last battle?" He raised his hands and eyes toward heaven, and burst into tears, exclaiming: "Thank God, I feel that I can stand it!" While at prayer, on this occasion, he shouted the praise of God. From that time to the hour of his death he was in a state of ecstacy all the time, and when he was so far gone that he could only speak in a whisper, and low at that, he could be heard saying: "Glory to God!"

Brother Neely was a good husband, father, neighbor and master, and above all, a good Christian. I do not know how we can do without him; but we submit to the providence of an all-wise Creator.

Mrs. Harriet Brown was born in Ontario county, New York, July 23, 1814. She was of Presbyterian parentage, and from a child knew the Holy Scriptures In her seventeenth or eighteenth year she professed faith in Christ and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in Cincinnati, Ohio. She came South in 1834. I formed her acquaintance in Jackson, Mississippi, in 1846, since which time I have known her most intimately. She departed from her home in Jefferson city, Jefferson parish, Louisiana, for her home in heaven, November 10, 1868.

Sister Brown was a Methodist from conviction and choice—loving our doctrines, discipline and order. While she was not "slothful in business," and neglected no domestic duty, she was "fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." She beautifully illustrated how much one may do who has a mind to work." She visited the poor, the sick and the strangers. She attended all the services of God's house, public and social, as established by our church. She taught in the Sabbath schools, sometimes acted as a class leader, and was gifted in devotional utterance. In love-feast she testified for God, and around the altar pointed penitents to Christ, and exhorted them to believe on his name.

She was a most active member of the Board of Managers for the Protestant Orphans' Home, on Seventh street, in this city, and long will her memory be cherished by the orphans as a "mother in Israel." By her zeal and the respect which her exalted character inspired she raised thousands for the widow, the orphan, and all that were in need,

She has been an invalid for two years or more, and for some fourteen months constantly confined to her bed. Her sufferings have been great and peculiarly distressing, but her bearing throughout the long and exhausting conflict has been a triumph of patience, cheerfulness and love. In every conflict her faith overcame and triumphed in the Lord. So far from murmuring, she was thankful, and said it was good to be afflicted. She was "careful for nothing," and "the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, kept her heart and mind, through Christ Jesus." Her vision of immortality was not only unclouded, but bright with "rays divine." Her last words were: "Meet me in heaven." She sleeps well, and her memory is blest.

Joseph B. Walker.

Brother William Lang was born in Pitt county, North Carolina, December 23, 1792, and died September 2, 1868. He was the son of John and Elizabeth Lang. He married Mary Pamelia, daughter of Thomas and Mary Hughes, December 20, 1867.

Brother Lang was one of the early settlers of this county, and by industry, economy and good management, accumulated a large estate. A man of sterling integrity, his word was as good as his bond. He first joined the Cumberland Protestant Church, but for many years he has been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at Pickensville. His last days were days of affliction, sorrow and anxiety. The property which had been acquired by honest labor was, to a large extent, wrested from him, and confusion, change and heavy personal affliction burdened his spirit. It was my privilege to be with him in his last sickness, and he ever appeared to enjoy the reading of the Scriptures and prayer. I trust that he has passed safely through all his afflictions and infirmities to the saint's rest.

This issue of Bonds constitutes one of the largest and most popular Corporate Loans of the country, and therefore will be constantly dealt in.

The greater portion of the Loan is now in the hands of steady investors; and it is probable that before many months, when the Road is completed and the Loan closed, the Bonds will be eagerly sought for at the highest rates.

They are issued only as the work progresses, and to the same extent only as the United States Subsidy Bonds granted by the government to the Pacific Railroad Companies.

NEARLY FIVE HUNDRED MILES

Of the Road are now built, and the grading is well advanced on two hundred and fifty miles additional.

THE THROUGH LINE ACROSS THE CONTINENT

Will be completed by the middle of next year, when the Overland travel will be very large.

The local business alone, upon the completed portion, is so heavy and so advantageous that the gross earnings average

More than a Quarter of a Million in Gold Per Month,

Of which 35 per cent. only is required for operating expenses.

The net profit upon the Company's business on the completed portion is about double the amount of annual interest liabilities to be assumed thereupon, and will yield

A SURPLUS OF NEARLY A MILLION IN GOLD

After expenses and interest are paid, even if the through connection were not made.

The best lands, the richest mines, together with the largest settlement and nearest markets, lie along this portion of the Pacific Railroad, and the future development of business thereon will be proportionally great.

From these considerations it is submitted that the

CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD BONDS,

Secured by a First Mortgage upon so productive a property, are among the most promising and reliable securities now offered. No better Bonds can be made.

A portion of the remainder of this Loan is now offered to Investors at

103 Per Cent. and Accrued Interest,

IN CURRENCY.

The Bonds are of $1,000 each.

☞ The Company reserve the right to advance the price at any time; but all orders actually in transitu at the time of any such advance will be filled at the present price. At this time they pay

More than Eight Per Cent. upon the Investment, and have from National and State laws, guarantees peculiar to themselves.

We receive all classes of Government Bonds, at their full market rates, in exchange for the Central Pacific Railroad Bonds, thus enabling the holders to realize from five to ten per cent. profit and keep the principal of their investments equally secure.

Orders and inquiries will receive prompt attention. Information, descriptive pamphlets, etc., giving a full account of the organization, progress, business and prospects of the enterprise, furnished on application. Bonds sent by return Express at our cost,

Subscriptions Received by Banks and Bankers,

Agents for the Loan, throughout the United States, Canada and Europe.

☞ All descriptions of GOVERNMENT SECURITIES bought, sold or exchanged, at our office and by mail and telegraph, at market rates.

THE GREATEST DISCOVERY OF THE AGE!

Farmers, Families, and others can purchase no remedy equal to Dr Tobias' Venetian Liniment for dysentery, colic, croup, chronic rheumatism, sore throats, toothache, sea-sickness, cuts, burns, swellings, bruises, old sores, headache, mosquito bites, pains in limbs, chest, back, etc. If it does not give relief the money will be refunded. All that is asked is a trial, and use it according to the directions.

Dr Tobias—Dear Sir: I have used your Venetian Liniment in my family for a number of years, and believe it to be the best article for what it is recommended that I have ever used. For sudden attack of croup it is invaluable. I have no hesitation in recommending it for all the uses it professes to cure. I have sold it for many years, and it gives entire satisfaction.

THE CHILDREN.

BY NORA.

Tell the children pretty stories,
Fill their little hearts with glee;
Time enough for sober musings
When they're old, like you and me.

Tell them "Mother Hubbard's trials,"
Tell them "Cinderella's" too,
Till they clap their hands with pleasure,
Asking if the tales are true.

Let them read the pictured stories
"Mother Goose" has kindly told;
Let them have some happy moments
To remember when they're old.

Let them think the golden sunset
Is a glimpse of heavenly gate,
Where the angels, pure and lovely,
For the good of earth await.

They will find enough that's real
In this weary life of ours;
Let us, while their grasp is tender,
Hide the thorns, give them the flowers.

Tell the children fairy stories,
Fill their little hearts with glee;
Time enough for sober musings
When they're old, like you and me.

LITTLE CHARLIE.

Mr. Editor: By inserting the following in the Children's Corner of the Advocate some of your young readers may be not only interested, but instructed also. Charlie Thompson, son of Dr. O. and Mrs. L. Thompson, died of congestion of the brain, at Osyka, on August 16, 1868.

LITTLE CHARLIE.

It is thought by some that children have no thoughts of God and heaven, which are worthy of record or attention, until they arrive at the age of ten or twelve. But we know a little boy, only four years old, who in his prattle about these things showed a maturity of conviction and an advance of knowledge in the philosophy of religion which seemed far beyond his years.

Charlie was the inseparable companion of his pious mother, and as she would be engaged in her daily avocation he would talk to her, and ask her questions which sometimes surprised her, and which she hardly knew how to answer.

Charlie's parents live in a little town, and in their front yard they have some flowers. In the back yard there is a fine well and some fruit trees. These things engaged his attention, and having been told by his mother that heaven was a good place, his mind seemed to dwell on the similarity or contrast. One day, as his mother was washing at the well, Charlie, seeing a quantity of peaches which the wet weather had caused to rot and fall off, said to her: "Mamma, is there any fruit in heaven?" "Yes, my son." "Well, do the peaches rot there?" "No, my son." "Are there any flowers there?" "Yes," said his mother, "flowers that never fade."

"Is there any water there?"—"Yes, living water, clear as chrystal, flowing from the throne of God."

"Well, mamma, are the folks happy in heaven?" "Yes, my son." "Well, why can't we all go to heaven? I don't see anybody that is satisfied here, and the peaches all rot, and the flowers all dry up, and the water don't stay cool, and it rains, and the sun shines hot, and folks get sick and die. But if I could get to heaven by dying I would be willing to die now—to-night. I would not mind getting sick and dying to get to such a good country as that." "But, Charlie, what would you do for mamma?" "Auntie's there, and a heap of kinsfolk, and I'll stay with them till you come, and that won't be long, mamma; and so I'll look for you, and be there to receive you."

So Charlie's childish prattle gave his mother's heart great pain. She said: "Hush, Charlie." But Charlie would not hush. "How long is it till August, mamma?" "Only about a week. Why, Charlie?"—"O because Buddy and sister are always sick in August, but they ain't going to be sick this August; but I am, and I'm going to die too, and go to heaven."

How prophetic! In about a week August came, and all its sickness, and on the 16th little Charlie went to heaven. If any one fails to see the deep significance of the Saviour's words, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of God," let him look on this picture.

"Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings hast thou ordained strength."

The Little Lamps.—I know two or three boys and girls who have, I hope, repented of their sins, and given their hearts to God; and I want them to remember now that they are like little lamps, that hold the precious light of God's grace.

In ancient times, lamps, with oil in them, were lighted and placed on candlesticks. Some of these lamps were very costly and beautiful, and rested upon tall, golden candlesticks, ornamented with precious stones; others were small and plain, and placed on coarse, cheap candlesticks; but all were for the same purpose—to give light to those around them.

Now, every child who has grace in his heart is a lamp. He may be a very plain and humble one, and his situation in life may be plain and humble too; but he is to give light to those around him—not by talking and preaching, not by reproving others, but simply by acting right. He is to show by his own conduct that he has light in him; he must be humble, for he is simply the plain little lamp; but he has the grace of God in his heart, and he is to let his light shine that "others, seeing his good works, may glorify not him, but God."

SCIENTIFIC.

NEWS FROM SIRIUS.—No. II.

BY R. A. PROCTOR, B. A., F. R. A. S.

But there is a peculiarity in the light received from the sun and stars which remains to be mentioned, and which has led to a very satisfactory and trustworthy solution of the difficult problem we have been dealing with.

It has been observed that the solar spectrum is crossed by a multitude of dark lines parallel to each other and at right angles to the length of the spectrum. These lines are arranged in so complex a manner that each of the stronger lines, and every group of faint lines, is distinctly recognizable. Thus physicists speak of the strong line F in the green part of the spectrum, of the double line D in the orange part of the spectrum, of the group of seven lines in such and such a part of the spectrum, and so on. These lines never vary in arrangement or position. Corresponding lines are seen in the spectra of the stars; the spectra vary among themselves, but each spectrum remains constant as respects the arrangement of its distinctive lines. But note also, that, although different stars have different spectra, yet these variations arise merely from the fact that certain lines are present in one spectrum and wanting in another, or vice versa. The lines which do appear are the same lines which have been measured in the solar spectrum.—Thus a physicist will say: In the spectrum of such and such a star the lines B, D and F are well seen; the existence of C and E is suspected, but these lines are very faint; G and H are not seen. He knows that these lines are the same as those in the solar spectrum, either because he has carefully estimated their position, or because he has brought the star's spectrum into direct comparison with the spectra of certain terrestrial elements in which these lines appear.

Now here we have at once a most delicate means of detecting stellar movements of approach or recess. If in the spectrum of a star we can see a recognizable group of lines, of a line recognizable by its strength, and if in any way we can prove that this line does not hold the exact position which it has in the solar spectrum, then the change of position must be looked upon as due to the star's motion toward or from the earth. The shifting of the spectrum bodily, which, as we have seen, produces no change whatever in the star's color, brings all the lines into new positions, and any one line, marked enough for ready examination, suffices as well as a hundred to determine the existence of such a change.

We need hardly say, however, that the inquiry, even under these favorable circumstances, is one of extreme delicacy. In the ordinary prismatic spectrum the change of position would be wholly inappreciable, and the eminent physicist who has just succeeded in solving the problem in the case of the star Sirius, had to make use of a spectroscope having a dispersive power seven times as great as that of a single equiangular prism of crown glass, in order sufficiently to magnify the variation in question. This gentleman, Mr. Huggins, came to the examination of the problem we are considering, with a large amount of experience in spectroscopic researches; yet it was a problem of such extreme difficulty that much time was expended, and many experiments were made, before he could conduct his inquiry to a successful issue.

Mr. Huggins first satisfied himself that a certain conspicuous line in the spectrum of Sirius corresponds to the line F in the solar spectrum. This line also appears as a bright line in the spectrum of the light of hydrogen. The spectra of Sirius and of incandescent hydrogen were then brought side by side for direct comparison. With the powerful dispersing spectroscope made use of by Mr. Huggins, the line F in the spectrum of Sirius was found to be separated by about one two hundred and fiftieth part of an inch from the corresponding line in the spectrum of hydrogen. The displacement was toward the red end of the spectrum, so that it indicated a motion of recession between the earth and the star.

Now the displacement having been measured very accurately, we are enabled to calculate the rate at which Sirius is receding from the earth. The observed alteration is found to indicate a recession at the rate of 41·4 miles per second. But we must consider the earth's motion also, because she moves so rapidly around the sun as largely to affect the apparent motions of recess or approach which the stars may have with respect to her. She travels around her orbit at a mean rate of about eighteen miles per second. At the time of Mr. Huggins' observation the direction of the earth's motion was such that she was receding from Sirius at the rate of about twelve miles per second.—Deducting this velocity from the total rate of recession, it results that Sirius is receding from the earth at the rate of about twenty nine and a half miles per second, or about nine hundred and thirty millions of miles annually.

Two circumstances have to be considered, however, before we can look upon the actual motion of Sirius as determined.

It has been calculated that the sun, with his system of attendant orbs, is speeding through space at the rate of one hundred and fifty millions of miles per year. And it happens that the point in space toward which the sun is moving—which lies in the constellation Hercules—is almost exactly opposite the constellation Canis Major in which the star Sirius is situated. Therefore we must diminish the above-mentioned motion of recession by nearly the whole amount of the sun's proper motion, leaving to Sirius a proper motion of recession of about seven hundred and eighty millions of miles per annum.

Lastly, we must consider the transverse proper motion of Sirius. It follows from Henderson's estimate of the distance of Sirius (lately confirmed by the researches of Mr Cleveland Abbe) that the star has a transverse motion of about four hundred and fifty millions of miles per annum. Combining this motion with the star's motion of recession, we deduce an actual velocity through the space of upward of one thousand millions of miles in a year, or about thirty-three miles per second.

But it is rather from what is promised than from the information which has actually been obtained, that the process of inquiry so successfully pursued by Mr. Huggins derives its chief interest. Doubtless the discovery that the brightest star in the heavens is speeding onward with so enormous a velocity through space is in itself well deserving of our attention. But if it shall become possible—and we see nothing in the nature of things which should prevent it—to determine in the same manner the motions of recession or approach of all the stars visible to the naked eye, then we shall have a fund of knowledge from which many most important facts respecting the economy of the stellar system cannot fail to be deduced.

For, let us consider the nature of the knowledge which astronomers had already gleaned respecting stellar motions, and the use to which they had applied that knowledge.

They had obtained exact estimates of the apparent motions of the stars—or what is termed their proper motion—upon the celestial sphere. But, at first sight, these estimates appear almost valueless, so far as our views respecting the true motions of the stellar universe are concerned. For, first, as we have already mentioned, the motion thus indicated in any case might in reality be but a small portion of a star's true motion. And further, unless a star's distance be known, the determination of the proper motion affords no indication whatever, even respecting the star's true transverse motion. Now there are not twenty stars in the whole heavens whose distances from us have been estimated in any way, and there are not ten whose distances can be said to have been satisfactorily determined. Nor is there much probability that the list will ever be greatly extended. For the distances of the fixed stars are so enormous that the powers of our best instruments and the skill of our best observers are taxed to the utmost to obtain—even in a few favorable instances—any information whatever respecting the minute and almost evanescent shifting of position on which the determination of a star's distance depends.

And yet, from the consideration of the imperfect information afforded by the star's apparent proper motions, astronomers have been able to deduce one of the most interesting astronomical discoveries yet effected. They have learned that the sun, with his attendant system, is speeding onward through space, in a certain direction which they have been able to assign, and at a rate of no less than one hundred and fifty millions of miles per annum. A law also affecting the general system of stellar motions has been guessed at, and has been considered by many eminent astronomers to be supported by sufficiently satisfactory evidence. It has been supposed that the proper motions of the stars indicate a vast series of orbital motions around a point in space which does not lie very far from the star Alcyone—the principal star of the Pleiades. I am not putting forward this supposed law as standing by any means on a similar basis with the fact of the sun's onward motion through space. Indeed, I think that the researches on which the law has been founded are far from being sufficient to establish such a hypothesis. But what I wish to dwell upon is the circumstance that the observed proper motions of the stars, imperfect as is the evidence they afford, have yet led to the discovery of one important fact, and have led to the attentive consideration of a yet more important law of stellar motion.

But now, if the method which Mr. Huggins has begun to apply should be extended to all, or even to a large proportion of the fixed stars, what important conclusions may we not hope to see deduced from such observations. For, in the first place, the motions of the stars directly toward or from us are quite as significant as their transverse motions; secondly, we shall know more about the former motions than we have ever been able to learn about the latter; and lastly, neither kind of knowledge considered separately could possibly lead to such satisfactory results as we may hope to gather from the knowledge of the actual motions of the stars through space. There now really seems a promise that some day something may come to be learned respecting the movements of the sidereal mechanism. The constellations which now seem to be scattered without discernible law over the vault of heaven may be forced, perhaps, to reveal to us their secrets, the law of organization which binds them into a system, the paths along which their component stars have been traveling before they reached their present position, and those along which they are to travel for many future ages. Meantime long processes of patient labor and systematic observation lie before the astronomer. Not in our day, nor perchance for many generations, will the Copernicus of the stellar system appear; and for him astronomers will have to lay up during those long years a rich store of materials. "How much," says Sir John Herschel, "is escaping us! And how unworthy is it in them who call themselves philosophers to let the grand phenomena of nature—those slow but majestic manifestations of the power and glory of God—glide by unnoticed, and drop out of memory beyond reach of recovery, because we will not take the pains to note them in their unobtrusive and fortive passage, because we see them in their every-day dress, and mark no sudden change, and conclude that all is dead because we will not look for signs of life, and that all is uninteresting because we are not impressed and dazzled. To say indeed," he adds, "that every individual star in the Milky Way is to have its place determined and its motion watched would be extravagant; but at least let samples be taken—at least let monographs of parts be made, with powerful telescopes and refined instruments—that we may know what is going on in that abyss of stars, where at present imagination wanders without a guide."—Frazer's Magazine.

Private Prayer.—In the morning the mind is calm; the temptations of the day have not beset you; the duties of the day have not filled your mind and begun to vex you. Before you go to the duties of the day, to its cares and anxieties and temptations, begin the day with prayer. Temptations you certainly will meet; trials of virtue and patience will overtake you; and many times before night you will need the aid of your Father to shield you. Go to him, and ask his counsel to guide you, his power to uphold you, his presence to cheer you, his spirit to sanctify you. Then will you have done what is equivalent to half the duties of the day, when you have thus engaged his care and assistance. And when the evening comes, when you have done with the duties of the day, the body is wearied, and the mind is jaded, when the world is shut out by the shades of night, when you come to look back and review the day, when you see how many deficiencies have marked it, how many imperfections still cluster around you, how many sins stare you in the face, how little you have done for yourself, or for others, or for God, the day past, then is the hour of prayer. It will be sweet to feel that you have one to whom you can go, and who will hear you; one who will forgive you, if you are penitent, and ask in the name of Jesus Christ; one who will accept your evening sacrifice, and give you strength for the morrow, and gird you with his righteousness. This hour, if rightly improved, will be like the cheering countenance of a most beloved friend. Take care that nothing comes between you and these hours devoted to God.—Dr. Todd.

ELEVENTH SESSION.—TERMS REDUCED

The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.

SPECIAL CAUTIONS.

Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health.

A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.

It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

TERMS—Board and Tuition per session, $360.

PAYMENTS—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.

Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

CENTENARY COLLEGE, Jackson, Louisiana, was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war; but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually, in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution the Southern States.

The past history of the College is the pledge its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the institution, are requested to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

W. H. WATKINS, President.

FIVE HUNDRED SOUTHERN METHODIST PREACHERS,

Who are both the agents and owners of this sheet.

A man who wishes to be known in the country is certainly much in his own light who does not display his name in our advertising columns.

Our terms are precisely the same as those of other weekly newspapers in this city.

We have fewer advertisements than the secular papers, but what we have are read with that conscientious regard for everything that appears in a Christian paper which takes hold—in fact, too strong a hold—and holds the editor responsible for all the patent medicines, hardware, shoes, pork, flour, and even whisky, which may be set forth in its columns.

The terms of advertising are as follows:

THE HOME MONTHLY, New Orleans, for 1867.

The HOME MONTHLY will contain forty-eight pages of reading matter, printed upon fine paper and in clear type, and will, from time to time, be accompanied by elegant steel-plate engravings. The subscription price will remain $3 per annum, or $1.50 for six months, invariably in advance. In order to build up a still larger circulation, we have concluded to offer the following

Liberal Inducements to Agents.

To any person sending us three yearly subscriptions, with nine dollars, we will send the MONTHLY six months, or allow them, if they prefer, to retain One Dollar and Twenty-five Cents of the amount.

To any person sending us six subscriptions, with eighteen dollars, ($18,) we will send the MONTHLY one year, or allow them to retain Two Dollars and Fifty Cents of the amount.

On amounts for subscription less than nine dollars, agents will be allowed to retain ten per cent.

Ministers, it is hoped, will act as agents, not so much from pecuniary considerations as from a laudable desire to assist in building up a home literature worthy of a place among the families of the South and on the center-tables of a Christian people.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of heating and Ventilating the Oven, as a means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

At Least Thirty per Cent, as Compared with any other Stove.

and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally known as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. That meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the appreciation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

For sale only by the undersigned.

In addition to the above, I also have a large and complete assortment of COOKING STOVES, comprising all of the leading Stoves of the day, equal to any offered in any other house in this city.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY, AT Greensboro, Alabama.

The next session of this institution begins the first Wednesday in October, and is divided into two terms.

TUITION.

Academic Department, per term	$35 00
Preparatory Department, per term	30 00
Contingent fee, per term	2 50

A fee of $5 is charged those who attend the schools of Chem. and Nat. Phil.

Board, exclusive of washing and lights, $16 to $20 per month. By messing it can be obtained even cheaper than at these rates.

Sons of ministers of the Gospel in the regular work, and those studying for the ministry, are admitted free of tuition.

The whole expense for the scholastic year, including everything except books and clothing, will be $250, payable one-half at the opening of the session, and the remainder on the 15th of February. If the student wishes to board in a private family it will be $280. This great reduction in the price of board and tuition will bring the advantages of the University within the reach of those whose limited means have heretofore placed the highest scholastic training beyond their reach, as well as secure the patronage of those who, on the score of economy, are sending their sons out of the State to be educated.

Especial attention is called to the fact that preparatory students are taught exclusively by the Faculty.

The Law School has been organized under the management of Hons. Judge Coleman and A. Bennett.

Manufacturers of Piano Fortes, with the patent Combination Sounding boards,

Patented August 14th, 1866.

This invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affords the sounding board, the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a more liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. The sounding-board released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding-boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection, and its vibratory quality increased.

Our Pianos are first-class in every respect, and purchasers will have not only our own guarantee as to their quality, but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument, obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

EAST ALABAMA MALE COLLEGE

AT AUBURN, ALA.

The Fall term of this Institution will open on the FIRST WEDNESDAY in SEPTEMBER next, and close on the 20th December. Besides the regular course of studies for graduation, large facilities are afforded for instruction in the Commercial and Agricultural branches. Separate schools for these branches, in connection with the College, were authorized at the last annual meeting of the Board of Trustees. A student not wishing to take either the regular or a partial literary course in the College, may confine himself to either of these Departments, and in a short time become qualified for business.

The Preparatory Department, with competent teachers, will be under the special supervision of the Faculty.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market continues to exhibit a fair degree of animation. A considerable number of merchants have arrived from the interior, and are engaged in completing their winter supplies.—There is also a good local demand, and most branches of wholesale business have shown increased activity. Operations in our leading staple have been checked by the pretensions of factors being a fraction above the limits of most of the pending orders, especially those for Great Britain: but a fair amount has nevertheless changed hands, at prices which have shown unusual irregularity. The receipts of sugar and molasses having at last proved in excess of the demand, prices of both declined on Monday, but on Tuesday, when ample scope was furnished to buyers, the competition caused a favorable reaction. Nothing of any moment has been done in tobacco, and the movement in Western produce has been restricted by light supplies of nearly every article except flour.

The weather was clear and pleasant on Saturday, but cloudy and rainy on Monday. On Tuesday it was again clear and cool. We have nothing of importance to note in our accounts from the country.—The prospect continues cheering for both cane and cotton.

The river remains about the same, being thirteen feet six inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the 13th instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi ....bales..	10206
Lake	23
Montgomery	1111
Mobile	339
Texas	338
Total	12017

On Saturday the movement was checked during the early part of the day by a considerable difference between the views of factors and buyers, the former adhering to their previous pretensions, while the latter, on the tenor of the Liverpool telegrams, claimed a reduction of at least ¼c. Later in the day, however, factors found it necessary to meet the demand more freely, when the market became active, and the day's business comprised 5,250 bales, at irregular prices, closing at a decline of ¼c. On Monday, under a rise in gold and foreign exchange, factors recovered their confidence and asked higher prices, and although buyers were willing to admit a slight improvement, they could not go on at the asking rates. Operations were consequently on a limited scale until about meridian, when a further advance in gold at New York enabled buyers to come forward with more spirit, and 6,700 bales changed hands, partly at about previous quotations, but mostly at figures showing a recovery of Saturday's falling off. On Tuesday the market opened with quite an active demand, and notwithstanding factors were more stringent in their pretensions, a fair business was done during the morning, partly at Monday's figures and partly at an advance of ⅛c; but after the unfavorable turn in gold at New York buyers held back, and it was difficult to realize previous rates.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 16,800 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 215,052 bales, against 70,025 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 180,216 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 30,563 bales to Great Britain, of 51,110 to France, and of 2,054 to other foreign ports.

SYNOPSIS OF CHARTER.

The plan proposed by the Mutual Aid and Benevolent Life Insurance Association is as follows:

1. Each person, upon enrolling himself or herself as a member, shall pay into the Treasury a membership fee, if between the ages of

16 to 30, inclusive, the sum of	$10 00
31 to 40, inclusive, the sum of	15 00
41 to 50, inclusive, the sum of	20 00
51 to 60, inclusive, the sum of	25 00

which payment constitutes him or her a life member.

2. A Life Insurance Policy is issued for a sum equal to one dollar for each enrolled member appearing on the books of the Association, at the decease of said member.

But in no event shall the amount paid on said policy exceed $5,000.

3. On the death of any member an assessment is made upon each policy holder for one dollar and twenty-five cents, payable at the office of the Association, within thirty days after notification thereof, by publication in one daily newspaper published in the city of New Orleans, in English and one in French, for five consecutive days, and if the policy holder resides out of New Orleans he shall be notified in writing.

4. Should the number of members exceed five thousand, the assessment of $1 25 will be reduced in proportion to the number of members exceeding five thousand.

5. Should any member fail to pay the assessment in the time specified, he forfeits all previous payments or credits.

6 All accumulations from whatever source, such as forfeitures, interest, etc., shall be credited upon the books of the Association to the members pro rata, to be withdrawn in lieu of assessments. oct17 1y

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

NEW YORK, Nov. 24.—The full official vote of fifteen out of the twenty-five States voting in 1864 shows that Grant runs behind Lincoln's majority, and on a fair vote would have been heavily defeated.

Kelly has withdrawn, and A. Oakey Hall will probably be mayor of this city.

Wall-street is dull and politics quiet.

Butler won't die. He only lost his voice through hoarseness.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24.—The Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the Secretary of the Treasury have agreed upon the appointment of C. E. Creecy, Esq., as supervisor for the district of Louisiana.

Secretary Seward presented at the cabinet meeting to-day dispatches received by mail yesterday from Hon. Reverdy Johnson, minister to England. The details of negotiations for the settlement of the Alabama claims were included in this communication.

The details of the correspondence have not publicly transpired, but it is known that the results of the negotiation do not quite come up to the expectation of the administration, the basis of the proposed agreement being somewhat different from what the President and Secretary Seward had been led to suppose they were.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24.—Admiral Farragut will arrive to-night, and be the guest of Secretary Welles.

General Howard has issued orders preparatory to the discontinuance of the Freedmen's Bureau January 1, except the educational department and collection of money due soldiers.

The following organization will continue in each State: Alabama—one assistant commissioner and chief superintendent of schools; one disbursing officer for the educational department and payment of bounties; two assistant superintendents of schools, and two clerks.

Louisiana—one assistant commissioner and chief superintendent of schools, one disbursing officer for the educational department and payment of bounties; two assistant superintendents of schools and three clerks. Texas—one assistant commissioner, etc., one disbursing officer, etc.; three superintendents of schools and two clerks.

The President has recognized consuls for Hayti at Boston and New York.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24.—Butler's reported sickness is a hoax.

RICHMOND, Nov. 24.—H. Rives Pollard, editor of Pollard's Southern Opinion, was shot and killed this morning, at ten o'clock, while passing near his office, by James Grant. The cause of the shooting was a publication in the Opinion reflecting on the character of a member of Grant's family.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 25.—Colonel Keeler, of General Rousseau's staff, arrived here yesterday with a copy of the report of General Rousseau for the department of Louisiana.

Colonel Keeler delivered the report to General Grant this morning, and is now awaiting the arrival of a second copy to deliver to the President, when it is expected that the report will be published.

The commission of C. E. Creecy, yesterday appointed supervisor for Louisiana, was issued to-day, and Mr. Creecy expects to leave for New Orleans the latter part of this week. New Orleans Times.

THE USE OF TEXTS.—There is often great force, and sometimes a covert meaning, conveyed in the choice of a text. An anecdote illustrative of this is recorded of Dr. Paley, the well-known author of "Natural Theology," "Evidences of Christianity," and other popular works. When Pitt, as first lord of the treasury and chancellor of the exchequer, at the age of twenty-three, revisited Cambridge, where he had graduated, Paley marked with a sarcastic eye how assiduously some of the leading members of the university courted the youthful prime minister, and made up to him in view of the good things which he would now have at his disposal. It was Paley's turn to preach before the university at St. Mary's on the Sunday during Pitt's visit; accordingly, he took for his text, "There is a lad here which hath five barley loaves and two small fishes," adding, as he looked round on the crowded church, "But what are they among so many?" A most unfortunate result followed the selection of a text in the chapel royal at Dublin. Dr. Sheridan, the father of the better-known Richard Brinsley Sheridan, was asked by a country clergyman to take the duty for him on the next Sunday. Sheridan was in high favor at Dublin Castle, but he unconsciously forfeited all by his text on that occasion. He took an old sermon, of which the text was, "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." Unfortunately it happened (which Sheridan had forgotten) to be the anniversary of the accession of the house of Hanover. The supposed insult to the Irish court was never forgiven, and, it is said, lost the doctor his bishopric. The Irish government could not have bestowed one of its mitres on a head capable of such an application of the text.

FIFTY YEARS HENCE.

The London Spectator, in some speculations on the changes that may possibly occur in the next half century, in consequence of new discoveries, regards emigration as one of the things which is quite as likely to be affected as any other. Should a new impetus be given to this, the consequences to Europe would be very serious. The writer says:

"Suppose, if true, as so many men of mark in science believe, that the next great step may be in sea-going steamers, that international communication may be accelerated, as internal communication has been, that we may yet see New York brought within two days' journey of Liverpool, the probability is that in ten years every social condition now existing in Europe would have ceased to exist; that the millions who toil for others and on whose toil modern society is built would choose to toil for themselves, would precipitate themselves in a rush, to which all the movements of mankind have been trifles, upon the New World. Suppose the population of Britain and Germany reduced to ten millions each—a change less in magnitude than that which has occurred in many countries—and those ten millions only retained by advantages as great as the New World can offer, what would all the changes of the past half century be to that? This may happen, even without any application of Stephenson's great idea, the one idea he never worked out, that if engineers, instead of trying to increase the power applicable to driving ships, were to reduce the friction which retards ships, the world would speedily be one great parish. The writer, who has seen many countries, and lived among many races, seriously believes that of all the dangers to which Europe and European society is exposed, none is so formidable as the passion for emigration, seriously doubts whether, if education spreads in Europe, it will be possible to retain its population cooped up in their narrow and half-exhausted corner of the world. We think, we English, that we know what emigration is, but we know nothing about it, have no idea of the changes it would involve if aided by the whole force of the masses then in possession of the supreme political power. Suppose those five-sixths of Englishmen who now work for others choose to go elsewhere and work for themselves. The change between Waterloo and Sadowa would be very slight compared with the change between 1868 and 1818, and there is not a sensible man in England who will declare that alteration beyond the reach of thought. Why should not emigration in England and Germany attain the height it has reached in Ireland, and the masses insist on aiding it through the national fleets. The Irish would if they had the power, and the British have this year the power conferred on them. We say nothing of a discovery which, if it is ever made, will remold all human society, slowly pulverize all differences among nations, fusing the world into one people, and immediately destroy all existing political arrangements—the discovery of a means of maintaining and guiding a raft ten feet or so in the air, for we cannot resist a totally unreasonable impression that the discovery will not be made, that progress will not in our time make that astounding leap. Apart altogether from that, there are physical forces now at work strong enough to change the whole face of the world, by shifting its population."

WESLEYANS AND THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Rev. Thomas Jackson, one of the ablest and most venerable of the English Conference, wrote a letter to that body, at its recent session, in answer to one of fraternal regard from its president. As this letter and its source is of the highest interest we reproduce it, and the comment upon it from the London Times. The letter in full is:

"I beg to present to you and the Conference my very cordial thanks for the kind letter I have just received, bearing your signature and that of the secretary, expressing regret at my absence from your assembly. It is true that I am at present far from Liverpool, but you will believe me when I say that, having been accustomed for sixty years to attend the annual meetings of my brethren, my thoughts and sympathies are with you day by day, and gladly would I mingle with you and take part in your deliberations were it not that my strength is impaired by old age, and the weather is so intensely hot as to imperil the health of the strongest men when sitting for several hours together in a crowded place. My absence from the Conference, believe me, is to me matter of regret and self-denial. Yet if I may address you by letter, I request that you will of your clemency hear from me a few words. Allow me then to express to you, sir, my very hearty congratulations on your election to the presidency, a distinction which you have justly won by native talent and by many years of hard and faithful labor. Few things of late have given me greater pleasure than the perusal of your inaugural address, as it appeared in the public papers. I thank God, who has placed at the head of the Conference and of the connection a man whose head and heart could so promptly and energetically enunciate the noble sentiments which fell from your lips on taking the Conference chair. They will, I doubt not, be carried into practical effect during the next twelve months, commending themselves as they do to the understanding and conscience of every genuine Methodist.

"I feel that in these days of political excitement and of cheap newspapers there is a danger lest our attention should be diverted from our great work. For one, I wish daily to have in my remembrance the weighty and memorable saying of Mr. Wesley, addressed to his preachers: 'You have nothing to do but to save souls.' Methodist preachers as well as Methodist people will, of course, entertain different views concerning public questions and events; and let them differ, for in this country thought is free; but the organization of Methodism will, I trust, always remain sacred to matters purely religious. What is it to us which political party is uppermost in the State if our sermons be trite and unimpressive, if the mass of our hearers remain unconverted, and if Christian godliness languish in our societies? With our ample chapel accommodation—the large number of young people growing up among us, the children of Methodist parents—our day and Sunday schools pervading the country—our home missions, and other appliances, with the general peace of our societies, and a ministry improved by education—there ought, I think, to be great searchings of heart why the increase in our body is not larger. I ask myself the question: Do I prepare and deliver my sermons for the one object of saving souls? Do I describe the process of conversion, and prove its pressing necessity, as the old Methodist preachers did? I do not say the former days were better than these, and yet I think we may learn something by asking for the old paths.

"Methodism has now passed into a new state in relation to the Established Church of this country. Mr. Wesley, to the end of his life, declared his attachment to it, and recommended to his preachers and people to follow his example. We are now charged with a departure from his principles, and are called upon to become church people to preserve our consistency. The truth of this charge I absolutely deny. Mr. Wesley was a Protestant to the backbone, and regarded the Church of England as a Protestant establishment. For years after his death the Conference acknowledged a friendly relation to it in that character, and called upon me some forty years ago to publish, in the form of a pamphlet, a speech which I addressed to them on that subject. To the principles laid down in that pamphlet I adhere at this day, but they do not apply to the existing state of things. The Church of England is not now what Mr. Wesley understood it to be, and what it has been regarded for the last three hundred years. Many of the clergy declare their abhorrence of the very name of Protestant; they revile the Protestant martyrs; they affect popish forms of worship; they preach the doctrines of popery, and declare their sympathy with the Church of Rome. At the same time a large and powerful body of the clergy yield only a limited assent to the teaching of Holy Scripture, and deny some of the most important doctrines of the Gospel. A church which offers no effectual resistance to these enormous evils can expect no sympathy from Wesleyan Methodism. On the contrary, against such errors Methodism is bound to raise the warning voice from one end of the kingdom to the other. While so many of the clergy are attempting to unsettle the minds of the people of England by the novelties of Rome and of skepticism, it becomes us to put forth efforts more strenuous than ever to proclaim the truths of the Reformation—the pure truths of New Testament Christianity—in every town, village and hamlet in the kingdom. Never was true, earnest Methodist preaching more needed than at this day.

"I have been greatly cheered by the accounts I have read of the displays of loyal and Protestant feeling made in the Conference. 'No peace with Rome,' I trust, will ever be our motto; nor will we, as John Wesley's sons in the Gospel, ever consent that the power vested in the crown of England shall be shared with an Italian priest.

"Excuse the length of this letter; I did not intend to say so much when I began; and yet if I were with you I should perhaps say something, more especially on the subject of the amalgamation of Methodism and the Church of England, of which some people of late have had day dreams; but as the thing is legally, morally and religiously impossible, it is useless to argue the case.

"May God's blessing be upon you and the Conference, and may the year of your presidency be a year of great religious prosperity and enlargement."

The London Times, referring to the letter, says:

"The letter we printed on Wednesday from the Rev. Thomas Jackson, one of the oldest Wesleyan ministers, offers one more warning to those who are now forwarding or permitting the growth of anti-Protestant opinions in the Church of England. The writer of this letter has been a minister for sixty years, and the change of feeling of which he has been a witness on this subject is very striking. In his early days it never occurred to any one that the Church of England could be other than a Protestant establishment. To doubt it would have been much the same as to doubt that we enjoyed constitutional government or civil freedom. The plain issue which Dr. Jackson raises is the same as that on which it has always insisted, and which will be paramount with the mass of the English people. It is a question between Protestantism and Romanism. The Ritualists have themselves simplified matters by accepting this issue and pronouncing for Romanism. This being the case it only remains to be finally decided whether they are right or wrong in claiming the protection of the Church of England. The only plea we can offer in deprecation of such judgments as that of Dr. Jackson is, that this final decision has not yet been pronounced. Owing to the culpable negligence of the bishops, and the scandalous processes of our ecclesiastical law, the cardinal doctrines of the Ritualists have never yet been brought to a judicial test. Considering that many of our articles, on the face of them, are directed against popery, we have always thought it probable they would be found to condemn the reactionary doctrines now promulgated. If so the whole fabric of Ritualism would fall to the ground, many of its present advocates would be content to moderate their opinions, and the Church of England would be permanently vindicated from the charges of popery now brought against her. If this could be done, she might stand on even firmer ground than before, and Ritualism would have ended by conferring a great benefit on the church. This, we fear, is the sole resource now remaining. There was a time, perhaps, when the bishops and others could have averted the danger by milder measures; but the Ritualists have now committed themselves too far to yield to anything but compulsion. The blindness which possesses them and their friends on this point passes comprehension. They seemed to have confused themselves by subtilties till the broadest facts of history escape their observation. They cannot see that the Reformation forms the very ground-work of our national life, and that to repudiate and revile it is to separate themselves by an impassable gulf from the sympathies of Englishmen. We have since then had two revolutions, and each was occasioned in no slight degree by a revolt of the people against Romanizing tendencies. The result of those revolutions was, at all events, to establish Protestantism as the animating and characteristic spirit of this country; and the day when the church fails to give expression to this spirit will be the day from which her downfall will commence."

TO THE STEWARDS and MEMBERS OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH SOUTH, IN THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

DEAR BRETHREN: From the midst of our annual council we rise under a common impulse to address you. We seek to imbue your minds with some measure of our own sentiments. Here, we see and feel more powerfully than we can hope to express, the effects of the crisis through which our church, as well as our country, is now passing.

The annual reduction and deficiency of the allowance made to our preachers, on the plea of general poverty, are now beginning to show their results, and to demonstrate the unwiseness of such a policy. Better, far better, would it have been for us to have suffered the lack of many things, we thought at the time absolutely needful, than to have thus endangered ourselves with the lack of the bread of life, through a preached gospel, and the sacraments of our cherished religion. We have reached that point when our plans of life must embrace more largely provision for our spiritual necessities. At a very small cost to us, and without any particular effort required of us, a devoted and gifted body of ministers has grown up in our midst—has supplied us with a pure gospel, and performed for us the holy offices of an acceptable ministry. Few of us have known, fewer still have inquired, how this ministry have subsisted. Children of Providence they have always appeared to us, and largely have they drawn upon the promises that guard their holy calling. Age is, however, abating the strength and relaxing the vigor of those of them longest in a service that has ministered to our improvement. Care is robbing youth of its natural joyousness; necessity, painful necessity, is operating to part from this devoted band some of its most hopeful members. Secular employments are attracting others, promising to annul labor that support which the church is indifferent to pay.

At this moment they turn to us for relief, and we have responded by submitting to the church, within the bounds we represent in this Conference, a plan of finance to be managed by you. Shall we attempt farther to tell you to what extent these trustful men of God confide in our promise for ourselves, and pledges for you. Shall we attempt to measure to you the hope which this simple plan has awakened? Has the Lord put it in our hearts to do this thing, that these, his servants, should so readily address themselves to increased devotion, an enlargement of plans, for the spread of the gospel, and a greater efficiency of their ministry?

They will return to their homes and prepare to take the places assigned them the coming year; they will encourage the saddened hearts of their wives, and their little ones, by the promises we have made them in your behalf. Receive them as servants of God, sent to you; open your hearts to the word they bring; make your poverty abound to the praise of your liberality; see that their cries do not go up to heaven against us for receiving their services, and withholding their hire. The Lord will assuredly bless us if we do our whole duty in these respects; we have this confidence and would impart it to you.

The Joint Board of Committee on Finance beg leave to submit this their first report, on the subject entrusted to their consideration. The plan of finance we herewith present contemplates an earnest and persistent application to every member of the church, a systematic use and steady employment of the financial officers of the church, a rigid economy of money, beginning with the smallest fractions, and a return to old usages regarding quarterly collections. It is our opinion that if the plan is carried out with that measure of confidence which a financial plan ought to command, the results will amply compensate the church.

The more effectually to carry out the following plan, it is hereby recommended that each board of stewards organize by the election of a president and secretary.

I. On the arrival of the preacher in charge the president shall call a meeting of the board of stewards.

II. The stewards shall ascertain and consolidate all the claims upon the church for the current year, embracing the allowance to the preacher in charge, the presiding elder, and the amount apportioned to the bishops, and the amount for the Conference.

III. The stewards shall assess the members in sums sufficient to meet the above amounts and notify the pastor, who shall call a church meeting, to whom the stewards shall submit their assessment, and make such changes as may be necessary to secure a general concurrence.

IV. The assessment agreed to shall be divided into monthly installments, to be collected as follows:

I. On the first of each month the secretary shall serve each member with a notice of their assessment, using the following or some other convenient form:

STEWARDS' CIRCULAR.

To the Members and Friends of the M. E. Church South, —— Station, (or —— Circuit,) Mississippi Conference:

The expenses of our church for the year 186– amount to—

1.—Pastor's salary.....	000 00
2.—Presiding elder's salary.....	000 00
3.—Bishop's fund.....	000 00
Total.....	000 00

To meet the above we, the stewards, have to the best of our ability, in making a fair and just assessment to each individual member, assessed you with —— per month, commencing December 1, 186–, and ending November 1, 186–, which amount you will please pay monthly to either one of the stewards or to the pastor, or you can inclose it in a sealed envelope, with your name on it, and deposit it in the church basket. Proper credit will be made on the books in every instance. Remember that "the laborer is worthy of his hire," and that the Lord loveth a cheerful giver.

STATEMENT.

Remarks:

Hoping to have an immediate response, we are, very respectfully,

[Here let the stewards' names be printed.]

Let this assessment be read to the congregation or church, and if objection is not made, let it be considered as his dues for the year.

2. In the event of a failure by any member to respond to the circular, the stewards shall appoint one of their number to wait in person upon the member so failing, ascertain the cause, and urge any suitable arrangement by which the amount may be secured the church.

V. The secretary of the board of stewards shall pay on the order of the preacher in charge, monthly, the amount due him, or such portion as may be in the treasury; and quarterly to the presiding elder, on his order, reserving the proportioned amounts due to the bishops and the Conference fund. The amount collected for the bishop shall be paid to the presiding elder each quarter, and he shall forward the same to Dr. Redford, at Nashville.

THE FOOTSTEPS OF DECAY.

The following is a translation from an ancient Spanish poem, which, says the Edinburg Review, is surpassed by nothing with which we are acquainted in the Spanish language, except the "Ode of Louis de Leon."

Oh! let the soul its slumbers break,
Arouse its senses, and awake
To see how soon
Life, in its glories, glides away
And the stern footsteps of decay
Come stealing on.

And while we view the rolling tide,
Down which our flowing minutes glide
Away so fast,
Let us the present hour employ,
And deem each future dream a joy
Already past.

Let no vain hope deceive the mind;
No happier let us hope to find
To-morrow than to-day;
Our golden dreams of yore were bright;
Like them the present shall delight—
Like them decay.

Our lives like hast'ning streams must be,
That into one engulfing sea
Are doomed to fall—
The sea of death, whose waves roll on
O'er king and kingdom, crown and throne,
And swallow all.

Alike the river's lordly tide,
Alike the humble rivulet's glide
To that sad wave!—
Death levels poverty and pride,
And rich and poor sleep side by side
Within the grave.

Our birth is but a starting place;
Life is the running of the race,
And death the goal.
There all our glittering toys are brought;
That path alone, of all unsought,
Is found of all.

See, then, how poor and little worth
Are all these glittering toys of earth
That lure us here—
Dreams of a sleep that death must break;
Alas! before it bids us awake
We disappear.

Long ere the damp of death can blight,
The cheek's pure glow of red and white
Has passed away;
Youth smiled and all was heavenly fair—
Age came and laid his finger there,
And where are they?

Where is the strength that spurned decay;
The step that roved so light and gay;
The heart's blithe tone?
The strength is gone, the step is slow,
And joy grows wearisome; and woe,
When age comes on!

OUR FOREIGN MISSION WORK.

MR. EDITOR: I am sad, I am mortified, at the small extent of our work in the foreign mission field. The change in the condition of the country, and the circumstances of our people, have been pleaded for not doing our duty, and then another, until we have carried this plea quite too far. I fear we shall continue it until God will have to afflict us much more to bring us to a proper sense of duty. With half the wealth our people possess, the Moravians have supported ten times our number of foreign missionaries. They have now a missionary in some foreign field for every sixty members! Compare that with our work as a church. We complain of our poverty, our losses, the hard times, and the uncertainty of the country's future, and keep our money—i. e., that which we do not want for self-indulgence and for luxuries. I would not ask for more missionary money at present than the amount the church spends for tobacco! That would maintain well fifty men in the field, with all needed auxiliaries—and yet we are poor!

I never read a letter from our noble men in China that my spirit is not stirred within me. Such men, and so neglected! Such an opening for doing good, and so little done to avail ourselves of it! Think of the influence of Brother Allen's teachings upon the minds and characters of his pupils, who are to be the future rulers in that vast country, and of the power and influence of his semi-monthly periodical, and then of his having to ask if he must give up the school, and thus lose that opportunity of doing immense good to future generations, just for want of reinforcements, while we Christians chew and smoke up the money that would send the help needed there, and laborers to other parts of the globe!

Why do not the bishops, the editors, the missionary secretaries, the presiding elders, and all, take up this subject, and sound it through the land, and in the ears of the church, until there can be no more sleeping over it than there could be over the throes of an earthquake, and until the whole Christian world becomes alive to the importance and meaning of this work?

I am inclined to the opinion that the only plan by which we shall ever move the church, and move ourselves as ministers—for we need moving as much as any class—is to have each Conference become responsible for the support for some particular man. Let each of our larger Conferences take up and support each a missionary. Let the membership in that Conference understand that he looks to and depends upon them alone.

Where a Conference is not able, for the present, to bear such expense, let two unite upon a man. Under such an arrangement we should have special and strong grounds of appeal to our people—should have information and communications from that missionary to the church in that Conference, to lay before them, from time to time, to stimulate them. Then our people would become better educated upon the meaning and value of missions in ten years than they will under the present regime in fifty. There would be no lack of money, for no Conference would allow its missionary to want. Let us prove this plan, or something better, soon, or we shall be plague-stricken.

THE FELICIANAS.—No. II.

BY MARY S. WALL.

Clinton was named, as I have heard, after a Methodist preacher, the Rev. Thomas Clinton, a man with a small body, but with a heart and soul as large as humanity and Christ's kingdom can make it.

Jackson, Louisiana, was named after the old hero of New Orleans, and some forty years ago there was a set of "fast" young men around the town, who were a proverb for reckless doings. The surveyor who was laying off the ground for the town of Clinton thought it might "change the luck" to name the new town after a preacher. So he set up his "Jacob's staff," and said: "Let us call this town after the little man who preached here last Sunday;" and so we live in Clinton. When we had time and heart for fun Clinton had another name, which was given us by the witty author of "The Harp of a Thousand Strings," I think. Before the war a great many Germans lived in Clinton, and did a good share of the business here. There was a young man who came to town, calling himself H. Noble Clay, and said he was a nephew or first cousin of the great Harry of the West. He took board at the best boarding house, and "took" all the Whigs in. Every one was delighted with the noble Clay—Mr. Thousand Strings as well as anybody. Well, we were all sold. The man's name was not Clay. He left to "adjust an affair of honor" near Vicksburg, and telegraphed—to a "friend" here—eighty words. I had too much delicacy of feeling to ask who paid for that message. After the illusion was over Mr. H. T. S. wrote a history of the encounter, and called the book "The New Jerusalem," which is one of the names of Clinton. The piece is very witty and amusing to those who know the parties, the circumstances and the place. To tell the truth, we are a little inclined to be gullable, or we used to be.

There has been a railroad from Clinton to Port Hudson for the last twenty-eight years. During that time, I think, only two persons have lost their lives on it. We never went very fast on our railroad. Ladies used to get out and gather jessamines or blackberries—you understand: the cars would run off the track. I went to Port Hudson while it was occupied by Confederate troops, so called. The cars ran off the track when we were about three miles from Port Hudson, and could not be gotten on again that day. So some seven or eight of us ladies had to walk to the camps of our friends. Just before the war we had a fine engine and a very comfortable passenger car; but they are among the wrecks which lay along our strands. Now there are "horse cars," drawn by mules, and it is wonderful to see the freight that comes on these cars, drawn by two mules. A long time ago there was a long bridge on the railroad, which was considered unsafe. The railroad men would muzzle the old engine, the passengers would get out and find a foot passage across the ravine, while a "man and a brother," alias "a negro fellow," would go over the bridge, and when the concern got near would catch it, and all would get in. Fact! A man was once overtaken by the cars, as he was walking toward Clinton. The conductor, feeling sociable or polite, asked him if he "would not get up and ride to town." "No, I thank you. I am in a hurry!"

Many Felicianians will never forget the morning when our first two companies left here on the cars. About a thousand people waited for two hours at the depot to see the cars leave with their precious freight. At last the farewells were said, the officers had come, all was ready, and the whistle sounded! It was one of those supreme hours in life which makes people of very different views and feelings akin. My eyes took in the whole scene, but my whole being was concentrated on a black-eyed boy of seventeen years, who held in his hand a magnificent bouquet. His eyes were bright with enthusiasm. I see it all now, but the phantasms that cheered us then have all been swept away by the remorseless scythe of destiny. One more long, loud whistle. Each heart stood still, then gave one bound, and wails of sorrow rose as the train bore away the brave loved ones. Tears rolled down manly cheeks. The time came to us all when tears were harder to come.

Port Hudson will have a place in story, for there was history made there. But it has no settled population, and the poor hotels at Port Hudson are a proverb. I had heard people in 1853, who had been detained there, speak of a book that served to while away the time in the Valentine House. The book was called "Leaflets of Memory."—When I went to Port Hudson, in 1860, there, in another hotel, was the book, "Leaflets of Memory," to amuse me.

There is as marked a difference between the inhabitants of Jackson, Clinton and Bayou Sara as there is in the people of different duchies in Europe. The people near Bayou Sara used to seem to feel that they were superior to Clintonians and Jackson folks. Jacksonians felt that they had the college, and could lay some claim to literature. We Clinton folks thought we had the court house and the lawyers, and were business people. But God bless the people of Feliciana, east, west, north and south! We are all brethren and sisters in sorrow, humble waiters on God's will, staunch supporters of what we think to be right. We have no envyings now.

There are three church houses in Clinton—Baptist, Methodist and Presbyterian. The Catholics worship in the Town Hall, and the Episcopalians have service once a month in the Methodist meeting house.—There is more Christian kindness between the different denominations in Clinton than is common in most other places. The day of our last sacrament we had three Baptists, two Episcopalians and some Presbyterians to commune with us. The Methodist is the banner church for Christian liberality here, as elsewhere.

LETTER FROM CHINA.

We have received the following from the ex-publisher of the Jackson Methodist, for which we return our thanks.

THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN ROMAN CATHOLICS AND PROTESTANTS IN CHINA.

SHANGHAI, China, Sept. 15, 1868.

The number of Roman Catholics around us is not accurately known. Mass is said morning and evening, and on Sabbath but the Sabbath is never kept as a day of rest or worship of the true God. As far as any one can see, there is nothing to distinguish them from the heathen around them, except that they do not worship the tablets of their ancestors. They plead, as for their not keeping the Sabbath, that the pope has, in his great mercy to them on account of their poverty, absolved them from all guilt and sin in the matter. The Romish priests all shave their heads and dress in the Chinese costume. It is very rare for one to speak with a Protestant, and never communicate.—They keep their work and progress to themselves; but woe unto the Protestant native convert who falls into their hands. One of our Baptist brethren has lost two or three in this way. They persuade them we are heretics, and will not be saved, and, strange to say, they succeed in convincing some to believe that when they connect themselves with the Romish church that then and there alone are they safe. And thus they have succeeded in deluding some and poisoning their minds, and now they rejoice in their vain hope of safety and their happy escape from certain destruction, as they are now taught. They have the boys in their schools taught Latin, in order to prepare them for service in the church. Their churches are large and commodious, but no seats—simply mats of straw for worshipers to kneel upon. Men and women take different sides of the church. As you enter you see pictures of saints all around you, with incense and candles burning, and worshipers at each. In one corner of the church is a fine picture of the Virgin Mary, and a number of Chinese represented as bowing before her. The infant Saviour is in her arms. A tablet to the emperor is often seen near the altar, in order that he too may be worshiped among the rest. They do not open their doors to all Chinese, as the Protestants do, and they never distribute the Bible, and always burn the Protestants' Bibles and tracts whenever they can. They do not openly preach and instruct, as do the Protestants. They are secret in all their operations, working in the dark and keeping themselves from observation. The Protestant church preach openly and desire the people to examine for themselves. Romish priests tell their converts that they are the true church, in which union prevails, and that there are divisions and contentions in the Protestant church.—The Romish priest in China does not lay himself open to discussion; but if he meets you he passes quickly by or turns his head in another direction. In the Ten Commandments the second is blotted out, and the tenth is divided to supply the deficiency. There is a very great similarity between the customs of the Roman Catholics and the Buddhist religion. The Chinese seem to think there is great similarity between them in their lives and conduct. I will mention some of the points in which they are similar.

Romish priests never marry, nor do the Buddhist priests. The former seclude themselves in monasteries, and the habits of each while there are the same. They each have and use what they call holy water. They both count their beads and repeat prayers. They fast and forbid meats. They both say mass for the dead, and worship the relics of departed saints. They use incense and candles, and also have ringing of bells, and deliver the spirits of the departed from purgatory by repeating long prayers and a long routine of endless ceremonies; but neither ever do so gracious an act without being well paid in hard cash. They both use a dead language, and pretend to perform miracles. Huc, who traveled in China, observed the similarity and said: "Buddhism certainly has a mixture of truth with the holy church." Another Romanist says: "The devil has imitated the mother church to scandalize her."

The change is so slight from one to the other that the Chinese sacrifice but little in laying aside one to take up the other. Indeed the change is so slight that they can not in every instance perceive that they have given up anything. As to the worship of their ancestors, the Romish priests wink at it. Their main object is to swell their numbers, and if they succeed in baptizing a man they consider him saved. More by and by.

INDIAN MISSION CONFERENCE.

The Indian Mission Conference was held at Boggy Depot, October 15-19—Bishop Doggett president and John H. Carr secretary. No preachers were admitted on trial or into full connection. Walker Carey, Walter A. Duncan, Samuel Checote, were readmitted. Jesse H. Walker was received by transfer. Simon P. Willis was ordained elder. John H. Carr, located. John Page, withdrawn. Members, two thousand three hundred and seventy-two—increase, five hundred and sixteen. Baptized infants, two hundred and seventy-four; adults, four hundred and seventy-one; $147.10 contributed for missions. The next session is to be held at Ockmulgee, Creek Nation.

A WATERSPOUT ON THE PLAINS.—A terrific waterspout and whirlwind was seen by a party in Wyoming Territory on the 19th ultimo. The storm arose in the northwest, and its first premonition was a furious wind. In a few minutes a whirlwind was seen approaching, and the party abandoned their wagons and took to the hills for security. In a moment after the force of the storm struck, and hailstones in size from a partridge's and hen's egg commenced falling in endless quantities. The whirlwind, as it swept across the Big Sandy river, left the bed of the stream dry for a distance of three or four hundred yards up and down the bed of the river. The waterspout which had thus been formed then spread as it ascended until the whole heavens were darkened by the expanding spray, which seemed at length to lose itself among the clouds. The spectacle is described as one of most terrific grandeur. Men, women and children fled to the adjacent hills for protection, while the horses and mules flew hither and thither in a bewildering manner until the force of this outburst of nature's anger had passed. One hailstone of average size measured five inches in circumference. This stone was the most wonderful as well as terrifying which any of the party—all old travelers in the mountains—had ever seen.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

TALLASSEE, Ala., Nov. 5, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: Another good and great man has fallen by the ruthless hand of death—but to rise again. Brother S. J. KIDD, aged sixty-four years, died August 31, 1868, in full assurance of a better land.

About forty years ago he found peace with God in believing in the virtues of Christ's death. Since that time he maintained Christian integrity and lived a life of usefulness. The Methodist Episcopal Church South, of which he was a member from the date of his conversion to the day of his death, was truly the church of his choice. To her, in discipline and doctrine, he was admirably true. More than once I have heard him in prayer meeting read and sing the excellent hymn in our hymn book, commencing

"I love thy kingdom, Lord,
The house of thine abode,
The church our blest Redeemer bought
With his own precious blood."

And he would get happy in thus being privileged to give expression to his sentiment by the sentiment of the poet. Brother Kidd was never negligent concerning any interest of the church, but always awake to his duty, and punctual to perform it. He was always willing to pay largely of his substance to take care of the financial interests of the church, and he did it cheerfully. He was one of the most liberal men I ever knew. He once said to me that he was going to give a certain amount for the support of the ministry. I replied: "You are not able to give so liberally." He then remarked: "The church must live, for I cannot live at all without her." He was not rich in this world's goods, and yet he gave much to the cause of Christ and provided well for his family.

He served the church for many years as a steward and class leader, and he was ever punctual, faithful and useful as such. He was also for several years before his death a Sunday school superintendent at Pleasant Grove, (his own church,) and was truly one of the best. All the children at that place lament very greatly his departure, for really they loved him as a father. His place there will be very hard to fill. In his family he was kind and affectionate. He was possessed of powers socially and mentally to make them pleasant and happy in his presence. On Thursday night, before he died, while patiently enduring the most intense suffering, he said to his much-loved wife: "The fullness I now realize in the atonement of Christ I have never felt before." Concerning the future or anything else he had but little to say afterward. Early on Monday morning he breathed his last, leaving behind him, as unmistakable testimony of his eternal felicity, a consistent Christian life of forty years' length.

He lived not to himself, neither did he die to himself. The church at Pleasant Grove and the surrounding community will not soon forget his labors of love among them.—And though he is dead, his works are living examples.

All the itinerant preachers who knew Brother Kidd very highly appreciated him, for he was the preacher's friend, and his house the preacher's home. His body lies in the grave yard at Pleasant Grove, to await the sounding of Gabriel's trump, to raise him with all who are dead in Christ, and come forth to life immortal, to fall no more.

May the grace of God comfort the bereaved relatives.

THE GUESTS OF THE HEART.

Soft falls through the gathering twilight
The rain from the dripping eaves,
And stirs with a tremulous rustle
The dead and the dying leaves;
While afar in the midst of the shadows
I hear the sweet voices of bells,
Come borne on the wind of the autumn,
That fitfully rises and swells.

They call and they answer each other—
They answer and mingle again—
As the deep and the shrill in an anthem
Make harmony still in their strain;
As the voices of sentinels mingle
In mountainous regions of snow,
Till from hill-top to hill-top a chorus
Floats down to the valleys below.

The shadows, the fire-light of even,
The sound of the rain's distant chime,
Come bringing, with rain softly dropping,
Sweet thoughts of a shadowy time—
The slumberous sense of seclusion,
From storm and intruders aloof,
We feel when we hear in the midnight
The patter of rain on the roof.

When the spirit goes forth in its yearnings,
To take all its wanderers home;
Or, afar in the regions of fancy,
Delights on swift pinions to roam,
I quietly sit by the fire-light—
The fire-light so bright and so warm—
For I know that those only who love me
Will seek me through shadow and storm.

But should they be absent this evening,
Should even the household depart—
Deserted I should not be lonely;
There still would be guests in my heart.
The faces of friends that I cherish,
The smile, and the glance, and the tone,
Will haunt me wherever I wander;
And thus I am never alone.

With those who have left for behind them
The joys and sorrows of time—
Who sing the sweet songs of the angels
In a purer and holier clime!
Then darkly, O evening of autumn,
Your rain and your shadows may fall;
My loved and my lost ones you bring me—
My heart holds a feast with them all.

SHREVEPORT DISTRICT MEETING

Ms. Editor: The district meeting for the Shreveport district, Louisiana Conference, was held at Pleasant Hill, De Soto parish, commencing on Friday, September 18, 1868, and closing on Saturday, the 19th.

The Rev. Benjamin F. Alexander, presiding elder of the district, presided.

The various interests of the church came under consideration, and such action was taken as seemed to be demanded in the premises.

STATE OF THE CHURCH.

Rev. John Pipes, chairman of the committee, reported that in every charge where there has been a pastor entirely devoted to the duties of the ministry the work is in a healthy spiritual state, and that vital godliness is the result of the use of the means which God has ordained, such as reading the Scriptures, closet and family prayer, and a regular and faithful attendance upon the institutions of the church. Several of the appointments were represented as in a hopeful and improving condition, while others, from a variety of circumstances, were experiencing a spiritual dearth.

The following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That our preachers urge upon their people the necessity of a diligent use of all the means of grace, especially of daily Scripture reading and of daily closet and family prayer, and of the adoption of some system of holy living, by which each one may attain unto a high degree of spirituality.

SABBATH SCHOOLS.

E. F. Pressley, Esq., chairman of the committee, reported eleven Sabbath schools in the bounds of the district, with an average attendance of four hundred and ninety-three pupils, and that they were represented to be generally in a prosperous condition. The committee express regret that so small a number of the youth of the district avail themselves of the great advantages presented by the institution, and recommend that the subject be more earnestly and constantly impressed upon the public mind, and that prompt and energetic attention be especially paid to the procuring of suitable books as an important means of facilitating the cause.

BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

Rev. B. F. Alexander, chairman of the committee, after alluding in strong terms to the great falling off in the dissemination of our literature, to the indisposition of the preachers to engage therein, and to the many evils resulting therefrom, mentions three causes as having recently contributed to this end, viz: The want of mail facilities, the scarcity of money, and the very high prices at which the books of the Publishing House are sold. The first two of these obstacles will doubtless soon disappear, and it is hoped that the book agent will find it practicable and to the interest of his establishment to cheapen the price of the publications which bear its imprint. The following resolutions were reported and adopted:

Resolved, That it is expected of every preacher in charge of a work to use his utmost endeavors to have the literature of the church circulated among his people.

Resolved, That the Louisiana Annual Conference be requested to use its influence with those in charge of our publishing interests to have the price of their publications reduced, as far as possible.

Resolved, That when a member of the church within the bounds of this Conference and district is able to take a paper, it is clearly his duty, as well as his interest, to take the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and the church has the right to expect he will do so.

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to solicit subscribers for the ADVOCATE during this meeting.

MISSIONS AND CHURCH EXTENSION.

Rev. J. M. Franklin, chairman of the committee, reported the following resolutions, which were adopted:

Resolved, That a circuit should be formed, commencing at the south side of the Anacoco circuit, and extending south as far as —— Creek, twelve miles below Sugartown, and comprising the region of country between the Sabine and Calcasieu rivers, and should be supplied with a preacher.

Resolved, That the region of country south of Kingston and west of Bayou Pierre should be annexed to the Pleasant Hill circuit.

Resolved, That the Manny mission should be made a circuit, and that the preacher appointed thereto should extend the work in a northwest direction, embracing as much of the territory lying on the Sabine river as possible.

EDUCATION.

The committee—Rev. J. Sterling Lane, chairman—urges the church at this auspicious moment, to come up to the requirements of the age, to lay hold of all the resources at her disposal, and wield them vigorously in favor of mental and moral improvement. The committee further declares that our tried and time-honored institution, the Mansfield Female College, should be fully sustained, that the interests of Methodism and the country require this, and that under its present administration it is worthy of all patronage. Pierce and Paine College, owing to the results of the late war and the unprecedented failure of crops, has suspended for the present; but it is hoped that it may yet be put under way, and accomplish much good.

FINANCE.

Rev. Charles B. Stuart, chairman. The assessments for the ministers are represented to have been liberal and satisfactory, but the amounts in no case had been half collected. On some of the appointments very little, indeed, had been done. The ministers have, in the main, notwithstanding the limited support they have received, stood bravely by their work, and are entitled to the thanks of the church for the self-sacrificing spirit they have exhibited. The failure to pay has resulted, in great part, from the almost absolute failure of the cotton crop last year, and the increased poverty of the people induced thereby. It is believed that during another year the financial condition of this section will be much better, and that the people can and will contribute more liberally and more promptly to the support of the ministry, and to all the enterprises of the church.

The plan of finance which was adopted last year is stated to have been faithfully put in practice—at least in its main features has been found to work well, and no change is recommended.

The following is the plan of finance for the Shreveport district:

First. The stewards at the first quarterly meeting, or sooner if possible, are to meet and ascertain the amount required for a comfortable and liberal support of the preacher in charge of the circuit or station, the amount to be paid to the presiding elder, and the amount to the bishops' fund; and to assign to each society an equitable proportion, according to its ability.

Second. The stewards are then forthwith to assess each member of every society the amount he shall pay; and the question shall be asked him, "Will you abide this assessment?" If he refuse he shall be requested to name the amount he is willing to give.

Third. Each society shall give an opportunity to those attending our ministry, yet not members of the church, to subscribe whatever they may think proper, and may adopt its own plan for the purpose.

Fourth. The assessment and subscription shall be collected promptly each quarter, and at the close, if any be in arrears, it should be announced in the public congregation.

Fifth. The assessments to the different members of the church are to be made known to them at such time and in such manner as the stewards may deem advisable.

CHURCHES AND PARSONAGES.

The committee—Rev. Jno. Pipes, chairman—reported that out of the twenty-five church buildings in the district, only seven are secured by proper titles; and recommended the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the presiding elder of the district, and the several preachers in charge, use every possible means to secure proper titles to all our church property.

There are only two parsonages in the district, and the preachers are requested to agitate the importance of having one upon every circuit and station.

RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION OF THE COLORED PEOPLE.

The committee—Rev. R. H. Adair, chairman—reports that there seems to be an unwillingness in this class to submit to the discipline of our church. They regard such submission as inconsistent with their freedom. Very little has been done for them during the year, and the prospect is unpromising for the immediate future. But the brethren are urged not to grow weary in well doing, and to make use of every opportunity to give them sound instruction. It may be that when the excitement of the present shall subside, they will listen with more interest and profit to the gospel as dispensed by us.

TEMPERANCE.

The committee—Rev. John Pipes, chairman—expresses the opinion that the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage is a wide-spread and destructive evil, a prolific source of political corruption, a fearful barrier in the way of progress, and the cause of infinite harm to the church. It is regretted that such little interest is manifested, and that so little has been done to stay the progress of the evil. Our preachers are urged to enforce the rules of the Discipline, and to recommend total abstinence alike by precept and example.

PUBLICATION OF THE MINUTES.

A resolution was adopted requesting the preachers in charge, in the district, to raise funds for the publication of the minutes of the meeting for the next year.

Rev. Charles B. Stuart, Colonel Henry G. Hall, David A. Blackshear and J. W. Franklin were elected representatives to the Louisiana Conference.

It was resolved that hereafter the district meeting should convene on Thursday, and continue the remainder of the week on which it assembles.

Keachi was selected as the next place of meeting.

The members were cordially and bountifully entertained by the citizens of Pleasant Hill and its vicinity, for which a vote of thanks was returned.

LAZINESS IN BIBLE READING.—The following confession and prayer by Rev. Dr. Thomas Fuller, it is to be feared, covers the case of many others besides himself:

"Lord, I discover an arrant laziness in my soul; for when I am to read a chapter in the Bible, before I begin it, I look where it endeth; and if it endeth not on the same side, I cannot keep my hand from turning over the leaf, to measure the length thereof on the other side. If it swell to many verses I begin to grudge.

"Surely my heart is not rightly affected. Were I truly hungry after heavenly food I would not complain of meat. Scourge, Lord, this laziness of soul. Make the reading of thy word not a penance, but a pleasure upon me. Teach me, that as among heaps of gold, all equally pure, that is best which is biggest, so I may esteem that chapter in thy word the best which is the longest."

TO THE PEOPLE OF LOUISIANA.

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 16, 1868.

The Campaign Committee, on behalf of the Democratic party, cannot refrain from congratulating the people of Louisiana on the result of the recent election in this State—a result that demonstrates, beyond cavil, that the actual State government exists in defiance of the public opinion of the community, and that it could never have come into existence except by the fraudulent or violent suppression of the will of the people. In view of this result, the attempt of the small faction constituting the Republican party of Louisiana to claim a majority in the State, and to attribute their decisive defeat to the use of unlawful agencies by the Democratic party, constitutes only another proof of their utter recklessness of assertion and their entire disregard of facts.

In order that the country may judge of the truth, it is only necessary to point to the vote and to recite briefly the events of the canvass. In discharging this duty, the Democratic Campaign Committee will not enter into a contest of assertion with the persons who have so grossly slandered the people of Louisiana in a document purporting to be the "Address of the Republican State Campaign Committee," but will confine themselves to a statement of facts which are so notorious as to be indisputable, and which even the most practiced and accomplished masters of the art of perversion will not attempt to controvert. We may, however, without violating this rule, be permitted to state that the account given in the Radical "Address" of the effort made at an early period of the canvass to effect some arrangement for the purpose of averting collisions and disorders, is entirely incorrect; and we meet the statement of that "Address" by declaring that the responsibility for the failure of those negotiations rests entirely on the Republican committee. The fact that the Democratic party, composed of the white population of the city, and of voters accustomed to freedom, and used to the exercise of political rights, consented to a negotiation which involved the surrender of a portion of the rights which they had always enjoyed, showed the length to which they were willing to go in order to preserve the public peace; and it is a conspicuous illustration of their moderation that they made this concession at the demand of a faction composed of persons who, in the language of the Radical "Address," are "unaccustomed to the duties and responsibilities of citizenship." The effort failed, simply because the white leaders of the Radical party declined to concede anything to the demands of public opinion; because they persisted in maintaining a tone of arrogant and dictatorial authority toward the Democratic party and the people of New Orleans, evidently relying on their influence over the ignorant and aggressive masses of their party; and because they exhibited the most determined disposition to exert their usurped powers at the expense of the inalienable rights of the people of New Orleans, and in flagrant defiance of the wishes of the people of the State.

In reply, therefore, to the accusations of the Radical committee we charge that the Radical leaders, whilst they knew that peace and order was desired by the Democratic party during the canvass, were, on their own part, desirous of collisions and conflicts which might serve as a pretext for fresh calumnies against the people of Louisiana, and which might be made the basis of a claim to the fruits of an election which they knew themselves to be unable to carry at the ballot box. They assert that their powers over the negroes is unlimited, and that the black voters will obey their commands without reflection and without protest. We admit the fact. We have had convincing proofs that many of these people, "unaccustomed as they are to the duties and responsibilities of citizenship," have come to regard the white Radicals as their masters. We have seen them driven to the polls like sheep, at one election, and kept away from the polls at the next election, in obedience to commands issued from the Radical headquarters.—And we maintain, as a reasonable deduction from these admitted facts, that the Radical leaders had the power to prevent the difficulties which occurred prior to the election, and that, failing to exercise this power, they are responsible for all the disorders that took place. The accusation that the people of Louisiana view the negroes with hostility or animosity is false. The charge that they have attempted any suppression of the legal rights of any class is equally false. The enemies of the negroes are those who incite them to a struggle with the white people, in which, whenever the latter address themselves seriously to the contest, the defeat of the negroes, and the small faction which, unhappily, attempts to control them, is inevitable.

The "Address" says that "our colored citizens have sought" nothing more than "to exercise the rights bestowed on them by the laws of the United States and this State." But the "Address" omits to state that some of these assumed rights have never been recognized, and will never be recognized by the people of Louisiana, and that the attempt to enforce them was the main cause of difficulty. The people of Louisiana never recognized the right of Congress to disfranchise a portion of our citizens. They never recognized, as a rightful exercise of authority, the infamous perversion of the reconstruction laws by which nearly one-half of the white citizens were arbitrarily excluded from registration; they never recognized the right of a minority composed of intrusive strangers and emancipated serfs to usurp supremacy over a majority embracing the whole of what had always previously constituted our political community. But of the formal right of suffrage, conferred on the blacks by Congress, and perpetuated by a fraudulent and usurping convention, the white people did not attempt to deprive them. Even had they been so disposed, there was no necessity for such a course, since the white people are in a large majority in the State, and in those parishes in which there is a fair proportion of white population, the influence of the old citizens among the negroes has far greater weight than that of the five or ten or twenty intruders who may have come among them with the sole design of manipulating the negro vote for their own purpose.

The "Address" says that if the Republicans—otherwise the negroes—had voted, the Radicals would have carried the State by twenty thousand majority. Why did they not vote? Simply because the Republican State Committee instructed them to abstain from the polls, and the committee so instructed them because it knew the Democrats to be in a majority, and that a full vote would demonstrate the fraudulent character of the tenure by which they hold power in Louisiana. We assert that there was no obstacle to a peaceable election, and that every voter, black or white, could have exercised his rights without interference. The testimony on this point is overwhelming and conclusive.

To say that the Republicans were afraid to vote is a confession of weakness and cowardice which must be fatal to the pretensions of a party claiming to be in a majority—a party having possession of the State government, and of the police of New Orleans, and having had control of all the machinery of the election. To say that they refused to vote on account of difficulties which had taken place several days before, is to say that, in the serious business of a Presidential election, the Radical leaders acted more like sulky children than like reasoning men.

The "Address" says that there were eighteen thousand negro registered voters in New Orleans, and three thousand white Radicals—a total Radical strength of twenty-one thousand. There were twenty-four thousand Democratic votes cast, and these, added to twenty-one thousand, would make forty-five thousand registered voters in the city, whereas the total registration was about forty thousand. This is a specimen of the reckless and audacious statements with which the Radical committee attempt to support their cause. The Democratic vote in the whole State is about eighty thousand. The total registration is not yet reported, but it was stated by the Radical organ a few days ago to be about one hundred and forty thousand, and this is probably not far from the actual number. Hence, if every voter that abstained had cast his ballot for the Radical candidates, the Republican vote would have been only sixty thousand, and the Democratic majority would have been twenty thousand. Any reasonable estimate, based on statistics of election throughout the country, would make the full Democratic vote at least eighty-five thousand and reduce the Radical vote to about fifty-five thousand, thus showing a Democratic majority of thirty thousand. And in the face of this majority—in the face of the fact that the Democratic vote comprises the whole class which has hitherto constituted the people of Louisiana, and that the Republican vote is composed of newly enfranchised serfs, "unaccustomed to the duties and responsibilities of citizenship"—the Radical committee have the infinite assurance to claim Louisiana as a Radical State, and to charge that the Democracy achieved their victory by the use of unlawful agencies.

In dismissing the Radical committee and their "Address" from further consideration, the Campaign Committee again congratulate the people of Louisiana on their recent brilliant and decisive victory—a victory won by earnest, active work, combined with a determination, on the part of the people, to prove the fictitious nature of the claim to authority set up by the small faction calling itself the Republican party of Louisiana, and the fraudulent character of the government which that faction was enabled to impose on the State. The Campaign Committee have thoroughly appreciated the importance of this result, and they have labored to assist in assuring it with all the zeal, and energy, and activity at their command. They sincerely trust that their efforts have been as satisfactory to the people of the State as the result of the election has been decisive and encouraging.

FARM AND GARDEN.

DEEP AND SHALLOW CULTURE.

There are many soils in the world which yield fairly remunerative crops, for an indefinite number of years, (say ninety-nine,) without manure of any kind, and with only a modicum of tillage. The reason is found in the fact that these soils decompose very uniformly, by the action of plows, harrows, and weather combined, and so furnish just about as much plant-food each year as the crops require. Some of the Black Sea wheat lands are said to be of this character. Here wheat has been raised for hundreds of years without manure; the yield is very uniform and remunerative, though small. All tolerable soils contain in great abundance all the ingredients requisite to make good crops of grain, but they are not all available. By tillage, by mixing decomposing substances with the soil, and by exposing it to the action of the weather; sunlight, heat, dryness, freezing and moisture, combine to influence the decomposition and disintegration of all parts of the soil. Some soils are much more susceptible to these influences than others, and so require less tillage and less manure to produce the effects seen in other soils. The more thoroughly and the deeper the soil is stirred and exposed to the action of the weather and of manure, the more available plant-food will be annually produced from its disintegration. Manure, besides, supplies any deficiency which may exist, and enables us to obtain much more nearly maximum crops. Were the supply of ammonia which is obtained from the air abundant, a sufficient amount of ash-ingredients could be obtained from almost any fair soil, by a sufficient amount of cultivation. The problem for the farmer is, what amount of tillage he can profitably apply for any series of crops.

Tillage is really of two kinds, deep tillage and surface culture. As a rule, the deeper the soil is stirred the more will it be exposed to the action of the elements, and the more plant-food will be formed. In poor soils this is diffused through great masses, and for this reason available to but few plants. For such as feed near the surface, (wheat, for instance,) surface cultivation and manuring are usually imperative.

Very fair plowing is six inches deep, which is deep enough to plow for small grains. In plowing for other crops, if manure is abundant, or the soil rich, the soil may be gradually deepened until we reach the ordinary limit of plowing—about ten inches. We go below this with the subsoil plow, and simply loosen and let the air into the soil below, when it is plowed, which is an exceedingly beneficial operation, and equally advantageous upon shallow and deep-plowed land. Where deep, thorough drainage is practiced, which virtually extends some of the effects sought by tillage (namely, exposure of the soil to the action of the air) to a depth of several feet, the plants quickly respond. The effects of tillage, however, go on most rapidly on the surface, and here it is that it is desirable to do the most work. For surface culture we have the harrow, in all its varieties, adapted to pulverizing and stirring the ground to a depth of about three inches. In this country our assortment of scarifiers is small, but in Great Britain and upon the Continent many different kinds are used, under the name of cultivators, scarifiers, clod crushers, harrows, etc., which are used in bare fields. The variety of surface workers, (horse-hoes, cultivators, etc.,) to be used among the growing crops, is well-nigh endless. These obviously serve a double purpose, and not only stir the soil, but kill weeds and give fresh earth to the plants, to some extent.

Deep and shallow tillage are not incompatible on the same land. In fact, the only really thorough culture consists of both; and where the soil is in a fair state of fertility, and will bear good crops of clover or corn, the system followed should always be deep breaking and shallow after tillage, with surface manuring when small grains and grass form part of the rotation.—Am. Agricult'st

NOTICE.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SESSION.

Will the presiding elders please forward to me the names of both the preachers and lay delegates of their districts who expect to be present at the Louisiana Conference, to be held on the sixteenth of December next, in New Iberia?

Respectfully,

A. E. GOODWYN.

THE WORK OF GOD IN BALTIMORE.—A revival of uncommon interest and power is in progress at Winan's church, under the pastoral labors of Dr. Huston.

The new church on Fayette street is progressing favorably and will be one of the largest in our denomination.

Brother Canter has received about one hundred into the church since Conference. Revivals are progressing in many of our city churches.—Episcopal Methodist.

SOME ten miles north of Salt Lake City is a boiling sulphur spring. It gushes out in a great volume at the foot of a limestone rock, from an aperture as large as a hogshead, and a stream that would fill a tube a foot square. The water is very strong, and you can perceive its odor a long time before you reach the spring. It is boiling hot, and strolling Mormons often cook eggs in it.

REVIVAL IN RICHMOND.—We are gratified to learn that a gracious revival is in progress at the Centenary church in the city of Richmond, Virginia, under the pastoral charge of the Rev. Dr. Head.—Episcopal Methodist.

THE purest and sweetest Cod Liver Oil in the world is Hazard & Caswell's, manufactured by them upon the sea shore from fresh and healthy livers; it is perfectly pure and sweet. Patients who have once taken it can take no other. After years of experimenting physicians have decided it better than any of the brown oils. Sold by all the druggists.

THE MIND OF CHRIST.

This is described in Scripture as something to be possessed by the Christian. "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus." "We have the mind of Christ." It is something, therefore, which is to be in us, that we are to have.—Clearly it is more than the precepts and teachings, the doctrines and will of the Saviour. Nor is it the Holy Spirit as the gift of Christ to the believing soul. It is the temper, spirit and disposition of Jesus—his spiritual nature and inward life, and his affections in their depth and purity.

In the mind of Christ there is breadth and expansion to the outermost limits of sympathy and love. We scarcely think of Him as imbued with what was narrow or peculiar in Judaism, or in any system or region. His charity was not limited by any local boundaries, but stretched to the ends of the earth. In Him "there is neither Jew nor Greek, male nor female, bond or free." The Saviour of all, his mind embraced all, and overthrew the barriers of political and religious bigotry.—He loved all and died for all. Here is something Christ-like which ought to be in us. The believing soul must be delivered from narrowness, whether of a political or religious character, so that love may embrace all. Nothing is more unchristian than sectional and sectarian hate and bitterness. The Jew and the Greek are sunk and lost in the Christian.

Consider the humility and condescension of Jesus—meek and lowly in heart, making himself of no reputation, and becoming obedient unto the death of the Cross. This is a striking aspect of the "mind that was in Christ Jesus." His utter unselfishness, entire self-sacrifice, and perfect devotion to the mission of infinite love, are wonderful. It is not possible to measure the extent of his voluntary humiliation, and his meekness of spirit under provocation. Remarkable as is the humility of Christ, it is in this respect, especially, that his mind is to be ours. The practical lesson of the incarnation and of the divinity is the enforcement of this grace upon us.

We might further enlarge upon those qualities in Christ which most impress upon us. His perfect submission under suffering, his patience under the contradiction of sinners, and his victory over temptation are constantly meeting us in his history. We must also think of the pleasures and blessings of the Saviour's mind. We read of his joy as present in the midst of his earthly sorrows; and he speaks of a peace which was his. Where he speaks of "my joy," and again of "my peace," we are let into the inner sanctuary of Christ's mind.—What they were we may not be able to tell, but they were a part of the mind of Christ, just as much as love, humility and patience. These, too, are for us—"That my joy might remain in you," and "My peace I give unto you." If other graces of the Saviour are to be sought, so are his joy and peace. These, when possessed, will at least satisfy, and they will be a happiness above all that the natural man has any conception of.

In all its features of spirituality and moral excellence, the mind of Christ is attainable by us. "To be conformed to the image of his Son" is the grand predestination of the divine wisdom and goodness. Such as Christ was, must we be here, if we are to be like him, and to see him as he is in heaven. We know no higher nor truer standard of privilege and attainment than this. All possible holiness and perfection are in it, and all that can be known and felt in religion. The Holy Ghost must work this mind in us, and perfect and complete it. Then the Christian truly puts on the Lord Jesus, and then he begins to know the love of Christ, and to be filled with all the fullness of God.

This must be accepted as the believer's qualification to know Christ and his doctrines. He must have the mind of Christ before he can discern the things of the Spirit, and understand and love the doctrines and precepts. To have the mind of Christ is the mark of our Christianity. To be without the tempers and disposition of Jesus, is to be without Christ our Saviour. Nothing can supply this infallible sign of our acceptance and genuine religious life. This is the standard to be lifted up, and to it are we to press. Above all sinful men and prophets and apostles we are to look off to Christ.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

FIRST DAY.

This Conference met in its fifty-third session on the 19th, in this place—Vicksburg. Bishop H. H. Kavanaugh opened the Conference by reading the II Timothy, 2d chapter, and singing the 272d hymn, "And are we yet alive," and prayer. C. G. Andrews was elected secretary; J. A. B. Jones, assistant secretary; L. R. Redding was elected statistical secretary. Upon the call of the roll nearly all of the oldest members answered. A committee of three was appointed to nominate the standing committees. The names of the lay delegates from the several districts were reported, of whom the following were present: Natchez district: A. T. Norwood, L. K. Barber. Vicksburg district: Thomas Reed, William J. Lum, R. D. Howe. Yazoo district: Stephen Johnson. Greenville district: W. H. Worthington. Starkville district: S. D. Murff, Joseph Wise, Joseph Eubanks. Paulding district: J. M. Applewhite, T. C. Clark.—Brookhaven district: E. G. Cook. Jackson district: J. C. Kittrell, J. T. Cameron, J. B. Robertson.—Brandon district: J. E. Watts.

The Conference then received communications from the secretary of the Home Missionary Society, from the secretary of the Foreign Missionary Society, and the Southern Methodist Publishing House, which were referred appropriately. A financial committee, consisting of one minister and one layman from each district, was appointed to report a financial plan to the Conference.

The following persons were recommended ON TRIAL by the Conference: Robert Bennet Seeders, from Percy Creek circuit; Charles B. Galloway, from Canton station. It was also announced that Dr. George W. Stewart was recommended by the Madisonville circuit, but that he had died in the triumphs of faith a few weeks since. John W. Pointer was admitted as an elder from the Bible Christian Church. Jacob D. Murff was admitted on trial upon recommendation by the Kosciusko circuit.

Parmenas Howard, R. J. Jones, Sr., and Hardie Brown were readmitted.

SECOND DAY.

The vacancies in the Joint Board of Finance were filled as follows: E. R. Strickland, J. C. Kittrell, L. K. Barber, Stephen Johnson, John T. Cameron, Jesse Thompson, Joseph Wise, E. G. Cook and J. C. Carlisle.

The visiting committee to the Woodville Female Seminary presented a report, which was duly referred. The Rev. P. G. Reynolds was readmitted from the Congregational Methodist Church.

The second question, Who remain on trial? was taken up, and L. P. Meador, E. W. Simmons, W. T. Beall and T. J. Hutson were continued. Prof. A. B. Stark, editor of the Home Monthly, and the editor of this ADVOCATE were introduced to the Conference.

The following persons were admitted into full connection: A. B. Stewart and W. F. Glenn.

In answer to the eighth question, the following local preachers were elected DEACONS: John B. Holloman, elected previously, Sidney S. Sledge, Warren C. Black, William P. Pierce, elected previously, George Morrison, Daniel W. McDonald and Tillery Walden; and the following colored men: Samuel Harris, Bartley Turnor, Reuben Pope, Frank Ambrose and Isaac Warren.

The preachers and the bishop are in fine health. Nearly every man looks as if he had been paid in full, and received a new suit of clothes just before leaving for Conference. This, we suppose, is hardly the case, but it illustrates the general disposition Methodist preachers have to "put a cheerful courage on." They have come out of a financial wilderness to Conference. But in this direction there is hope. All report that symptoms of renewed life are to be found in its most sterile regions.

THIRD DAY.

We copy the proceedings as reported by the Vicksburg Times:

At nine A. M. Bishop Kavanaugh called the Conference to order. Religious services by Rev. Thomas Nixon.

Minutes of yesterday read and approved.

Prof. A. B. Stark, editor of Home Monthly, addressed those present, representing and urging the claims of his magazine.

Rev. R. J. Harp, agent of Branch of Methodist Southern Publishing House in New Orleans, entered industriously upon the discharge of his duties.

A resolution was offered, during the examination of ministerial character, that the lay members have a right to vote on all questions not involving the character of a minister on trial upon charges preferred. During the discussion of this resolution, Dr. W. H. Watkins and W. T. J. Sullivan submitted the following question for judicial decision: Can lay members of the Conference vote upon a question involving the character and relations of a preacher of this Conference? The bishop called J. G. Jones to the chair, and retired to prepare an answer, which he read to the Conference, that they cannot vote.

The Joint Board of Finance made a report, which was adopted, and the Board requested the privilege of publishing the plan, and addressing a circular letter to the various societies of the Conference. Request granted.

H. H. Montgomery reported the various amounts collected for J. W. Lambuth in China.

A committee was appointed to collect funds and publish the minutes of the Conference. E. G. Cook, Thomas Reed and W. P. Barton, committee to collect; and C. G. Andrews and L. R. Redding, to publish.

A committee was appointed on the division of the Conference, to report at the next Conference.

A report from the Fraternal Messengers to the Methodist Protestant Conference was called for. H. F. Johnson made a report, and read a letter from Rev. E. G. Taylor. Report was received.

Resolution adopted, That we entertain the kindliest feelings toward our brethren of the Methodist Protestant Church of Mississippi, and that we invite them to continued fraternal intercourse, and that we hold ourselves in readiness to respond to acts of theirs tending to a union.

Rev. Benjamin Jones was appointed Fraternal Messenger, and Rev. H. F. Johnson, alternate, to meet their next Conference.

FIFTH DAY.

The Rev. T. Taylor addressed the Conference in behalf of the religious interests of the colored people. The Conference of colored preachers in connection with the Methodist Episcopal Church South, to be held in Hazlehurst, is appointed to meet on the 7th of January. Brother Taylor gave an interesting statement of the organization of the Kentucky and the Memphis Colored Conferences upon the Disciplinary basis. Already some forty colored preachers are in communication with Bro. Taylor in the bounds of this Conference, who, with those in the bounds of the Louisiana Conference, will be in attendance.

The examination of character occupied a large part of the day. The Rev. R. J. Harp addressed the Conference upon the prospects and importance of the publishing interests of the church.

SIXTH DAY.

Jackson, Mississippi, was selected as the place of holding the next Conference. The Committee on Memoirs reported obituary notices of the Rev. Peter Green, the Rev. Hardy Mullens and the Rev. Thomas Owen. One of these has already appeared in the ADVOCATE, from the pen of the Rev. J. B. Jones. The two others are sent with this. This most impressive part of the business of the session received too hasty a consideration. O how I longed to hear those preachers tell their own personal knowledge and estimate of their deceased brethren. But there was no time. All was hurried through by the pressure of the last hours of the session. The services of two score years are barely acknowledged by a pause of ten minutes, and the occasion is not improved for impressing the young men of the Conference with the noble qualities and labors of these saints triumphant. If the Saturday afternoon of each session were devoted to the memory of those who may have died during the year, and the Saturday night to a Conference love-feast, it would greatly advance the spirituality and facilitate the business of the Conference.

Since writing the above the Conference has resolved to request its presiding bishop hereafter to set apart a day for hearing the report of the Committee on Memoirs.

The Committee on the Religious Interests of the Colored People presented their report, which is herewith sent for publication. The address of the Joint Board of Committee on Finance, "To the Stewards and Members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in the Mississippi Conference," is worthy of the most careful study. It emanates from some of the ablest laymen in the State, and is a valuable contribution toward the solution of the greatest and most insolubla problem of the day: how to support the gospel and rescue from the grasp of covetousness property which has been already consecrated to God.

Thomas Reed, Esq., gave notice of the organization of a Ministerial Education Association to assist in the education of young men who expect to devote their lives to the ministry. The officers of this society are Governor Benjamin G. Humphreys, John C. Kittrell, John T. Cameron, Thomas Reed and William Worthington. A desire to elevate the pulpit is the moving impulse of these noble laymen. The report of the Committee on Education was made. The institutions of learning under the patronage of the Conference received its most serious consideration, and it was determined to heartily support and recommend to the patronage of our people the Centenary College, the Whitworth Female College, the Sharon Female College, the Madison Male College, the Woodville Female Seminary, and the Feliciana Female School.

The Conference adjourned to meet in an EVENING SESSION.

At seven P. M. the chairman of the Joint Board of Finance reported the following apportionment of the bishop's allowance, and the widows' and orphans' and superannuate claims to the several Conference districts:

	Conf. col.	Bishop's.
Vicksburg district	$750 00	$225 00
Jackson district	750 00	225 00
Yazoo district	1000 00	225 00
Starkville district	500 00	100 00
Brandon district	300 00	150 00
Paulding district	250 00	85 00
Brookhaven district	500 00	125 00
Woodville district	500 00	135 00
Clinton district	250 00	80 00
Greenville district	250 00	80 00

The report on the Sunday school cause was read. One sentence is worthy of special emphasis: "The shepherd that neglects the lambs will soon have no flock to feed."

This session has been full of good Christian fellowship. Resolutions of thanks were passed unanimously: "That we tender our grateful acknowledgments to the citizens of Vicksburg for their generous hospitality during the session of the Conference." They were richly deserved, for the preachers have been entertained in a princely manner. I found a delightful home in the family of Mr. James W. Gray, and I highly appreciate that good providence which has enriched me with these new and generous friends.—May the Lord remember them in that day!

The bishop addressed the Conference and a small audience—for the night was inclement—in sober, eloquent words, vindicating the wisdom of that system which, for one hundred years, has supplied the people of this country with a godly and effective ministry. There is no sublimer moment in a man's history than that in which he obtains, at the hands of a Methodist bishop, an appointment to the cure of souls. It is worth traveling a thousand miles to witness these itinerant men of faith receive "their awful charge." The song, the prayer of that moment, ring through the soul for many days.

In conclusion, the Conference joined in singing the 275th hymn:

"Jesus, the truth and power divine,
Send forth these messengers of thine," and, after prayer, the bishop read out the following

Earthquakes and Tidal Waves.

We copy as follows from the New York Tribune of the 12th:

Later and fuller details are every day increasing the interest with which scientific observers regard the recent earthquakes and tidal disturbances, and confirming our first impression that these convulsions of nature would prove to be among the most remarkable and extensive of which there is any written record. They have been experienced at short intervals during the last three months, and there is no reason to suppose that we have yet felt the last of them, the latest having been reported only a week ago. The shocks have followed no particular direction; and been confined to no particular quarter of the earth. Beginning in the middle of the Pacific ocean, they seem to have affected all its eastern shores and its southern and western islands, and then, skipping the whole breadth of the North American continent and the Atlantic ocean, to have broken out in Ireland. We may yet learn that the remoter countries of Asia have likewise been shaken. The first of this great series of convulsions, so far as our intelligence now extends, occurred in the Sandwich Islands, eleven days before the terrible disaster in Peru. Violent shocks were felt in different parts of the group from the 2d to the 9th of August, accompanied with heavy storms of thunder and lightning. The western coast of South America was devastated by awful earthquakes from the 13th to the 16th of August, and at the same time the shocks were felt again in the Sandwich Islands, though less severely than before. On the 17th there were shocks in New Zealand.—About the middle of September shocks were felt by vessels in the Eastern Pacific. On or about the 1st of October they were experienced again in the Sandwich Islands. In California they were felt from the 21st to the 25th, with considerable severity, and were repeated slightly up to the 6th of November. On the 23d of October we hear of earthquakes in Ireland. On the 4th of November there was one at Vancouver Island.

The tidal waves which have accompanied all the most serious of these convulsions are peculiarly interesting subjects of study. It has been remarked as an evidence of the rapidity with which they travel, that they reached the California coast as early as the morning of the 14th of August, having moved over a distance of four hundred miles in a little more than fourteen hours; but it now appears that their speed is even greater than this, for they were felt in the Sandwich Islands, nearly an equal distance, on the evening of the 13th, only four hours after the earthquake in Peru, lasting through the night, and obtaining their greatest force the next morning almost simultaneously with their appearance on the opposite California coast. This would give them a velocity of about a thousand miles an hour. They seem, however, not to have been driven in more than one direction at a time. The Sandwich Islands lie northwest of the place of disturbance in Peru. Toward the west and northwest we have no record of tidal phenomena earlier than the 15th of August, when the waters of Japan and Australia were simultaneously agitated in the same manner. These waves may have been either propagated by fresh convulsions on the South American coast, or revulsions from the disturbances at the Sandwich Islands. We have no sufficient data as yet for determining in what direction the waves traveled, or what was their size or their velocity. We trust that the attention of competent observers may have been drawn to these points; for by means of them it would be possible to determine the depth of the Pacific ocean, the size and velocity of waves bearing, as is well known, a fixed ratio to the depth of the water.

A great tidal wave fell upon Hawaii, one of the Sandwich Islands, on the 15th of October, destroying a great many houses and other property. Accepting the generally received theory that these phenomena are caused by earthquakes, we may expect intelligence of another great calamity about that date in some country bordering on the Pacific, from which we have yet received no advices. But the disturbance may have arisen in the bed of the ocean, in which case, unless a stray sailing vessel chanced to be within reach of it, no account of the phenomenon may ever come to us.

—Here is a portrait of General Prim, taken from Neue Freie Presse of Vienna: "General Prim wears a common military tunic, with two golden stars on the collar, and a white kepi similar to that of the Spanish cavalry, with a broad gold border. This is all that shows him to be a soldier. When in a civilian's dress he gives you the idea of a drawing-room dandy, with a hobby for riding, hunting and love adventures. There is nothing martial about him, no roughness—not even soldierly plainness—in his character; and his manner is not, in the slightest degree, that of a swash-buckler. He is slight, well formed, barely above the middle height, and when on horseback looks like anything but a Mars. But his head is far more attractive than a dozen ordinary soldiers' heads. There is a mysterious brilliancy about it like that which distinguishes the fancy portraits of a Tintoretto. The deep, intense blackness of his large eyes, his hair, and his silky whiskers and monstache, are striking even in the South, where dark people are not wanting, and, combined with his olive complexion, gives an impression of strong passion. His countenance is constantly working under the impulse of an internal restlessness."

An American named Robert Mitchell edits Napoleon's new official paper.

MARRIED.

On Wednesday, November 18, in Yazoo county, Mississippi, by the Rev. John W. Jones, Mr. Martin V. Grissom to Mrs. Winnie S. Dyer.

By Rev. John Wilkinson, on the 10th instant, at Opelousas, Louisiana, Captain James G. Hayes, Sheriff of St. Landry, to Miss Maggie M. White, youngest daughter of Mr. Benjamin R. White, of Opelousas.

OBITUARIES.

Died, in Demopolis, Alabama, on the 18th of August, after an illness of only three days, Mrs. Bettie L. Mangum.

When she was conscious that her departure was near she was perfectly calm and resigned. Her husband asked her if her Saviour was with her, as he had promised to be. She answered: "Yes, he is with me." He asked her if she felt any dread of death. She replied: "None. My sun is setting in a clear sky." She then added emphatically: "Religion is a reality when we come to die. We live hoping to get to heaven; but when we come to die we know that we shall get there." She requested all the family to be called in, and with that calm and self-possessed manner which marked her character, gave directions concerning her burial and her family, and entreated them all so to live that they might meet her in heaven, and constitute an unbroken family there. She spoke affectionately to all present, expressed her gratitude to her physicians, and to the servants, who had attended her. She said to Lydia, the old woman who had been her cook for eighteen months: "I have known you to be a Christian, and have loved you as such. Only be faithful a little longer, and you shall wear in heaven a crown as bright as mine."

She then clasped her hands and exclaimed: "God is love, heaven is love;" and sang, as far as her strength would permit, the beautiful hymn commencing

"How blest the righteous when he dies!
When sinks a weary soul to rest,
How mildly beam the closing eyes!
How gently heaves th' expiring breast!"

She also quoted the sublime language of St. Paul, (II Tim., 4:7, 8:) "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith," repeating distinctly the entire passage.

At half-past five o'clock P. M., as calmly and peacefully as an infant falls asleep, she breathed out her life, and was carried by the angel band to her home in the sky.

Such a death is the best eulogy that could be pronounced upon her character. I will only add that she was one of the most elegant ladies I have ever known. Generous, amiable and confiding, she presided over her household with a quiet dignity that made her its light and joy.

To Brother Mangum, in his bereavement, we tender our sympathies. May the Lord, who doeth all things well, give him light and comfort, faith and strength to preach the Gospel, till he too can say: "I have finished my course, I have kept the faith. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day."

John Massey.

It will require but the simple announcement of the death of Miss Martha Winans Clinton to produce a sadness in the hearts of her many friends. But to know that her last days were full of peaceful triumph will fill these saddened hearts with the sweetened joys of a "precious faith." She was the eldest daughter of the Rev. Thomas Clinton, and was born in Amite county, Mississippi, in 1829. From early childhood she gave exhibitions of deep religious impressions, and when her heart was young and tender she chose the service of her father's God, giving undoubted evidence of the genuineness of her conversion and the purity of her faith. "The good seed of the Gospel," sown by parental kindness and faith, produced early and lasting fruit, and developed a character which, in its full and beautiful proportions, was at once a beauty and power in the social circle. Even in childhood conscientious duty was the rule of action, and as she ripened into womanhood the words of Christ became the source of her joy and the law of her life. Possessed of a mind endowed by nature with more than ordinary powers, and cultivated by constant and judicious training, she was the centre and fountain of an influence for good that must be immortal. These powers, this cultivation, and the warm affection of a generous heart, she consecrated to the service of her God, and felt that her real happiness and sure joy were secured by doing good.

As a daughter she was obedient, loving and solicitous for the happiness of her aged parents, ever seeking to relieve them of all labor, anxiety and care. As a sister she was an example—a teacher—and by her beautiful affection, faith and purity exhibited to her brothers and sisters a pattern of Christian excellence which illustrated the beauty and power of religion. As a teacher—for much of her life was employed in teaching—she was capable, honest and efficient, seeking not only to educate and adorn the mind, but to train and educate the heart for the great duties of life, and lead it to that Light "which lighteth every man that cometh into the world."

With a heart full of sympathy and gentleness, she was eminently qualified for the duties of true friendship. No truer friend ever lived. Change in circumstances and sensons made no change in her affection. As a Christian she was in many respects a pattern—a model. Firm in principle, prayerful in spirit, and unswerving in the discharge of duty, she was consistent, while there was a sunny joyousness in heart and life. Her patience and faith were tested by long and painful illness, but no murmur escaped her lips. Through weary months she lingered and suffered, but gentle submission to the will of God was manifest in all her words and actions. Those who were privileged to witness her last moments saw no decrease in her solicitude for the welfare of kindred and friends.

Her last days were peaceful, and as we witnessed her calm and holy assurance we prayed, "Let me die the death of the righteous."

C.

Samuel Galispie was born in Erictowa, Tennessee, about the year 1809. After serving a time at the saddle and harness business he emigrated South, and was known among us as a tradesman of that occupation. After being married and left a widower, he was married, in 1853, to Mrs. Ellen Davis. He professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1852. From his straightforward manner and godly walk he was early recommended to the position of a steward, which official place he held up to the day of his death. Perhaps a more faithful layman never served the church in that capacity. I verily believe that his thoughts ran more upon the finances of the church, and the best method of raising money for the support of his preachers, than upon the support and maintenance of his family. I have heard it from the lips of several presiding elders that he was the best steward they ever knew.

His private life well sustained his official bearing. I never met with him but I found him ready to converse upon the subject of religion or some interest of the church. I have traveled with him by private conveyance, and on railroad and steamboat, and put up with him at private houses and public hotels, and amid all the changes involved in travel he was scrupulously faithful and exemplary in his religious devotions.

He was not remarkable in prayer, but the interest of many a public service and prayer meeting was reclaimed by the spirituality and pathos of his singing. He has been styled "The sweet singer of Black Hawk." But a silence now reigns where his voice has been so often heard to give interest and animation to the services of God's house. Though no more with us on earth, we trust that he sings in nobler strains in the kingdom of his Father.

To say that he had no faults would make him more than human. He was sometimes hasty. It is not by any means strange that his notions of business did not always correspond with other men's. I think few have lived and died among us more intent upon doing right than he.

He died in the town of Durant, on the 12th of August, 1868, in the fifty-seventh year of his age. He had gone to that place to attend the district meeting for Yazoo district. He was taken sick and died there, absent from his wife and home. We loved him as we know how to love a brother.

Joseph D. Newsom.

Cyrenius R. Ferrill died at the residence of his father, Rev. John W. Ferrill, near East Pascagoula, Mississippi, of congestion of the brain, October 20, 1868, in the seventeenth year of his age.

Just one month, to the very hour, his mother "crossed the flood" before him.—Thus the bereavement was doubly sad and afflicting. How mysterious the dispensations of Providence that calls away the mother from the bosom of the family, and follows it so soon with another, widening and deepening their grief! Yet how often does it occur. One affliction sometimes seems sent to make way for another, and often renders a repetition of the stripes necessary to bring our lacerated hearts to bow with submission to the chastening hand of our all-wise and loving Father. Take the cup, my brother. Though the draught be bitter, drain it to the dregs, saying, "Thy will be done," knowing that "The Lord loveth whom he chasteneth."

EXCELLENT SECURITY.

THE FIRST MORTGAGE

THIRTY-YEAR SIX PER CENT.

GOLD BONDS

—OF THE—

CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

These Bonds are the duly authorized and accredited obligations of one of the most responsible Corporations of the American continent, and are secured by an absolute first lien upon the valuable grants, franchises, railroad equipment, business, etc., of the best portion of the extending eastwardly from the navigable waters of the Pacific coast to the lines now rapidly building from the Eastern States.

Great National Pacific Railroad Line,

They bear Six per cent. interest per annum, in gold, and both Principal and Interest are expressly made "payable in United States Gold Coin."

The semi-annual Coupons are payable July 1 and January 1, in New York city.

The purchaser is charged the accrued interest from the date of the last paid Coupon, at the Currency rate only.

This issue of Bonds constitutes one of the largest and most popular Corporate Loans of the country, and therefore will be constantly dealt in.

The greater portion of the Loan is now in the hands of steady investors; and it is probable that before many months, when the Road is completed and the Loan closed, the Bonds will be eagerly sought for at the highest rates.

They are issued only as the work progresses, and to the same extent only as the United States Subsidy Bonds granted by the government to the Pacific Railroad Companies.

NEARLY FIVE HUNDRED MILES

Of the Road are now built, and the grading is well advanced on two hundred and fifty miles additional.

THE THROUGH LINE ACROSS THE CONTINENT

Will be completed by the middle of next year, when the Overland travel will be very large.

The local business alone, upon the completed portion, is so heavy and so advantageous that the gross earnings average

More than a Quarter of a Million in Gold Per Month,

Of which 35 per cent. only is required for operating expenses.

The net profit upon the Company's business on the completed portion is about double the amount of annual interest liabilities to be assumed thereupon, and will yield

A SURPLUS OF NEARLY A MILLION IN GOLD

After expenses and interest are paid, even if the through connection were not made.

The best lands, the richest mines, together with the largest settlement and nearest markets, lie along this portion of the Pacific Railroad, and the future development of business thereon will be proportionally great.

From these considerations it is submitted that the

CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD BONDS,

Secured by a First Mortgage upon so productive a property, are among the most promising and reliable securities now offered. No better Bonds can be made.

A portion of the remainder of this Loan is now offered to investors at

103 Per Cent. and Accrued Interest,

IN CURRENCY.

The Bonds are of $1,000 each.

☞ The Company reserve the right to advance the price at any time; but all orders actually in transitu at the time of any such advance will be filled at the present price. At this time they pay

More than Eight Per Cent. upon the Investment,

and have from National and State laws, guarantees peculiar to themselves.

We receive all classes of Government Bonds, at their full market rates, in exchange for the Central Pacific Railroad Bonds, thus enabling the holders to realize from five to ten per cent. profit and keep the principal of their investments equally secure.

Orders and inquiries will receive prompt attention. Information, descriptive pamphlets, etc., giving a full account of the organization, progress, business and prospects of the enterprise, furnished on application. Bonds sent by return Express at our cost.

Subscriptions Received by Banks and Bankers,

Agents for the Loan, throughout the United States, Canada and Europe.

☞ All descriptions of GOVERNMENT SECURITIES bought, sold or exchanged, at our office and by mail and telegraph, at market rates.

THE GREATEST DISCOVERY OF THE AGE.

Farmers, Families, and others can purchase no remedy equal to Dr Tobias' Venetian Liniment for dysentery, colic, cramp, chronic rheumatism, sore throats, toothache, sea-sickness, cuts, burns, swellings, bruises, old sores, headache, mosquito bites, pains in limbs, chest, back, etc. If it does not give relief the money will be refunded. All that is asked is a trial, and use it according to the directions.

Dr. Tobias—Dear Sir: I have used your Venetian Liniment in my family for a number of years, and believe it to be the best article for what it is recommended that I have ever used. For sudden attack of croup it is invaluable. I have no hesitation in recommending it for all the uses it professes to cure. I have sold it for many years, and it gives entire satisfaction.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

STRAYED LAMB.

A giddy lamb, one afternoon,
Had from the fold departed,
The tender shepherd missed it soon,
And sought it broken hearted.
Not all the flock that shared his love
Could from the search delay him,
Nor clouds of midnight darkness move,
Nor fear of suffering stay him.

But night and day he went his way,
In sorrow, till he found it,
And coming where it fainting lay,
He clasped his arms around it;
And closely sheltered in his breast,
From every ill to save it,
He bore it to his home of rest,
And pitied and forgave it.

And so the Saviour will receive
The little ones that fear him;
Their pains remove, their sins forgive,
And draw them gently near him.
Blest while they live—and when they die,
When soul and body sever,
Conduct them to his home on high,
To dwell with him forever.

Be Sure Your Sins Will Find You Out.

'What are you doing there so long this morning, Sophia?' asked Mrs. Kirkland of her daughter, who had been sitting for more than an hour by the window.

'I am writing my composition for next week.'

'You are? Why I never would have suspected it.'

'Well, mother, I mean I am trying to write it.'

'How much have you written on your slate?'

Sophia blushed, and held up her slate with the single word, 'Procrastination,' written near the top. It was very nicely written, it is true, for she had written it a dozen times at least, sometimes drawing a square frame round it, sometimes a round one, or a wreath of flowers, but not a word more.

'Is that your subject?' asked her mother.

'Yes, mother, and I think it is a very hard one. What do I know about 'Procrastination?''

Mrs. Kirkland smiled, and said, 'A good deal, I think; for example, you might write the history of this morning, since you took your seat there by the window.'

'How, mother? I don't understand you.'

'Well, if I had the composition to write, it would be something like this: There was once a little girl, in most respects a good little girl; but she had one very bad habit of procrastinating. When she had a composition to write she would sit down after breakfast with her slate in her lap, and write the subject at the top; then she would try for a while to catch the flies on the window; then make a paper fan out of a leaf torn from her old copy book; then draw houses for a while on her slate, then rub out the word she had written, and write it again.'

'Oh, mother, please stop; I would not have such a composition as that. The girls would all say I had written about myself. I had rather write it my own way.'

'Well, do it at once, or you will not have time to get your clothes ready for Sabbath, or to go this evening to your uncle's.'

'I am going to write it this minute. Let me think, what shall I write?' and Sophia seemed writing very industriously for a few minutes afterward.

Just then her Cousin Susan came in from the arbor in the garden, with her slate in her hand, one side covered with writing and nearly half of the other side.

'Why, Sue, you haven't written all that this morning?'

'Yes, but I have been some time at it. Do you see it is half-past ten. I have come in to get a sheet of paper to copy it.'

'It is too bad, to think you are so far before me. I don't see why I can't get mine written so easily.'

'It is because your cousin goes off where she will have nothing to disturb her, and thinks of nothing else while she is writing, that she gets through sooner than you do,' said her mother.

Sophia sighed as if she thought thinking the hardest business in the world; but she did not apply herself, but sat rolling her pencil from the top of her slate to the bottom, until her father came home to dinner, and then she began in earnest to try to write; but she felt so tired being still all morning and had idled so, she could not possibly finish it by dinner, and she knew her father would not allow her to come to the table until the composition was done.

While they were all at dinner she said, 'If I can't rest, I believe I'll rest while they are all down stairs.' So she put up her slate and dried her eyes, for she had been crying bitterly ever since she knew her father had returned.

In wandering about the room her eye lit on a new book her Sister Sarah had that morning brought home, and almost the first thing she saw when she opened it, was a page or two on 'Procrastination.'

'Oh,' she said, 'how nice this is! I will just copy this, and beat all the girls. Mr. Johnson will never find it out; for there is not a book like this in school.' She had forgotten a verse she had learned that very morning, 'Be sure your sins will find you out.' She only thought getting through in time for her dinner, and going with her mother in the evening.

She got her pen and paper, and soon had it copied word for word from the book, and smoothing her hair, ran down with it just as her father was leaving the house.

He stopped when she handed it to him, and having read it, said:

'This does very well, Sophia; it is even better than Susan's, and shows what you can do in a short time when you try.'

Sophia did not look as much pleased as her father thought she would, but he thought it was because she was tired and hungry, and said no more about it.

Her mother also praised it, telling her if she continued improving and would only do things in the right time she would soon write as well if not better than any girl in school.

Susan kindly helped her with her mending, and they all started off to their uncle's. Sophia was very happy except when she thought of having deceived her parents; then she was sad, but she said, 'Since they did not suspect I copied it, I am sure Mr. Johnson never will.'

Monday, when she started to school, she felt uneasy, and was cross to Susan and everybody else until after the compositions were read. Mr. Johnson was very much pleased when her time came to read and she did it so well. He called her to him, and looked over it, said there was not a single mistake either in punctuation, spelling or misplacing capitals.

Do you think this praise made her happy? Oh, no; a guilty conscience whispered, 'You did wrong, you are doing wrong not to confess it.' Still she felt very much relieved and more light-hearted than she had since Saturday. 'It is all over now and I won't do so again,' she said to herself.

But she was mistaken. That evening little Sarah, who was a great favorite with her teacher, took her new book to school to show it to him. Sophia did not know she had taken it, and turned pale when she saw her walking up to the desk with it in her hand.

'I want you to look at my pretty book, Mr. Johnson. My father gave it to me.'

'Well, bring it here and I will hear you read a lesson.'

Sarah cheerfully obeyed, and when she had finished Mr. Johnson took the book and in looking over it his eyes fell on a blot of ink.

'Why, Sarah, how came this here so soon?'

'I don't know, sir; I have no ink.'

'Oh, I see how it is,' he said, looking at Sophia. 'I can tell who put it there. Sophia Kirkland, do you know anything about it?'

Sophia did not answer; she knew it would be useless to deny it, when the very words were before his eyes; but hid her face in shame on her desk, while Mr. Johnson read the whole composition from the book which she had read in the morning. When he had finished, he told her she had broken two commandments. One was 'Thou shalt not steal,' for she had taken that which did not belong to her; and she had acted a lie in passing it off as her own production, and another when she allowed him to praise her for doing what she knew she had not done.

You may be sure she felt badly enough then, and worse when her parents heard of the whole affair.

'You deceived us,' her mother said, 'for the time, but you see it availed you little, and you may rest assured that a deceiver will never prosper. Even if we had never found it out, God saw it, and knew the very thoughts of your heart. Let it be the last time you ever dare commit so great a sin, and may it make you remember that no matter how well you conceal your plans, or how secretly you do what is wrong, you cannot hide it from God, and be sure your sins will find you out.'

BLESSED is he who employs all his time profitably, is silent on subjects that do not concern him, and passes through this tumultuous world like one who is dumb and heareth not, for the Lord's sake.

THOMPSON'S ROAD STEAMER.

This road locomotive is attracting a good deal of attention in Great Britain, and was the subject of a paper read by Professor Archer before the British Association at its recent meeting. We give as follows the most interesting portions of Professor Archer's paper:

"This road steamer has wheels made of a material which at first sight does not look a very likely substance to stand the heavy work they are subjected to. The tires are made of bands of vulcanized India-rubber, about twelve inches wide and five inches thick. Incredible as this may appear, this soft and elastic substance not only carries the great weight of the road steamer without injury, but they pass over newly broken road metal, broken flints, and all kinds of sharp things without even leaving a mark on the India-rubber. They do not sink into the road in the least degree. They pass over stones lying on the surface without crushing them. These soft and elastic tires resemble in some degree the feet of an elephant. Both the camel and elephant have very large soft cushions in hard hoofs, and no other animal can stand so much walking over hard roads as they can accomplish.

"The power required to propel the road steamer is very much less than what would be required if the tires were hard and rigid. They do not crush nor sink into the roadway. The machine, as it were, floats along on the India-rubber, and all the power used in crushing and grinding the stones under rigid tires is entirely saved. It might at first sight be supposed that it would take a great deal of power to propel a heavy carriage on soft tires; but if the tires are elastic, as well as soft, the power used in compressing the tire in front of the wheel is nearly all given back as the elastic tire expands behind the wheel.

"The India-rubber tires require scarcely any more power to propel them over soft bad roads or over loose gravel roads than on the best paved streets. The reason of this is quite obvious: they do not sink into roads, and do not grind down the stones in the least degree.

"Trials have been made at Leith by running the road steamer across a soft grass field, in which an ordinary steam carriage would certainly have sunk. The way it ran through the grass without even leaving a track was very remarkable; but when it made for a part of the field which had just been covered with loose earth to the depth of one or two feet, and ran straight across, and then back through the deep soft soil, the surprise of those present was great indeed. The weight of the road steamer is between four and five tons; and yet the wheels in passing over the loose earth compressed it so little that a walking-stick could easily be pushed down in the track of the wheels without any exertion. It is quite clear that one of the great difficulties farmers have had to contend with in using steam engines for plowing is now removed, for the road steamer will run through any field, even when newly plowed, without any difficulty.—After various evolutions, showing the ability of the road steamer to run about where there were no roads, it passed out into the street, and, taking a large omnibus full of passengers in tow, it proceeded up the Bonnington road to Messrs. Gibson & Walker's mills, where it took a large wagon, weighing with its load of flour about ten tons, up a steep lane full of holes and ruts, and rising with a gradient of one in twenty. It was obvious that the road steamer was able to do a great deal more than it had to do in this trial. The bite on the road is something marvelous, and the easy way in which it floated along on its soft and elastic tires was very curious.—When riding on the road steamer the feeling is like what would be experienced in driving over a smooth soft grass lawn. There is absolutely no jarring at all. Thus the machinery is spared the severe trials arising from the blows and jolts to which it is subjected when mounted on common wheels. There is, incredible as it may appear, no appearance of wear on the India-rubber tires. The original surface which the rubber had when it left the manufactory is still visible.

"The tractive powers of the machine have surpassed all expectation. It was constructed to drag an omnibus, weighing, with its load of (say) thirty passengers, about four tons, on a level road, but its powers are so greatly in excess of this task that no load yet placed behind it has fully tested its power. An opportunity was offered which it was confidently expected would show the limits of its capabilities. A huge steam boiler, weighing with its truck between twelve and thirteen tons, had to be dragged up a hill rising one in twelve. The little road steamer was chained to the truck, and steadily drew the great boiler to the top of the hill, the India-rubber wheels biting the ground in the most perfect manner; there was not the least sign of slipping. The boiler was drawn from the works of Messrs. Hawthorn & Company, along the Junction road, and then up the hilly Bonnington road, to the flour mills of Messrs. Gibson & Walker. In its progress the road steamer had to draw its great load over all kinds of road. Nothing seemed to affect the bite of the India-rubber tires. The road was so slippery from the frost that horses had the greatest difficulty in keeping on their legs, but no difficulty was found in going over the glazed surface with the India-rubber wheels. India-rubber does not slip even on ice, as may be easily ascertained by trying to slide in a pair of India-rubber goloshes.

"A number of trials have just been completed with a powerful road steamer which has been constructed for hauling wagons loaded with coffee over the hilly roads in the island of Ceylon. This road steamer has two cylinders, each seven and a half inches diameter by ten inches stroke, and a vertical 'pot' boiler three feet diameter by seven and a half feet high. The engine is arranged by means of spur-gearing to make either six or fifteen revolutions, as may be desired, for each revolution of the driving wheels. This road steamer weighs, with water and coal for two hours' work, about eight and a half tons. It was intended to haul twelve tons gross weight up gradients of one in sixteen. It was found on trial that it was capable of doing a great deal more than the stipulated amount of work. It was first tested by going up a very crooked and steep street in Edinburgh, viz., Cockburn street, with a wagon in tow weighing two and three-quarter tons. This street rises with a gradient in some places of one in eight, but the road steamer went up with the greatest ease.

"The next trial was of a severe kind. Four heavy wagons, constructed to carry five and a quarter tons of coals each, were attached to the road steamer. Each wagon weighed when empty two and three-quarter tons. With this train in tow the road steamer ran from Leith to New Battle collieries, a distance of about eleven miles. The wagons were then loaded with five and a quarter tons of coals each, and the road steamer drew the whole four from New Battle to Leith over roads with gradients rising one in sixteen in several places. The total weight of coals was twenty one tons; if to this the weight of four wagons is added it makes a gross weight of thirty-two tons, and including the weight of the road steamer the weight of the whole train was upward of forty tons. With this train of ninety feet long no difficulty was found in passing through the most crowded streets of Edinburg and Leith in the middle of the day and in the midst of a great stream of ordinary traffic. The India rubber tires are durable beyond all conception, and they are not in the least affected by either heat, cold or moisture."—American Artisan.

A BISHOP DEFIED.—A case of disobedience to Episcopal authority has lately occurred in Brighton, England, more glaring than that of Mr. Hubbard, of Westerly. Rev. J. Purchas, rector of St. James chapel, has been conducting ritualistic services of an extreme type. The Bishop of Chichester at last summoned resolution to inhibit him from officiating. But, instead of meekly submitting to the godly admonition of his bishop, on the next Sabbath he ostentatiously repeated his offense. The services were unusually gorgeous and histrionic. A procession of cassocked boys, carrying lighted candles in their hands, filed into the choir, followed by a long line of choristers and other assistants—"acolytes, thurifer, crucifer, banner-bearer, ceremoniarius," etc.—the two officiating priests, Rev. J. Purchas and his curate, bringing up the rear. Mr. Purchas was vested in light colors, and wore a cap, on which gems, probably crystals, seemed to glitter. The incense was kindled, and presently clouds of scented smoke, which shut out Mr. Purchas and curate from the gaze of the curious, began to ascend. Then the service began, not with "When the wicked man turneth," or any other passage of Scripture appointed to be read, but with a procession in which the aforesaid cassocked boys—acolytes, thurifer, etc.—marched round the aisles, the incense-bearer swinging his censer and the choristers chanting a hymn. The procession having reached the chancel, "matins" commenced, and there were the usual groupings, vestment changings, genuflexions, and incensings customary in ritualistic churches. When the matins were brought to a close, "high celebration" followed, and this service was most elaborately performed. The Bishop of Nelson is troubled with a similar refractory priest. In our own country a ritualizing presbyter in Memphis is refusing to obey the inhibition of the Bishop of Tennessee.—Independent.

ELEVENTH SESSION.—TERMS REDUCED.

The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar, etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.

SPECIAL CAUTIONS.

Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health.

A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.

It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

TERMS—Board and Tuition per session, $300.
PAYMENTS—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.

Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

CENTENARY COLLEGE, Jackson, Louisiana,

was established by the State of Louisiana in 1835, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war; but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually, in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month.

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution the Southern States.

The past history of the College is the pledge its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the institution, are requested to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

W. H. WATKINS, President.

EMORY AND HENRY COLLEGE, Washington county, Virginia.

The FALL SESSION of this institution begins on the 20th of August next

Our terms, for a session of five months, are as follows:

Tuition in Collegiate course, payable in advance	$30 00
Fuel, room rent and contingent fee, payable in advance	10 00
Board, at $13 per month	65 00
Washing	7 50

Tuition in the Preparatory Department is $5 less. Board is payable monthly in advance. Students supply their own beds and furniture for their rooms, and take their meals with the families boarding them.

We invite those seeking collegiate culture to consider the excellent advantages here offered.

☞ A man who wishes to be known in the country is certainly much in his own light who does not display his name in our advertising columns.

Our terms are precisely the same as those of other weekly newspapers in this city.

We have fewer advertisements than the secular papers, but what we have are read with that conscientious regard for everything that appears in a Christian paper which takes hold—in fact, too strong a hold—and holds the editor responsible for all the patent medicines, hard ware, shoes, pork, flour, and even whisky, which may be set forth in its columns.

The terms of advertising are as follows:

THE HOME MONTHLY, New Orleans, for 1867.

The HOME MONTHLY will contain forty-eight pages of reading matter, printed upon fine paper and in clear type, and will, from time to time, be accompanied by elegant steel-plate engravings. The subscription price will remain $3 per annum, or $1.50 for six months, invariably in advance. In order to build up a still larger circulation, we have concluded to offer the following

Liberal Inducements to Agents.

To any person sending us three yearly subscriptions, with nine dollars, we will send the MONTHLY six months, or allow them, if they prefer, to retain One Dollar and Twenty-five Cents of the amount.

To any person sending us six subscriptions, with eighteen dollars, ($18,) we will send the MONTHLY one year, or allow them to retain Two Dollars and Fifty Cents of the amount.

On amounts for subscription less than nine dollars, agents will be allowed to retain ten per cent.

Ministers, it is hoped, will act as agents, not so much from pecuniary considerations as from a laudable desire to assist in building up a home literature worthy of a place among the families of the South and on the centre-tables of a Christian people.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as the means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

At Least Thirty per Cent, as Compared with any other Stove.

and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally known as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. That meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

For sale only by the undersigned.

In addition to the above, I also have a large and complete assortment of COOKING STOVES, comprising all of the leading Stoves of the day, equal to any offered in any other house in this city.

T. K. PRICE, ESQ., Vendor of "Price's Patent Texas Tonic," or Vegetable Medicine:

DEAR SIR—After a fair and deliberate trial and experiment of your Vegetable Medicine, known as PRICE'S PATENT TEXAS TONIC, we give it as our decided opinion, that it is the best recipe that we have ever known, for Indigestion, Torpor of the Liver, Constipation of the Bowels and Dyspepsia. We consider your Vegetables Medicine worthy of all commendation, and therefore feel no hesitation in recommending its use to all our friends, as well as the public at large, and that in doing so we are contributing to all the afflicted. Many of us have been suffering from these evils from ten to fifteen years, and have been greatly benefitted.

Wishing you great success in introducing this valuable medicine,

We remain yours truly,

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY, AT Greensboro, Alabama.

The next session of this Institution begins the first Wednesday in October, and is divided into two terms.

TUITION.

Academic Department, per term	$35 00
Preparatory Department, per term	30 00
Contingent fee, per term	2 50

A fee of $5 is charged those who attend the schools of Chem. and Nat. Phil.

Board, exclusive of washing and lights, $16 to $20 per month. By messing it can be obtained even cheaper than at these rates.

Sons of ministers of the Gospel in the regular work, and those studying for the ministry, are admitted free of tuition.

The whole expense for the scholastic year, including everything except books and clothing, will be $250, payable one-half at the opening of the session and the remainder on the 15th of February. If the student wishes to board in a private family it will be $280. This great reduction in the price of board and tuition will bring the advantages of the University within the reach of those whose limited means have heretofore placed the highest scholastic training, beyond their reach, as well as secure the patronage of those who, on the score of economy, are sending their sons out of the State to be educated.

Especial attention is called to the fact that preparatory students are taught exclusively by the Faculty.

The Law School has been organized under the management of Hons. Judge Coleman and A. Benners.

For further information apply for circular to

NEW PATENT PIANOS.

RAVEN & BACON, (established in 1829.)

Warerooms, Nos. 611 and 616 Broadway, NEW YORK.

Manufacturers of Piano Fortes, with the patent Combination Sounding boards,

Patented August 14th, 1860.

This invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affects the sounding board, the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a pure liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. The sounding-board released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding-boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection, and its vibratory quality increased.

Our Pianos are first-class in every respect, and purchasers will have not only our own guarantee as to their quality, but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument, obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market has exhibited a fair degree of animation since our last issue, but in some departments it has been extremely dull, and in others there has been less activity than is usual at this period of the season. A moderate business has been done by wholesale dealers in dry goods, clothing, boots and shoes, etc., in sales to country merchants and meeting the current local demand. Sugar and molasses have been in good request, at full prices for the better qualities, but rather easier rates for the lower grades, all the receipts meeting a ready sale from the levee at quotations. Operations in our leading staple also have been to an average extent, but without showing much activity. Western produce has been extremely dull, although increased receipts have interrupted the previous apathy in grain and in some minor articles. Flour, in particular, is in very little request, and, under the ample supply in store and continued receipts, is daily offered at easier prices.

Nothing of special moment has transpired with regard to the incoming crops. The accounts of both cane and cotton are decidedly cheering, and the trade anticipate that our receipts of the former will exceed 100,000 hogsheads, and of the latter will be fully 900,000 bales, unless they should be materially diminished by transportation on the interior routes. This, however, is involved in so much uncertainty that estimates must be regarded as conjectural. Long crop men count upon 1,000,000 or more.

The river remains about the same, being thirteen feet six inches below high water mark.

Cotton.—The following are the arrivals since the 20th instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi ..... bales..	16428

On Saturday the market opened with a fair inquiry, but the movement was checked by the stringent pretensions of factors who asked fully ¼c. more than they would have accepted on Friday; but as buyers were unwilling to go on at the prices claimed, the movement was quite languid until the receipt of the Liverpool telegrams, the favorable tenor of which stimulated the demand, and the day's sales summed up 5,450 bales, at irregular rates, but closing at an advance of ¼c. On Monday, notwithstanding the suspension of telegraphic communication per cable, factors claimed a further advance, and 3,000 bales changed hands, partly, early in the day, at previous rates, but later mostly at a further improvement of ¼c., low middling closing at 23 to 23¼c., and middling at 23½c. On Tuesday the market opened with a fair inquiry, but, as under the influence of Monday's Liverpool report, which came to hand at 9 A. M., factors advanced their pretensions ¼ to ½c., and buyers were unwilling to pay the figures asked, the movement was languid, until the receipt of further telegrams gave an additional impulse to the demand, when sales were made at the advanced rates of 23½c. for strict low middling and 24c. for middling. The sales of the day comprised 4,250 bales, a large portion of which was taken for Liverpool and the Continent, and only a moderate amount for the North.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 13,300 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 251,910 bales, against 95,129 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 165,591 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 38,148 bales to Great Britain, of 56,993 to France, and of 2,622 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Ordinary	21¼ to 21½

SYNOPSIS OF CHARTER.

The plan proposed by the Mutual Aid and Benevolent Life Insurance Association is as follows:

1. Each person, upon enrolling himself or herself as a member, shall pay into the Treasury a membership fee, if between the ages of

16 to 30, inclusive, the sum of $10 00
31 to 40, inclusive, the sum of 15 00
41 to 50, inclusive, the sum of 20 00
51 to 60, inclusive, the sum of 25 00

which payment constitutes him or her a life member.

2. A Life Insurance Policy is issued for a sum equal to one dollar for each enrolled member appearing on the books of the Association, at the decease of said member.

But in no event shall the amount paid on said policy exceed $5,000.

3. On the death of any member an assessment is made upon each policy holder for one dollar and twenty-five cents, payable at the office of the Association, within thirty days after notification thereof, by publication in one daily newspaper published in the city of New Orleans, in English and one in French, for five consecutive days, and if the policy holder resides out of New Orleans he shall be notified in writing.

4. Should the number of members exceed five thousand, the assessment of $1 25 will be reduced in proportion to the number of members exceeding five thousand.

5. Should any member fail to pay the assessment in the time specified, he forfeits all previous payments or credits.

6 All accumulations from whatever source, such as forfeitures, interest, etc., shall be credited upon the books of the Association to the members pro rata, to be withdrawn in lieu of assessments. oct17 1y

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

NEW YORK, Nov. 28.—The week closed with increased ease in money, and demand met at five to six on call, with governments and stock collaterals, while balance were left on deposit with leading bankers at four. Prime business paper, short date, seven to eight.

There were fresh rumors afloat on the streets to day with regard to Erie, among them one that an injunction had been put upon both receivers, and that the Legislature would finally settle the whole matter by the passage of some new act.

The bank statement shows expansion, the loans being increased.

Arrived: Steamships George Washington, Lodona, Zodiac and General Grant.

CHARLESTON, Nov. 29.—The contested municipal election, after a trial of two weeks, was concluded last night by the election being declared irregular and void by a vote of twelve yeas and three nays. This decision was rendered by the present council, of which a large majority are Republicans. The effect will be to continue in power the present city government until a new election is ordered by the Legislature.

Bremen bark Gauss, with three hundred German emigrants, arrived to day. She had a rough voyage, with eight deaths on the passage, mostly children.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 29.—General John O'Niel was unanimously elected president of the Fenian Brotherhood. The delegates are pledged to his plans.

HAVANA, Nov. 29.—The first battalion of volunteers, eight hundred strong, leaves to-morrow for the seat of war. Another battalion goes to Holguin during the coming week.

It is reported that the rebels have burnt the plantation of Colonel Acosta, commanding a battalion of volunteers.

General Cespedes, of the revolutionary army, had three men executed who were caught robbing and burning.

Previous to the attack and repulse at Manzanillo Cespedes recommended that the women and children be sent from the place.

The confidence of the people in the Captain General putting a speedy termination to the war is increasing.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.—I had an interesting conversation this morning with a gentleman high in the Radical sanhedrim upon the whole subject of the Constitution in its respect to parties and the condition of the country, its amendments already adopted undoubtedly, those doubtfully adopted, and others proposed, when he startingly remarked as follows:

"Why should we not call a national constitutional convention at once, and frame a new fundamental code to suit the altered condition of things? We of the Radical side are well aware that we can never convince the controlling minds of the Democracy that our past, present and prospective measures are constitutional, and the honest portion of that party will never pretend they are. The best, the thinking men of the country, are thereby kept asunder and hindered from devising a system having in view the essential good of the nation. The Constitution, as things now stand, has no vitality in a single article, section, paragraph or clause applicable to the executive, legislative or judicial departments of the government, and probably will not for many years, if ever. The system of government contemplated by it is effete, and the American people, who gave the world the example of a constitution on parchment, couched in plain English words, now present the singular anomaly of living under a government guided by no fundamental law whatever—written or unwritten—and young as it is, unable to appeal to tradition, but left at the unbridled caprice of the demagogues of the hour."

WASHINGTON, Nov. 25.—There will be a strong effort made in Congress to procure the repeal of the tenure of office act, but it will not prevail for this reason, that by an understanding amongst the Senators they decide absolutely as to every appointment they respectively represent, and they will not surrender this power without a great struggle.

The Radicals on the assemblage of Congress will at once force the negro suffrage amendment through both Houses, notwithstanding the adverse decision of several Radical States, and, too, notwithstanding that as late as 1867 Senator Sherman said that Ohio would never consent to have negro suffrage forced upon her people by any other power than their own free choice.

The Secretary of the Treasury has completed his estimates for the next fiscal year. He places the revenue at about the same figures as were estimated for the present fiscal year, while the expenditures were reduced considerably, owing to the fact that the Navy Department estimates are just one half what they were, while the War Department also submits to a considerable reduction. Members of Congress are writing here freely about the financial situation. Representative Lynch, of Maine, in a letter to a gentleman in this city, announces his intention to call up, on the first day of the next session of Congress, his bill to provide against undue expansions and contractions of the currency. His bill to provide for the gradual resumption of specie payments will be made the special order for the first Tuesday in December. It contains the feature of a convertible bond bearing small currency interest, exchangeable at the treasury for greenbacks, and vice versa.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 1.—From members of the British legation here, I learn that the protocol agreed upon by Minister Johnson and the British secretary for foreign affairs, as the basis of settlement of the Alabama claims controversy, and submitted by Secretary Seward to a cabinet meeting, the other day, has been rejected, and returned with amendments.

The treaty is regarded as dead, so far as President Johnson's administration is concerned.

NEW YORK, Dec 1.—With the election of Oakey Hall to the mayoralty, which is considered certain, a large Democratic majority of the councilmen, it is expected, will be returned.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 1.—Judge Chase has decided several confiscation cases, sustaining Underwood's previous decision. The decisions involve the declaration that the confiscation laws are constitutional, and that where there was no appearance and plea by the defendants, the admiralty side of the District Court had full jurisdiction to decree confiscation and sale. Chase, however, has desired that the question should come before the full bench of the Supreme Court, and an appeal on a writ of error was granted.

Richard H. Dana, of Boston, will represent the government in the argument on the motion to quash the Davis indictment.

Rollins returned to-day.

A full cabinet present to day.

Revenue to-day, $692,000.

The cigar makers' strike in New York ended by a compromise.

Grant, in a letter to the mayor of Boston, accepts with thanks the hospitalities offered, but begs to be excused from public demonstration. He will stop at the St. James Hotel, and will be glad to receive persons who may wish to call.

NEW YORK, Dec 1.—Hall is elected mayor by 35,000 majority. Total vote cast about 80,000.

NEW YORK, Dec. 1.—Fort Lafayette, in the harbor, is burning. Great danger is apprehended from the explosion of the magazine, containing thirty-two tuns of powder.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 28.—One of the first measures to come before Congress at the session commencing on the 7th of next month will be the repeal of the resolution requiring a perpetual session. The object of the act has been accomplished.—President Johnson was kept docile, and "our friends" in fat offices were protected. The incoming administration is really to be trusted, for a while at least.

Senator Morgan denies that in a recent conversation with Secretary McCulloch he took the ground attributed to him in various published statements. He says he did not argue that the government was not bound to pay off the five twenties in coin, and that the government should now begin to redeem the issue of 1862 with greenbacks. The bill which he intends to introduce is for the redemption of greenbacks, and not the bonds.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 25.—A good deal has been said in certain newspapers recently about the misappropriation of a large slice of the seven millions voted for the purchase of Alaska. It was boldly asserted that about two millions of the fund was expended in buying up members of Congress and paying lobbymen for their services, and the apparent fact that only £1,000,000 sterling has yet been paid over to the Russian government seemed to give color to the story. I have endeavored to ascertain the facts of the case, and as a result am enabled to state that the bribery story seems to dwindle in proportion the more closely it is investigated. The Russian legation here indignantly repudiate the idea of bribery or other improper means in securing the passage of the Alaska appropriation, and declare that every cent of the $7,200,000 will find its way to St. Petersburg in due time. It is a fact not generally known that $1,000,000 was paid to the Russian minister in this city immediately after the ratification of the treaty, so that up to the present time six out of the seven millions have actually been paid. The other twelve hundred thousand will be paid over in due time.

MEMPHIS, Nov. 28.—The Appeal's Arkansas correspondent says on the 10th a body of two hundred men, claiming to be militia, entered the town of Centre Point, Sevier county, arrested all the inhabitants, and marched them into an open field, placed guard over them, and then proceeded to sack the town, after which they left the next day. The citizens of the adjoining county flocked into town, and a meeting was gotten up to express the sentiments of the people in regard to the outrage. While the meeting was in progress the same body of men dashed into town, opened an indiscriminate fire upon the assembly, shooting down a number of them, and arresting three of the oldest and best citizens, named Heuster, Anderson and Gilbert, carried them out to a field and shot them. The band is still in possession of the town.

NASHVILLE, November 27.—In the House a joint resolution declaring there has been fraud and corruption in the management of the Edgefield and Kentucky, Memphis, Clarksville and Louisville, Winchester and Alabama, McMinnville and Manchester, and Rogersville and Jefferson railroads, and providing that the Committee on Internal Improvements give a thorough overhauling, send for persons and papers, and look into the conduct of receivers, especially that of the Northwestern Railroad, was adopted.

The omnibus bill, granting two millions of dollars to East Tennessee railroads, was up on its last reading and referred to the Finance Committee. The East Tennesseeans tried to crowd it through under pressure, but it is believed the bill will be killed.

STATE ELECTION RETURNS.

The canvass of the votes cast in this State, at the election on the 3d instant, was concluded yesterday by Governor Warmoth, the Secretary of State and the Judge of the Second Judicial District Court. As intimated in the Picayune the "trio" above mentioned decided to throw out the votes of the parishes of Orleans, Jefferson, Avoyelles, West Feliciana, Franklin, Jackson, St. Bernard, Sabine, St. John the Baptist, St. Martin, Terrebonne and Washington, for alleged irregularities. The total vote of the State, as reported to the Secretary of State, for President, was as follows: For Seymour, 74,672; for Grant, 34,224. Throwing out the parishes above mentioned reduces the vote for Seymour to 41,358, and that for Grant to 27,911, and the Democratic majority to 13,447.

The Republican publishes the following, which it states is from the official certificate in the office of the Secretary of State:

State of Louisiana, Office of Secretary of State.—Be it known that, in conformity with section thirty of an act of the Legislature, approved October 19, 1868, concerning elections, we, the undersigned, the Governor of the State, the Secretary of State and the Judge of the Second Judicial District Court, did, this twenty-fifth day of November, A. D. 1868, assemble at the office of the Secretary of State, in the city of New Orleans, to compare and examine the returns of an election, held in accordance with law, on the third of November, A. D. 1868, for Representatives in Congress of the United States from the first, second, third, fourth and fifth Representative districts of this State, and to ascertain from the legal returns the persons duly elected.

And they examined, compared and ascertained the votes obtained by each and every candidate, from the returns aforesaid, filed and deposited in the office of the Secretary of State, and found the following to be the result of the examination:

There being no legal returns from the following named parishes, the votes of said parishes were not counted, to wit: Avoyelles, West Feliciana, Franklin, Jackson, Jefferson, Orleans, St. Bernard, Sabine St. John Baptist, St. Martin, Terrebonne and Washington.

From all of which it appears that Louis St. Martin has received the largest number of votes as Representative of the first Congressional district. Second—That L. A. Sheldon has received the largest number of votes as Representative of the second Congressional district. Third—That Adolphe Bailey has received the largest number of votes as Representative of the third Congressional district. Fourth—That Michael Ryan has received the largest number of votes as Representative of the fourth Congressional district. Fifth—That George W. McCranie has received the largest number of votes as Representative of the fifth Congressional district.

It is, therefore, declared and certified that the said Louis St. Martin, L. A. Sheldon, Adolphe Bailey, Michael Ryan and George W. McCranie are accordingly elected as Representatives of the State of Louisiana in the Forty First Congress of the United States of America, and to serve until the end of said Congress, as specified by law.

And that said J. W. Menard is accordingly elected as Representative of the State of Louisiana in the Fortieth Congress of the United States of America, to serve until the end of said Congress, as specified by law.—Picayune, Nov. 28.

LETTER FROM CALIFORNIA.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 4, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: When I sent you the four letters, which you received and published, I fully expected to write again before the last went to press; but I find days and weeks, like everything else in California, seem to pass as though driven by machinery. While serving my little flock at Stockton, during ten weeks previous to Conference, I received many invitations from brethren on the circuits around to attend their camp meetings. Two of these I accepted, and so attended one camp meeting twenty miles south, and another twelve miles east from Stockton. The country through which I passed is almost perfectly level. Near the San Joaquin river the soil is stiff black adobe, and very rich; but gradually changes, as you approach the foot hills of the mountains, to gray and chocolate. Every few miles you pass a slough or creek, dry in summer, but flush streams in winter. The banks of these streams are fringed with large oak trees, and the same trees are scattered all over the surface of the country, about as thick as one to every few acres. Grain grows luxuriantly under the trees. The production of these lands, the present year, was from twenty to forty bushels per acre; they are well improved in every particular, and sell for from fifteen to forty dollars per acre, according to the distance from Stockton.

About twenty miles south of Stockton we strike the "sand plains"—vast breadths of elevated, gently undulating lands, of a gray, gritty character; perfectly destitute of trees, except along the streams; light and easy to cultivate, producing from eight to fifteen bushels of wheat per acre; selling at from five to ten dollars per acre; now much in demand; and being rapidly settled. Farther up the valley these sandy lands, as well as the rich valley lands, can be bought from private parties very cheap, or pre-empted from government.

Traveling in California is nearly all done in summer. As soon as the roads dry off, in May and June, it is very pleasant; in July the dust begins, and gets worse and worse until the fall rains begin in October. After the first rains lay the dust, the roads are pretty good again until after Christmas, when the mud begins to be bad and gets worse until April.

"So you have camp meetings in California?" Yes, one on nearly every circuit. They build a bush arbor, and erect a preacher's stand, sheltered on the wind side (the wind comes always from the direction of San Francisco, through the Golden Gate) by a plank wall, with planks overhead for a sounding board. As there is no danger of rain or unpleasant weather, the tents are only plank walls, with a cover to keep off the sun. Wheat straw, of course, is abundant for tents and stand. When the meeting is over, the tenters take the plank to build fences, etc, on their farms. Next year all is new at the camp ground again. The tents are all family tents. One man is engaged beforehand to keep the public table or restaurant, at which the crowd eat, and pay fifty cents a meal.—These camp meetings are well attended, and result in much good. Where the country is sparsely settled, and very much divided in sentiment, our preachers preach during the year to very small congregations; and it is a great relief—religious jubilee—at the close of the year's labor to see almost the entire circuit gathered together in one great congregation.

I went to Conference, from Stockton to Sacramento, in the stage coach, which runs daily the distance of forty-eight miles in eight hours, over a country exactly like that described in this letter. Arrived at Sacramento at two o'clock P. M. on Tuesday, and found the examining committees at work, and the preachers arriving, and various other things to remind me forcibly that I was at Conference. But, ah! me! The worst spell of blues I have had since I arrived in this distant land of strangers, was that evening and the next day. To all the others it was an occasion of joyful reunion; but to me a reminder of sad separation. I was at Conference; but where was Brother McCarty? Where was Dr. Ellison, Brothers Andrews, Ross, Blue, Cottrell, Shapard, etc., etc., etc.? Where were they? I looked in vain to find them. They were three thousand miles away. I was at Conference, warmly greeted, but alone; and a feeling of desolation and bereavement came over me, from which I scarcely rallied during the session.

Bishop Marvin was at his post, presiding with ability, and exercising not only magisterial control, but a strong religious influence over the preachers. He was suffering much from a cold, resulting in an abscess in his jaw, from which he is now slowly recovering. The session was long and tedious, owing to the trial of a preacher, which gave rise to many complications. The Conference consists of fifty-three preachers, who strike me as working men, thoroughly devoted to the work. They have, to an eminent degree, that one element of heroism, the ability to work steadily and persistently against a tide of persecution, and in the shade of a large opposing majority.

The status of our church in California, as shown by the reports of this Conference, compared with the statistics of other churches, is that we are next to the Northern Methodists, the largest Protestant denomination in the State. Throughout the country districts the two Methodist churches have the field well nigh to themselves. In some parts we stand alone. I was told by Brother Culp, who served the Marriposa circuit, that he was the only preacher in the county. The great valley of the San Joaquin is now, and constantly becoming more so, ours to possess. Bishop Marvin tells me to say that the field is open for more preachers, and that he has four or five circuits now waiting for preachers. Single men will be amply supported—married men in proportion to their ability and faithfulness. There is a large and increasing population here who will attend no ministry but ours. I do not think there is danger of too many preachers coming; but to all who think of coming I would say this: our church is weak everywhere in the State, but particularly in the cities. San Francisco, the largest station in the Conference, has only sixty-five members; and a circuit with one hundred members is rare. It is a missionary work we are doing, and the preacher's support comes as much from outside as inside the church. Some of our stations and circuits are almost entirely supported by outsiders. In the rural districts our preachers go and make work for themselves, preaching in the public school houses, and meet with encouragement and support everywhere. Any preacher who transfers from one of the old Conferences to this, expecting to have good churches, full membership, large congregations and convenient work, will be disappointed. But if he would come to a good country, where there are warm-hearted people, plenty of hard work for a preacher to do, and live upon the finest bread, meat, vegetables and fruits in the world, let him reconsecrate himself to the service of God, and come to California.

As an evidence of the stability of our church here I will mention that our college at Vacaville, under the presidency of Dr. Thomas, is quite flourishing; and The Spectator, our official organ, published by my noble friend, C. A. Klose, and edited by Dr. Fitzgerald, is on a substantial basis.

At the recent Conference I was appointed to San Francisco station, and have already begun my work here, under most favorable circumstances. My church is doing all I could ask for me; and I hope, by the grace of God, to do all I can for them. In another letter, at no distant day, I hope to tell you more of this great city and its adjunct towns. Your's, fraternally,

JESSE WOOD.

A LOVING REBUKE.—John Howe once observed two men in a violent passion. Their mutual cursings shocked his religious sensibilities. He looked at them, raised his hat, and said in a solemn voice:

"I pray God to bless you both!"

This prayer so impressed the quarrelsome men that they ceased their strife, and thanked Mr. Howe for his supplication.

AN old river man on the Mississippi, who carefully observes the signs, predicts that navigation on the upper Mississippi will be open nearly all winter.

A FAMINE is threatened in Egypt because a great portion of the land bordering on the Nile has not been overflowed and cannot be cultivated.

A BURGLAR at Bridgeport stepped into a large rat-trap, yelled, and was caught, thereby putting his foot in it.

THE London Times has had to cut down its prices to head off the Telegraph.

SUMMER'S DYING.

Fragrant flowers already fading,
Murky clouds the heavens shading,
Withered leaves around us lying,
Tell us genial summer's dying.
Leave the city's stifling air;
Leave the gloomy dens of care.
O come with me
To yonder lea—
Summer's fragrance lingers there.

Come, all ye in wealth delighting;
Come, all ye with prospects blighting;
Come, all ye misfortune wailing;
Leave your fame and golden glare,
Leave your aches and sickening care,
And come with me
To yonder lea—
Summer's fragrance lingers there.

Flow'rets balmy odors breathing,
Woodbine dewy ringlets wreathing,
Poppies in their radiance blushing,
And the glowing eve is flushing.
Sunbeams 'tween the branches slanting,
Philomel her vesper chanting.
O the joys, the joys entrancing!
Nature's ecstacies will bear
Far from us all earthly care;
Then come with me
To yonder lea—
Summer's fragrance lingers there.

Ah! could man, when eve approaches,
As benumbed old age approaches,
Leave this darkness and this grieving
For a mild sweet summer's evening;
Cease this gloating dissipation,
Cease this weary lamentation;
Leave this vanity and glare;
Leave this toiling world and care,
And soar above
To realms of love—
Summer's ever blooming there.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

GREENVILLE, Ala., Nov. 23, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: Since my last letter to your very desirable paper I have thoroughly canvassed four counties as colporteur, viz: Lowndes, Crenshaw, Butler and Covington.

The great drought we had cut the crops short about one-half, and the worm came in for an additional tax on the small products of the year.

So it seems the Lord will, by some means or another, have his tithes, whether men recognize his claims or not. The preacher will for a time, however, at least, have to pay the damages, or suffer them, which is about the same.

I am glad, however, to be able to state that in my travels I have stumbled on some excellent revivals among our people, especially in the piney woods of Crenshaw and Butler counties. I think our church, among the poor at least, is in an improved condition. But whether we thrive and live, or sicken and die, I will say, even at the risk of being accused of boasting, that we have a noble band of soldiers for our Lord and Master. I am glad to know that if we "go under" the preachers will not be blamable. They have labored and suffered enough, in all conscience, and it is worse than mean for them to be driven from their work for the want of bread.

But to the subject of colporteuring. I have, at the expense of the Alabama Bible Society, at Montgomery, gone over seven counties, and given away more than one thousand Bibles and Testaments, at fifty cents apiece.—This, added to my wages and traveling expenses, makes a pretty round sum to be given away by a few men in these days. And it is so astonishing to the weak eyes of some that they do not believe it when they see it. Some say that those who send me are paid for it. By whom? By the government, or by some great banking establishment! But, at all events, they do not believe there is any such benevolence in man, and straightway they are offended. They always take my books, however, and afterward hear these preachers describe Sabbath schools, Masonic, temperance and other societies, and especially the Bible Society, as being the gates of hell.

Their hospitality to me—all things considered—has been very great, especially among the unconverted. Only three of the latter charged me for staying all night in nine months' travel. That is astonishing. I must say that in Covington county I met with the most cordial kindness from these much abused and warm-hearted men and women—much abused by a former representative, who led a raid on them, and now by another, who has deceived them with regard to their church relations, for they have no idea of being in the Radical church. Would to God they could be delivered from their abused condition.

But I close these observations hoping and looking for better days in our beloved Zion and land and country. O that the church and people of God would consider their duty, and live to with might and main to do it.

Your's, in Christ Jesus,

J. W. JORDAN.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Died, at her mother's residence, on Pascagoula river, in Jackson county, Mississippi, on the 21st of September, Miss MARY E. CLARK, after an illness of only a few days.

The sad fact briefly stated in the above lines will send sorrow to the hearts of many of the readers of the ADVOCATE. Mary was universally loved by all who were acquainted with her. A large circle of friends feel that in her death the family, the social circle, the entire community, and the Christian church—especially the Pascagoula circuit—have lost one of their brightest and purest jewels. Early in life she learned the importance of religion and the value of the soul. Therefore in childhood she united herself with the Methodist Church, and continued a consistent member until her death.

How very often, although we know all must die, are we reminded of the proverb that "Death likes a shining mark."

In this sad instance the mark was peculiarly bright and shining.—After years spent in the itinerancy, from the north to the south and from the east to the west of the Alabama Conference, forming new acquaintances all the while in all the different classes of society to be found in so varied a field, I cannot look back and recall the name of one of her age who promised more for the church and the world than she did. It was my fortunate privilege to know her in public and in private life, to meet with her "in the great congregation" and around the fireside. It was especially at home that her virtues shone most lovingly. No one could visit the home of her mother without knowing somewhat of the worth of Mary E. Clark. Her constant kindness to an aged and blind grandmother, her deep respect for and uniform obedience to her own widowed mother, her love and affection for her brothers and sisters, and her manifest desire to contribute to the happiness of all around her, rendered the modest and unassuming girl conspicuous to all strangers.

The weary, care-worn itinerant never failed to find in her at once a daughter and a sister. To minister to their wants, to lessen their cares, to banish their anxiety, to cheer them in their work of love, was her delight, and no sacrifice was too great for her when these were the ends to be attained. The solution to this self-sacrificing spirit is, she was truly religious, and ever felt that

"Drops of grief can ne'er repay
The debt of love I owe."

In what has already been said of her is a representation of her true character. Her mental endowments were far, indeed, above mediocrity. Raised in a secluded section of the country, she appeared to partake of the pure and sublime in nature around her, and from nature and a well selected course of study and reading her mind was enriched with much useful information, and under the judicious management and care of an elder sister she gave promise of developing a mind as rare and brilliant as already she had shown her heart and soul to be lovely and good.

But all is ended now, except our recollections of her. She was cut off in the morning of life, having entered her sixteenth year a little over a month before her death.

A while before life was gone she, with uplifted eyes, said:

"Loving Jesus, gentle Lamb,
In thy gracious hands I am."

If then in his hands, now she is with him at rest. Mary "is not dead"—she "sleepeth." In the grave

"Sweet shall be her rest
Till Jesus bid her arise,
To hail him in triumph
Descending the skies."

MRS. M. J. KOFFSKY

On Friday evening, November 13, just as the sun sank to rest behind the Western hills, the humble Christian whose name heads this article fell asleep in Jesus. It is not necessary to give her birthplace or her parentage. Suffice it to say that since she was ten or eleven years of age she has been a subject of the kingdom of Christ and a child of God. She united with the Morean street church, in this city, under the ministry of Rev. Brother Thweat, in 1851. Since then she has been an unpretending but faithful Christian.

During her last illness, which continued for six weeks and was attended with great suffering, she manifested an unusual amount of meekness and Christian fortitude. For several days prior to her death I saw that she was beyond the reach of medicine, but I continued to visit her. On the second morning before she died, when I approached her bedside, she asked me to pray. After prayer I asked her how she felt in regard to the future. She said: "I do not think that I shall recover. If I do it will be like raising one from the dead, and I will then have to contend with the difficulties and dangers of life again, and perhaps I may become forgetful of my duties to God, and finally be called to die when I may not be prepared, as I am now. I feel now that if it is God's will, I am ready to go." She then asked me to sing. While singing she would frequently join with me.—Then she would pause and exclaim: "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me, bless his holy name."

On the morning of the day on which she died I found her hand cold and her arm pulseless. Still she was praising God. She said: "I have suffered a great deal, but all the sufferings that I have ever endured are not to be compared to the joys which I experience in dying." She spoke feelingly of her husband and children, but her heart did not seem to cling to them, as is frequently the case. She seemed to have arrived at that point where the great power of attraction was heavenward.

About an hour before she died I called again. She again asked me to pray and sing. After singing one hymn she said: "Sing again. God will bless you. It is such a soothing balm to my spirit." A few moments before she died she called her husband and children to her bedside. Affectionately extending to each her hand, which had been cold since early morning, she bade them farewell. She exhorted them not to weep for her, but so to live that, when called to die, they could die as they saw her die, and meet her in heaven. She then asked her husband to fix her a little, adding: "I think now I can go home." He helped her turn on her right side. After everything was adjusted about her I saw her lips move and heard her whisper: "O Lord, come now." Her respiration gradually and almost imperceptibly grew slower and more feeble. The pulsations of her heart became weaker and weaker, and in a few moments, without a gasp or a sigh, without the movement of a finger or the twitching of a muscle, quietly as an infant on its mother's bosom, sweetly as the dying away of heavenly music on the breeze, she fell asleep in Jesus.

She did not die. She only went home. "Whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die."

J. J. L.

Died, at her residence, twelve miles south of Monroe, on the west bank of the Washita river, in Washita parish, Louisiana, Mrs. SARAH WILLIAMS, consort of the late Henry Williams, on the 12th day of November, 1868, of typhoid fever.

She was born in Montgomery county, North Carolina, in 1810, and was raised by her uncle, Arthur Harris, having been deprived of her parents while in her infancy. She was united in the bonds of holy wedlock to Henry Williams on the 12th day of October, 1826. They emigrated to Tennessee in 1830, and settled in Hardiman county.—There they consigned to the tomb two little sons. They then emigrated to this State in 1845, and settled on the place they lived and expired, and are now lying by each other in the family graveyard near the old domicile.

Her husband died on the 30th day of June, 1865, of cancer on the breast. He embraced religion under the administration of the Rev John Rhodes, at a camp meeting held in 1823. He immediately joined the Methodist E. Church, and ever led the Christian's life. His faults were but few. He was a regular attendant at church with his family, and often led in prayer. He bore his affliction with a great deal of fortitude, and bowed submissively to the dispensation of a kind Providence. After walking with God for the space of forty two years he never doubted the reality of the religion of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. His wife was a Christian lady, having embraced religion when a girl, and attached herself to the same branch of the Christian church. They walked hand in hand while on earth, serving God, often rejoicing and sometimes praising our Lord audibly.

They leave behind them six children, all of whom, with one exception, have made a profession of religion. They, with a large circle of relatives, mourn their irreparable loss.

"Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord, for their works do follow them." STEPHEN WILLIAMS.

THE PRESENCE OF GOD.—We are never alone. The Christian's life should never, can never, be a solitary one. A life of service must be a life of love. And no path can be barren if the fountain of living waters flows by its side. Yet there are lives which bereavement has left very poor in natural companionship, and homes which at times seem silent when the echo of other full and joyous firesides reaches them. And there are those who have no homes on earth, dwelling as strangers in the homes of others; and in all lives there are lonely hours, hours when trial and perplexity come, and the friend on whose sympathy and judgment we would lean is not near; and in many hearts there are places too tender for any human hand to touch. What a truth, then, is that which turns hours of loneliness into hours of the richest and most blessed companionship; companionship which makes the heart glow and the face shine, so that those who dwell in it bear a visible and sensible sunshine with them wherever they come. For the presence of God is no abstract truth, no mere presence of a sun, to whose light we may lay open our souls as the flowers their leaves, and be transfigured, but the communion of spirit with spirit; no mere presence of an angel watching us and loving us in silence—it is the presence of one with whom we may have intercourse as a man with his friend, to whom we may speak—speak of everything which interests us, make requests and have them granted, ask questions and have them answered; One who is not silent toward us. Oh, let us bathe our souls in this joy—drink, yea, drink abundantly of it, and be refreshed! Let us begin every prayer remembering it, and rise from every prayer strengthened with the remembrance; read the Bible as the word of one present; speak of him as of one present; carry it with us all day as our shield and strength, and rest in it all night.—Mrs. Charles.

SPASMODIC PIETY.—A quaint writer compares a certain class of professors of religion to "sheet iron stoves heated by shavings." When there is a little reviving in the church, they all at once flame up and become exceedingly warm and zealous. They are ready to chide the pastor and elders for their coldness and want of activity. But, alas! the shavings are soon burned out, and then the heat goes down as it went up. They are never seen in the prayer room, or more spiritual meetings of the church again, until there is another excitement. If such people had not souls of their own to be saved, they would not be worth taking into the church. They encumber it, though they may themselves receive benefit from a connection with it.

JAPAN AND THE JAPANESE.

The New York Christian Advocate says: On Friday evening last George S. Fisher, Esq., late United States consul to Japan, delivered in the Forty-second street Presbyterian Church, in this city, a more than usually interesting lecture on "Japan and the Japanese." As it abounded in information concerning a people just now arresting the marked attention of the Western nations, we print a condensed abstract, which we are quite sure will be read with interest:

He said that the name and memory of Commodore Perry were well and affectionately remembered in Japan, and too much credit cannot be awarded him for his triumphant success in opening the trade of that country to American enterprise. The islands of Japan are several hundred in number, and generally fertile and healthy. The seaboard is stormy and inhospitable, but there are very many fine harbors to be found, and excellent anchorage ground within. Terrific storms and typhoons are common to the waters of Japan. The interior country is abundantly watered, and rich alluvial valleys, magnificent wood and table lands meet the eye on all sides. The camellia japonica is often seen growing to an altitude of sixty feet; the acacia, the camphor wood trees, the palm trees, the tall cedars, the variety of chrysanthemums and rhododendrons, the orange, the fig and pomegranate are on every hand, and add infinite beauty and interest to the landscape. The summer nights are always refreshing along the coast. In the interior the weather in some places is exceedingly sultry. The population of the country might be about thirty-eight million souls. The population of Jeddo has decreased, owing principally to the reversal of the ancient decree by the tycoon requiring the great daimios to retain a large representation of their followers at the national capital; and then there have been some fearful fires, burning down whole acres of houses, and destroying an immense number of lives.

The ceilings, partitions, doors and windows of Japanese houses are made of paper. The true Japanese house is open front and rear, at the rear more particularly, and parterres of the most exquisite flowers are trained about the humblest dwellings.

The tycoon is the great temporal ruler of Japan; he is commander-in-chief of the army and navy; he governs the treasury, coins all the current money of the realm, regulates the supreme, civil and judicial business, and attends to innumerable other matters.—The accounts we hear now from Japan about the mikado being deprived of his share in the dual government—the spiritual element—are difficult to rely upon, because Japanese affairs are mystery thrice mystified, and impossible to be fully and clearly understood and appreciated by foreigners. There is a good deal of dissension among the daimios on the subject of trading with the outside world. Some of them favor throwing open all the ports, while there are others who would forever adhere to the old and obstinate policy of sealing up the entire seaboard. This very feeling on this subject was the source of the troubles which sprung up in Japan in 1863. A strong party insisted upon the immediate closing up of all the ports. The buildings of the British legation at Jeddo, which had just been completed, were burned down; large numbers of angry and excited men swarmed around those ports where foreigners were congregated, threatening to trample in the dust men, women and children of the barbarian race, but the wise and temperate action of the tycoon allayed the excitement and restored order.

The distinctions in Japan between people and officials are very great. Caste is not the same as that which is known in India; but the barrier is almost wholly impassable between the common people and the nobility. All persons and officials of rank wear two swords; old men, wealthy and retired merchants, wear one sword. The short sword is the peculiar sword for defending personal honor. Ladies of rank also carry a small sword or dagger for self-defense or self-immolation, like their lords, who perform the hari-kari—the happy dispatch—when certain forms of disgrace overtake them.

The people are more dignified, intelligent, self-reliant, generous and hospitable than any other Eastern or Indian people. The fashions of the Japanese never change; fastidiousness in dress is not prevalent, and nudity is not uncommon.

The transportation of burdens through the interior is done by coolies, who traverse the empire from one end to the other. The temples of religion are in some instances of great magnificence, and are situated amid scenes of the most exquisite beauty.

The ingenuity of the Japanese gives them claim to be called the yellow Yankees of the East. For models of coolness and patience they excel, and in politeness they are ahead of the French. The masses of the women are low in stature, and more like slaves of burden than helpmates of their lords. Some of them in the higher ranks are very finely formed, and with teeth of pearly whiteness.—The moment, however, that they marry their teeth are put in mourning, dyed blacker than the blackest ebony. It is very likely a custom intended to draw a palpable distinction between the married and unmarried, and thus running away with another man's wife becomes a very difficult and dangerous operation for a known bachelor. Tobacco is smoked by all classes, even by women. The common people are neither very rich nor very poor. As a nation the Japanese have made more progress in eight years than the Chinese in fifty. The Chinese do not understand the steam engine; the Japanese are quite at home at it. The Chinese will never, if they can avoid it, adopt a foreign custom; the Japanese are ever disposed to adopt any practice they deem useful. Some of their public processions present to the eye of the foreigner a unique, magnificent and unparalleled appearance. Among the amusements is the tournament, practiced by the daimios. Boar hunting has its votaries; traveling shows of all kinds are to be met with, but no circus has yet made its appearance. The first newspaper was started at Yokohama during our rebellion. Japanese Tommy, so well known in this country, was managing editor. The largest gold coin is the obang, as large as the palm of the hand, and worth eighty-two dollars.

There is great respect shown to the dead in Japan. The cemetery at Jeddo embraces over six hundred acres, and is filled with monuments and mausoleums of great beauty and richness. There is every reason to hope than Japan will be drawn into yet closer and more confidential relations with this country; and if only the same dignified, wise, conciliatory and humane policy be persisted in which has already marked American transactions with Japan, no other nation will secure so much of the confidence and respect of this highly intelligent and interesting people.

HOW TO READ THE BIBLE.

1. Read it every day.
2. Read, sometimes, one verse at a time.
3. Read, sometimes, a paragraph at a time.
4. Read, sometimes, a whole chapter; at others, a whole book.
5. Sometimes, read by subjects; e. g., the parables, by themselves, one after another; the miracles, one after another, etc.
6. Take one "character" and trace it through the Old and New Testaments; thus, 1, direct history or biography; 2, illustrative comment on, either in the way of enforcing as an example or exhibiting as a warning; 3, by contrast with others of different type.
7. Hunt up a doctrine through both Testaments. For example, God's watch-care over his people—God's sovereignty—Election—Predestination—The law of the Sabbath.
8. Find out the contrasts between the Old and New Testaments; between one saint and another; between some zealous Christian and some zealous persecutor; between Jew and Samaritan.
9. Take a verse, sometimes, to pieces word by word; and find when the potential words are used elsewhere, and in what verses.
10. Use all the helps you can get—if you haven't a Commentary, put by the difficult passages to ask your minister the meaning of.
11. Above all, endeavor to make your reading of God's word improve you in the article of self-examination and growth in grace.—Religious Herald.

YOUTH AND AGE.—It is true of many men, whose youth is gone, that they know not how to grow old.—Rochefoucault.

BEFORE THE DAWN.

Darker and deeper falls the gloom,
The stars fade out in mist and rain,
Fast gathering clouds around me loom,
And throbs my heart in fear and pain

My prayers are turned to tears and sighs,
'Mid thorns and stones I sadly grope;
Will the fair morning never rise,
Nor shine again the star of hope?

Sad mourner hush; thy grief is heard!
Thy tears are counted ere they fall;
Thou canst not breathe a single word
Ere Jesus hears and answers all.

Wherefore his faithfulness distrust?
He never yet put faith to shame;
Thy Father knows thou art but dust,
And will not crush thy feeble frame.

What though the stars in darkness fade,
And clouds o'er every step be drawn?
The morning comes, in light arrayed;
This darkness ushers in the dawn!

What though thy path is hedged about?
'Tis but to guard from folly's ways;
And love's own hand will lead thee out,
And crown thy path with songs of praise!

God's faithfulness will never fail;
Only in restful patience wait
Awhile in sorrow's gloomy vale,
And thou shalt find it heaven's gate.

A little while—'tis darkness now,
But soon shall every cloud be gone,
Or form around yon mountain's brow
A golden chariot for the sun.

Sunday at Home.

FINISH THY WORK.

Finish thy work—the time is short,
The sun is in the West;
The night is coming down; till then
Think not of rest.

Yes finish all thy work, then rest;
Till then, rest never:
The rest prepared for thee by God
Is rest forever.

Finish thy work, then wipe thy brow,
Ungird thee from thy toil;
Take breath, and from each weary limb
Shake off the soil.

Finish thy work, then sit thee down
On some celestial hill,
And of its strength-reviving air
Take thou thy fill.

Finish thy work, then go in peace,
Life's battle fought and won;
Hear from the throne the Master's voice,
"Well done! well done!"

Finish thy work, then take thy harp,
Give praise to God above:
Sing a new song of mighty joy
And endless love.

Give thanks to Him who held thee up
In all thy paths below,
Who made thee faithful unto death,
And crowns thee now.

CHRIST IN THE SHIP.

FROM THE GERMAN OF PASTOR HARMS.

The voyage of our Lord is a comforting emblem of our earthly life. Is not life often compared to a voyage upon an unknown sea? Can we say of anything in our earthly state, it is safe and secure? A sailor, in quiet weather, with clear skies and peaceful water, moves onward happily. But suddenly a storm gathers in the quiet air; the sun is hidden by thick masses of cloud; the peaceful waters tossed by the winds, foam and roar, and huge waves beat around him. He cannot reach the port he seeks.—Toil, danger and death everywhere beset him.

So it is in our earthly life. O man, trust in nothing, nothing earthly, for "all flesh is grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass; the grass withereth, and the flower thereof falleth away."—Hear the word of the Lord:—"Cursed is he that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm." This night you will retire to rest, to sleep securely; but do you know whether the morning may not find all your goods a smouldering heap? To-day you feel strong and active and enjoy health; do you know whether to morrow the worm of pain may not lay you on a sick bed? To-day you have abundance; are you sure that in a brief time you may not go about as a beggar? To-day you rejoice in the favor of the upright; may they not to-morrow turn the back? To-day thou hast father and mother, but to-morrow you may be an orphan. To-day your circle of children is a comfort and joy, but this year you may see them buried. To-day you laugh and rejoice; to-morrow you may weep and lament.

Yes, cursed is the man who maketh flesh his arm. The Lord is right, for the man who trusts in anything earthly trusts in idols; and an idolater is accursed. Only one thing is needful in your earthly life, and you must hold fast to this in all your earthly troubles and woes—Christ must be with you in the ship; and then, even in earthly things, you will be a happy man. All earthly things you may lose, but you need not lose Christ. All earthly things may and will forsake you, but Christ will never leave you nor forsake you. If you have him with you in the voyage of life, you have one on whom you can call in all storms, and who is always near, ready to help you with his strong and almighty arm. But if the storm comes, and you have not Christ, the waves will go over your head, and you have beside him no helper in earth or heaven.

Does your life voyage lie in the path of poverty? Why do you complain and murmur? Poverty is no disgrace. Jesus was himself poor, poorer than you are. Be a godly man, content with what you have; only labor diligently and pray diligently, and take Christ for your daily friend in your poverty. If after you have done all that a good man can do, you still want bread for yourself and children, then cry to Christ, "Save, Lord, or we perish!" and verily Christ will rise up to help you, and will work miracles before he will suffer you to starve.

Are you sick, sick with a disease wasting marrow and bone, and consuming all your substance and strength? Complain not; in your sickness be still a Christian, and cry to Christ from your sick bed. He is the best physician, and he can help when human help avails nothing. He has himself said: "I am the Lord thy Redeemer." Cry to him: "Save, Lord, or I perish!" and he will make haste to help you, and bring either temporal or eternal deliverance, as he sees best. Why do children stand lamenting around the death-bed of parents? Why do parents weep around the bier of children? Why does she tremble from whom God has taken away a husband, or he from whom God has taken away a wife; and refuse to be comforted? Is not Christ with you? or do you think he sleeps? Ah, it is your unbelief that leads you to murmur and complain, your unbelief that refuses to be comforted. Ye are idolaters, and, now that your idols are dead, you have no comfort. Bow the knee to Christ, and seek comfort in him. Know ye not that they who die in the Lord Christ has received into paradise? Do you really love your sleeping friends, and yet would refuse them their rest in the Lord? For good men it is a thousand times better to die than to live. If you are disciples of Christ, the going before of friends should only make you more zealous in seeking the kingdom of heaven.

Thus it should be in all earthly things. Does your house burn down? Christ is not consumed. Do men rob you of your good name or treasure? they cannot rob you of Christ. O ye of little faith, who lament the loss of earthly good, which you cannot take with you! ye thus show that Christ is not yours. We know not what a day may bring forth, but shall we therefore be anxious? No; Christ is with us in the ship, and we can pray and implore of him: "Save, Lord, or we perish!" Care and anxiety are, therefore, a reproach to Christians, for they are the fruit of unbelief. Fear not, then; Christ is with us in the ship, and we will say: "Though the earth shake and the mountains be removed, yet Christ is with us; though wicked men threaten, though hell and devils rage, yet Christ will defend us."—New York Observer.

MEN WANTED.—The great want of this age is men. Men who are not for sale. Men who are honest, sound from center to circumference, true to the heart's core. Men who will condemn wrong in friend or foe, in themselves as well as others. Men whose consciences are as steady as the needle to the pole. Men who will stand for the right if the heavens totter and the earth reels. Men who can tell the truth and look the world and the devil right in the eye. Men that neither brag nor run. Men that neither flag nor flinch. Men who can have courage without shouting to it. Men in whom the courage of everlasting life runs still, deep and strong. Men too large for sectarian bonds. Men who do not cry nor cause their voices to be heard on the streets, but who will not fail nor be discouraged till judgment be set in the earth. Men who know their message and tell it. Men who know their places and fill them. Men who mind their own business. Men who will not lie. Men who are not too lazy to work, nor too proud to be poor. Men who are willing to eat what they have earned, and wear what they have paid for.—Southern Home Journal.

ARE YOU IN EARNEST?—It is Christ's work that you are doing. He has intrusted it to you. You profess to love your Master. Are you really in earnest in your work for him?

It is a great work. Perishing souls are committed to your trust; a work shared by God himself; a work for the promotion of which Christ died; in which angels are interested. O thou who in God's providence art called to work in the field with prophets, apostles and martyrs, with the angels, with Jesus, with the Father himself—art thou in earnest?

The time is short. Your own life is uncertain. Your pupil is mortal. Youth ripens into manhood. The golden opportunity is fleeting. "The night cometh." Are you in earnest?

Fellow-teacher, face your own conscience, and remembering that God is looking on your work, ask yourself the question, Am I in earnest?

A SPONGE—WHAT IS IT?

For a long time sponges were supposed to be plants, but later observations have decided them to be animals, and they are placed in the class Protozia, the class most resembling plants.

When first found in the water their appearance is very different from this which you now see.

This is the skeleton only, the part corresponding to our bones. When this was a complete living thing, deep down under the water, it was covered all over the outside and filled in every one of these little holes with a soft substance something like the white of an egg, and this was like our flesh. It was fastened tightly to a rock, and its color was a bluish black on the upper side, and a dirty white below. It was formerly supposed to be a plant, because it was always fast in one place; but for other reasons it is decidedly an animal. All through this mass is a regular circulation, like our blood and food. It has been seen to absorb nutritious matter—that is, to eat, or, rather, drink.—You see all over its surface orifices or holes; these communicate with each other throughout. Into the largest of these, called pores, the sea water is constantly entering, and out of the small ones, called vents, it is regularly spouted out; and it doubtless finds in the sea water animals which serve it for food, and increases its bulk.

And this strange animal produces others like itself; I will tell you how.

From the soft part a little globule is seen to float off—and after moving about awhile very briskly here and there, as if looking for a place, it fastens itself to some rock. Next, gradually begins to be seen the more solid skeleton, (what we have here,) the soft part increases, and so it grows; not very slowly, either, for the divers find it at the end of three years large enough to bring away.

To get these sponges from the bottom of the ocean furnishes occupation for a great number of people. One thousand men are busy in the Grecian Archipelago alone; and thousands besides, with many hundred boats, are engaged in the Gulf of Maehri, on the Barbary coast, and elsewhere; so that in many villages there, from May to September—the best diving time—only men, women and children are to be found.

The finest kind is brought from the Ægean sea. At daylight there, in the summer time, when the weather is pleasant—for it requires smooth water—the boats, each with six or eight men and one pair of oars, will leave the shore and proceed to where the water is eight or ten, or even thirty fathoms deep; for those found in shallow water are very inferior.

Here they stop, and the divers prepare to descend. Each one puts a hoop around his neck, and to this fastens a bag, in which the sponges are put as they are gathered. In very deep water the diver uses a rope with a heavy stone to it. He sinks the stone to the spot he intends to reach, and this holds the rope steady, which he uses to assist himself in coming up again to the surface.

After being busy thus till noon, they return to some of those pleasant little nooks which abound on the shores of the Archipelago, to prepare what they have gathered fit for sale.

The first thing is to press out the soft part of the animal, and then to bleach out the remainder in the sun; so they beat them, and stamp them, and trample them, till there is no more life left. The skeleton part is then washed, and spread in the sun until it is quite clean, and grows to be this dull yellow color; then it is packed in bags, and sent to market for sale—sent to all parts of Asia, Europe and America.

SOME OF OUR CITY SALARIES.—A Scotchman, writing home from New York, thus speaks of the salaries allowed certain ministers in this vicinity: The stipends of some of the New York and Brooklyn ministers are very large. Beecher is said to get $15,000, and probably makes $5 000 more by his lectures, not to speak of his books. Dr. John Hall gets $6,000 in gold and a free house, making his stipend equivalent to $9,000—the largest stipend (or "salary," as the Americans call it) in the Presbyterian Church in America. In Dr. McElroy's Church in New York (Scotch Presbyterian) there are two pastors, each receiving a salary of $5,000. A minister in Glasgow with a stipend of £500 is as well off as a minister in New York with a salary of $5,000. Moreover, the salaries I have named are what may be called the prizes of the church.—New York Christian Advocate.

Proverbs, Ancient and Modern.

The London Quarterly Review for July has a long article, full of erudition, on what we might call the pedigree of proverbs, showing how they have been passed down, with or without modifications, from age to age. The paper concludes as follows:

'Allusion has been made to the shrewdness innate in Scotch adages. 'They are ayc gude that are far awa,' is an instance. The Spanish express the same thing in their 'Dine with your aunt, but not every day.' 'Measure twice, cut but once,' conveying a hint that what's done cannot be undone, and therefore should be done after due deliberation, is also Scotch, though claimed by the Russians. So is that border proverb of the Douglas, 'Better to hear the lark sing than the mouse cheep,' a shrewd saying, whether in its primary sense of woods and hills forming the best defences for border chiefs, or in the applied sense that high and dry sites are better than damp and low. From Ulster comes the rough and raey dissuasive against forecasting ills, 'Never yowl you're hit,' and 'don't throw out your dirty water till you've got in your clane;' in other words, don't lose the substance while grasping at the shadow. In these the point is obvious. But many of our proverbs cling to the memory rather on account of their meaning being somewhat further to seek. This common one, 'When you go to Rome, do as Rome does,' bespeaks some tale hanging to it. And inquiry brings us to the Latin of St Augustine, for whose mother, Monica, St. Augustine solved the case of conscience involved in holding the Sabbath a feast day in Milan, whereas it was a fast at their native place, Tagasta, by laying down a rule in corresponding Latin words to those of our proverb. Kelly tells a capital story of a captain's wife, whose husband the Kaffirs had killed and eaten, being consoled by the waiting maid, 'Mais, madame, que voulez vous? chaque peuple a ses usages.' Again, 'Good wine needs no bush,' at first obscure of meaning, acquires point by reference to the Roman custom of hanging out a branch of ivy, the emblem of Bacchus, at the doors of taverns. To this Kelly traces the slang word 'bosky,' i. q. drunk. It would be curious to be able to trace the sign of the 'Ivy Bush,' a noted hostelry at Cærmarthen, (the Roman 'Maridunum,') to this ancient custom. It is not hard to fathom the meaning of 'Between two stools somewhat comes to the ground,' as the proverb stands in a State paper of A D 1602, or 'All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy,' though this last may well be consigned to oblivion, now that the state of things does not exist. Since the publications of 'Tom Brown's School-days,' 'None avons change toute cela!' Another English proverb 'The shoemaker's wife goes unshod,' applies admirably to any of the possible cases comparable to that of Tantalus. As a modern illustration of this, gentlefolks living on the banks of the Severn may see salmon caught and packed and sent off by mail or train, yet fail of being able to secure one for love or money to feast a friend. 'Great barkers are little biters,' has an obvious application, but it is not every one who knows what precious comfort for his countrymen Horace Walpole drew from it when, in 1792, he used it of English Democrats 'who say everything and do nothing,' whereas the French Revolutionists 'said nothing and did everything.' But most often a painful ambiguity enhances the impression. Thus we may say a thing must be done 'by hook or by crook,' and say it from habit, without thinking much what the words mean. They are clearly referable to the immemorial of 'firewood,' the hook being used to cut the green wood, and the crooked pole for breaking off the dry. The story of the rival lawyers, Hooke and Crooke, is a 'post hoc, non propter hoc.' 'A Roland for an Oliver' is said of 'giving as good as you get.' The names, it is said, belonged to two paladins of Charlemagne; and some see in Charles the Second's nickname, Old Rowley, an allusion to the proverb, he being the Rowland who was in his way a match for the vaunted Oliver. When a man is said to 'show the white feather,' it does not always strike us that the phrase arises from the fact that white feathers in gamecocks indicate impurity of breed. 'Raining cats and dogs' is a common expression for an uncommon phenomenon. Some of Levy's portents distance it in strangeness, even if taken literally. It is ingeniously traced to the French 'catadoupe,' a waterfall, in 'Notes and Queries.' The phrase 'not worth an old song' has, like the above instances, been largely discussed in 'Notes and Queries,' but nothing has come out to give it a more definite signification than 'something cast by as out of date.' Any observer of street melodies must have noted that what is in vogue for nine days is forgotten at the end of twenty-one. 'Letting the cat out of the bag' comes probably from the old 'Eat and the bag' of Æsop.

'The English are rich in local, and in what, to embrace weather and calendar in one, we may term almanac proverbs. To touch on the latter first, what hop-grower doubts of the truth of the saw:

'Till St. James day is past and gone,
There may be hops or there may be none?'

Or what bee-master that

'A swarm of bees in May is worth a load of hay,
But a swarm in July is not worth a fly?'

Or what epicure would act in contravention of the adage that 'Oysters are not good in the month that has not an R in it?' More questionable is the adage of 'A green Christmas making a fat church yard,' if we may trust the Registrar General and the Times' obituary, both pointing to a greater frequency of death in cold, keen weather.

'Those who study diligently the 'batches, matches and dispatches' column of the Times will see that the 25th of January (the festival of the conversion of St. Paul) was a great day for wedding this year. 'Wherefore?' it may be asked. As reasonable an answer as can be suggested lies in the words of the old rhyming adage:

'If the day of St. Paul be clear,
Then shall betide a happy year.'

'Local proverbs are as curious as they are numerous. These short ones, 'Bristol milk,' i. e. sherry; 'Essex lions,' i. e. calves; to say nothing of 'Lancashire witches,' and 'Wiltshire moonrakers,' are sufficiently amusing; and other illustrations of this kind are given above.

'Another local proverb, in vain inquired into in 'Notes and Queries,' is 'as round as a Pontypool waiter.' We had half a mind to take Pontypool in a long vacation excursion, and ascertain whether at its hotels the waiters were exceptionally rotund and obese. But our labor would have been lost. We have lately learned that the town was famous 'for its manufacture of japanned goods.' Dirty Dick's shop in Leadenhall street was

'Of things in general full,
Hardware from Birmingham and Pontypool.'

'Professional proverbs, too, if we had time to go into them, would prove very interesting. There is much truth in this, that 'A surgeon must have an eagle's eye, a lion's heart, and a lady's hand;' and strong testimony to the superiority of letters to arms, or to the danger of law to this other, 'A goose quill is more dangerous than a lion's claw.' Householders and housebuilders, a large class, may thank us for one other adage:

'Better one's house too little one day, than too large all the year.'

'In his gossip on the 'Philosophy of Proverbs,' Isaac Disraeli quotes a speech against double payment of book debts by a blunt M. P. of the Elizabethan House of Commons. It was an honest, telling speech, commendable for its briefness, and wholly composed of proverbs.—Without urging unqualified imitation of it, we may conceive how much gain would ensue if modern speakers would but clinch by an adage arguments which, through lack of compression, they now launch in a sea of words. The days of the clepsydra are desiderated at many a public meeting, especially perhaps in the case of post prandial orations.—O that the ambition to win the palm of oratory could be diverted into the channel which quotation of proverbs offers! 'A stitch in time saves nine,' is a homely thesis, but its seasonable use might serve a thorough economist better than all his figures and statistics. Those many county and borough members, one of whose recess duties is to address diocesan societies on the benefits of national education, might do worse than confine their remarks to a short exposition of the adage:

'The best horse needs breeching,
And the aptest child needs teaching.'

And in the proverb 'Nimble ninepence is better than a slow shilling,' though it consists of but eight words, has a more useful lesson for 'pater familias' to instill into his son, and illustrate in his own practice with his tradesmen, than any that can be found in the code of my Lord Chesterfield. Many more saws might be cited, which, spoken in season, would be far more telling than set speeches, far more convincing to hearers, far better husbandry of power to the speaker.

'Not that there should be no limit to the use of proverbs. A man, whose every utterance was an adage, would be as great a bore as the indiscriminate punster or the everlasting anecdotist. But, given a clear head and a sound discretion as to times and occasions, the proverb will come in as one of the most cogent witnesses that can be cited. It is the voice of experience; and it could not be what it is, but for the fiat of the wise and prudent. Yet to its use, as to that of other accessories of conversation and style, must always apply the maxim, 'Enough is as good as a feast.'

'But this last proverb, with a second edge as it were, admonishes us that enough has been said for the reader's patience, although the topic is inexhaustible. In so wide a field one will prefer this particular spot, and another that. To some the wisdom of our own countrymen in this kind may seem to have been scantily illustrated in comparison with that of the ancients. Be it remembered, however, that from the nature of the case the former is 'as household words' to us, while the latter has been too little studied, and too generally neglected. The deeper the inquiry the larger will be the amount of proof that to Greek and Roman paromology is due a vast proportion of the proverb lore of modern Europe. And such inquiry will repay those who make it, by reimpressing adagial truths that have hitherto sat lightly on the memory, by helping 'a knowledge of the minds of several nations,' (a brave thing, in the judgment of Seldon and Bishop Andrews,) and by throwing a light not only on philosophy and history, but also on the study of human life and manners. A nation's proverbs are as precious as its ballads, as useful, and perhaps more instructive. 'Centuries,' says Isaac Disraeli, 'have not worm-eaten the solidity of this ancient furniture of the mind.'

A UNIVERSITY IN PEKIN, CHINA.—The Chinese government having recently, under the leadership of a few Frenchmen, founded an establishment for the construction of steamboats and steam machines, it has further resolved to establish a university in Pekin, the capital of the empire, in which young Chinese should receive instructions in the various branches of science, and be educated for the office of teachers. In consequence thereof the Prince Kung and other members of the ministry of foreign affairs have, at the beginning of the year 1867, addressed a communication to the emperor in relation to this subject, to which was added a plan for a course of study and some regulations for the government of the school. These documents have been published in the Pekin Journal of February 26, 1868, probably with the intention to prepare the Chinese people for this innovation, with whom mathematics and astronomy have ever been favorite studies.

The emperor having given his consent to and allowed the necessary means for the execution of the plan, the managers wrote immediately to Europe for professors. In a short time they arrived in Pekin, and are now preparing themselves for their work by studying the Chinese language, a task for which they are allowed two years. In the meanwhile the necessary buildings are to be erected, and an astronomical observatory, constructed after European models, to be furnished with the best mathematical and astronomical instruments. Among the professors is the German scholar J. von Gumpach; the rest are Frenchmen.—Rev. M. J. Cramer, U. S. C.

SKELETON INCAS AND THEIR WIVES. There is a fine museum in Lima, and one can spend a day pleasantly among its relics and curiosities. Peru was formerly celebrated for its mineral productions, and the assortment of these, the old coins and species of money are really a great curiosity. Here, too, are the portraits of all the viceroys and Incas, from the year 1780 up to the present president; and, huddled round the room, some in large glass cases and some sitting on a small stand or table only, are dozens of skelotons of the old Incas, who burned themselves alive at the coming of the Spaniards, long years ago, as they were foolish enough to believe that after the Spaniards had gone away they would come from the ground as fresh as a toad out of a hole where he has slept for twenty years. Nearly every one of them is in a sitting posture, his head between his hands and the knees drawn up under the chin, and the expression on the skeleton face is one of horror, strangulating, smothering and despair, all together. There are women, too—the wives of the Incas—smothered alive in the same way, and dying in the same belief. Some of the skeleton women clutch skeleton babies, and it is a singular fact, in connection with these mummies, that the long black hair of the women streams from the unsightly skulls, in perfect preservation.

A MAN WOLF entered the town of San Antonio, Huejonapan, Mexico, October 2, bit a young man, went to the court house and bit two of the police, and finally went to another house, was fired at by the owner and missed. The man retreated to the bed, where his wife and children were. The wolf jumped upon it. The man seized it, and they fought fifteen minutes. The neighbors came to his relief and killed the rabid animal.

TO AGENTS.

Please register the letter and send the money forward. We are receiving subscribers daily, with "I have the money and will keep it until I see you at Conference." Please do not keep it, but send it forward. We do not wish to advance money for subscribers. They are many; a little to each one is a large sum to us. If our agents wish us to send the paper forward, they will please send the money.

BISHOP KAVANAUGH gave us a brief call this week. He was just from the session of the Mississippi Conference. We are glad to report the bishop in fine health, and the Conference over which he presided as in improving condition. Our work in the South is everywhere full of encouragement. The bishop left on Saturday for San Augustine, where he presides over the East Texas Conference, which met on Wednesday, the 2d instant. He is also to hold the Louisiana Conference, at New Iberia, December 16; and the Mississippi Colored Conference, at Hazlehurst, January 7.

Plan of Episcopal Visitations.

The following are the Conferences yet to hold their sessions, or which are in session:

FIRST DISTRICT—Bishop McTyeire.—Montgomery Conference, Greenville, December 9.

SECOND DISTRICT—Bishop Pierce.—Mobile, Meridian, December 2.

THIRD DISTRICT—Bishop Kavanaugh East Texas, San Augustine, December 2. Louisiana, New Iberia, December 16.

FOURTH DISTRICT—Bishop Paine.—North Georgia, Griffin, December 2. South Georgia, Albany, December 16.

FIFTH DISTRICT—Bishop Wightman North Carolina, Statesville, December 2. South Carolina, Abbeville, December 16. Florida, Jacksonville, January 13. Baltimore, Baltimore, March 4.

SIXTH DISTRICT—Bishop Doggett.—West Texas, Corpus Christi, December 9.

EIGHTH DISTRICT—Georgia Colored Conference, at ——, Bishop Pierce.
Mississippi Colored Conference, at Hazlehurst, Mississippi, January 7, 1869, Bishop Kavanaugh.

Bishops Andrew and Early, on account of age and debility, are not assigned to any particular fields. They will travel at large and labor as they may be able.

YOUTHFUL ACCOUNTABILITY.

Everything within the range of God's gifts has in it a peculiar religious value, and involves the possessor in a corresponding accountability. In the possession of wealth, of educated talent, and other things, we see the elements of responsibility. The same principle may be extended to the different periods of life, in each of which there is something distinctive for religious improvement and usefulness. Mature years contribute to God what neither youth nor old age can; and old age, devoted to Christ, renders a testimony which could be given at no other time of life.

The various periods of life may be regarded as so many diverse talents given to be improved for Christ. Youth is a gift of infinite goodness, which continues but a short time and is never repeated. There are, then, religious susceptibilities and peculiar capacities for usefulness. The health, buoyancy and social affinities of this age, all have a religious value, and may be turned to account in the service of God. There are influences derived from the circumstances of youth which may effect untold good. Religious example in the young has its own value, often reaching the convictions of those who have been proof against all other arguments. Young Christians have a sphere of influence with the young which older persons cannot altogether enter. Their associations, friendships and recreations may be turned into the channels of religious improvement.

Youth, as a medium through which religion is displayed, has its advantages; and in no other period of life does piety shine more attractively. It is then displayed in the sweetness and freshness of the young heart, and beyond suspicion or taint of hypocrisy. Youth is a special talent to be improved for Christ, having elements of usefulness peculiar to itself; and if neglected or perverted this talent is lost forever. The young believer, the child-disciple even, has a special mission in the duties which grow out of his youth. What can be done at this time cannot be done at any other, and hence the responsibility which rests upon all young Christians. It is a field in which they are to glean, and a vineyard in which they are called to work, until they pass on to the claims of maturer years.

The hopefulness and exuberance of youth are made religiously effective, and the imaginative temperament and glowing ardor are elements of great power when baptized from above. Faith and all the graces of the Spirit are modified by youth, so as to impart to them peculiar freshness. It is thus we conceive that God designs to appropriate the religious capabilities of the young, and that the Holy Spirit wields them as instruments of good in the cause of Christ. Young Christians in a church impart a certain tone of healthfulness, and their presence in a community will be felt as a distinctive and hallowing influence. The peculiar religious capabilities of the young involve the clear idea of their accountability. They are not only expected to be religious, but to be religiously useful. God requires that they lay their youth as a consecrated offering upon his altar, with all the precious concomitants of this early age.

They are to recognize the Saviour's rightful claim to the morning, with its flowers, fragrance, dews and singing birds. They are to go farther, and to reach the conviction that the Lord has need for them, because they are young, and that what their youth can contribute to his cause in the world cannot be substituted by the ministry, even of angels. If beauty and high mental gifts are united to youth, so much greater is the responsibility. They are to be laid together at the feet of Jesus, and freely devoted to the cause of God. So far from being an excuse for sin, then, we have in this view of the subject an argument for the peculiar accountability of youth. The young are capable of sin, aggravated and condemning; and they are the privileged subjects of converting grace. More than this, there is a work for them to do for God while they are young, and their very youth, with its gifts and benefits, is in itself a separate ground of accountability.

And yet many young people neglect religion from the mistaken notion that God expects and demands nothing of them; at any rate, nothing deeply spiritual or self-denying in the way of experience and conduct. They dismiss all ideas of being religious until they have enjoyed those doubtful pleasures, to which they assume that their youth entitles them. They seem to think that this absolves them from all responsibility, and that no religious restraints are binding upon them. But the law of youthful accountability cannot be violated with impunity. If death spares to middle or old age, the bitter fruits linger. The probabilities of conversion are small, but even where mercy is found in later years, the loss and damage from early sins are never wholly overcome. Job exclaims: "For thou writest bitter things against me, and makest me to possess the iniquities of my youth;" and David deprecates the consequences of his early sins when he cries out: "Remember not the sins of my youth nor my transgressions." Alas! there is no greater error, none more common and none more fatal than the supposition that God winks at youthful sins. On the contrary, he insists that we shall remember him in the days of our youth, that we shall seek him early, and that we shall be early satisfied with his mercy. His claim meets the soul upon the threshold of reason and accountability, and his grace prevents our earliest years. And this not only that final salvation may not be imperiled, but that the gift of youth, with its endowments and graces, may be consecrated to Christ. It is that period when a complete offering of the entire life to God is possible, and when the law of the first fruits may be fully exhibited in our personal devotion to the Lord who bought us.

There are several reasons for early piety, such as the danger of delay, the influence upon later life, and the only source of present happiness; but we wish now to impress this single and sufficient consideration, that youth in itself embraces the highest elements of accountability, and will be brought into judgment as a distinct and weighty item in the general reckoning. This reasoning applies with peculiar force to young persons who are reaching the borders of maturity, and are entering upon early manhood and womanhood. No young man, no maiden, can safely evade these conclusions and convictions, and lightly dismiss the thought of a special account.—Christ's work is waiting for them, a work which only they can do, and which they must do now or never. They are called to lay their strength, their beauty, and all endowments upon the altar—not to lose this spring-time of being, nor to part with it, but to hold and to improve for the Giver—not to give up a pleasure worth retaining, nor to sacrifice a joy worth seeking, but to bring all within the sanctified and ennobling influences of the better life.

NOTICE.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SESSION.

Will the presiding elders please forward to me the names of both the preachers and lay delegates of their districts who expect to be present at the Louisiana Conference, to be held on the sixteenth of December next, in New Iberia?

Respectfully,

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The following editorial correspondence and proceedings of the fourth day came too late for last week's paper:

FOURTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

Bishop Kavanaugh called Conference to order at the usual hour. Religious services by Rev. William Wadsworth.

The minutes of yesterday were read and approved.

A resolution of Dr. Abbey, relating to the application of the law in the question decided by the bishop yesterday, was offered, amended and finally laid upon the table.

The following, upon the same subject, was introduced by Rev. Levi Pearce, and adopted, viz:

That upon the passage of the character of the traveling preachers, and fixing their relations, whether as local, supernumerary, superannuated, or as deacons or elders, the lay members of the Conference have not the right to vote, but upon all other questions they have the right to vote according to episcopal decision on yesterday.

First question was called, Who are admitted on trial? Henry L. Bowen, from the scattered circuit, and John C. Carlyle, from the Raukin circuit, were admitted.

Under the fifth question, What traveling preachers are elected and ordained elders? C. W. Campbell, J. K. Hamblin, W. Fisk Glenn and T. W. Flowers were elected.

Tenth question, What local preachers are elected and ordained elders? James E. Jagers, Green C. Fore, Frank A. Alford, John C. Carlyle and Thomas C. Clark were elected.

Rev. L. R. Redding, recording secretary, was granted leave of absence, and John T. Cameron, lay delegate from the Jackson district, was elected in his place.

A committee was appointed to settle claims against Whitworth College: Levi Pearce, William B Hines and E. H. Mounger. Two laymen added: L. K. Barber and Thomas Reed.

Rev. J. C. Keener, D. D., addressed the Conference, urging the claims of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

MISSIONARY MEETING.

At night the missionary meeting was addressed by the Rev. W. E M. Linfield and the Rev. Dr. Watkins.

The meeting was evidently chilled by the times. Preachers feel all changes of the mercury as quickly as they occur—moving freely between the extremes of plethora and starvation. To a practiced eye it was easy to see that the pockets of their new suits were quite empty. Indeed, if ever a Methodist itinerant is ready to part with coat, cloak and jacket, it is at a Conference missionary meeting. We have known many a one, under its generous impulses, give away his last dollar, and then borrow money to get to his circuit. We had supposed that the China mission would have been the burden of the occasion, because from this body of ministers the Rev. J. W. Lambuth went forth to that distant field. It would present the cause in a concrete form and relieve it from its usual abstract character. As Georgia is sustaining the Rev. Y. J. Allen, so Mississippi must and will sustain its representative in China. We are glad to report that through the labors of the Rev. H. H. Montgomery, three hundred and thirty dollars have been sent forward during the year, and one hundred and fifty dollars more are now in hand, given for this purpose. This will eventually be the form, we believe, into which our foreign work will settle—each missionary supported by the Conference or Conferences which he represents. This may not be very strongly connectional in its tendencies, but it will put new life into the palsied limbs of our Foreign Missionary Society.

THE SABBATH.

In the morning, at sunrise, the Conference prayer meeting was held—a very delightful feature of this session.

At nine o'clock was the Conference love feast. It alone was worth all the trouble and cost of attending Conference. Too little time is usually given to the devotional part of these annual reunions. A full afternoon would not be too much time to spend in telling over the toils and triumphs of the itinerant year.

At eleven o'clock Bishop Kavanaugh preached. The preachers listened for themselves and the audience—for is not the bishop a small part of each preacher? We saw them feeling an inch larger every way, as their venerable representative proceeded. The text was: "Take heed to the doctrine," etc. Every one was strengthened and built up by the spiritual substance and power of the sermon.

In the afternoon the Rev. J. J. Wheat preached a very able sermon upon the Judgment by the King—separating the righteous from the wicked—25th of Matthew.

After the night sermon the sacrament was administered. The audience was large and the spirit of the Lord was present.

NORTHERN METHODIST MISSIONS.

The appropriations for 1869 are as follows:

Foreign missions	$275,866 78
Domestic missions	369,200 00
Miscellaneous	75,000 00
For outstanding drafts	129,933 22
Grand total	850,000 00

The Southern Conferences come in for large appropriations, such as the following:

Alabama Conference	$12,000 00
Baltimore	10,000 00
Georgia	12,000 00
Holston	10,000 00
Kentucky	10,000 00
Louisiana	9,000 00
Mississippi	9,000 00
Missouri	7,000 00
N. Carolina	10,000 00
St. Louis	17,000 00
S. Carolina	15,000 00
Tennessee	13,000 00
Texas	9,000 00
Virginia	16,500 00
Washington	3,000 00
W. Virginia	6,000 00
A total of	168,000 00

for the work in the South, and more for political than evangelical purposes—for the destruction rather than the promotion of peace and Christian charity. Some of this money has been given by pious conservative people, and in good faith, for the extension of the cause of Christ and the salvation of souls. Are they aware that this money is so generally perverted to purely partisan and political ends? Their membership in the South is made up almost entirely of negroes, whom they have seduced from our care, and their churches, especially during the recent canvass, have been little else than organized political clubs. Such a waste and perversion of consecrated money has never before occurred in any Protestant Church, and we believe that thousands who have contributed to this fund in the North are duped and deceived in reference to the manner of its disbursement.

Will the sincere and the good never open their eyes to the real state of things as it is in the South? How long will they allow themselves to be humbugged by the misrepresentations of designing hypocrites and demagogues? In our honest conviction of the matter, so much money was never so completely devoted to the devil and mischief as this appropriation to the Southern Conferences. It is not only lost for all good, but turned into the channels of iniquity. So far the efforts and money of Northern Methodism have stolen away many of our churches and colored members, and they are fast turning these members, under their political teachings, into politicians and the children of satan. They have sowed tares in the field, and have destroyed many souls. Have they accomplished any good adequate to compensate for the evils which have been entailed upon the negroes by their ministrations?

SOME employments may be better than others; but there is no employment so bad as the having none at all. The mind will contract a rust and an unfitness for everything, and a man must either fill up his time with good, or at least innocent business, or it will run to the worst sort of waste—to sin and vice.

THE GALAXY, for December, published by Sheldon & Co., New York, is also at hand, with a varied and attractive table of contents.

RIVERSIDE MAGAZINE, FOR DECEMBER Published by Hurd & Houghton. This is superior to the past numbers, and accompanied by a chromo lithograph—the Quack Doctor—worth more than the year's subscription price. Our boys are constantly asking for the next number of the Riverside, and are impatient for its appearance. We shall frame the beautiful chromo, and hang it where our "young folks" can look at it all through the holidays. We are indebted to Mr. Gresham, 92 Camp street, for this valued periodical.

SERMONS BY HENRY WARD BEECHER, Plymouth Church, Brooklyn.—Selected from published and unpublished discourses, and revised by their author. In two volumes. New York: Harper & Brothers, publishers.

Two very stout volumes, of nearly five hundred pages each, and containing in all forty-six sermons. In this collection, we believe, the author's political sermons do not appear. These have been reserved for another volume. We have in these the choicest of the pulpit efforts of a man who is widely known. They are full of his faults and excellences, and as sermons are marked with the freshness, vigor and genius which we have always conceded to Mr. Beecher. There are grave doctrinal heresies in these discourses. Take that in reference to the humanity of Christ, volume 2, page 42: "The Bible teaches just this, that the divine mind was pleased to take upon itself a human body. We have no warrant in Scripture for attributing to Christ any other part of human nature than simply a body." We cannot accept Mr. Beecher as a safe teacher of religion any more than as a safe teacher of politics and statesmanship. Thousands visit his church to gratify their curiosity and to see one of the most notable men of the Northern pulpit; and many of our Southern people will buy these sermons from the same motive. We are indebted to Mr. George Ellis, opposite the post office, for our copy of them.

THE WOMAN'S KINGDOM.—We are also indebted to Mr. Ellis for this novel, by Miss Mulock, author of John Halifax, and other works. We have not read this latest work of the gifted writer, but from our knowledge of her other works, we have no doubt of the character of the book. For literary merit and for sound moral and religious tone Miss Mulock's writings have always been our favorites amongst all works of fiction. They are pure, instructive, and safe in the hands of our children. Published by Harper & Brothers, New York.

Letter from the Rev. Lewis Garrett.

INTERESTING REMINISCENCES.

I was very much interested in reading the "reminiscences" of West Tennessee Methodism, by my respected friend, the Rev Dr. Rivers, and the circumstantial details of the recent Manly camp meeting, as given by Dr. Green; but both of these learned and esteemed brethren have fallen into error in point of dates, etc., which I feel at liberty to correct.

It fell to my lot to form the first circuit, which was organized in West Tennessee, or the "Forked Deer" country, as it was then called. In November of 1820, at the Conference held at Hopkinsville, Kentucky, I volunteered for that new field. I began my work about sixteen miles west of Ross Landing, and twenty miles west of Reynoldsburg, on the Tennessee river, but extended my labors as far as the country was settled. I formed a six-weeks' circuit, called "Forked Deer," and returned a considerable number of societies. In the fall of 1821 I was appointed presiding elder of the district, extending over the whole country to the Mississippi river, from a few miles west of Pulaski. In April, 1821, Thomas L. Douglass sent to my help the late Rev. Andrew J. Crawford, who preached the first sermon ever delivered at Chickasaw Bluff, now Memphis.

In September, 1821, we held the first camp meeting ever held in what is now West Tennessee. This ground was about fifteen miles east of where the city of Jackson now stands. There was no Madison county then. The camp ground was known as Wood's, and is now included in Henderson county. Dr. Green is in error when he says Manly's was the first camp ground erected west of the Tennessee river. There were two other camp grounds erected in 1822, one—"Salem"—about three miles from the present location of Jackson, and the other near the Tennessee river, in what was then known as Carroll county. Manly's camp ground was established in 1823.

Among the prominent members of the church in the West, unknown, I presume, to Dr. Rivers, but pillars of the church, were Robert Woods, Banks M Burrow, Captain Samuel Dickens, Solomon Rozell, whose son, the Rev. Ashley B. Rozell, I received into the church that year, the Rev. John Manly, etc. These men did much in establishing the cause of Methodism in the West. In the fall of 1822 I was returned to the district, and witnessed a great ingathering into the church. I was succeeded in this work by the Rev. Robert Paine, now Bishop Paine. He was succeeded by the Rev. Joshua Boucher. The work went on, till now you have the Memphis Conference.

There is not a single preacher in the Tennessee or Memphis Conferences who was a member when I was admitted. I was received on trial in 1815, at the Conference held in Wilson county, Tennessee, Bishop Ashury being present.

I am now a member of the Little Rock Conference, and did, during the past year, full work

A Word About the Minutes of the Mississippi Conference.

MR. EDITOR: At the late session of the Mississippi Conference a committee was appointed to collect money to publish our minutes.—Money enough was raised before Conference adjourned to publish a few hundred copies, and Bro. Harp was selected to do the work. But it is very desirable to have a few thousand copies instead of a few hundred published, in order that all our members and friends within our bounds may be supplied. In this way only can our Conference deliberations have the effect they ought to have on the interests of the church at large.

In order to have this number published more money will have to be collected and forwarded immediately to Rev. R. J. Harp, 142 Camp street, New Orleans. Now it would be an easy matter for each preacher to take his blank book and pencil and go round among his members to get subscriptions for the minutes, at twenty five cents per copy, and thus secure the very important end alluded to above. Brother Harp will send the minutes to each preacher in proportion to the amount each one pays. Those who pay nothing will get none. But what is done in this regard must be done quickly.

On the 8th of November, by the same, Mr. J. P. FERGUSON to Miss HARRIET N. WATSON, of Society Hill, Alabama.

On the 19th of November, Mr. WILLIAM S. FLANAGAN to Miss JULIA E. RANDAL, near Tuskegee, Alabama.

On the 22d of November, Mr. C. W. F. TURNER to Miss MARY F. THOMPSON, near Opelika, Alabama.

OBITUARIES.

A SAD OCCURRENCE.

Little JOSEPH O. ALEXANDER, son of W. S. and Mary A. Alexander, of Carroll county, Georgia, aged three years and seven months, was buried to death on the morning of the 18th of November, 1868.

Joseph, without the knowledge of the family, went to the field where his brother was plowing, and where there was some fire. It appears that he was warming himself, when his clothes took fire. He started toward his brother screaming, but his brother being some distance from him, did not hear his cries until the poor child had fallen, his clothes consumed, and his body in a flame. He at length saw him, ran to him, and found his sweet, tender body literally baked. He had ceased to call his brother, but was piteously calling his eldest sister. She and the mother heard the cries of the other brother, and hied away to the heart-rending scene.—When the agonized mother approached the poor little sufferer he raised his parched hands and said: "O, ma, I didn't know there was fire there."

The father was absent, but returned before the real contest between the Great Spoiler and his dear boy was over. He seemed to be glad when his father returned. His pallid face brightened, and he said: "Take me, pa. I'm cold." He lingered seven hours, when "swift death" released him from his sufferings.

Joseph was a bright and lovely child. Few children at his age evinced such strength of intellect. He was a bud of extraordinary promise. But God, who is too wise to err and too good to be unkind, saw it was best that he should bloom in Paradise.

Mourn not, fond parents, brothers and sisters! Your loved one is not lost—he is only removed to a brighter and happier sphere. The grave is not his prison.—Heaven is his home, the arms of Jesus his resting place.

GOOD IN WINTER AS IN SUMMER.

A HOUSEHOLD NECESSITY.

DARBY'S PROPHYLACTIC FLUID.

It will purify the most offensive atmosphere.
It will cleanse and cure Erysipelas, all sorts of sores, ulcers, boils, cuts, wounds, etc.
It will prevent gangrene.
It will cure burns, scalds and bruises.
It is a perfect pain-killer.
It will destroy and neutralize all animal and vegetable poisons.
It will, therefore, cure stings or bites of insects.
It will cleanse and purify the breath, and hence is an excellent tooth wash and healthful cosmetic.
It will cure diarrhœa, even the worst chronic case.
It will instantly relieve horses of the colic or persons of heartburn.
It will, owing to the bleaching properties of chlorine, remove all ink spots, mildew, vegetable stains, etc.
It will cure Catarrh.
It will remove rancidity out of butter and lard.
It will, properly used, be more efficacious than any other agent in preventing the spread of contagious diseases, and has frequently done it.
It will, used in bathing, keep the skin healthy, soft and white.

We pledge whatever reputation we may have as honest, truthful gentlemen for the performance of all here claimed for the article, and more too.

It is used everywhere by the medical profession as fast as it is introduced, and we respectfully refer to all prominent men of the profession, from very many of whom we have the highest testimonials of praise for the Fluid.

As a convenient article for constant family use it has no superior.

It has a beautiful color, due to the Permanganic Acid, and when the color is gone the virtues of the Fluid are lost. Hence be careful not to get the cork in the bottle, or any animal or vegetable substance, and always keep the bottle stopped. After the Fluid has acted the residuum is perfectly inert and harmless.

It is taken internally, as well as applied externally.

In substantiation of our claims for this wonderfully useful article, we ask attention to the following testimony:

NOVEMBER 1, 1868.

We very cheerfully unite our testimony in favor of the great merits of the valuable disinfectant manufactured by Professor Darby and known as Darby's Prophylactic Fluid. From the reputation of Professor Darby as a scientific gentleman, from our own knowledge of the [illegible] and from general esteem in which [illegible] are held, we have not hesitated to recommend it as one of the most valuable household articles with which we are acquainted.

Letter from Hon. Alex H. Stephens, of Ga:

CRAWFORDSVILLE, Ga. Sept 29, 1868.

Darby's Prophylactic Fluid is an article of little cost, but great value. Its domestic as well as medicinal uses are numerous, while its specialties are most wonderful. I have not been without it for ten years, and no head of a family who can afford to have it should ever be without it.

ALEXANDER H STEPHENS.

Letter from Rev Jefferson Hamilton, D D, Mobile, Ala, minister M E Church South:

"My family have used Darby's Prophylactic Fluid for several years for various purposes, and esteem it very highly. Indeed, I know of no article within the whole range of chemical preparations so generally and highly recommended by acquaintances as this.

MONTGOMERY, Ala, Oct 20, 1868.

Darby's Prophylactic Fluid is the only medicine kept in my family. We use it for almost everything—burns, bruises, stings, earache, sore stomach, etc, etc. My children, when hurt or bruised, always call at once for Darby's Fluid. We cannot get along well without it.

JOHN MATHEWS.

These are but few of the most recent testimonials received in behalf of the preparation.

It is as useful in winter as in summer, for its disinfecting quality is the least of its really valuable uses.

EXCELLENT SECURITY.

THE FIRST MORTGAGE

THIRTY-YEAR, SIX PER CENT.

GOLD BONDS

—OF THE—

CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

These Bonds are the duly authorized and accredited obligations of one of the most responsible Corporations of the American continent, and are secured by an absolute first lien upon the valuable grants, franchises, railroad equipment, business, etc., of the best portion of the extending eastwardly from the navigable waters of the Pacific coast to the lines now rapidly building from the Eastern States.

Great National Pacific Railroad Line,

They bear Six per cent. interest per annum, in gold, and both Principal and Interest are expressly made "payable in United States Gold Coin."

The semi-annual Coupons are payable July 1 and January 1, in New York city.

The purchaser is charged the accrued interest from the date of the last paid Coupon, at the Currency rate only.

This issue of Bonds constitutes one of the largest and most popular Corporate Loans of the country, and therefore will be constantly dealt in.

The greater portion of the Loan is now in the hands of steady Investors; and it is probable that before many months, when the Road is completed and the Loan closed, the Bonds will be eagerly sought for at the highest rates.

They are issued only as the work progresses, and to the same extent only as the United States Subsidy Bonds granted by the government to the Pacific Railroad Companies.

NEARLY FIVE HUNDRED MILES

Of the Road are now built, and the grading is well advanced on two hundred and fifty miles additional.

THE THROUGH LINE ACROSS THE CONTINENT

Will be completed by the middle of next year, when the Overland travel will be very large.

The local business alone, upon the completed portion, is so heavy and so advantageous that the gross earnings average

More than a Quarter of a Million in Gold Per Month,

Of which 35 per cent. only is required for operating expenses.

The net profit upon the Company's business on the completed portion is about double the amount of annual interest liabilities to be assumed thereupon, and will yield

A SURPLUS OF NEARLY A MILLION IN GOLD

After expenses and interest are paid, even if the through connection were not made.

The best lands, the richest mines, together with the largest settlement and nearest markets, lie along this portion of the Pacific Railroad, and the future development of business thereon will be proportionally great.

From these considerations it is submitted that the

CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD BONDS,

Secured by a First Mortgage upon so productive a property, are among the most promising and reliable securities now offered. No better Bonds can be made.

A portion of the remainder of this Loan is now offered to investors at

103 Per Cent. and Accrued Interest,

IN CURRENCY.

The Bonds are of $1,000 each.

☞ The Company reserve the right to advance the price at any time; but all orders actually in transitu at the time of any such advance will be filled at the present price. At this time they pay

More than Eight Per Cent. upon the Investment,

and have from National and State laws, guarantees peculiar to themselves.

We receive all classes of Government Bonds, at their full market rates, in exchange for the Central Pacific Railroad Bonds, thus enabling the holders to realize from five to ten per cent. profit and keep the principal of their investments equally secure.

Orders and inquiries will receive prompt attention. Information, descriptive pamphlets, etc., giving a full account of the organization, progress, business and prospects of the enterprise, furnished on application. Bonds sent by return Express at our cost.

Subscriptions Received by Banks and Bankers,

Agents for the loan, throughout the United States, Canada and Europe.

☞ All descriptions of GOVERNMENT SECURITIES bought, sold or exchanged, at our office and by mail and telegraph, at market rates.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

THE REAR HORSE.

BY GRACE GREENWOOD.

During my summer in Washington, two new insects, very curious and quaint little creatures, have fallen under my observation. The first is the Mantis, or rear horse, a species of grasshopper which, as its name would imply, has a resemblance to a horse rampant. It has six legs, if the foremost pair, which are serrated and look like the claws of a lobater, can be called legs. With these it catches insects, and, closing the joints, holds them impaled on the sharp little spines, while it leisurely devours them. It has a long, slender neck and a small head, the action of which is amusingly like that of a horse, especially when the creature is eating, which it generally is. About the month are set small feelers, or tasters, which are constantly in motion; and from between the eyes rise two long, flexible, hair-like horns, which are picked up or depressed like the ears of a horse. The eyes are indiciously prominent and wide awake. If you scratch a rear horse on the flank, or pat his neck, he will turn his head and regard you with a startling amount of "speculation in those orbs." Like many other odd things, rear horses are said to be peculiar to this region—are seldom seen north of it, at least. Our late Chinese visitors regarded them with a pensive interest, saying that they had the like of them at home—only, of course, of a larger and handsomer variety. It may be the great sire and dam of our breed were imported from Hong Kong, in a tea chest. Some gigantic poor relations of the rear horse, called, from their extreme attenuation, "Walking sticks," or "Specters," and, from their destructiveness, "War horses," appear upon the farms of Pennsylvania and New Jersey. These seem to be vegetarians, as they do much mischief by destroying the buds and leaves of trees. A wood has been haunted by these same specters to the extent of absolute defoliation, till the Dryades cried, "Take any shape but that!"

Rear horses, on the contrary, are not only harmless, but useful in keeping down the population of noxious insects; but they, in turn, might give us too much of a good thing, had not nature devised a check in form of a little ichneumon fly, which often stealthily deposits its eggs in those of the Mantis, which are thus destroyed. The interloper fly finds the eggs attached in little brown masses to the branches of trees, and looking like knots or excrescences. Those that escape the sly little enemy are hatched in June. The young rear horses are at first very frail and dainty-looking creatures, almost transparent; but even then they are astonishingly voracious. Indeed, a naturalist here asserts that he has known an infant rear horse or colt of the tender age of three days to capture and devour an Apis, without as much as saying, "Bee, mine!"

In youth rear horses mostly appear fittingly appareled in green, and later on in life don suits of brown and gray; yet I have seen old fellows still "wearing of the green," like Fenians, and very small ones in sober gray, like young Quakers.

After a season of leanness the Mantis puts on a portly, well-to-do look, as though he had secured a "fat contract" from Congress. At first, too, he stalks around like a poor lobbyist on foot, "seeking whom he may devour;" but, in his better days, he takes not a carriage, but wings, with which he dashes about in the upper circles, from tree to tree, making havoc among all smaller insects. In this poetic stage of his career the rear horse may remind one of a fairy Pegasus. But the greediness of the creature grows with its growth; and is, I am sorry to say, more fierce and insatiate in the female than the male. Larger and stronger than her mate, indeed the rear mare may be said to be "the better horse." She is, as was said of Wolsey, "of an unbounded stomach." Not even love appears to diminish her appetite. She turns from her wooer to make a meal of a stray miller; and woe to the bee that falls into her clutches, even in the honeymoon.

A very shocking proof of this weakness I am compelled as a faithful historian to adduce: She sometimes, in seasons of scarcity and "short commons," devours her own husband!

I have heard of an unfortunate Benedict, who once gave expression to pensive reminiscences and regrets in this wise: "When I was first married I loved my wife so dearly I could have eaten her; and many times since I've been sorry I didn't do it."

If not quite amiable behavior, is it not wise in Mrs. Mantis to provide against the possibility of any such vain regrets in her domestic life by making way with her young lord while they are on tolerably good terms and he is not likely to disagree with her. It may be she pounces upon him as he dozes in the sun after dinner, having feasted on flies of her catching, leaving her only a few wings and drumsticks, and speedily makes an end of him for the good of the family; for thus will not his substance go to nourish the eggs through which his race is to be perpetuated?

When first caught, the Mantis is exceedingly wild and restive, rearing back and striking out in all directions; but it can be subdued and tamed by a judicious course of feeding and petting, without resort to Rarey's strap.

A lady once captured an intelligent female, and kept it for a long time in her room. She taught it to come to her when called, and take flies and bits of raw meat from her fingers. But, though it became quite gentle and quiet, I am sorry to say there was no decrease in its voracity. So it would seem

"We can call these delicate creatures ours,
And not their appetites."

In the autumn the rear horse gets so clumsy and heavy, so immoderately corpulent, that his airy wings will no longer support him. He falls to the ground, and is obliged to walk or hop for the remainder of his days, or be trodden under foot of men. The contractor has overreached himself. What sort of an end he makes at last I have never ascertained—whether he dies of a small variety of canine apoplexy, or goes off in a galloping consumption. But there comes a time, doubtless, when Washington life grows as wearisome to him as to a poor loyal man with a claim against government; when he feels the frosts and infirmities of age; when the grasshopper in him is a burden; when the horse of him rears and prances no more; when his race is run, and he vanishes from the earth.—New York Independent.

How Jesus Comes.—One evening the children in Flake's Reformatory at Wesmer sat down to supper. When one of the boys had said the pious grace, "Come, Lord Jesus, be our guest, and bless what thou hast provided," a little fellow looked up and said:

"Do tell me why the Lord Jesus never comes. We ask him every day to sit with us, and he never comes."

"Dear child, only believe, and you may be sure he will come, for he does not despise our invitation."

"I will set him a seat," said the little fellow, and just then there was a knock at the door.

A poor frozen apprentice entered, begging a night's lodging. He was made welcome; the chair stood ready for him; every child wanted him to have his plate, and one was lamenting that his bed was too small for the stranger, who was quite touched by such uncommon attentions. The little one had been thinking hard all this time.

"Jesus could not come, so he sent this man in his place—is that it?"

"Yes, dear child, that is just it. Every piece of bread and every drink of water that we give the poor, or the sick, or the prisoners, for Jesus' sake, we give to him."

"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

These children sang a hymn of the love of God to their guest before they parted for the night, and neither he nor they were likely to forget the simple Bible comment.—Praying and Working.

SCIENTIFIC.

The Influence of Mechanical Contrivances on History.

Though ours is neither a "Golden Age" nor a "Silver Age," yet it is most emphatically an "Age of Iron." It is also an "Age of Steam and Electricity," of discovery, of contrivance; an age in which science comes to the first place and lords it over literature, and over ecclesiastics too, as never before. It is, in short, the "Age of Mechanism."—To comprehend how unexampled an influence mechanical contrivances exert on the fall of nations, it is only needful to glance at the Europe of to-day. Mechanics sway the destinies of peoples and the existence of dynasties. "In these modern days of ours," says the author of the "Twelve Decisive Battles," mechanism has made vast inroads on the domain of morale, and nations which once ruled the seas by virtue of the courage and skill of their sailors, and by national pride and training in marine enterprise, have found their prestige swept away.

And again, referring to the contest between Austria and Prussia for the leadership of Germany, the same authority says: "War grows each day to be a more exact science. A nation, arming itself with a needle-gun, confidently rushes in upon its neighbor, twice as strong in number and resource; and at a thought brings its great rival's knee to the dust."

Take the influence of steam transportation on modern war. The Crimean war showed how revolutionary an agent it was. The war in Italy, which soon followed, brought out the lesson in its full significance. The Schleswig Holstein affair again directed attention upon railroads, by showing the magic speed with which supplies could be carried to a camp from a far distant base. Then came the Prusso-Austrian war, completing the commentary for Europe.

Here in America the same thing was taught for four years on a far more marvelous scale. Such were the movements by the railroad of the ninth corps under General Burnside, from central Kentucky to Vicksburg; the transfer of the twelfth and thirteenth corps, under Hooker, from Washington to Chattanooga; of the twenty-third corps from Eastport, on the Tennessee, to Washington. This last marvelous feat Mr. Stanton declared to be "without parallel in military history." The distance traveled was one thousand four hundred miles, the troops moved were twenty thousand strong, besides a thousand animals and a full artillery train. It was accomplished at mid-winter, with rivers and roads blocked by ice, in an average time of eleven days for each sub division. When we turn to arms, ammunition and armor, the revolutionary agency of modern mechanism is still more apparent. Every nation in Christendom has now its breech-loading rifle for infantry, carbine for cavalry, cannon for artillery. While Prussia arms herself with Krupp's breech-loading, solid steel cannon, built at Essen, Napoleon secretly prepares a piece of field artillery the like of which for destructive power, it is claimed, has never been seen.

The introduction of horizontal shell firing sounded the knell of wooden ships. The invention of the Monitor iron-clad marked a grand era in naval warfare. The fifteen-inch shot, which annihilated the Shoeburyness target, the other day, neutralized the whole armored navy of England. Her adoption of the American turret-ship makes Russia the mistress of the Baltic. The new and powerful fifteen-inch gunboats will, on the other hand, give Sweden the control of the western Baltic shore.

War and peace, and with them politics and diplomacy, thus obey the behests of science rather than of morals. The needle-gun won the Austro-Prussian war. But for the Monitor at Hampton Roads, our war might be waging now, or ended in Southern independence. Railroads won the Italian war. The fifteen inch gun saves us, perhaps, a war with England. The new Napoleonic field piece bids fair, if it is not overrated, to win the next war in central Europe. And as for Sweden and Russia, it has been wisely said: "Possibly some day a fleet of these light draught, fifteen inch gunboats, manœuvred solely by their sinewy arms, may be the means of enabling the brave Scandinavians to defend their coast and preserve their national independence."

Strictly speaking, supreme selfishness is the essence of modern diplomacy in international affairs, and hence conscience plays little or no part in that art, except so far as it may have a retroactive effect on the nation for whose interest the statesman acts. There is accordingly no moral standard, in the highest sense of that word, in the conduct of nations. No, the injury which a nation has power to inflict, as compared with that which it is likely to receive, is the "moral" standard which governs the dealings of one nation with another.

Ethics no doubt regulate the relations between parents and children, between citizens, and in general between man and man the world over. But ethics do not ordinarily have any scope in national or international questions.

In these, when the crisis comes, the problem is not worked out by laws of casuistry, but in accord with the preponderance of power. Denmark and Crete and India alone are the witnesses of the atrocities that can be committed by the stronger nation, even in our nineteenth century. Ethics may rule men; force governs the relations of nations.

To show how mechanical contrivances could settle national difficulties now undetermined, and which of course will yield to superior force, let us make a few suppositious. Suppose the Garibaldians, now endeavoring to dispossess the pope of his temporal possessions, were equipped with a weapon which would enable each man of them to kill ten of the Papal Zouaves—other things being equal—while but one of their own force perished. It is clear that what is now the oldest government in the civilized world would go down; and no theology or authority, no precedents of antiquity or reverence for historic record, could withstand a cunning contrivance of iron and steel. Or should Italy undertake the cause of the Garibaldian insurgents in opposition to Napoleon, and Italy be armed as we have supposed, the result would be that France could not interfere with any prospect of success, and hence would not interfere at all.

Again, suppose the Irish so armed—by whatever contrivance you may imagine—that one Irishman was equal to ten Englishmen in the destructive power of his weapons, how long would England be able to hold that island? In fact, though much is to be conceded to discipline and to personal prowess, yet, looking back through history as far as the days of Alexander, we shall be astonished to find how many wars have been decided by superior destructive weapons.—American Artisan.

Preservation of Meat.—According to a recipe recently patented in England, meat of any kind may be preserved in any temperature after it has been soaked for ten minutes in a solution made of the following ingredients, well mixed: One pint of common salt dissolved in four gallons of clear cold water and half a gallon of the bisulphite of calcium solution. It is said that experiments show that meats so prepared will keep for twelve days in a temperature of° from eighty to one hundred and ten degrees, and preserve their odor and flavor unimpaired. By repeating the process meats may be indefinitely preserved, and if it is desired to keep them an unusually long time, a little solution of gelatine or white of an egg may be added to the wash.—American Artisan

FARM AND GARDEN.

Transplanting Trees.—There are some advantages in transplanting trees in the fall rather than the spring. It is a more leisure time, the soil is in better condition for this object, and it will have a better chance to become settled on the roots, so that they will take an earlier start the ensuing season. As soon as the leaves begin to fall, trees may be taken up and removed. Have a care how you dig round the roots. These are the very life strings of the tree. If you chop them off or mutilate them badly, it will require a desperate effort of nature to renew them; and the chances are, she may fail altogether. In digging, work round the tree on a line with it, and not crossways; throw the soil to some distance from the tree and carefully undermine it, preserving as many of the roots, rootlets and spongioles, as possible. After the tree is taken up, the sooner it is replaced in the ground the better. We have seen trees exposed to the sun and winds after being taken up, till the vitality of the roots has been severely impaired or destroyed. It is always well to have its new home previously prepared, so that it may be transferred to it at once. In performing this operation, always bear in mind that a tree is very unlike a post, and must be handled and set out in a very different manner. The one is living organized material, the other inert matter. Care must, therefore, be used so to adjust the tree to its new position as to save life and impart vigor to it. The way to do this can be best learned by witnessing it as performed by a skillful and experienced hand. A tree should never be set deeper than it stood before, unless it be the pear on quince stock, which should be set a few inches deeper. In fall planting it is a good plan to draw the soil up to the tree in a little mound, which will give steadiness to it for a while, and will afterward settle to the proper level.

Dead Leaves.—Now is the time when the trees—both fruit and forest—have just dropped their leaves, to gather them for litter for the cow stall and hog pen, and to mix with the contents of the barn yard and compost heap. It stands to reason that these leaves have extracted from the soil no small amount of fertilizing materials, which may be returned to it with advantage. If you doubt this statement, then we ask, what gives to the head-lands, under walls and fences, such richness? Is it not the layers of decaying leaves that are annually collected there? Where the leaves are thus gathered and composted, we should not need to trouble ourselves with anything further, except from time to time to remove this soil to enrich other less favored places. But the great bulk of dead leaves are not thus utilized by nature. We must gather them ourselves, and turn them to as good account as we can. The great want of most of our farms is manure. But few farmers keep live stock enough to furnish all they want. In the vicinity of large towns and cities a supply may be had, but at considerable cost of time and money. There must be a resort to various expedients for manufacturing a home supply, by those who are not thus situated. One great difference between the thrifty and the unthrifty farmer is in the care taken to provide the food absolutely essential for the growth of crops. The parable of the wise virgins and the foolish, has an application in this respect, for farmers, to which they would do well to give heed.

Pigeons as Farm Stock.—In many portions of France it is said to be the practice of landholders to make a condition in their leases to tenants that they shall provide a pigeon house or dove cote, and keep it well stocked with these birds. The reason for the condition is, that these birds do a great amount of good in eating up the seeds of noxious plants, such as chess, cockle and the like. They do not live on well-grown grain when they can find that which is shriveled, as well as the seeds of weeds and grasses. They are busy workers among the offal of the barn yard, but do not, like the barn yard fowls, scratch up gardens and play mischief generally. It is in districts where the pigeon is the most abundant that the wheat fields are cleanest and the crops the most prolific.—Agriculturist.

Corn Meal for Milch Cows.—The statement is often made, through the agricultural press, that corn meal is the best feed for cows as a milk producer. Why this shou'd be repeated when the experience of almost every farmer is to the contrary, we cannot tell, unless it be for the reason that corn meal is the best grain feed for cows not giving milk. There is no grain so good for keeping up an animal heat and producing flesh and fat, and it is used in winter by most dairymen for this purpose; but as a milk producer it is the poorest grain that can be given. Oat meal and wheat bran are far superior. These statements are based upon actual experiment and the experience of many farmers Ohio Farmer.

Be Good Natured.—It is by far the best nature that is cultivated. As a matter of fact any other sort is hardly worth cultivating at all. It is the golden passport of many a man and woman to the best graces of society. Good nature is always current. It goes well everywhere, and at all times. It is the home of the healthy, the happy and the wise; and equally adorns both sexes. People are sought because of its possession. It is a grace of itself. Good nature is all nature rolled together. Suppose, reader, if you don't know anything about it, you try it. It won't harm an infant, and gives dignity and strength to a giant.

DOLBEAR COMMERCIAL COLLEGE

On the corner of Camp and Common sts.

(In the Spacious and Elegant Story Building,)

Is constantly in session under able Professors. It was founded in 1832, and incorporated by the State. Its former students may be found as Principals or Book-keepers in a large portion of the old houses of this city and over the Southern States. Ladies or gentlemen can attend the COMMERCIAL COURSE; or Book-keeping, Penmanship, Mathematics, English, French or Spanish, separately. A business education, that enables one to earn $1000, $2000, or $3 000 annually, is the best fortune parents can give their sons. A DIPLOMA from this College is a pass port in all Commercial communities. Ladies and Gentlemen are invited to call. We have ample arrangements for 1000 students the present year. Liberal arrangements made for Clergymen or their sons and crippled soldiers. Catalogues sent to all who desire them.

Who are both the agents and owners of this sheet.

A man who wishes to be known in the country is certainly much in his own light who does not display his name in our advertising columns.

Our terms are precisely the same as those of other weekly newspapers in this city.

We have fewer advertisements than the secular papers, but what we have are read with that conscientious regard for everything that appears in a Christian paper which takes hold—in fact, too strong a hold—and holds the editor responsible for all the patent medicines, hardware, shoes, pork, flour, and even whisky, which may be set forth in its columns.

The terms of advertising are as follows:

THE HOME MONTHLY, New Orleans, for 1867.

The HOME MONTHLY will contain forty-eight pages of reading matter, printed upon fine paper and in clear type, and will, from time to time, be accompanied by elegant steel-plate engravings. The subscription price will remain $3 per annum, or $1.50 for six months, invariably in advance. In order to build up a still larger circulation, we have concluded to offer the following

Liberal Inducements to Agents.

To any person sending us three yearly subscriptions, with nine dollars, we will send the MONTHLY six months, or allow them, if they prefer, to retain One Dollar and Twenty-five Cents of the amount.

To any person sending us six subscriptions, with eighteen dollars, ($18,) we will send the MONTHLY one year, or allow them to retain Two Dollars and Fifty Cents of the amount.

On amounts for subscription less than nine dollars, agents will be allowed to retain ten per cent.

Ministers, it is hoped, will act as agents, not so much from pecuniary considerations as from a laudable desire to assist in building up a home literature worthy of a place among the families of the South and on the center-tables of a Christian people.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as the means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

At Least Thirty per Cent, as Compared with any other Stove.

and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally known as the "Dotch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. That meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

For sale only by the undersigned.

In addition to the above, I also have a large and complete assortment of COOKING STOVES, comprising all of the leading Stoves of the day, equal to any offered in any other house in this city.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY, AT Greensboro, Alabama.

The next session of this Institution begins the first Wednesday in October, and is divided into two terms.

TUITION.

Academic Department, per term	$35 00
Preparatory Department, per term	30 00
Contingent fee, per term	2 50

A fee of $5 is charged those who attend the schools of Chem. and Nat. Phil.

Board, exclusive of washing and lights, $16 to $20 per month. By messing it can be obtained even cheaper than at these rates.

Sons of ministers of the Gospel in the regular work, and those studying for the ministry, are admitted free of tuition.

The whole expense for the scholastic year, including everything except books and clothing, will be $250, payable one-half at the opening of the session and the remainder on the 15th of February. If the student wishes to board in a private family it will be $280. This great reduction in the price of board and tuition will bring the advantages of the University within the reach of those whose limited means have heretofore placed the highest scholastic training beyond their reach, as well as secure the patronage of those who, on the score of economy, are sending their sons out of the State to be educated.

Especial attention is called to the fact that preparatory students are taught exclusively by the Faculty.

The Law School has been organized under the management of Hons. Judge Coleman and A. Bennors.

NEW PATENT PIANOS.

RAVEN & BACON, (established in 1829.)

Warerooms, Nos. 614 and 616 Broadway, NEW YORK.

Manufacturers of Piano Fortes, with the patent Combination Sounding boards,

Patented August 14th, 1866.

This invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affects the sounding board, the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a pure liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. The sounding-board released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding-boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection and its vibratory quality increased.

Our Pianos are first-class in every respect, and purchasers will have not only our own guarantee as to their quality, but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument, obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market has shown rather more animation since our last issue, but by no means as much activity as is usual at this period of the season. Only a moderate amount of business has been done by wholesale dealers. Sugar and molasses have been dull, and ruled more to favor of buyers. The movement in Western produce has continued on a limited scale, but with an improved demand for corn, caused by more liberal receipts. Our leading staple was inactive on Saturday, but on Monday and Tuesday quite a large business was done, at stiffer prices than on Saturday, buyers for Great Britain coming forward with much more spirit, and a fair amount being taken for the Continent and the North.

The weather was cloudy and cool on Saturday, but has since been clear and pleasant. Nothing of any moment has been reported from the interior with regard to the incoming crops. The prospect continues cheering for both cane and cotton.

The river has risen one foot since our last report, and is now eleven feet six inches below high water mark.

Cotton.—The following are the arrivals since the 27th ultimo:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales.. 14 21
Lake	22
Tennessee and Alabama	1400
Arkansas	3280
Montgomery	668
Mobile	450
Texas	151
Total	20004

On Saturday, with a large amount on factors' tables, only a limited amount was offered at the ruling rates, and the movement exhibited very little animation, the sales being confined to 3,200 bales, and the prices paid showing no variation from previous rates. On Monday there was more inquiry, and a disposition among buyers to go on in a better spirit if factors were willing to meet the demand at previous rates, or even at a slight improvement; but the latter generally claimed an advance of ¼c., which was above the limits of pending orders, and for some time after the opening the prospect was unfavorable for more than an average business. Finding buyers would not come forward unless at easier rates, factors then relaxed their pretensions, which gave an active stimulus to the demand, and the day closed with sales of 9,200 bales, at an average improvement of ¼c. On Tuesday the market opened with higher pretensions on the part of factors, but at a late hour they found it necessary to recede a fraction, and met the demand freely at Monday's figures. The demand then became quite lively, and 6,400 bales changed hands, at rates in accordance with our revised quotations below.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 18,800 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 284,690 bales, against 117,872 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 169,759 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 23,101 bales to Great Britain, of 71,238 to France, and of 7,551 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Sugar.—The receipts have been fair, but the market has been dull since our last review, and prices, especially for the lower grades, have declined. About 1,000 hogsheads were sold on Saturday and Monday, at 7 to 7½c. per pound for inferior; 7¼ to 9c. for common; 9½ to 9¾c. for fair; 10½ to 11c. for good fair; 12 to 12¼c. for prime; 12½c. for choice; 10 to 11½c. for secoods; 12¼ to 12¾c. for centrifugal, and 12½ to 13¼c. for yellow clarified, the inside prices ruling on Monday. On Tuesday the supply was liberal, but in limited demand, and prices were very irregular. About 400 hogsheads were sold.

Molasses.—The receipts have been liberal and in excess of the demand since our last review, and prices have declined fully 10c. per gallon.

SYNOPSIS OF CHARTER.

The plan proposed by the Mutual Aid and Benevolent Life Insurance Association is as follows:

1. Each person, upon enrolling himself or herself as a member, shall pay into the Treasury a membership fee; if between the ages of
16 to 30, inclusive, the sum of $10 00
31 to 40, inclusive, the sum of 15 00
41 to 50, inclusive, the sum of 20 00
51 to 60, inclusive, the sum of 25 00
which payment constitutes him or her a life member.

2. A Life Insurance Policy is issued for a sum equal to one dollar for each enrolled member appearing on the books of the Association, at the decease of said member.

But in no event shall the amount paid on said policy exceed $5,000.

3. On the death of any member an assessment is made upon each policy holder for one dollar and twenty-five cents, payable at the office of the Association, within thirty days after notification thereof, by publication in one daily newspaper published in the city of New Orleans, in English and one in French, for five consecutive days, and if the policy holder resides out of New Orleans he shall be notified in writing.

4. Should the number of members exceed five thousand, the assessment of $1 25 will be reduced in proportion to the number of members exceeding five thousand.

5. Should any member fail to pay the assessment in the time specified, he forfeits all previous payments or credits.

6. All accumulations from whatever source, such as forfeitures, interest, etc., shall be credited upon the books of the Association to the members pro rata, to be withdrawn in lieu of assessments. oct17 1y

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, AT Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

ELEVENTH SESSION.—TERMS REDUCED.

The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar, etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.

SPECIAL CAUTIONS.

Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health.

A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket-money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.

It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

Terms—Board and Tuition per session, $300.

Payments—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.

Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

RICHMOND, Va., Dec. 4.—In the United States Circuit Court, Chief Justice Chase presiding, on the motion to quash proceedings against Jefferson Davis, R. H. Dana for the government opened this morning.

He proceeded to show that the fourteenth amendment, pleaded in bar of punishment by the defendant, was not a penal statute, but merely a change in the political system, adopted to secure trustworthiness in office and to preserve purity in the administration of the government, and was a measure of precaution to secure the country against filling offices with persons who once before filled them and broke their oaths. If it had been intended to inflict punishment it would have been the utmost folly of legislation, seeing that, while it would, if viewed as the defendant's counsel viewed it, lighten the punishment of the leaders who held office and broke their oaths, it would leave the people, who never held office, exposed to the penalties of death and imprisonment as denounced in the Constitution before the adoption of the amendment.

It was an expression only of the public will of the unfitness of persons who engage in rebellion after breaking their oaths to hold office again. It was not intended, as alleged by the defence, to act as an amnesty; nor was there a single word uttered in the Congress that framed, nor the Legislature that adopted it, to warrant such a construction. So far from that, it was intended as a test by which these men could be reached and guarded against, who had proved unfaithful to their pledge to the government.

It could not be pleaded in bar of conviction for treason, seeing that it applied only to those who had, after taking the oath of office, engaged in insurrection and rebellion against the government. Now, treason is something more than engagement in insurrection and rebellion. It is levying war against a government, and of this the defendant stands charged. It would be strange indeed if Jefferson Davis could, as he might under this plea, come to the bar and acknowledge that he was guilty of treason, and deny his liability to be punished because of the fourteenth amendment.

Mr. Dana contended that, viewed as the defence would have it, as a repeal of the punishing clause of the Constitution, the fourteenth article would offer a premium hereafter, securing as it would the participants who had held office from all penalties save disfranchisement.

Mr. O'Conor followed Dana. He showed that from the very nature of the great civil war it was impossible to follow it up by trials for treason, conducted with the fairness required by law; and how utterly repugnant to the world's idea of humanity it is, that after being recognized during the war as in all respects equal and honorable men, the leaders of the conquered forces should be searched out in peace to be hung as traitors. That the government and the people had never intended to do this, and it was for this reason that the fourteenth amendment had been adopted. It was a constitutional provision, and executed itself; and those who fell under it were now suffering the punishment.

He asked the court to give the construction to the fourteenth article that the American people intended it should bear, and to accept the great and beneficent act of mercy in the construction which they had put upon it, and which tends to advance what all good men who are believers in universal suffrage, so desire, that universal suffrage should be accompanied, hand in hand, with universal amnesty of supposed offences arising out of the unfortunate controversy in which universal suffrage may be said to have had its origin and establishment.

The court then adjourned till to-morrow.

After the adjournment to-night, the counsel were recalled, when Chief Justice Chase announced that the court was divided, Justice Chase being in favor of quashing the indictment, and District Judge Underwood opposing. Thereupon this division of the court was certified to the Supreme Court of the United States.

WASHINGTON, Dec 8.—The President's message will be sent to Congress to-morrow at one o'clock.

The President begins by calling the attention of Congress to the continued disorganized condition of States of the Union under the various reconstruction laws. A timely revocation of these injurious and oppressive measures would be the greatest good that can be conferred upon the nation. The reconstruction laws have failed, after a three years' trial, and proved pernicious in results, and should no longer remain upon the statute book. States to which the Constitution guarantees a republican form of government have been reduced to military dependencies, in each of which people have been made subject to the arbitrary will of the commanding general.

Although the Constitution requires that each State shall be represented in Congress, Virginia, Mississippi and Texas are yet excluded from the two Houses, and, contrary to the express provisions of the instrument, were denied participation in the recent Presidential election.

An attempt to place the white population under the domination of persons of color in the South has impaired, if not destroyed, the kindly relations that had previously existed between them, and mutual distrust has engendered a feeling of animosity which, leading in some instances to collision and bloodshed, has prevented that co-operation between the two races essential to the success of the industrial enterprises in the Southern States.

The entire Union has been agitated by grave apprehensions of troubles, which might involve the peace of the nation. The Federal Constitution is now adequate to the settlement of the questions growing out of the civil war.

The President reviews the condition of the country since the end of the rebellion. The acts passed are not warranted by the Constitution. The repeal of them is demanded; the repeal of the tenure of office bill is demanded by the best interests of the country. The appropriation act of March 2, 1867, interfering with the President's constitutional functions as commander-in-chief, and denying to States the right to protect themselves by means of their own militia, should be repealed.

The financial affairs need immediate attention. The public expenses are unprecedented. Here the President sets forth substantially his letter to General Ewing. Congress should make an early provision for the payment of the indebtedness. The fruits of labor should be enjoyed by the citizens rather than used to build up moneyed monopolies in our own and in other lands. Debt should not become permanent. The interest on the debt should be reduced, the owners of government securities receiving seventeen per cent. on each dollar. This favors a few at the expense of the many. The national debt should be sacredly observed. The six per cent. interest now paid by the government should be applied to the reduction of the principal in semi-annual installments, which in sixteen years would liquidate the entire national debt. The large amount of capital now invested in government securities should be released.

The resumption of specie payments is recommended.

The condition of foreign affairs is reviewed, and the controversy with the Paraguayan government is detailed.

The friendly relations with Mexico have grown during the past year.

Negotiations are pending for the construction of a ship canal across the Isthmus of Darien.

A comprehensive national policy would seem to sanction the acquisition and incorporation into our Federal Union of the several adjacent continental and insular communities as speedily as it can be done peacefully and lawfully, and without any violation of national justice, faith or honor. Foreign possession or control of those communities has hitherto hindered the growth and impaired the influence of the United States. When finally established as an independent republic, or incorporated into the United States, they would be a new source of strength and power.

No reference is made in the message to our affairs with England relative to the Alabama claims, the naturalization treaty, etc.

The President renews his recommendation that the judgment of the people should be taken on the propriety of amending the Constitution, first, for the election of President and Vice President by a direct vote of the people instead of by the agency of electors; second, by a distinct designation of the person who shall discharge the duties of President in the event of a vacancy in the offices of both President and Vice President; third, the election of Senators by a direct vote of the people of the several States; fourth, the limitation to the period of years of the terms of the Federal judges.

Concluding, the President says: "Let us earnestly hope that before the expiration of our respective terms of service, now rapidly drawing to a close, an all-wise Providence will so guide our counsels as to strengthen and preserve the Federal Union, inspire reverence for the Constitution, restore prosperity and happiness to our whole people, and promote on earth peace and good will toward men."—New Orleans Times.

MADRID, Dec. 8.—The Republican barricades at Port Santa Maria, in Cadiz, were carried by marines. The authorities here regarded the demonstration as merely a local affair, though similar demonstrations are reported at different points.

The provisional government is preparing a new tariff.

LIVERPOOL, Dec. 7.—The steamer Hibernia, from Glasgow for New York, foundered on the west coast of Ireland. A boat containing thirty-three persons was lost, the others saved.

LONDON, Dec. 8.—A heavy gale prevailed throughout England on Sunday and Monday. Many marine disasters have been telegraphed. Shipping in harbors has suffered, and many houses have been prostrated.

The bark North Briton, from Quebec for Southampton, was wrecked and six of her crew lost.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—The House Committee on Reconstruction met to-day. Mr. Boutwell being the first on the list after the name of the late Thad. Stevens, was chosen chairman.

The committee considered the matter of the removal of disabilities of Southern men who have, by reason of participation in the late rebellion, become disqualified from voting and holding offices according to the terms of the reconstruction laws.

The sentiment of the members of the committee was favorable to the applicants before them, and the indication is that the committee will not interpose objections to any of the class named, who seek to have the disability removed.

Gen. Grant is expected here to-morrow.

Governor Bullock, of Georgia, was upon the floor of both houses of Congress to-day.

General Thomas Young, now recorder of Hamilton county, was to-day nominated by Commissioner Rollins to be Supervisor of Internal Revenue for the Southern District of Ohio.

The House has removed disabilities from Chief Justice Moses, of South Carolina.

The Senate yesterday refused to grant the petition of Judge Moses, but it is believed that body will reconsider its action and concur in the action of the House.

The term of Judge Moses commences on the 31st instant, and if the Senate shall fail to act favorably before that time, he cannot take his seat upon the bench.

NEW YORK, Dec. 9.—The department reports receive unprecedentedly slight notice in the city press this morning, and the business community displays a surprising indifference to the information given in them, and the suggestions made.

The message came late, and is looked on as indicative that the President means to give Congress trouble, if he can.

The general tenor of the dispatches throughout the North show much popular apathy.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—Senate.—Senate refused, after a few paragraphs were read, to hear the President's message.

Sumner's Georgia bill followed. After promising that the Legislature failed to comply with the requirements of the reconstruction acts by omitting to exact the required oath, and did things utterly unjustifiable, and requiring the intervention of Congress, the bill declares the existing government provisional only, and in all respects subject to the paramount authority of Congress to abolish, modify or control the same until the Legislature complies with all the requirements of the reconstruction acts, and adopts the fourteenth amendment, and subject to the fundamental condition that no change shall be made infringing on the right of suffrage of any class of citizens. The bill directs that the governor elect shall call the assembly at Atlanta on or before April next, excluding, unless relieved by Congress, all who cannot take the prescribed oath. The governor is also empowered to suspend or remove from office State or municipal officers and appoint others instead. Finally, the President is ordered to place at the disposal of the governor such portion of the army and navy as may be necessary to preserve life, property, peace and the free expression of political opinion.

House.—The bill relieving Judge Moses of South Carolina passed.

Contrary to universal custom the House tabled the message, instead of referring it to the Committee of the Whole.

MADRID, Dec. 9.—The Republican insurgents are still under arms at Cadiz, and attempting to make terms with the government under a flag of truce.

The Recent Steamboat Collision.

FEARFUL LOSS OF LIFE.

The following details of the recent steamboat collision at Ray's Landing, which occurred on the night of the 4th, have just reached us by mail:

The Madison Courier says of the terrible accident: Last night at half-past eleven the magnificent steamer United States, descending, and the America, ascending, collided at Ray's Landing, about two miles above Warsaw, on the Indiana side. The United States had a quantity of petroleum oil on her guards. The America struck the United States on the starboard, right hand side, forward of the steps, cutting into her a considerable distance, and sinking the United States to about the main deck.

In two minutes the fire was communicated in the lower way to the petroleum oil, and as soon as the boats collided they were in flames. It is said some mistake was made in the signals; the America blew her whistle twice, which the pilot on the United States apparently did not hear. The America again signalled by two blasts of the whistle, then the United States answered, but it was too late—the steamers were at the point of collision. The excitement was terrible. It is supposed that seventy-five or eighty persons have lost their lives. Several of our citizens were on the United States, returning from Cincinnati. Three of these, Mr Steele Bright, Lew. Vance and O. B Sappington, are among the missing. The receiving clerk, James Johns, of the United States, is also missing.

It is estimated, but under the circumstances this must be a mere guess, that thirty-three women on the United States were lost. Mr. W. C Taylor, clerk of the America, after securing the boat's register and valuables, went through the cabin, kicking in the doors of the state rooms. Owing to this and the cool intrepidity of Mr. Taylor no lives were lost on the America. Our townsman, Harvey Foster, was on the United States returning from Cincinnati. He informs us that he and a party from this city had just left the ladies' cabin, where they had serenaded Mr. Inskeep and lady. Mr. Foster was standing in the cabin near the clerk's office. Mr. Bright was on the ontside. The latter came running in, saying the steamers were coming together.

They then felt the shock. Mr. Foster looked around immediately, and all forward was in flames. He ran aft, and with the help of a deck hand loosed one of the fenders, on which they floated ashore. Mr. Inskeep and lady jumped from the United States to the deck of the America, a distance of fifteen feet, and were saved, losing all their clothes.

The survivors of this terrible accident unite in praise of the management of the America, after the collision. It was not thirty seconds after the boat collided before the United States was a complete mass of flames from stem to stern. The America might have been saved had she not attempted to save the passengers of the United States, which it was her duty to do. Those saved owe their lives to the coolness and courage of the officers and crew of the America. Her engines were kept moving until the boat was made fast to the shore. The pilot stood at his post until the pilot house was burned around him, and then left to avoid suffocation.

The destruction of these fine and costly steamers, and the more terrible result in the loss of life, and the uncertain fate of missing friends, have cast a gloom over the community. We still hope that our missing friends have made the shore at some point below and have been saved.

EDUCATION IN CHINA.

SHANGHAI, October, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: The student, in writing a thesis at one of their examinations, must be well acquainted with the character, and especially of those that are rendered sacred by its being once the part of an emperor's name. The student must show his acquaintance with this particular character by the omission of some stroke. Upon this simple fact might and often does hang his future success, while showing ignorance of this fact he would not for a moment be allowed a hearing. These high officials, appointed to conduct the examinations, are compelled to be thus strict and precise in order to exclude the great mass, the number of applicants being so great.

These examinations are not conducted openly by means of questions and answers, but all is done in writing, and it must be done in a given time, or it is not examined. But it is really astonishing what the rich man can accomplish for his son by means of a handsome sum of money. I have known instances of this in the case of some young men in Shanghai, whose parents were wealthy men and men of influence. In those cases money made the man, and not merit. The means of communicating the news of their success is by posting up the names of fortunate ones before the door of the examination hall, so that when day dawns there is a great rush to see if the names of their friends or sons are posted among the fortunate. The news is then sent very rapidly, in many instances, by means of carrier pigeons. All who are entitled to this degree (B. A.) have many important privileges. One is that he is ever exempt from being beaten like a common coolie, and another is that he is treated kindly by all officials when they become acquainted with the circumstances connected with his position. Many of these graduates are to be found in all the cities of China. Whatever the graduates do or undertake must not be overlooked or regarded as of no great importance. These graduates remain from month to month expecting some office or post of honor. To become a mandarin is the heighth of the ambition of the great mass of these graduates. A great many go no higher, and seem to have no desire to strive for higher attainments.

To attend these examinations a man must be well prepared to live in an expensive way, and often they borrow of their friends and relations, and, not succeeding, are thus reduced to poverty.

The examination for the degree of M. A. is every three years. It does not seem that any peculiar genius or intellect is required to be manifested on the part of any student, but the whole seems to depend on the powers of his memory and his aptitude for the quotation of the classics. To get this second degree is considered by the Chinese to be a great honor, and he is conducted back to his father's house with a great deal of pomp and display, and all seem delighted to honor him. Officers call on him in great state, and his friends and relations make him presents. All feel honored by having one in their midst so much worthy of all honor. To gain this second degree is indeed an important era in the history of a Chinese student, for it brings a fortune into his hands, and popularity and office.

Then there is a third step to be taken, which is equivalent to our LL. D. The examination for this degree is held every three years in the city of Pekin. There is a great deal of pomp and show displayed on the occasion, for the greater portion of the seekers after this degree are already high in rank and estimation. The man who is so fortunate as to get this degree is immediately honored by the emperor, and it is the sure road to wealth and distinction.

There is still another degree, called the "Han-lin," or the "Forest of Pencils," concerning which I will write you in my next letter.

Your's, in the love of Christ,

J. W. LAMBUTH.

MEMPHIS COLORED CONFERENCE.

The second session of this body met in the basement room of Wesley church, in Memphis, November 18, and adjourned November 21. Bishop Paine presided—T. N. Stewart, secretary, and J. W. Lane, assistant. Rev. Thomas Taylor, superintendent of the work among the colored people, was present, and throughout aided much in the proceedings—as also did a number of white brethren who have been acting as presiding elders in this work. The usual committees were appointed, and submitted reports which were adopted. From these reports we collect some items of interest.

Education was recognized as a work of great importance, and it was resolved to attempt the establishment of a school of high grade—cheerfully co-operating with the Kentucky Colored Conference in such an enterprise. A missionary society was organized, and for it collections were made. There are nineteen church edifices, valued at $41,500—the preachers were urged to increase the number as rapidly as possible, and to secure good titles to their property. A number of flourishing Sunday schools were reported, and it was resolved, by the help of God, to do all they can for this cause, and on behalf of it they solicited help from their white friends and brethren. The statistics show nine thousand three hundred and forty members, and one hundred and fifteen local preachers. A course of study for preachers of the first year, and for all of limited education, was recommended—embracing the Bible, the Discipline, dictionary, Wesley's Sermons—also, for those more advanced, English grammar, arithmetic and geography. It was resolved, in connection with the Kentucky Colored Conference, and others to be organized, to make an effort for the establishment of a periodical, and Memphis, or Jackson, Tennessee, was recommended as the place of publication.

Thirty-seven preachers were admitted on trial, two discontinued, and two located. The characters of the preachers were examined and passed—no trials.

Several prominent ministers and citizens were introduced, and on the third day the Hon. J. W. Leftwich, and Colonel R. J. Morgan, of the Methodist church, and Judge Swayne, of the Presbyterian church, were introduced, and, by invitation, made very gratifying and encouraging addresses, which were well received.

Resolutions of cordial thanks to Bishop Paine, and "Elder Taylor," as he is familiarly called, were adopted—also to the churches and people of the city for their hospitalities, and to the railroads for granting half fare tickets.

It was resolved to publish the minutes, and thanks were voted to the Rev. S. Watson for giving the money to defray the expense thereof.

On the last day the Conference met in Collins chapel, the new and commodious house of worship for the colored people. T. N. Stewart, C. N. Dickerson and J. W. Lane were appointed a committee to examine the preachers of the first year. Bishop Paine ordained twenty-four deacons, and nineteen elders—the services being of the most solemn and impressive character. Then the appointments were announced, which we give in another column.

It may be noticed that one hundred and two colored preachers received appointments—the territory embracing west and middle Tennessee, north Mississippi and north Alabama. Quite recently, at Hopkinsville, Bishop McTyoire organized the Kentucky Colored Conference; and soon similar bodies will be organized in south Mississippi and Louisiana, and in Georgia. Truly, this is an advancing and important religious movement, which deserves the fostering care of Christian people throughout the land. A very large proportion of these preachers can read and write. They breathe the spirit of the Gospel, and we bid them God speed in their humble and zealous labors for the evangelization of their race.—Memphis Christian Advocate.

WAITING.

BY FRANK ANDREWS.

Down the golden shores of sunset,
On the silver twilight strand,
For my dark eyed poet lover
I am dreamy waiting stand.

O'er the waters deep that part us,
In the fairy barque of thought,
Winged with ardent sighs from dreamland,
By the hand of fancy wrought.

He is sailing, sailing coldly,
Finding straight to love and me;
Hark! the sullen, mellow music
Of his voice upon the sea.

Down golden the fairy sailing,
But his heart throbs fast and low;
What a dreamy, dreamy motion
Each to gently to and fro.

He has passed the shoals of pleasure,
Though the sirens singing there
Sought to bind him to their bosoms
With their golden, golden hair.

And he brings a precious freightage,
Sparkling gems of poesy,
Gathered from the isles of beauty,
And this cruise is all for me!

All for me! his chosen, his chosen,
Standing by the sunset land,
Like the spirit of a lily
On the silver twilight strand.

Picayune.

THE CHRISTIAN YEARS.

BY FRANK RUSSELL.

I sat beside the flowing stream of time
And watched the years glide by and out to sea;
As softly as the cadence of a rhyme
They drifted to the ocean of eternity.

I gazed adown the river, far away,
And saw them on the billows of the deep
Beyond the outlet, where the by-gones lay
Like flowers of fair dreamland, fast asleep.

The white between my straining eyes and them
Were brighter than an angel's silver woven screen,
Which made them fairer than a diadem,
Or waves lit up by moonlight's golden gleam.

The white sails caught the sunlight, and the spars
Were tipped with glory, as when dewdrops play,
Or midnight, studded by the glittering stars,
Or clouds of crimson at the close of day.

I watched them gliding on their tireless way,
Along the pathway of endless years;
Though dim with sadness as they pass to-day,
They gave but brighter through the mists of tears.

I shouted to them, but they'd ne'er return again;
My eyes were running o'er—they still sailed on;
I wept aloud—my tears were all in vain:
They sailed away, and were forever gone.

And then I said: "Glide on, oh stream of time!
You only bear my treasures to their home,
Where, when I lose life's sad, unmeasured rhyme,
I o'er thy stream to them will surely come."

NOTHING MORE.

FIVE POPLARS, Alabama,
November 25, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: From a quotation in Brother Curry's rejoinder to my letter of animadversion on his "extraordinary letter," I am reminded of a purpose I had, on first reading my letter in print, to correct a mispriut of a single word. I am made to say, by the printer, "There is a time of melancholy—the tone of an antique pathos—in the reverence which some men have for old things—especially if they are worn out." It was written: "There is a tinge of melancholy—the tone," etc. Simply this, and nothing more.

"Quoth the raven, never more."

MEMPHIS CONFERENCE.

We extract from the editorial correspondence of the Memphis Advocate as follows:

The Memphis Conference met in Paris, Tennessee, on Wednesday, November 25.

Generally the preachers appear to be in good health and cheerful spirits. They have labored, and suffered too, during the past year; but they have been rewarded. Success has crowned the work of their hands. Sinners have been converted and believers strengthened in the faith; and though other years have witnessed revivals more extensive in influence, it is believed that the church has during the past year greatly improved, and now gives signs of real and rapid progress in many respects—spiritually and temporally. Hence, while the preachers generally have been compelled to endure hardness, and often unnecessarily too, they have done so as "good soldiers of Jesus Christ;" and, buoyant and bold in spirit, they have come again to confer with each other, and again to receive orders for a new campaign.

Here and there, however, I see a preacher either wasted by sickness or worn out in the service. Among these I mention Father McMahon, "the old man eloquent," not only infirm from age and disease, but crippled also, and suffering much from an accidental fall, which occurred in Louisville, in September last, as already published. His brethren did not expect to meet him at Conference, having been informed that he would not be able to attend on account of the injuries sustained by him. All were glad once more to greet him, and sympathized deeply with him in his afflictions, but rejoiced on account of the grace of God manifested in him.

The usual number of preachers, I suppose, are present—some absentees, however. If able to attend, they ought to be present. I do not know how a preacher can lightly decline attending Conference, viewing it as a very great privilege, no less than as a duty. Some, on account of affliction, could not come. Others will come no more. The voices of David J. Allen, John W. McIver, Reuben Ellis and John Hunter were silent at roll call. Servants of God, well done!

The districts generally are well represented by lay members. All of them, I doubt not, are good and true men, and are performing well the duties required of them. I will be excused for noticing the presence, for the first time, of several laymen, whose great abilities, as well as their devotion to the church, add much strength to the Conference. Such men as Prof. L. C. Garland, of the University of Mississippi, Judge Milton Brown, of Jackson, Tennessee, and Judge A. G. Boone, of Mayfield, Kentucky, certainly must, by their counsels, contribute largely to the success of measures which may be adopted for the advancement of the Redeemer's kingdom.

The presiding officer, Bishop McTyeire, was present at the opening of the session. In the chair he is a model. Grave, yet pleasant; firm, yet without injustice or unkindness; wise in counsel; enterprising, yet attentive to details; quick in perception, deliberate and thoroughly conversant with law and usage; never hurried, yet always making progress. These are his characteristics as a presiding officer. His appearance gives promise of long life—forty years of service in the episcopacy. May the promise be fulfilled.

The missionary anniversary was a glorious success. Dr. McFerrin, secretary of the Board of Domestic Missions, made one of his best speeches—one thoroughly characteristic. The collection in cash and pledges—nearly all cash—was about $1,200. The occasion marked a new era in this great cause—onward hereafter!

A Singular Coincidence in Languages.

It seems that in the Umbrian language in Italy, one of those that existed there before Rome was founded, seven hundred and thirty-five years before Christ, and that helped to form the Latin, the termination of the plural number was in or, as subact*or*, is the same as subacti; scribit*or*, is scripti, plurals in the Latin language: so amamino*r* is the same as amamini, a participle used for amamini estis. This statement is found in Browne's Roman Classical Literature, chapter 2.—Now, when we turn to Latham's Hand-Book of the English Language, page 149, section 201, we read: "The plural form children (child er en) requires particular notice. In the first place it is a double plural: the en being the en in oxen, whilst the simpler form childer, occurs in the old English, and in certain provincial dialects. [We hear this form often in the upper country of North Carolina, and elsewhere.]

Now what is the er in childer?

In Icelandic, no plural termination is commoner than that in r; as geisl ar, flashes, tung ur, tongues, etc.

* * * * *

Besides the word childer, we collect from the old High German the following forms in r: Hus-ir, Houses; Chalp ir, Calves; Lemp-ir, Lambs; Plet-ir, Blades of grass; Eig-er, Eggs. The author quotes the German etymologist, Grimm, as saying that this r represents an earlier s; though he thinks himself that "the sign of the plural relates to the collective nature of the words in which it occurs. Husir, a collection of houses, etc., and in the words yeomanry, Jewry, he thinks the r has the same origin."

But it is a singular fact that the Icelandic, which retains, better than any other of the Germanic tongues, the old forms of words, and the old High German, also, should have the same termination for the plural number as this ancient language of Italy, which is in part the basis of the Latin; and they all belong to the same stock of Indo-European languages with the Greek. This would seem to show a relation between the languages of central or northern Europe, or those of ancient Italy.—The Land we Love.

A BOARDING-HOUSE KEEPER in the city of Springfield, Massachusetts, is said to be in the habit, when her boarders neglect to pay promptly, of placing an extra fork by their plates, as a silent intimation to "fork over."

THE JUDGMENT.

What are the pompous triumphs, the gaudy pageants, the long processions on which men gaze with eager delight compared with the descent of the Creator, the Judge from heaven, surrounded by all the seraphic hosts, and bearing with him the final sentence, the eternal, unchangeable destiny of every child of Adam? Pause, then, and contemplate with the eye of faith, or, if you have no faith, with the eye of imagination, on this tremendous scene. Look at that point, far away in the eternal region, where the gradually lessened form of our Saviour disappeared from the gaze of his disciples when he ascended to heaven. In that point see an uncommon, but faint and undefined brightness, just beginning to appear. It has caught the roving eye of your careless gazer and excited his curiosity. He points it out to a second and third. A little circle soon collects, and various are the conjectures which they form respecting it. Similar circles are formed, and similar conjectures made, in a thousand different parts of the world; but conjecture is soon to give place to certainty—awful, appalling, overwhelming certainty. While they gaze, the appearance which excited their curiosity rapidly approaches and still more rapidly brightens. Some begin to suspect what it may prove, but no one dares to give utterance to his suspicions. Meanwhile the light of the sun begins to fade before a brightness superior to its own. Thousands see their shadows cast in a new direction, and thousands of hitherto careless eyes look up to discover the cause. Full clearly they see it, and now new hopes and fears begin to agitate their breasts. The afflicted and persecuted servants of Christ begin to hope that the long expected day of their deliverance has arrived.—The wicked, the careless, the unbelieving, begin to fear that the Bible is about to prove no idle tale; and now fiery shapes, moving like streams of lightning, begin to appear indistinctly amidst the bright dazzling crowd, which comes rushing down as on the wings of a whirlwind. At length it reaches its destined place. It pauses—then suddenly unfolding, discloses at once a great white throne, where sits, starry resplendent, in all the glory of the Godhead, the man Jesus Christ. Every eye sees him. Every heart knows him. Too well do the wicked, unprepared inhabitants of the earth now know what to expect; and one universal shriek of anguish and despair rises to heaven, and is echoed back to earth. But louder, far louder than the universal cry, now sounds the last trumpet, and far above all is heard the voice of the Omnipotent, summoning the dead to rise and come to judgment. New terrors assail the living. On every side, nay, under their very feet, the earth heaves as in convulsions; graves open, and the dead come forth; while at the same moment a change equivalent to that occasioned by death is effected by Almighty power on the bodies of the living; their mortal bodies put on immortality, and are thus prepared to sustain a weight of glory or of wretchedness which flesh and blood could not endure. Meanwhile, legions of angels are seen, darting from pole to pole, gathering together the faithful servants of Christ, from the four winds of heaven, and bearing them aloft, to meet the Lord in the air, where he causes them to be placed at his own right hand, preparatory to the sentence, which is to award to them everlasting life. But, oh! appalling truth! "Where shall the ungodly and wicked appear?" Appear they will, and in the same moment, and in the same view of the Judge; but it will be to hear the sentence of everlasting banishment "from the presence of the Lord, and the glory of his power." Let imagination paint a doom like this, for it defies words to utter.—Dr. Pidyson.

The Social Condition of Modern Rome.

A "Late Resident in Rome" writes as follows in the Examiner:

What is the social condition of modern Rome, which Monsignor Talbot boasts is the most moral city in Europe? We will give statistics, as copied from what we are assured is the most reliable source: "L'Amico di Case, Almanacco Popolare Illustrato, Anno 11, 1864." Published in Turin. Stemperia dell' Unione Tipographica editrice:

Births,	Legitimate.	Illegitimate.
London	75,097	3,203
Paris	19,921	9,707
Brussels	3,448	1,833
Monaco	1,854	1,762
Vienna	8,821	10,360
Rome	1,215	3,160

Being the following proportions per cent.:

Illegitimate.	Per cent.
London	4
Paris	48
Brussels	53
Monaco	91
Vienna	118
Rome	243

As to crimes or violence—murderers:

England	1	in every	178,000
Holland	1	..	163,000
Prussia	1	..	100,000
Austria	1	..	77,000
Spain	1	..	4,113
Naples	1	..	2,750
Roman States	1	..	750

As to the religious aspect of the place, of which Monsignor Talbot speaks much, it is true, indeed, that troops of monks and priests, or boys training for such, are to be seen at all hours in the streets; the shops are closed by order on fete days, much to the disgust of their owners; and the churches are crowded with women, whilst the male portion of the lower orders spend their time in lounging about the different osterias, both within and without the walls. It has been often remarked that of all the long train of cardinals, bishops, ecclesiastical dignitaries, and other worshipers who attend the great ceremonies of the church, the venerable pontiff alone manifests reverence and devotion; while it is proverbial that the purity of his private life forms a striking contrast to that of many of his court.

The atheism prevalent in Rome amongst the higher classes is well known; and the deep-seated discontent at being a hundred years behind the rest of the world is also an uncontested fact. Infidelity and beggary, the grossest superstition and ignorance, fostered by those whose duty it should be to dispel it, crowned, dangerous and countless exiles, secret spies in the saloons of the noble, treason by the heart of the poor man, misery and slavery, foreign bayonets to prop a tottering throne—these are the results of that religious atmosphere of which M. Talbot boasts.

The Last Hours of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

The good old Archbishop of Canterbury was seized almost suddenly with bronchitis on the 13th of September, while on his way back from the Tyrol. He reached Addington on the 16th, and was able, though with difficulty, to hold his ordination in the parish church on the following Sunday. Two or three times he rallied so much that hopes were entertained that his robust constitution would enable him to shake off the disease. On the evening of Thursday week the unfavorable symptoms increased, and from that time he was confined to his bed. His mental powers remained uninjured, and he was occupied unceasingly in reading devotional books, or in writing or giving instructions concerning his charge, which he had almost completed, although he had quite given up the idea of delivering it orally. He anticipated the end almost from the first, and in a paper written three or four days ago, when speaking had become difficult to him, he said: "I commit my soul into the hands of my God and dear Saviour. I have had proofs enough of his love in the past, and I am well assured that whatever sufferings or trials are permitted to befall me are visitations of love. 'Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him.' As to the faith in which I wish to die, I cannot better express it than in Richard Hooker's dying words, as indicated in the underlined passage I have written out. A poor and guilty sinner I know myself to be; but I believe those who kneel at the foot of the cross with this sincere confession will never be cast out if they look to the cleansing blood of Christ for their sole ground of pardon and acceptance." The following is the extract from Hooker:—"Though I have by his grace loved him in my youth, and feared him in mine age, and labored to have a conscience void of offense to him and to all men; yet if thou, O Lord, be extreme to mark what I have done amiss, who can abide it? And, therefore, where I have failed, Lord, show mercy to me; for I plead not my righteousness, but the forgiveness of my own unrighteousness, for his merits who died to purchase pardon for penitent sinners. And since I owe thee a death, O Lord, let it not be terrible, and then take thine own time. Let not mine, O Lord, but thy will be done." On Sunday his grace appeared decidedly better, but on Monday afternoon the disease changed for the worse, and from that time he sank rapidly. He received the holy communion about midday on Tuesday, making all the responses with a cheerful and happy face. His last intelligible words were those of the Gloria in Excelsis. But his looks and gestures proved how eagerly he joined in the prayers and ejaculations which were said with him during the day, and never was there seen a more beautiful peace than that of his last hour. About six he became unconscious. The members of his family, with his medical attendant, Dr. Carpenter, and Mr. Benham, the vicar of Addington, were with him to the last; and he died, in the middle of the words of commendation, so quietly that the last moment was not perceptible.—Guardian.

PRAYER AND DELIVERANCE.—The following instance of divine interposition in answer to prayer is related by the missionary Hans Egede Saaybe, the grandson of the celebrated Hans Egede, who was the first missionary to Greenland:

In the year 1849 a young married pair, who had found grace in the Lord Jesus, came to Okak to get some provisions. On their way they were met by a large white bear, which is the most fierce and dangerous animal of these regions. They were, as you may suppose, very much frightened, and the more so because the man carried no gun or other weapon to defend his own life or that of his wife. He therefore turned to his companion and said: "We can do nothing to save ourselves from this danger but pray." Then they knelt down together on the snow and begged God to protect them, offering their bodies, souls and spirits to his divine will. While they were thus engaged the bear came up to them, but to their wonder and joy he quietly passed by them. On their return from Okak, when they had nearly reached the same place they were alarmed at seeing the fierce creature coming up to them again. The terrified couple, having proved the value of prayer on the first occasion, again kneeled down and looked up to heaven for help. The bear came up close to them and smelt all around them, but he did them no injury and went away.—He who delivered David out of the paw of the lion and out of the paw of the bear, had heard their cry and delivered them.

Reader, when dangers press and death threatens; when the burden of your sins or sorrows rest with crushing weight upon you, whatever be the peril in which you are placed, "the Lord knoweth how to deliver." He is "able," and as willing as he is able, "to save unto the uttermost." Lift to heaven your burdened heart. Let your faith fasten on the promise, "Call upon me in the day of trouble; I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me."—The Sower.

AN EPISCOPAL BLAST AGAINST THE GRECIAN BEND.—"The extravagance and whims of fashion, we are well aware, are not to be written down or put to the blush by any appeal to propriety, good taste or common sense; but it is none the less a duty to remonstrate against making the house of God a place for their exhibition. Most of our readers, no doubt, are aware that since 'advanced ritualism,' as it is called, came in vogue, it has been the habit of not a few persons, who have been sentimentally taken with it, to bow every time the Gloria Patri is said or sung. Very young ladies, it is observed, affect it the most. At first the novelty was the occasion of remark, and in some cases of remonstrance, on the part of more than one steady-going rector. Since the termination of the 'season' at the watering places, however, these young lady genuflections have had a new feature added to them. It is called (it is difficult to say why) the Grecian Bend, and has its most noticeable manifestations in such a distortion and doubling-up of the human form as would excite the disgust even of a South Sea Islander. This 'bend,' it was noticed in most of the Ritualistic churches, on Sunday, was studiously superadded to the 'beckings and bowings' previously practiced, the whole presenting grotesque effects which might do very well upon the theatrical stage, but which are awfully out of place in the house of God. The spectacle is one which, from any point of view, it is sad to contemplate, and it is to be hoped, therefore, that not only the parents and guardians of the young persons figuring in it will do all they can to suppress it, but that the public at large will treat it as a custom, to say the least of it, more honored in the breach than in the observance."—Episcopalian.

THE WAR gave many illustrations of the old and true adage that "the cowardly are always cruel." The fiends, who are now persecuting the South, were never in the army; or like Butler and Schenck, always kept out of the way of bullets.—Probably the most timid of all the men thrown to the surface by the revolution was the infamous General Geary, of Pennsylvania. We suppose that he was never under fire during the war in his own person, though his troops gave him some reputation.

Captain John S Olen, of Loudoun, Virginia, was captured by some of Geary's men after a most stubborn resistance, in which he killed and wounded five of his captors. He would have been killed on the spot, but for the generosity of the only man who had shown any pluck in the fight, and who had pulled Olon off his horse. Captain Olon was a regular cavalry officer commissioned by the Confederate government, and he was under no charge of crime or misconduct. Notwithstanding this state of things, the cowardly tyrant had him handcuffed and a rope passed through the handcuffs and tied to a cannon. He was kept in this condition for four days without food or drink, in mid-winter, with snow on the ground; and he was not allowed coat nor blanket, or fire at night. During these four days the piece of artillery was pulled about to various places in Loudonn and Fauquier, and Captain Oden dragged after it. The courage which he manifested in the fight, and his heroic fortitude under this brutal treatment, were all lost upon Geary. He could not understand either. His own mean nature would have sunken under torture, as it did on the battle field.

We are afraid that the loyal Geary has not sufficiently repented of the sins at Andersonville.—The Land we Love.

CHURCH CASE DECIDED.—The following is an indication that right is to succeed and dethrone might at no very distant day.—Editor Christian Observer:

The Leesburg, Virginia, correspondent of the Alexandria Gazette says: On Monday the case of the Salem church, near Hillsborough, which has been in controversy for some weeks, was decided by Judge Thomas. A week ago the Rev. Mr. Hicks, of the Baltimore Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church of the United States, was ruled to show cause why the church building should not be given up to the control of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in accordance with the expressed wish (signified by their signing a petition to the Circuit Court) of one hundred and fourteen members—the whole number, I believe, being one hundred and twenty five. On Sunday before last, in obedience to the order of the military authorities, the trustees went to the church and opened it for Mr. Hicks, and then retired. He came and had not one solitary auditor, or, as it is still, he phrased it, "neither friend nor foe." The notice that the decision would be made last Sunday at Harmony church was responded to by forty-eight out of the eighty-two members voting for union with the Southern Methodist Church. Some of those not voting were under twenty-one years of age, and by the rules of the church not entitled to votes, and the vote cast was unanimous. The orders were made giving the control to the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in accordance with the statute of 1866, which was declaratory to the law as decided by the Court of Appeals in the Methodist Episcopal Church cases.—Christian Observer.

THE LONDON MIDNIGHT MEETINGS.—These meetings appear to lose none of their interest. One was held at the hall, 5 Red Lion square, Holborn, on Thursday night, September 24, when ninety young females, many of them mere children, were gathered together from the streets.—Twenty-one left this meeting with the expressed determination of abandoning their sinful life, fourteen of the number being sent to homes the next day. Midnight meetings are intended to be held all over the metropolis, as frequently as funds will allow, during the coming winter months.

PARIS AND LONDON.—The following comparison is taken from the latest census returns of these two cities:

Paris occupies seventeen and a half millions of acres, and contains two millions of inhabitants and fifty thousand houses. London covers seventy-seven and a half millions of acres, has about three millions of inhabitants and three hundred and sixty thousand houses. The population of Paris averages forty per house, and that of London eight.—Most of the houses in Paris range from four to five stories, while in London they are two or three stories high.

THE WINDOW.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "JOHN HALIFAX, GENT."

Only to listen—listen and wait
For his slow firm step down the gravel walk;
To hear the click-click of his hand at the gate,
And feel every heart-beat through careless talk.
Ah, love is sweet when life is young!
And life and love are both so long.

Only to watch him about the room,
Lighting it up with his quiet smile,
That seems to lift the world out of gloom,
And bring heaven nearer me—for a while;
A little while—since love is young,
And life is beautiful as long.

Only to love him—nothing more;
Never a thought of his loving me;
Proud of him, glad in him, though he bore
My heart to shipwreck on the smooth sea.
Love's faith sees only grief, not wrong,
And life is daring when 't is young.

Ah me! what matter? The world goes round,
And bliss and bale are but outside things;
I never can lose what in him I found,—
Though love be sorrow with half-grown wings;
And if love flies when we 're ye ung,
Why, life is still not long—not long.

And Heaven is kind to the faithful heart;
And if we are patient, and brave, and calm,
Our fruits will last, though our flowers depart;
Some day, when I sleep with folded palm,
No longer fair, no longer young,
Life may not seem so bitter long.

* * * * * * *

The tears dried up in her shining eyes,
Her parted lips took a saintly peace;
His shadow across the doorway lies—
With her doubts gather, darken—or cease?
When hearts are pure, and bold, and strong,
True love as life itself is long.

PHILOSOPHY AND THE PULPIT.*

In dealing with the subject indicated by the above title, it is our duty in the first place to bestow some attention on the meaning of the word "philosophy,"—Like many others in common use, it possesses a wide and somewhat ambiguous import. Sometimes it is employed to signify the reason of the necessity of a thing, together with the manner in which that necessity is met. It would seem that this is the sense in which the word is employed by the author of that thoughtful and well known work, "The Philosophy of the Plan of Salvation." The word is also employed to mean an inquiry into the essence or nature of anything; thus we have "mental philosophy," "moral philosophy," etc. Again, the word is used to signify the search for a principle of analogy, running through different things; thus we have "The Philosophy of History," "The Philosophy of the Divine Operations," etc. But the word in its more restricted meaning may be taken to signify the investigation of the foundations of human belief, or an inquiry into the mysteries of being. In this sense philosophy may be described as the principle of the sciences; and this is the sense in which we shall chiefly employ the word in the present article.

The connection between philosophy and the pulpit is a necessary one.

I. It is impossible to speak of man as an intelligent and moral being without the acceptance of some form of philosophy.

1. He who would instruct others is compelled to form some philosophic view of the foundation and source of human knowledge. Man must be supposed to derive his knowledge either purely from experience, or partly from experience and partly from intuition. On this account it is said that every one must be a disciple either of Plato or Aristotle. It is impossible to listen to a thoughtful man endeavoring to establish the existence of God, and our obligation to worship him, or dwelling on the nature and claims of the moral law, without perceiving at once what form of philosophy he has adopted. If he is a disciple of Aristotle, he argues from the effect to the cause, etc.; but if a disciple of Plato, he will confidently appeal to the human consciousness in supreme support of his positions. By this it is not meant that the preacher styles himself a disciple of either Aristotle or Plato. Possibly he may know nothing of either of these great names, nor of their respective representatives in later times, Locke and Kant. Nevertheless he founds his reasoning on the truth assumed by the one or the other of the two great systems of antiquity.

2. Again, some kind of philosophy must be held by the preacher concerning the powers of the human mind. Without this he could not speak of the will, the understanding, the conscience, the memory, the affections. Some old preachers were accustomed to say that, as there were five senses belonging to the body, so there were five powers belonging to the human mind; and they spoke of the latter as if they were as distinct as are the members of the human frame. This is still apt to be the case with those who have not made mental science the subject of study. Right or wrong, every teacher supposes some system of mental philosophy.

3. Similar remarks may be made respecting the moral freedom of man. This freedom must be admitted or denied. If admitted, it must affect the preaching; it cannot be pent up in the bosom. It will come forth in powerful appeals addressed to sinners, urging them to return to God; or in refutation of the false pleas of the ungodly, consuming like fire "the refuges of lies;" and it will trace to the man himself the blame of his unconverted condition. Indeed, the preacher cannot speak of the character of God, the death of his Son, the influence of the Holy Ghost, the invitations of the Gospel, of "repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ," of the glory of heaven or the miseries of hell, without making this truth manifest. The moral freedom of man ought not to be kept back to please any class of hearers. Both the character of God and the salvation of mankind demand its fullest expression. And this is a marked characteristic of the Wesleyan pulpit throughout the universe.

While we thus see that a belief in the moral freedom of mankind must of necessity influence the pulpit, it is evident, in like manner, that if such freedom be denied, it will, in spite of all, betray itself in pulpit teaching. We say in spite of all; for it is not usually the wish of the preacher to bring forth this wish explicitly. Yet it will at times show itself, notwithstanding every effort at concealment. Even when the disbeliever in man's moral freedom preaches on the perfections and decrees of God, salvation by grace, the work of the Holy Spirit, or the glory of the Lord Jesus as a Saviour, the denial of the truth under consideration is likely to discover itself, and probably the opposite view will be exhibited with some unfairness.

There are, however, other circumstances in which the denial of this truth is more distressing.—When it falls to such a preacher's lot to exhort the sinner to repent and believe in Christ, or to answer his objections and expose his excuses, he is placed in a plight most embarrassing to himself, and most painful to the thoughtful portion of his hearers. For he holds that no man can repent and believe in Christ until he is led to do so by an irresistible divine influence, and yet he blames the sinner for not repenting and believing.

II. Again, it is impossible to speak effectively on moral subjects without recognizing some scheme of moral philosophy.

One cannot, for instance, say much about the moral law without thinking of the ground on which all moral obligation rests as its final basis. In listening to some preachers it will be at once perceived that they regard the declared will of God simply as forming that ground. They do not take into account the inconsistencies with which such a view is loaded—as that theft and murder, and other heinous moral evils, would be no evils at all if God had not prohibited them; or that it would not be our duty to honor him if he had not required this by commandment. This is to endanger virtue and to degrade the law itself. There is no science, in fact, which has stronger claims on the attention of the theologian than that of morals. Without investigating the foundation of morality, the preacher must oft be like "one that beateth the air."

But the preacher should know much more of philosophy than he introduces into his discourses.—The more knowledge of this kind he possesses the better; but not the more he displays. He ought always to have before his mind the relation which exists between the foundation and the building; but it is not necessary he should be forever pointing this out to his hearers. He may, if he please, grapple with the chief problems of being; but let him do so in his study—not in the pulpit.—New York Christian Advocate.

Successful Temperance Logic.

A small temperance society had been started in a community very much under the control of a rich distiller, commonly called Bill Myers. This man had several sons who had become drunkards on the facilities afforded by their education at home. The whole family was arrayed against the movement, and threatened to break up any meeting called to promote the object. Learning this, the Rev. T. P. Hunt went to a neighboring district for volunteers for that particular occasion. He then gave out word for a meeting, and at the same time found his friends and enemies about equal in numbers. This fact prevented any outbreak, but could not prevent noise.

Mr. Hunt mounted the platform, and by a few sharp anecdotes and witty sayings soon silenced all noise except the sturdy Bill Myers, the old Dutchman crying out:

"Mishter Hunt, money makes the mare go."

At last Mr. Hunt stopped and addressed the imperturbable German: "Look here, Bill Myers, you say that money makes the mare go, do you?"

"Yes, dat ish just what I say, Mishter Hunt."

"Well, Bill Myers, you own and work a distillery, don't you?" inquired Mr. Hunt.

"Dat ish none of your business, Mishter Hunt. But den I ish not ashamed of it. I has got a still, and work it, too."

"And you say money makes the mare go. Do you mean that I have come here to get the money of these people?"

"Yes, Mishter Hunt, dat ish just what I mean."

"Very well. You work a distillery to make money, and I lecture on temperance to make money; and as you say money makes the mare go, Bill Myers, bring out your mare and I'll bring out mine, and we will show them together."

By this time the whole assembly was in a titter of delight, and even Myers' followers could not repress their merriment at the evident embarrassment of their oracle. In the meantime we must premise that Mr. Hunt knew a large number of the drunkards present, and among them the sons of Myers himself.

"Bill Myers, who is that holding himself up by that tree?" inquired Mr. Hunt, pointing to a young man so drunk that he could not stand alone.

The old man started as if stung by an adder, but was obliged to reply: "Dat ish my son; but what of dat, Mr. Hunt?"

"A good deal of that, Bill Myers; for I guess that your son has been riding your mare, and got thrown, too."

Here there was a perfect roar from all parts of the assembly, and as soon as order was restored Mr. Hunt proceeded, as he pointed to another son:

"Bill Myers, who is that staggering about as if his legs were as weak as potato vines after frost?"

"Well, I suppose dat ish my son, too," replied the old man, with a crest-fallen look.

"He has been riding your mare too, and got a tumble."

At this point the old man put up both hands in a most imploring manner, and exclaimed: "Now, Mishter Hunt, if you won't say any more I'll be still."

This announcement was received with a roar of applause and laughter, and from that moment Mr. Hunt had all the ground to himself.

AUTUMN.

See the leaves around us falling,
Dry and withered to the ground;
Thus to thoughtless mortals calling,
In a sad and solemn sound:

Youth, on length of days presuming,
Who the paths of pleasure tread,
View us, late in beauty blooming,
Numbered now among the dead.

What tho' yet no losses grieve you:
Gay with health and many a grace;
Let not cloudless skies deceive you,
Summer gives to autumn place.

On the tree of life eternal,
Lord, let all my hopes be stayed;
This alone, forever vernal,
Bears a leaf that shall not fade.

MY BOY.

A lock of golden hair,
Tied with a silken thread;
A tiny shoelet lying there;
A snow-white curtained bed;

A little broken toy;
A book all soiled and torn;
A jaunty velvet cap my boy
Has often, often worn—

Alas, is all that's left!
(Such is the Father's will.)
His joyous laughter sounds no more—
His little heart is still.

FARM AND GARDEN.

New System of Cotton Culture.

INCREASED PRODUCTION FROM REDUCED AREAS.

The following is from the Augusta, Georgia, Chronicle and Sentinel:

The present problem of the cotton farmer is to increase production of small areas, and devise that system which is best adapted to white labor. The desire of profit is sufficient stimulus to achieve the first of these objects. The constant agitation and disturbance, produced by political excitements and uncertainties, impose the consideration of the last and at present absorbing object. These make up the sum of the practical farmer's inquiries—to reduce the area of cultivation, and to increase the amount and profits of production under such a system of skilled labor as will not be disturbed by political bearing.

Very recently the public have been astounded by the results of the system pursued by Mr. James Bancroft, of Athens, Clark county, Georgia. A merchant by profession, he brings nothing to his new calling but the habits of early training, of method, of decision and of close observation, keeping constantly in view the end desired, and persisting unremittingly in that which would be likely to contribute to that end. Mr. Bancroft's soil is certainly not what is usually styled as rich or fertile or free and productive in the South. There are thousands of acres in the State just such as he possesses that have lain idle and uncultivated, simply because it was believed it would not pay, particularly since labor enters so directly into the cost of production and has been rendered so uncertain and expensive.

Mr. Bancroft's system, we understand, is simply to convert the soil into "stilth" by deep and repeated plowings with the turn plow, and the tine or coulter plow, and supply it liberally with such fertilizers as by experiment he has found best suited for the cotton plant to feed upon, during its growth and while maturing. The thoroughness of preparation of the soil frees him from a large part of the usual continuous labor during the heat of summer, by pulverizing it at those seasons which will best destroy interfering growth. His summer's work is light, confined almost wholly to surface stirring.

We learn that he has arrived at the conclusion that middle Georgia lands can be made to produce five bales per acre, and yield a handsome profit upon the capital employed.

Again: we have before us a circular from Mr. Philip Poullain, late of Greensboro, Georgia, now of Baltimore, covering "a schedule referred to" in letters patent granted in May last, for certain "improved germinating and transplanting cup and improvements in the cultivation of cotton and other plants." The improved cup is the frustrum of a cone, having taper sides, and both ends open. It is simply the ordinary earthen flower pot, with both ends open, and inverted—the large opening being the base, and the smaller the top. The larger opening being lowest permits the cup in transplanting to be drawn up over the plant "without disturbing or rupturing the roots of the plant," "by the adhesion of soil to the sides or walls of the pot," and dispenses with the use of "devices and transplanting tools," ordinarily employed by gardeners.

Mr. Poullain proposes by his system:

1. To secure a full and early bottom crop, acknowledged by farmers to be that which yields the greatest quantity and the first quality of cotton.

2. To economise the use of fertilizers, by so placing the compost and enriched soil within the reach of the plant, as demanded by its nature.

3. To economise labor, by directing it to the particular point maintaining the plant, and confining its chief demands to preparation in late winter and early spring and the picking season.

4. To increase production by prolonging, at least, one month, "the season for blossoming and maturing the fruit or pod."

These objects are to be attained by the following method:

A pit of the style and character of the gardener's pit, (a cabbage plant hot bed,) is made of dimensions suited to the extent of farming operations, to be so arranged that its contents will be protected from frost, by glass or canvass on rollers, or even by pine tops; the better the protection the earlier operations may be commenced and the more secure the results.

A rough shelter near by is erected for covering the compost, and protecting the hands while filling the cups with compost and planting the seed.

In inclement weather the force is employed under shelter in filling and planting. Two seeds are placed in each cup; and the cups as planted are placed upon a board or shallow trough or tray, to be conveyed to the pit at convenience.

In favorable weather the force is to be employed as follows: One set to lay off the land in furrows eight feet apart, and check it at the same distance. Another set trenches at the check, or intersection, two feet deep, and this is done by the spade, or by an enlarged post auger. The third set, with carts or barrows, fill the holes with compost mixed with surface soil. The excavated soil does not foster grass or weeds, and is to be spread around the outer surface of the excavation or hole. The middles are to be plowed out at leisure.

The advanced plants, so soon as all danger from frosts is over, are to be carried to the field in carts or barrows on the boards or shallow trays upon which they have been first placed, and their transfer to the intersections is made easy by the shape of the transplanting cup.

Mr. Poullain claims that the saving of the cotton seed to be used in manuring, and the saving of labor in "thinning to a stand," will pay for "the cost of a transplanting cup," many times over, while the crop will be insured against summer drouth.

Now whatever may be the practical results of these experiments and present theories, public necessity demands and public ingenuity will devise a system of cotton culture adapted to the demands of white labor and to the habits and usages and accustomed modes of labor of the foreign skilled emigrant.

We add, in conclusion, that it is a remarkable coincidence that both Mr. Bancroft and Mr. Poullain have arrived at exactly the same conclusion under different systems of culture, that middle Georgia lands "may be able" to produce profitably five bales per acre.

SENDING POULTRY TO MARKET.—Immense quantities of poultry are sent to market this month, and ignorance of the proper way to do it, and sometimes a desire to overreach, causes many serious losses. First, let the birds fast twelve hours.—Foolish people often let them eat their fill of corn just before killing them, with the idea that they will weigh more. A fasted bird will keep a week fresh and plump if well handled, while one that has been fed within a few hours will be sure to spoil, or become more or less tainted. One tainted bird in a case will cut the price on the whole down several cents per pound. So will one that is scrawny and looks blue and skinny, and as if it had been sick. Second, kill without dislocating the neck or making a whole in the skin. The operation is simple. When the fowls are caught, with a lad to hold, tie the legs of all, and lay them down. When ready, hang them by the legs, a few at a time, on long pins or nails; then with a sharp knife passed into the throat, cut once or twice across, letting the knife bear on each side against the back bone. This will sever the great veins of the neck, and the bird will bleed without wetting its feathers at all. Third, pick without scalding, and while the fowls are still warm. Take great care not to tear or to bruise the flesh in spots by too hard fingering to get all the pin feathers out. These may be removed with a pair of pincers, if great pains is taken. Draw out the tail and wing feathers first and those of the back last. Fourth, hang all in a cool, airy place over night, and pack in clean, strong cases of a size easily handled by one man, putting one hundred and fifty to two hundred pounds in one case. Take the cords from the legs and lay the birds in uniform rows, heads toward the sides of the box and breasts up. A very little clean wheat straw may separate the layers, but it is best to use nothing. Fill the boxes so full that it will require a little pressure to force the covers down. Address to a trusty agent or commission dealer. It would pay any one who markets much poultry to have a modest stencil plate made to mark his boxes, and to read thus: "Poultry from A. B., well fattened, fasted twelve hours, and not scalded."—American Agriculturist.

FISH PONDS.—"S. E.," Alexandersville, Ohio. Trout will flourish in ponds supplied with spring water, and lime stone soil will not injure the water for their use. There are persons who make a business of selling fertilized eggs, and young fish, especially trout, which are most in demand. They would do well to advertise their stock. The eggs of trout are hatched during the winter, and the young fry are usually forwarded in the spring. They should be kept in a pond by themselves for at least a year, to prevent their destruction by other fish. Persons who make a business of raising trout for the market usually allow no other fish in the ponds, and turn in trout of the same age, so that they may not devour one another. This is the better course, for they are as easily raised as other fish, and always bear a much higher price. Yellow perch, black bass and pickerel are all good fish for ponds, and live together in the most amiable way, preying alike upon their own and their neighbors' young. T. Norris has just published a work on American Fish Culture, which contains the latest information upon the subject. For sale by Orange Judd & Co. Price $1 75.—American Agriculturist.

STEAMER OR MILL?—Cooking grain for cattle and swine is certainly the best substitute for grinding it, and the steam apparatus has a much wider application than the farm mill. So that for a farmer engaged in common mixed husbandry, there can be no question which he had better buy, a farm mill or a steam apparatus. With a steam boiler, in which steam may be economically raised, all kinds of grain, roots, root-tops, cabbages, hay, in fact any kind of hog or cattle feed, may be profitably cooked, even if fuel is not cheap. The question of the profit of having his corn ground, if a farmer has a good steamer or boiler, we cannot now answer, but from what facts we now have, we are indeed to think cooking preferable. We know very well that ground corn will go a great deal further in fattening pork or beef than whole corn, and that cooked meal will go further still. We know also that cooked whole corn is of a much higher feeding value than raw, but it is more easily digestible, and more palatable.—Who can give us the figures by which we can compare the feeding qualities of simply cooked and simply ground corn?—American Agriculturist.

POVERTY IN THE PARSONAGE MAKES POVERTY IN THE PULPIT.—The calamity which I stand in dread of, and which is, next to the withdrawal of the divine blessing, the greatest a church can suffer, is that the rising talent, genius and energy of our country may leave the ministry of the Gospel for other professions. "A scandalous maintenance," Matthew Henry says, "makes a scandalous ministry." And I will give you another equally true: "The poverty of the parsonage will develop itself in the poverty of the pulpit." I have no doubt about it. Genteel poverty, to which some ministers are doomed, is one of the great evils under the sun. To place a man in circumstances where he is expected to be generous and hospitable, to open his hand as wide as his heart to the poor, to give his family good education, to bring them up in what is called genteel life, and to deny him the means of doing so, is enough, but for the hope of heaven, to embitter his existence.

In the dread of debt, in many daily mortifications—meeting perhaps some old acquaintance, whom he dare not ask to his table, lest his more prudent wife should frown upon his extravagance—in harassing fears what shall become of his wife and children when his head lies in the grave, a man of cultivated mind and delicate sensibilities, has trials to bear more painful than the privations of the poor.

It is a bitter cup, and my heart bleeds for brethren who have never told their sorrows, concealing under their cloak the fox that gnaws at their vitals.—Dr. Guthrie.

SISTER PAULY, wife of Rev. J. A. Pauly, of the Louisiana Conference, died on the 8th of December.—Though having been mentally deranged for nearly three years, she was perfectly conscious a short time preceding her departure, and answered the question of her husband, whether she was aware of the approaching change—that she belonged to Jesus, and was now going to meet him. PERIODICALS.

BLACKWOOD, for November, has been received from the publishers. Contents: Double and Quits—a Comedy of Errors—part first; Lewes' History of Philosophy; Madame Aurelia, conclusion; Disestablishment, and Dean Alford on the Church of the Future; The Spanish Revolution; Cornelius O'Dowd; Walewski; Medical Lectures; Misfits; The Whig Letters; Old and New—The Coming Elections.

THE LAND WE LOVE, for December, is at hand, and equal in interest to any previous number.

THE OLD GUARD, for December—Van Evrie, Horton & Co., publishers—comes out in its usual strength, full of wholesome and instructive matter. Sound political doctrines are proclaimed in its pages—too true and too democratic to be much heeded, we fear.

The December number of the LITTLE CORPORAL is filled with the choicest original articles, in prose and poetry, suited to the young. In literary merit this monthly takes the lead of all the publications for children. Published by Alfred L. Sewell, Chicago, Illinois. Price, $1 a year.

NOTICE.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SESSION.

Will the presiding elders please forward to me the names of both the preachers and lay delegates of their districts who expect to be present at the Louisiana Conference, to be held on the sixteenth of December next, in New Iberia?

Respectfully,

A. E. GOODWYN.

MOBILE CONFERENCE.

FIRST DAY.

The fifth session of the Mobile Conference met on Wednesday, the 2d of December, in this place, (Meridian, Mississippi.) Bishop Pearce opened the Conference by reading the first chapter of Paul's second letter to Timothy, the singing of the hymn,

"Jesus, united by thy grace,
And each to each endeared," and prayer.

Among those present are many of its oldest members, men whom I regard with filial love, for it was among these godly ministers that my itinerant life began. It is a reassurance of youth to be once more among such toil-worn veterans as E. V. Levert, George Shaeffer, William Murrah, Thomas W. Dorman and Thomas S. Abernethy. These suggested others who were earlier in the field, and who now, in sight of two worlds, are at home awaiting the Master's last order—Elisha Callaway and Greenbury Garrett. The general expression of the Conference is much livelier than when at Enterprise, two years ago. Every member looks more hopeful, and has the bearing of a man who feels that no one can rob him of the Apostolic boast.

The central figure in the altar is the venerable Bishop Andrew, full of years and wisdom. An eventful history and active life have left their impress in the lines of his strong face and gray hairs. The lay members are in pretty full attendance The Mobile district sends William Otis, A. W. Lampkin, John Ellsworth, Thomas H. Price; the Butler district, T. S. West, Richmond Allen, W. Bailey; the Macon district, P. G. Nash, T. P. Bell, J. J. Beauchamp, J. H. Gibbs; the Columbus district, W. L Lipscomb, Dr. Landrum, J. K. Dixon; the Jasper district, L. Cole, Dr. T. P. Gunter; the Tuscaloosa district, M. D. Cannon, Prof. N. T. Lupton; the Selma district, W. E. Kennedy, P. G. Wood. The Conference is sitting in a frame church, about forty by fifty-five feet—quite a comfortable house, flanked by a neat parsonage, all improvised within a very recent period in this Aladdin-like city of Meridian. There must be vigor in the South still to evoke such a beautiful creation out of these piney woods. Every height is crowned with light ornate structures in the Italian villa style. The cotton wagons are coming in from every point of the compass, bringing to this center the product of a hundred miles of country. The drivers stop in wonder at the swift moving, screaming locomotive, and stronger than an hundred oxen. The several Protestant denominations are well represented here in substantial church-houses. The Presbyterians, as usual, lead off in the proportions and style of their church architecture. The Catholics are not behind the rest, but have put up a steepled house and are busily spinning their web.

The Conference had the usual discussion upon the open door question, which was settled against the disciplinary arrangement. When the General Conference shall decide that the doors shall not be open in any case, then this severe discipline under which Methodist preachers have voluntarily consented to place themselves, will accomplish the end of its first institution. The fear of public opinion in effect now neutralizes the law.

A resolution, in good time and spirit, was presented and passed, that might be appropriately called the "Bargain and sale resolution," to wit:

Resolved, That while the Conference open their hands and hearts in extending a hearty welcome to those ministers who may transfer to us from other Conferences; and while we will ever send our sympathies, affections and prayers after those brethren who may leave us for new fields of labor, we do most solemnly and earnestly protest, in the name of the great Head of the Church, against the growing practice of preachers soliciting their own appointments, laymen choosing their own pastors, and bishops approving and endorsing these preconcerted arrangements, as sapping the foundations of our great itinerant system. A. S. ANDREWS.
W. MURRAH.

SECOND DAY.

The first item of interest was a very sensible talk from Bishop Andrew, upon the evil of bringing up young men for reception on trial as traveling preachers, whom they have never heard preach. He called attention to Mr. Wesley's caution in receiving preachers. "Are any truly awakened? Has he fruit, and how does the fruit stand?" "We take up a man," said the bishop, "and by and by there is a great scuffle to get him out. It is the duty of a presiding elder to hear the young men preach."

Rev. Dr. Murrah presented a report of his work during the past year, in organizing circuits and a district among the colored people, and a memorial from the colored district meeting of the Columbus district, asking the Conference to continue Dr. Murrah in their superintendence. It says: "We feel and confess our inability, without the assistance of the superior intelligence of the white race, to control our church organization and direct the spiritual well-being of our race. We believe that the white people in the midst of whom we have been raised are our friends, and sincerely desire our religious improvement. We wish to continue our relation to this Conference, and subject ourselves to its authority and control." This was signed by Rial Jameson, Jesse Murrow and twenty other colored preachers, stewards and exhorters. This memorial received a very full consideration. The whole subject of proper qualification for orders, and the organization of societies among the colored people came in review. A committee of laymen and ministers was appointed to report upon the best method of carrying out the policy of the General Conference in regard to colored members. The report of this committee I forward for publication. It is worthy of much more than common attention, because it is the result of what has been done. While we, as well as the colored man, are in an experimental attitude to each other, all the practical results of labors in this field should be carefully noted, and whatever policy has succeeded should be followed.

THIRD DAY.

The minute business proceeds apace.

1. Who are admitted ON TRIAL? Answer: Cicero L. Kirksey, William H. Morris, John C. C. Black, Joseph M. Davis, Samuel C. Stone, J. E. Andrews.

2. Who remain on trial? Answer: Thomas Cameron, James N. Walker, Rufus W. Coons, James Bush and George M. Gilmore.

D. M. Bush and Benjamin F. Reid were discontinued at their own request.

3. Who are admitted into full connection? Answer: R. M. Powers.

The following were located at their own request.: D. A. Hendrick, D. C. B. Connerly, D. Carmichael and J. B. Baldwin.

The book agent, the Rev. Dr. A. H. Redford, presented a report of the year's operation, and followed its reading by a most admirable address. Among the good things done by the last General Conference, one of the very best was the appointment of the Dr. to the management of our Publishing House. Few men could have done what he has in recovering the house from the debt and wreck in which he found it.

FOURTH DAY.

The business of the Conference this morning opened with the Periodical Report, which is herewith forwarded for publication. The affairs of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE came in review, and the preachers were hearty in their expressions of support. "If they will at once enter upon the canvass and send forward subscribers, it will not only help the ADVOCATE, but themselves. All kinds of enterprise derive advantage from advertising. The minister who circulates the ADVOCATE thereby brings before the people his work and his church:—He is more than paid for his trouble by the aid which he thereby brings to his own influence. The rest of the day was occupied in considering the ways and means necessary and pledged for the support of the home missionaries. Hard work, poor circuits, and very nearly no pay, is the uniform report. It takes the zeal of the earliest Methodist preachers to endure this "hardness." But few local preachers were elected to orders. There were but few candidates.

MISSIONARY MEETING.

This was held in the Baptist church on Saturday night. Dr. A. H. Redford and Doctor Summers were the speakers. The report of the treasurer showed that the society had "touched bottom." Alas! that glorious banner of the olden time has gone down with many other glorious and noble things of the past. Three hundred dollars, or thereabout, were collected at the meeting. The preachers gave, of course. They will do that as long as one spark of life remains. The spirit was willing, but the pocket weak, exceeding weak. The audience was not enthused either on this occasion or on one which was held in the Presbyterian church for liquidating a debt upon the Methodist church and parsonage of this place. The preachers gave a large proportion of the amount there collected, some $300.

SABBATH DAY.

The sermon of Bishop Pearce, to my great disappointment, I did not hear. It was pronounced by one of the old presiding elders to be the best sermon he ever heard in his life. To be sure the old elder was a Georgian, and these Georgians stand up to each other wonderously. But I doubt not the elder was correct in his judgment, because the bishop is of a superior preaching stock. When but a youth I heard one ask Bishop Hadding whom he thought the best preacher in the United States. The old man said that on the whole he thought that Lovick Pearce, of Georgia, for power, variety, and all the points of an able preacher, stood at the head of the list. In the afternoon the venerable Bishop Andrew preached. It was the talk of a father to his sons in the gospel. We all heard, remembering that we might see his face no more. Age and labors have wasted his frame, but not his fire.

AT NIGHT,

in the Baptist church, Dr. Summers read a paper upon the Unity of the Races, and Doctor A. H. Redford preached in the Presbyterian church. I heard the ethological treatise with leaden interest. For no man, not even the Dr., nor book, nor discovery, whether of fossil or tribe, or of any other thing, can ever more arouse in me any desire to know anything more in regard to the negro, excepting how to advance his spiritual welfare.

FIFTH DAY.

Bishop Andrew addressed the Conference as sons beloved. The Committee on Education presented a report, No. 1, on the Southern University. The report says: "The number of students in attendance during the present session is seventy-five, an increase of forty per cent. over last year." The report closes with the following resolution:

Resolved, That we make a united and vigorous effort to sustain the Southern University, and to this end our pulpits, within the bounds of the Conference, be opened to Rev. S. P. Richardson at such times as he may find it convenient to preach on the subject of education, and present the claims of the institution to our people.

The Committee on Sabbath Schools reported only eight thousand three hundred and ninety-four scholars in the bounds of the Conference, an increase of only one hundred and twenty-two scholars over last year. A very timely resolution was offered by Mobile lay delegates in regard to reviving class meetings. I was glad to see this great and vital interest receiving the attention of the preachers. The next General Conference will doubtless correct the legislation of the last one upon this point.

To my regret I have here to conclude reporting, as I leave for the Montgomery Conference in the morning. The account of the rest of the session will be sent by another.

The Conference sacrament is appointed for to-night, when I hope to again pledge my Lord in the cup of his sorrow, and realize the fellowship of the saints.

COMPLETENESS IN CHRIST.

The disposition to add something to Christ as the ground of salvation is strong in human nature. The most difficult lesson for the sinner to learn is that there is no other merit than Christ's, and that it cannot be mixed with any other. The natural man is full of self-righteousness, and his completeness, indeed, is altogether in himself, until he begins to distrust his own goodness and to look out for something else. This is the first movement in quest of a Saviour; but the seeker does not think of parting altogether with his own merit. He brings this along with him as a reinforcement to that foundation which is indicted in the blood of atonement. The awakening may not be thorough, and conviction and repentance must be defective where this notion of even partial merit lingers. It is, however, the last stronghold of self-deception and of the evil heart of unbelief.

It is the very essence and quality of the unconverted heart to yield implicit assent to this persuasion of self righteousness. It is thrown off slowly and by degrees as the soul draws nearer to the cross. There is often a protracted conflict before the unreserved surrender is made, and a powerful struggle before the point is reached where we see and feel that we are completely justified by Christ's sacrifice, and by nothing else. It is the persistent endeavor to add something of our own to Christ as the price and foundation that keeps many sincere and troubled souls away from the peace and assurance of God's children. So strong is this tendency to rest upon something besides Christ for acceptance that it often exhibits itself in declining faith and spirituality in believers. This may be regarded as "the sin which doth so easily beset" the Christian experience of all the ages. It is the one aspect of corruption which has marked the defection of individuals and of churches with more uniformity than any other. It is the self-righteousness of the old Adam cropping out after conversion, and often working utter ruin in the life and worship.

Completeness in Christ for justification is the last thing which human pride and hate can tolerate, and that feature of the gospel which is most readily perverted. How strong the craving of fallen nature for some addition to this appointed means of life! With what avidity do men take hold of mediatorial accessories, such as are afforded in a human priesthood, and how willingly do they grasp the follies of ceremonial purification! It is the same unbelief and delusion which holds the unawakened sinner under its power, that wars in the convictions of the penitent seeker, and that often ensnares the unwary believer.

These imperfect views of Christ, and the evident predisposition of depraved nature to cherish them, are strikingly exhibited in the corruptions of Romanism and the ritualistic proclivities of other churches. When the sinner is driven from the stronghold of merit in himself, rather than come directly to Christ for pardon and salvation, he rests in sacraments and forms. The completeness he disavows in himself he finds in prelacy and baptism, and not in Christ. The same relation to this doctrine of salvation in Christ only is sustained by other doctrines and forms of worship, wherein the proper divinity and the atonement are rejected as having no foundation in human need, nor in the revealed word. There is this one point wherein all error seems mainly agreed, and where every phase of corrupt nature comes at last. The outcome of all is to reject Christ, in his completeness, as our only and sufficient Saviour, and to add to him other grounds, conditions and means of righteousness.

The end of all attempts of this kind is finally to lose sight of Christ altogether, and to exclude him substantially from our hearts and lives. It is so now in the Roman Church. The Virgin Mary, the earthly priesthood, and mother church, together with regeneration by water, and the mediation of saints, have banished Christ altogether. It will be so in all churches where the completeness of Christ as our Saviour is not heartily received. They will soon become thoroughly Christless. The application of the subject to our individual condition brings out the same conclusion. Whatever be the theory, practically we are complete in Christ, or we are altogether strangers to his saving grace. Our faith in Him for pardon is vitiated if we are clinging to anything meritorious out of Him. Our reliance must be exclusively in the Saviour, or it amounts to nothing. This completeness is not only for justification, but also for the sanctification of the heart. His blood "cleanseth from all unrighteousness," and the believer is a new creature in Christ. For wisdom, righteousness, sanctification and redemption we are complete in Him. It is a completeness of holiness and love, and the felt ability to save to the uttermost. Christ is to the true believer all in all. He seeks no other merit, and admits no other—his present acceptance and his hope of the crown of life are in Jesus only. *

MARRIED.

On the 7th of October, 1868, by the Rev. R. A. Timmons, Mr. JOSIAH ROBERTS to Miss MALINDA MORROW, all of Tallassee, Elmore county, Alabama.

By the same, at the residence of the bride's father, Mr. R. P. Letis, on the 15th of November, 1868, Mr. B. W. TAYLOR to Mrs. MARY E. CARLTON, all of Elmore county, Alabama.

By the same, at the residence of the bride's father, Mr. J. M. Edwards, on the 18th of November, 1868, Rev. J. H. THOMPSON to Miss SARAH E. EDWARDS, all of Elmore county, Alabama.

At the residence of the bride's father, on Thursday evening, October 29, 1868, by Rev. W. A. Montgomery, Mr. JOHN C. HENRY and Miss S. M. SUTTLE.

By the same, at Sandy Chapel, on Thursday evening, November 19, 1868, Mr. JAS. W. ARNOLD and Miss FANNY KERSH—all the parties of Bibb county, Alabama.

At the residence of the bride's father, Major Fred. G. Smith, November 26, 1868, by Rev. E. H. Mounger, Mr. WILLIAM LEAKE REAGAN and Miss KATE S. SMITH, all of Yazoo county, Mississippi.

OBITUARIES.

JOHN GUNN was born in Caswell county, North Carolina, in 1808. He emigrated to Tennessee in 1832, to Kentucky in 1833, and in 1835 he returned to his native State. In 1867 he came to Mississippi, where he died on the 7th of November, 1868.

For forty years he was an exemplary member of the Methodist Church, faithfully discharging all the duties of a Christian. God prospered him in temporal matters, and he never failed to honor God with his substance by supporting all the interests of the church liberally, and relieving the wants of the poor promptly, and in him God verified his promise:—"Them that honor me I will honor."

He was the same exemplary man and Christian in domestic life that he was in the more public spheres of action. The family altar was never neglected. A devoted husband, an indulgent father, he was the light and joy of the family circle.

It is enough to say that he died as he lived. His end was peace. At a good old age, having served God faithfully for forty years, he sweetly fell asleep in the arms of Jesus.

Farewell, dear father, husband, brother! May we die the death of the righteous, and may our last end be like his.

W. B. LEWIS.

It becomes my sad duty to record the death of my old and tried friend, Brother A. M. CAMPBELL, of Mansfield, Louisiana who died on his plantation, near Red river, November 10, 1868.

He was a native of Wilks county, Georgia, and was born about the year 1810.—He came to Louisiana about the year 1848, and to the time of his death was a resident of this place. At the early age of eighteen he professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South. He was strongly attached to the church and a devoted friend of the preacher. He entertained very humble views of his own ability and character as a Christian, though his gifts in many respects, and especially in prayer, might have been envied by many of those occupying higher places in the church. In early life he believed that God called him to preach. Shrinking from that responsibility, he compromised "by submitting," to use his own language, "to be willing to make his way to heaven by crawling as a serpent in the very dust." He always believed that if he had obeyed the divine injunction to preach, he would have been a holier, happier and a more useful Christian; but he could not complain. How important to yield to divine impressions and convictions! But finally he gave satisfactory evidence to his family, before he died, that his transit was safe from this to a better world, which hope, as an anchor to the soul, sustained him in the last dark, hard hour of death.

"Friend after friend departs,
Who has not lost a friend?
There is no union here of hearts
That has not here an end."

THE CHARTER OAK COOKING STOVE.

Why More Charter Oaks are Sold.

They have won the confidence of every housekeeper, after years of kitchen service, and not at State Fair trials of forty minutes' duration.

Their REPUTATION is not of Mushroom growth, or newly made. Thousands of children born in New Orleans have never eaten any other Bread except that baked in the Oven of a

CHARTER OAK.

The Flues of the Charter Oak are patented, and used in no other stove. It is here where the Charter Oak differs from all other stoves, and for these reasons a Charter Oak Stove will have a better DRAFT, and will DRAW well in any chimney.

THE HOT AIR FLUE
OF THE
CHARTER OAK.

ITS GREAT IMPORTANCE WHEN BAKING.

A thermometer placed in the Oven of a Charter Oak will show the same temperature of heat under the fire box as at any other point of the Oven, thus showing the great importance of FILLEY'S HOT AIR FLUE to equalize the heat in the Oven, so necessary to bake Wholesome Bread.

A CHARTER OAK STOVE

will cost but $2 or $3 more than the ordinary Cooking Stoves of the day. It will last, in a well regulated kitchen, from twelve to fifteen years, and no reflecting housekeeper would think of saving $2 and risk the entire purchase money upon a worthless Cooking Stove whose only recommendation may be that it is $2 cheaper.

THE STANDARD BIBLE DICTIONARY.

TWELVE REASONS

FOR PURCHASING THE COMPREHENSIVE DICTIONARY OF THE BIBLE.

EDITED BY REV SAMUEL W. DARNUM

Mainly abridged from Dr. William Smith's Dictionary of the Bible. Illustrated with five hundred Maps and Engravings.

1. It contains a history and description of Biblical customs, events, places, persons, animals, plants minerals, and other things concerning which information is needed for an intelligent and thorough study of the Holy Scriptures.
2. It is a complete guide in regard to the pronunciation and signification of Scriptural names, and the solution of difficulties respecting the interpretation, authority and harmony of the Old and New Testaments.
3. It is a complete pronouncing and defining Dictionary, all words being divided into their syllables, and the etymologies and significations carefully given.
4. It contains over two hundred more pages than any other abridgment of Smith's original Dictionary, and each page contains more words.
5. It has about two hundred more Maps and Illustrations than any other abridgment, and more than the original work.
6. It contains numerous important additions from the latest American, English and German authorities.
7. It has a greater range of topics than any other work of the kind.
8. The signification and meaning of every Greek or Hebrew word is given in English which is not done in other Dictionaries.
9. It presents the results of modern scholarship in a more complete, intelligible and reliable form than any other Dictionary of the Bible in our language.
10. In mechanical execution, type, paper, illustrations and binding it is superior to the other abridgments.
11. It has been commended in the highest terms by many of the best scholars and ablest critics in the country.
12. Its decided advantages will cause it to supersede every other work of the kind as the Standard Dictionary of the People.

Complete in one large royal octavo volume of 1,221 pages. Price, in cloth binding, $5; in library sheep, $6; in half morocco, $7 50.

SOLD ONLY BY SUBSCRIPTION.

WANTED.—Experienced Agents wanted in all parts of the country to sell this important work. Clergymen who have acted as book agents will find this work well worthy their attention. GOOD IN WINTER AS IN SUMMER.

A HOUSEHOLD NECESSITY.

DARBY'S PROPHYLACTIC FLUID.

It will purify the most offensive atmosphere.
It will cleanse and cure Erysipelas, all sorts of sores, ulcers, boils, cuts, wounds, etc.
It will prevent gangrene.
It will cure burns, scalds and bruises.
It is a perfect pain-killer.
It will destroy and neutralize all animal and vegetable poisons.
It will, therefore, cure stings or bites of insects.
It will cleanse and purify the breath, and hence is an excellent tooth wash and healthful cosmetic.
It will cure diarrhœa, even the worst chronic case.
It will instantly relieve horses of the colic or persons of heartburn.
It will, owing to the bleaching properties of chlorine, remove all ink spots, mildew, vegetable stains, etc.
It will cure Catarrh.
It will remove rancidity out of butter and lard.
It will, properly used, be more efficacious than any other agent in preventing the spread of contagious diseases, and has frequently done it.
It will, used in bathing, keep the skin healthy, and not wash white.
We pledge whatever reputation we may have as honest, truthful gentlemen for the performance of all here claimed for the article, and more too.
It is used everywhere by the medical profession as fast as it is introduced, and we respectfully refer to all prominent men of the profession, from very many of whom we have the highest testimonials of praise for the Fluid.
As a convenient article for constant family use it has no superior.
It has a beautiful color, due to the Permanganic Acid, and when the color is gone the virtues of the Fluid are lost. Hence be careful not to get the cork in the bottle, or any animal or vegetable substance, and always keep the bottle stopped. After the Fluid has acted the residuum is perfectly inert and harmless.
It is taken internally, as well as applied exterally.

In substantiation of our claims for this wonderfully useful article, we ask attention to the following testimony:

NOVEMBER 1, 1868.

We very cheerfully unite our testimony in favor of the great merits of the valuable disinfectant manufactured by Professor Darby, and known as Darby's Prophylactic Fluid. From the reputation of Professor Darby as a scientific gentleman, from our own knowledge of this preparation, and from the general esteem in which it is held wherever known, we have no hesitation in recommending it as one of the most valuable household articles with which we are acquainted.

Letter from Hon. Alex. H. Stephens, of Ga:

CRAWFORDSVILLE, Ga, Sept 29, 1868.

Darby's Prophylactic Fluid is an article of little cost, but great value. Its domestic as well as medicinal uses are numerous, while its specialties are most wonderful. I have not been without it for ten years, and as head of a family who can afford to have it should ever be without it.

ALEXANDER H STEPHENS.

Letter from Rev Jefferson Hamilton, D D, Mobile, Ala, minister M E Church South:

My family have used Darby's Prophylactic Fluid for several years for various purposes, and esteem it very highly. Indeed, I know of no article within the whole range of chemical preparations so generally and highly recommended by acquaintances as this.

J. HAMILTON.

MOBILE, Ala, Sept 23, 1868.

From Rev John Mathews, pastor M E Church South, at Montgomery, Ala.

MONTGOMERY, Ala, Oct 20, 1868:

Darby's Prophylactic Fluid is the only medicine kept in my family. We use it for almost everything — burns, bruises, stings, earache, sour stomach, etc, etc. My children, when hurt or bruised, always call at once for Darby's Fluid. We cannot get along well without it.

JOHN MATHEWS.

These are but few of the most recent testimonials received in behalf of the preparation.

It is as useful in winter as in summer, for its disinfecting quality is the least of its really valuable uses.

It is neatly put up in half pint bottles, and sells at Fifty Cents per bottle.

EXCELLENT SECURITY.

THE FIRST MORTGAGE

THIRTY-YEAR SIX PER CENT.

GOLD BONDS

—OF THE—

CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

These Bonds are the duly authorized and accredited obligations of one of the most responsible Corporations of the American continent, and are secured by an absolute first lien upon the valuable grants, franchises, railroad equipment, business, etc., of the best portion of the extending eastwardly from the navigable waters of the Pacific coast to the lines now rapidly building from the Eastern States.

Great National Pacific Railroad Line,

They bear Six per cent. interest per annum, in gold, and both Principal and Interest are expressly made "payable in United States Gold Coin."

The semi-annual Coupons are payable July 1 and January 1, in New York city.

The purchaser is charged the accrued interest from the date of the last paid Coupon, at the Currency rate only.

This issue of Bonds constitutes one of the largest and most popular Corporate Loans of the country, and therefore will be constantly dealt in.

The greater portion of the Loan is now in the hands of steady investors; and it is probable that before many months, when the Road is completed and the Loan closed, the Bonds will be eagerly sought for at the highest rates.

They are issued only as the work progresses, and to the same extent only as the United States Subsidy Bonds granted by the government to the Pacific Railroad Companies.

NEARLY FIVE HUNDRED MILES

Of the Road are now built, and the grading is well advanced on two hundred and fifty miles additional.

THE THROUGH LINE ACROSS THE CONTINENT

Will be completed by the middle of next year, when the Overland travel will be very large.

The local business alone, upon the completed portion, is so heavy and so advantageous that the gross earnings average

More than a Quarter of a Million in Gold Per Month,

Of which 35 per cent. only is required for operating expenses.

The net profit upon the Company's business on the completed portion is about double the amount of annual interest liabilities to be assumed thereupon, and will yield

A SURPLUS OF NEARLY A MILLION IN GOLD

After expenses and interest are paid, even if the through connection were not made.

The best lands, the richest mines, together with the largest settlement and nearest markets, lie along this portion of the Pacific Railroad, and the future development of business thereon will be proportionally great.

From these considerations it is submitted that the

CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD BONDS,

Secured by a First Mortgage upon so productive a property, are among the most promising and reliable securities now offered. No better Bonds can be made.

A portion of the remainder of this Loan is now offered to Investors at

103 Per Cent. and Accrued Interest,

IN CURRENCY.

The Bonds are of $1,000 each.

☞ The Company reserve the right to advance the price at any time; but all orders actually in transitu at the time of any such advance will be filled at the present price. At this time they pay

More than Eight Per Cent. upon the Investment,

and have from National and State laws, guarantees peculiar to themselves.

We receive all classes of Government Bonds, at their full market rates, in exchange for the Central Pacific Railroad Bonds, thus enabling the holders to realize from five to ten per cent. profit and keep the principal of their investments equally secure.

Orders and inquiries will receive prompt attention. Information, descriptive pamphlets, etc., giving a full account of the organization, progress, business and prospects of the enterprise, furnished on application. Bonds sent by return Express at our cost.

Subscriptions Received by Banks and Bankers,

Agents for the Loan, throughout the United States, Canada and Europe.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

GOING TO SLEEP.

Come hither, my baby, my darling,
My lily, my wonderful rose!
The white bosomed flowers in the garden
Begin their soft petals to close;
The bees have gone home from the clover,
The swallows are under the eaves,
And down in the orchard the robin
Broods over her nest in the leaves.

Come, baby, my beauty, my darling!
Your eyes are heavy with sleep,
Your little red mouth has grown silent,
And scarcely its laughter can keep;
Lay off the white robe from your shoulders,
Unclasp the small shoes from your feet—
Oh, daintiest blossom of Eden,
I bless you, my lily, my sweet!

Do you feel the cool wind coming softly,
And see the young moon in the sky?
The clouds sailing over the sunset,
The bats flitting silently by?
Do you hear how the cattle are lowing
Along the green lane by the hill?
And the brook running over the pebbles,
With music that never is still?

Now hush while I sing to you, baby,
A song of the angels above,
That come on invisible pinions
To watch o'er the children they love.
So all through your beautiful dreaming,
The voice of your mother shall creep,
Lest, hearing the harpings celestial,
Your soul should fly homeward in sleep!

THE SKETCH-BOOK.

BY MRS. MARY LATHAM CLARK.

Little Gertrude pushed back the heavy golden curls from her flushed face and sighed heavily, as she laid down her drawing pencil.

'It is of no use,' said she aloud; 'I can never make anything like the pretty picture I am trying to copy. The waterfall and the great over-hanging tree are so pretty! but the drawing I have made of them is so stiff and awkward I am really discouraged!' and something very like a tear trembled in her blue eye.

'Did you speak?' said her elder sister, Laura, looking in at the door, with a very bright smile upon her face.

'Yes, I spoke,' said Gertrude, blushing, 'but only to myself.'

'I thought,' said Laura, 'that, as I passed the door, I heard you say something about being discouraged. Not about your drawing, I hope, little sister.'

'Yes, I am,' said Gertrude, looking up frankly into her sister's face; 'and I don't see the least use in learning to draw.'

'I am glad Brother Herbert didn't think so,' said Laura, with another bright smile.

'You mean something, Laura,' said Gertrude, glancing up with new interest. 'Are there letters from him this morning, or what makes you look so bright?'

'Put away your drawing for a little while, dear Gertie, and then come out to our seat on the piazza, and I will show you something.'

Gertie did not need a second invitation to leave the work that was this morning so distasteful to her, and soon she was with her dear sister on the piazza, where the green vines shut out the sunshine, but not the sweet summer air.

Letters had, indeed, come that morning from their dear Brother Herbert, who had been a year abroad, but the 'something' that Laura had to show was a large book he had sent them, containing sketches which he had made of the many beautiful scenes he had witnessed in his travels. He was very skillful in the use of his pencil, and the delicacy and beauty of his work showed that his heart was in it.

Together sat the sisters, looking over the book, hardly knowing how to express their delight at the many beautiful pictures which met their eyes.

There were old castles, standing like grim sentinels upon the brinks of frowning precipices; lovely lakes, in which were mirrored the graceful trees and sloping hills that encircled them; and there were many rural scenes, where were simple cottages with their pleasant surroundings; flocks feeding on the river banks, and 'quiet cattle standing knee deep in the gliding waters.'

'See!' said Gertrude, as in turning a leaf she caught a glimpse of a lovely group of children. 'This must be a picture of the German family Brother Herbert has mentioned in his letters.' 'Good night to the sun' he has written under it. See, Laura! There is little Gottlieb away out on the edge of the cliff, with his staff in one hand and his hat in the other, stretching out his arms and looking as if he were singing.'

'And that sweet young girl,' said Laura, 'who stands there, shading her eyes with her hand, must be the good Annette he wrote to us about, who is so like a mother to the other little ones.'

'I remember about her,' said Gertrude. 'She was only ten years old when her mother died, leaving her the care of both her baby sister and her little brother, who was hardly more than a baby.' Brother Herbert stayed all night there once, in their little cottage among the mountains, and he said it was one of the sweetest sights he ever saw, to see how the little ones loved her and how kind and motherly she was to them. They called her 'little mother.'

'See little Bertha leaning close to Annette and looking at the wee, cooing kids! See her little, plump bare arms and feet! How motherly that old goat looks, watching her kids! What a sweet, charming picture! How could Brother Herbert draw so beautifully?'

'I can tell you how,' said Laura; 'he persevered and did not allow himself to be discouraged in the beginning; so drawing, instead of being a task, soon grew to be a delightful employment.

'Think how much more he enjoys his wanderings in those beautiful, far-off lands for being able to sketch all the lovely scenes that meet his eye.

'And how much pleasure he is thus enabled to give others too! Surely it was of some use for him to learn to draw.'

'So it was,' said Gertrude. 'I mean to persevere, and perhaps I shall go abroad some time, and send home books of sketches.'

'To me, perhaps,' added Laura, smiling.

'And now,' continued she, 'we will go into the library and read Brother Herbert's letters together. How many happy hours we shall have over the precious pages of this sketch-book!'

'So we shall,' said Gertie, her eyes dancing with pleasure. 'How glad I am that there is such a thing as drawing in the world!'—Children's Hour.

THE LOVE OF GAMING.—"Charley Rogers plays marbles for keeps, mother, and he certainly cannot care anything about them, he has so many things of his own, and all the money he wants to buy things with."

"He may care about those he wins for all that," said his mother, "if he allows avarice to take possession of his heart. You remember that elephant we saw at the menagerie, Walter. Was it a hundred pounds of hay the man said he ate every day, besides a bushel of grain, with a great tub of water? He is an enormous feeder, and yet you saw how eagerly he groped about with his trunk after the crumbs of cake and the little peanuts the boys threw down in the straw for him. With the same trunk he picked up the great wisps of hay, drew up the gallons of water, and picked up the tiny nuts and apple cores.

"Just so it is with these little grains to the avaricious person.—When you begin to heap up things just for the sake of owning them, you begin to feed a fire that nothing but the grace of God can put out. The more you feed it the more it burns. The more you get the more you want.

"There is hardly any bad habit that grows upon one faster than a love of gaming. If you play for marbles you will very soon learn to play for other things, and then for money. The gambler nearly loses his interest in everything else but his game. He will use his utmost arts to draw any one into his snare who has money, and then when it is all won away he will coolly push him aside to make room for another victim. He cares nothing for the poor mother and children left penniless, that his gains may be greater. He cares nothing if the distracted man he has robbed goes away to a suicide's death.

"But God marks all these, and just his share of the guilt is surely charged to his account. He often punishes, even in this life, such evil workers. It is a rare thing, indeed, for a gambler to die rich.—They are often reduced to great want and distress in their last days, dying alone and friendless, frequently by their own hands. Shun the first steps, Walter, and you will be safe from this sin. Never touch cards, even to build card houses with, or to play little tricks or games. I hope you may never become familiar with even their names or appearance."—Presbyterian.

HE KNOWS THE REST.—A father came home from his business at early evening, and took his little girl upon his knee. After a few dove-like caresses she crept to his bosom and fell asleep. He carried her himself to her chamber and said: "Nellie would not like to go to sleep without saying her prayers?" Half opening her large blue eyes, she dreamily articulated:

"Now I lay me down to sleep,
I pray the Lord—"

Then adding in a sweet murmur: "He knows the rest," she sank on her pillow, in his watchful care who "giveth his beloved sleep."

THE world's master spirits can make the silence of their closets more beneficial to mankind than all the noise and hustle of courts, senates and camps.

THE health of the Emperor Napoleon is again reported very miserable by Paris correspondents.

SCIENTIFIC.

LOCOMOTIVE ENGINES.

Although locomotive engineers are plain, practical "bodies," as would be said of them north of the border—and "muckle bodies" some of them are, too—they have nevertheless so idealized the locomotive engine that it has become with them a mechanical Apollo, and they would no sooner listen to any proposal to give it new forms than would the genius of sculpture, or its chosen disciples, to transform the chef d'œuvre of the Belvidere gallery into the traditional tripedal aboriginal of Manx, or, in other words, the three-legged quocunque jeceris stabit of the Isle of Man. The marine engineer may cut and carve his engines in a hundred ways, standing them on their heads or their heels, or lying them on their backs or their bellies (!,) for they are neither fish, flesh nor fowl, or, as sailors would say: "hog, dog nor devil," but animated masses of iron-mongery, and nothing more. But the locomotive engine is a horse of another color, and more than half of all the locomotive engineers in the world would, we are sure, were they to open their hearts, pronounce their favorite—rolling as it must, because it cannot fly—a heaven pacing Pegasus, and they would dwell upon his "points," albeit that he has neither mane nor tail, with the affections of a jockey caressing the favorite for the two thousand guineas.

Now, without exactly translating this iron horse into a gelding, it is requisite that he should be materially altered. Good looking as he may be, he is nevertheless the greatest beast that paweth the valley, and his pawing is really more than the valley can withstand. In plain English, the locomotive of 1868 is a monster which all good engineers should unite to destroy. He is the stalking-horse of railway bankruptcy, the gaunt steed of railway ruin. It is time he was off to the knackers, and his carcase sold for what it will fetch, in gun-metal (precious little) and old iron. There are several counts of the indictment against the beast. But chiefly he will perform his plunging, racing, backing, gibbing and shying only upon an iron railway. And of his sextupedal or octupedal hoofs there is generally one pair on which from ten to fourteen tons of his carcase are supported. With these he will often "let out" in a manner to grind fire from the rails beneath him. Harnessed at his best, the train of traps at his heels has nowhere a wheel loaded to more than three or four tons—the latter very, very seldom indeed, although this load is doubtless growing with the force of bad example. Now, to draw the line somewhere, no railway ought ever to be strained with a load of more than four tons to a wheel. We can remember the locomotive shortly after he was foaled, and when, as a colt, he beat the devil's tattoo with his little wheels—heels we mean—weighing not more than five tons on the hind pair; and he was a four footed locomotive then, and not a six or eight-footed nondescript as now. Bless his little boiler! He could, as he was then, ride on the footplate of the hard-mouthed stallions that tear over the rails now, and they would never feel it, although the race-course, yclept "permanent way," might. But he has grown altogether too big, and he must either have more legs put under him or else be knocked on the head. There is a main pair of legs to every engine, through which it must exert all its strength on a pull. For a strong pull all the legs must pull together, and all must keep exact step with each other. This can only be secured by means of certain harness known as coupling-rods, but when more than six legs at most are coupled there is fretting and chafing. What with the difference in shoeing, and in the weight on each pair of legs, there is a constant tendency to get out of step, which only the coupling-rods can restrain. When the beast has eight, ten or twelve legs, as some of them have, coupling-rods may be carried altogether too far. The weight is well distributed, no doubt—say to four or, at most, five tons on a hoof—but the coupling-rods do almost more harm than good, and in turning Tottenham Corner, or, in other words, a sharp curve, the off heels are playing mischief with everything on that side. The fact is, very long-bellied horses, of the breed we are now dealing with, will never ride well in the ring. Dropping the metaphor, eight, ten or twelve-coupled engines, having, therefore, necessarily long-wheel bases, tear the way to pieces and themselves too.

And yet larger engines than almost any now in use are required to work heavy goods traffic with economy—say forty-five to eighty trucks, in a train on reasonably good lines. We see no solution of the problem of fifty-ton or sixty-ton engines except in double bogies, like an American passenger carriage, each having its own pair of cylinders and working gear, but fed from a single long boiler with the fire-box at the middle. This plan unites all the advantages of a single engine with those of twin engines, and avoids the disadvantages of both. Many of the American passenger carriages have each two six-wheel bogies, some of them two eight-wheel bogies. The sixteen-wheel carriage need not yet be repeated in the locomotive, but the twelve wheels, in two independent groups, may be and should be as soon as possible.

The system of engine building which requires a permanent way twice as strong as is necessary for the paying load, including wagons, to be drawn, is, on its face, wholly wrong, and nothing but habit and an almost pagan veneration for the outward form of the locomotive as George Stephenson left it can account for the long continuance of a practice so palpably vicious. With properly constructed engines the permanent way need not be made nearly so strong as now, or if the present strength were retained the wear and tear, upon the plainest principles of action and reaction, would be very sensibly diminished. Engineering.

Steam Cultivation in England.

Engineering, speaking of the late splendid harvest in England and speculating on how much of the increase over the previous year is due to the greatly extended practice of steam cultivation, says:

"The three hundred or more steam plows and cultivating sets now in use in England have broken up and pulverized, from one to six or eight times, at least half a million of acres (possibly much more, for it is exceedingly difficult to form any accurate estimate,) and that in a manner never before known since plows were invented. There are now plowing engines capable of exerting one hundred indicated horse power, and capable of putting a draught of three or four tons upon an implement at a rate varying between three and four miles an hour. With such power any depth can be reached, and as the disintegrating power is, by a well-established mechanical law, as the square of the velocity, the soil is broken with four times the mechanical effect at four miles an hour as in the case of a horse-drawn plow at two miles. In the words of the carefully considered report of the committees of the Royal Agricultural Society on steam cultivation, published last year: 'A culture deeper than it is possible for horses to effect works a highly beneficial change in the texture of the soil, imparts additional efficiency to drainage works, augments the value of the manure applied, brings into operation certain latent properties of the soil which much increases its fertility; it also fits land, formerly unfit, for the growth of turnips, allows of their being fed off by sheep, the operations of the field are economized, and the growth of all crops is stimulated.' These were the remarks of a committee, of no common order of practical knowledge of farming, who had labored industriously for months in examining the results of steam cultivation upon nearly two hundred steam tilled farms in all parts of England, and in some parts of Scotland, and are simply the deductions of the best experience. At the time of their report steam tillage was not only better, but was considerably cheaper, than horse tillage. Now the steam plowing engine, rope and other tackle, and the attached implements, have been very much improved, and the comparison would be still more in favor of steam."

AFFECTING AND TRUE STORY.—A little girl in a family of my acquaintance—a lovely and precious child—lost her mother at an age too early to fix the loved features in her remembrance. She was beautiful; and as the bud of her heart unfolded, it seemed as if won by that mother's prayers to turn instinctively heavenward.

The sweet, conscientious and prayer-loving child was the idol of the bereaved family. But she faded away early. She would lie upon the lap of a friend who took a mother's care of her, and winding one wasted arm about her neck, would say: "Now tell me about mamma!"—And when the oft-told tale had been repeated, she would ask, softly: "Take me into the parlor; I want to see my mamma." The request was never refused; and the affectionate sick child would lie for hours gazing on her mother's portrait. But

"Pale and wan she grew, and weakly—
Bearing all her pains so meekly,
That to them she still grew dearer,
As the trial hour grew nearer."

That hour came at last, and the weeping neighbors assembled to see the little child die. The dew of death was already on the flower, as its life-sun was going down. The little chest heaved faintly, spasmodically.

"Do you know me, darling!" sobbed close in her ear the voice that was dearest; but it awoke no answer. All at once a brightness, as if from the upper world, burst over the child's colorless countenance. The eye lids flashed open and the lips parted; the wan, curdling hands flew up in the little one's last impulsive effort, as she looked piercingly into the far above.

"Mother!" she cried, with surprise and transport in her tone—and passed with that breath to her mother's bosom.

Said a distinguished divine, who stood by that bed of joyous death: "If I had never believed in the ministration of departed ones before, I could not doubt it now."—Heavenly Recognition.

A NEW PHASE OF RITUALISM IN ENGLAND.—According to the London Times, the Book of Common Prayer is largely superseded in the Ritualistic Episcopal churches in England, by a little volume called "The Hymnal." It consists of three parts, the first being "The Words of the Hymnal Noted," published by Novello, and well known to all members of church choirs in the kingdom. The third part is "Hymns, Ancient and Modern," a set of tolerably "advanced" hymns in themselves, and by no means requiring any additions or supplements. But between these little books is bound up an "Appendix," consisting of some sixty pages and about seventy hymns and litanies, "for the use of the congregations of St. Paul's and St. Michael's chapels, Brighton." Among the rest of these "Apocrypha" are two litanies, both translated from Roman Catholic sources, "The Litany of our Lord Jesus Christ," and "The Litany of the Holy Name of Jesus."

The last named litany is a literal version of the Celesta Palmetum, a book of Roman Catholic devotions, in verse and prose, published at Mechlin, under the special approval of the pope. The Times says:

"The book, as it stands, reminds us immensely of a sandwich, the 'strong meat' being placed in the middle. A good many of the hymns comprised in it are taken—no doubt by permission—from the 'Oratory Hymn Book' of Father Faber, and several others are English versions of the Latin hymns of the Catholic church."

These embrace Serial Tales, Short Stories, Essays,—Biographical and Descriptive.—Poems, Sketches of Travel and Adventure, Literary Intelligence, and popular papers on Science. Translations from the admirable French Periodicals are a prominent feature.
Among the Periodicals from which selections are frequently made are Once a Week, Chamber's Journal, All the Year Round, The Spectator, The Reader, The Athenæum, The Examiner; The London, Saturday, and Fortnigtly Reviews; Fraser's, Blackwoods, Macmillan's, the Victoria, Argosy, New Monthly, and London Society Magazines; Revue des Deux Mondes, L'evenement, Le Soleil.
Among the authors represented in EVERY SATURDAY are many of the wisest and wittest writers of Europe, as Henry Kingsley, Anthony Trollope, Matthew Arnold, Charles Kingsley, Edmund Yates, Frances Power Cobbe, Christina G. Rossetti, Author of "John Halifax," George Sand, Edmond About, Alexandre Dumas, Mrs Oliphant, J. Ruffini, Alexander Smith, A. C. Swineburne, Robert Buchanan, Jean Ingelow, and Miss Thackeray.
EVERY SATURDAY is intended for Town and Country, for the Fireside, the Seaside, the Railway, and the Steamboat. The Publishers will rest in commend it to all classes of cultivated and intelligent readers by the freshness and variety of its contents.
EVERY SATURDAY contains weekly 40 double-column large octavo pages.
TERMS.—Single Number, 10 cents; Yearly Subscription, $5 00 in advance; $4 00 a year to subscribers for any other periodical published by TICKNOR AND FIELDS. Monthly Parts, 50 cents a number. Yearly subscription, same as for Weekly Part.

FIVE HUNDRED SOUTHERN METHODIST PREACHERS,
Who are both the agents and owners of this sheet.
A man who wishes to be known in the country is certainly much in his own light who does not display his name in our advertising columns.
Our terms are precisely the same as those of other weekly newspapers in this city.
We have fewer advertisements than the secular papers, but what we have are read with that conscientious regard for everything that appears in a Christian paper which takes hold—in fact, too strong a hold—and holds the editor responsible for all the patent medicines, hardware, shoes, pork, flour, and even whisky, which may be set forth in its columns.

The terms of advertising are as follows:

SQUARES.	1 MO.	3 MOS.	6 MOS.	12 MOS.
One (8 lines)	$5 00	$12 00	$20 00	$30 00

THE HOME MONTHLY, New Orleans, for 1867.
The HOME MONTHLY will contain forty-eight pages of reading matter, printed upon fine paper and in clear type, and will, from time to time, be accompanied by elegant steel-plate engravings. The subscription price will remain $3 per annum, or $1.50 for six months, invariably in advance. In order to build up a still larger circulation, we have concluded to offer the following
Liberal Inducements to Agents.
To any person sending us three yearly subscriptions, with nine dollars, we will send the MONTHLY six months, or allow them, if they prefer, to retain One Dollar and Twenty-five Cents of the amount.
To any person sending us six subscriptions, with eighteen dollars, ($18,) we will send the MONTHLY one year, or allow them to retain Two Dollars and Fifty Cents of the amount.
On amounts for subscription less than nine dollars, agents will be allowed to retain ten per cent.
Ministers, it is hoped, will act as agents, not so much from pecuniary considerations as from a laudable desire to assist in building up a home literature worthy of a place among the families of the South and on the center-tables of a Christian people.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.
The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the
GOOD SAMARITAN,
by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as the means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of
At Least Thirty per Cent, as Compared with any other Stove.
and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally known as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. That meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.
It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the
BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.
For sale only by the undersigned.
In addition to the above, I also have a large and complete assortment of COOKING STOVES, comprising all of the leading Stoves of the day, equal to any offered in any other house in this city.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY, AT Greensboro, Alabama.
The next session of this institution begins the first Wednesday in October, and is divided into two terms.
TUITION.

Academic Department, per term	$35 00
Preparatory Department, per term	30 00
Contingent fee, per term	2 50

A fee of $5 is charged those who attend the schools of Chem. and Nat. Phil.
Board, exclusive of washing and lights, $16 to $20 per month. By messing it can be obtained even cheaper than at these rates.
Sons of ministers of the Gospel in the regular work, and those studying for the ministry, are admitted free of tuition.
The whole expense for the scholastic year, including everything except books and clothing, will be $250, payable one-half at the opening of the session, and the remainder on the 15th of February. If the student wishes to board in a private family it will be $280. This great reduction in the price of board and tuition will bring the advantages of the University within the reach of those whose limited means have heretofore placed the highest scholastic training beyond their reach, as well as secure the patronage of those who, on the score of economy, are sending their sons out of the State to be educated.
Especial attention is called to the fact that preparatory students are taught exclusively by the Faculty.
The Law School has been organized under the management of Hons. Judge Coleman and A. Reinors.
For further information apply for circular to
O. F. CASEY,

NEW PATENT PIANOS.
RAVEN & BACON, (established in 1829.)
Warerooms, Nos. 644 and 646 Broadway, NEW YORK.
Manufacturers of Piano Fortes, with the patent Combination Sounding-boards,
Patented August 11th, 1866.
This invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affects the sounding board, the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a pure liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. The sounding-board released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding-boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection, and its vibratory quality increased.
Our Pianos are first-class in every respect, and purchasers will have not only our own guarantee as to their quality, but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument, obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

EAST ALABAMA MALE COLLEGE
AT AUBURN, ALA.
The Fall term of this Institution will open on the FIRST WEDNESDAY in SEPTEMBER next, and close on the 20th December. Besides the regular course of studies for graduation, large facilities are afforded for instruction in the Commercial and Agricultural branches. Separate schools for these branches, in connection with the College, were authorized at the last annual meeting of the Board of Trustees. A student not wishing to take either the regular or a partial literary course in the College, may confine himself to either of these Departments, and in a short time become qualified for business.
The Preparatory Department, with competent teachers, will be under the special supervision of the Faculty.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market has exhibited rather more animation since our last report.—There is, nevertheless, much less activity in most branches of the wholesale trade than might be reasonably expected at this period of the season, particularly when we consider the handsome returns realized by planters from their crops. Sugar and molasses have been in more lively request. Buyers for the West have been operating with increased spirit, and there is a fair local demand. Western produce, on the contrary, has shown but little movement. Provisions have stiffened in consequence of scant supplies. We have no improvement to note in other articles. The bulk of the flour in warehouse consists of the higher grades, for which there is only a limited city demand, while the supplies of superfine and of single and double extra are limited.

The weather has been clear and cold, and highly favorable to the transportation of produce to the river landings. Nothing of any moment has transpired with regard to the incoming crops. The accounts continue encouraging for both cane and cotton.

The river has fallen one foot since our last report, and is now twelve feet below high water mark.

Cotton.—The following are the arrivals since the 4th instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales..	13792
Lake.....	19
Mobile.....	559
Texas.....	132
Total.....	14502

On Saturday the movement commenced with a moderate inquiry, and buyers claiming a reduction of ¼c., predicated on the ¼d. decline at Liverpool, to which factors were unwilling to submit; and although under later discouraging telegrams the latter subsequently evinced a disposition to meet the demand more freely, yet, mainly from reports telegraphed from New York of political disturbances in Paris, operations were partially suspended, and the business was confined to 2,600 bales, at prices indicating a decline of ⅛ to ¼c., low middling closing at 22¼c. On Monday, a further decline of ¼d. being reported at Liverpool, factors were compelled to submit to an additional reduction of fully ¼c., but the demand was renewed with more spirit, and the sales summed up 6,100 bales, mostly on the basis of 22c. for low middling. On Tuesday the market opened with a fair inquiry, but as factors were unwilling to meet the demand at Monday's decline, the movement did not exhibit much spirit until about noon, when buyers were compelled to pay the prices asked, and a lively business was done on the basis of 22⅜ to 22½c. for low middling, 22¾ to 22⅞c. for strict low middling, and 22⅝ to 22¾c for middling, the sales summing up 5,800 bales, an unusual proportion of which was for France and the Continent.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 14,500 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 318,188 bales, against 146,157 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 168,859 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 12,309 bales to Great Britain, of 65,634 to France, and of 3,491 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Sugar.—The receipts have been light since our last report, and have sold quite readily at rather firmer prices. The sales on Saturday and Monday comprised 2000 hogsheads, at 7 to 7½c. for inferior, 8 to 8½c. for common, 9 to 9½c. for fair, 10 to 10¾c. for good fair, 11 to 11¼c. for fully fair, 11½ to 11¾ and 12c. for prime, 12¼c. for choice, 10⅛ to 11c. for seconds, 11¾c. for centrifugal, 11¾ to 12½c. for yellow clarified, and 13 to 13⅜c. for white.

Molasses.—A good demand has prevailed, especially for the better descriptions.

SYNOPSIS OF CHARTER.

The plan proposed by the Mutual Aid and Benevolent Life Insurance Association is as follows:

1. Each person, upon enrolling himself or herself as a member, shall pay into the Treasury a membership fee, if between the ages of

16 to 30, inclusive, the sum of.....	$10 00
31 to 40, inclusive, the sum of.....	15 00
41 to 50, inclusive, the sum of.....	20 00
51 to 60, inclusive, the sum of.....	25 00

which payment constitutes him or her a life member.

2. A Life Insurance Policy is issued for a sum equal to one dollar for each enrolled member appearing on the books of the Association, at the decease of said member.

But in no event shall the amount paid on said policy exceed $5,000.

3. On the death of any member an assessment is made upon each policy holder for one dollar and twenty-five cents, payable at the office of the Association, within thirty days after notification thereof, by publication in one daily newspaper published in the city of New Orleans, in English and one in French, for five consecutive days, and if the policy holder resides out of New Orleans he shall be notified in writing.

4. Should the number of members exceed five thousand, the assessment of $1 25 will be reduced in proportion to the number of members exceeding five thousand.

5. Should any member fail to pay the assessment in the time specified, he forfeits all previous payments or credits.

6. All accumulations from whatever source, such as forfeitures, interest, etc., shall be credited upon the books of the Association to the members pro rata, to be withdrawn in lieu of assessments. oct17 1y

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, AT Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

ELEVENTH SESSION.—TERMS REDUCED.

The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first-rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar, etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.

SPECIAL CAUTIONS.

Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health.

A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket-money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.

It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

Terms—Board and Tuition per session, $300.

Payments—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.

Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 15.—Tho various committeee of the Senate, to whom were referred the nominatione of yesterday, had nnder consideration to-day tho matter referred to them, but with the exception of the Committee on Foreign Affaire, no definite action was taken The latter committee, it ie rumored, by a vote of five to two, resolved to report adversely upon the nomination of Mr. Smythe to be minister to Russia.

The nomination of Governor Cummings to be commissioner of internal revenue is yet under consideration by the committee, with the prospect of a favorable report.

The President has ordered payment of bonds on the last report of work doue by the Union Pacific Railroad.

Further reports are in preparation which will make a gratifying showing of the progress of this great national work.

A close canvass of the sentiment of members of Congress discloses a disposition to remove the disabilities of citizens in all the Southern States, and there is ecarcely a doubt that at this session a bill will pase both houses placing the people of the several States South npon an equal footing as to the elective franchise.

NEW YORK, Dec. 15.—The Canada papers are very bitter on tho late lynching by a masked mob in Indiana. The men hung were only surrendered by the Canadiao judges on a solemn pledge of the United States that they should have a fair trial and complete security.

The pretended State officials at Raleigh and Nashville have been sending dispatches here to bull their State bonds, but with no appreciable result; disinclination to touch reconstructed State securities is daily growing more marked.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 15.—The object of the bill inoreasing the number of judges of the Supreme Court is to keep the circuits in perpetual session, with a view to maintaining better order South.

The Reconstruction Committee have concluded the examination of the Republican committee from Mississippi, who produced data and arguments to show frauds and irregularities at the recent constitutional elcetion. They want seven counties thrown out, which they assert would give a majority of three thousand for the constitution. No action has been taken by the committee.

Six hundred and forty thousand dollars' worth of bonds were issued to the Union Pacific Railroad to-day.

Caleb Cushing has gone to Bogota in reference to the Isthmus ship canal.

Stoddart Johnson has arrived with the electoral vote of Kentucky.

In urging action on the tariff today, Schenck stated that to morrow would be the last day for business before the recess.

It is understood that the Committee on Foreign Relations report unfavorably to the nomination of Smythe to Ruesia.

Georgia is excluded from the bil repealing the act prohibiting military organizatione, because of irregularities in reconstruction.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 15.—Menard, the colored man, who is here applying for a seat as succeesor to Colonel Mann, of Louisiana, desires to contradict the statement that the Colored Library Association of this city wrote him a letter urging him not to press his claims On the contrary, Menard saye his race here desire him to persevere. Menard is still without credentials from Governor Warmoth.

NEW YORK, Dec. 15.—Tho Herald has a special via Key West, which states that reporte from the recent encounter indicate that the troops suffered fearfully. Balmaceda demands reinforcemente. The insurrectionary linee are within one hundred and fifty miles of Havana. English subjects have been notified to make immediate registration at the consulate.

MADRID, Dec. 14.—On Sunday the Cadiz insurgents, according to De Rosa's proclamation, surrendered their arms to the American consul, who transferred them to the military. Eight thousand troops and nine vessels of war were ready to attack Cadiz. All quiet now.

The insurgent flag wae a tri-color. Over thirty thousand people have left the city. Great distress prevailed among the poor who remained or fled to adjacent villages. All foreign consule with families, except the Swedish and American, left the city. Five hundred and fifty barricadee had been built in Cadiz De Rosa, with his troope, entered at two o'clock. No arrests were made or are contemplated. The government promiees to act magnanimously. Five hundred persons were killed and wounded on both sides during the fighting last week.

MADRID, Dec. 15.—Political affairs are etill unsettled here and through out the country. Trade of every deecription is at a stand still. Many are leaving fearing renewed troublee. Dulce leaves for Cuba tomorrow. The Duke of Montpeneier, learning that the Cadiz insurrection had been suppressed, returned from Cordova to Lisbon.

LONDON, Dec. 15.—The queen's speech, read to the joint session of Parliament, was ae follows: "Since tho time when her majesty deemed it right to call you together for the consideration of many grave and important matters, several vacancies have occurred in the House, owing to tho acceptanco of offices from the crown by members. It is therefore her majesty's pleasnre that writs be issued for electione to fill the vacancies, that after suitable recess you may proceed to tho consideration of such matters as may be laid before you."

ATHENS, Dec. 14.—The government rejected the summone of the sultan amid great popular enthusiasm.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 16.—The President transmitted to the House today a communication in answer to a resolution inquiring about the rumored commission to Spain from our government. The answer is that no such commissioner has been appointed

This inquiry hae ite origin in speculative paragraphs published recently relative to the movements of Hon. Caleb Cushing, whose absence from the city qnid nnuce have attempted to account for.

Among the nominatione sent to the Senate to day were the following: W. M. Smallwood to be postmaster at New Orleane, vice Taliaferro, suspended.

The Senate ie expected to continue regularly engaged upon the work before them until Friday evening, when an adjournment ie proposed till Monday.

No further business is looked for after thie week in that body until the close of the holiday recese.

In the House no strictly legitimate business will be transacted until the resumption of the session in January. A number of the members intend leaving for their homes to morrow.

The opposition to the commissioner of education, and disapproval of his recent official report, is so great that there is a probability of the nomination of a successor to Dr. Barnard. Beside the complainte against him heretofore stated in these dispatches, it is charged that he undertakes to embrace within his function matter foreign to the purposes of the act creating the office of commissioner of education, and utterly fails to come up to the requirements of the statute in matters especially designated in law.

The Reconstruction Committee had before them to-day Governor Bullock, of Georgia, who seeks to have the committee report a bill to set aside all previous State action and the present State organization, and begin de novo with a new provisional government, whose office shall be to frame a constitution consonant with the prevailing sentiment in Congress relative to suffrage, etc. The committee has not yet taken action upon the suggestione of Governor Bullock.

As the matter now appears the committee will not recommend the acceptance of the Mississippi constitution, as urged by parties here from that State; but the probability is that the committee will recommend that the constitution be again submitted to the citizens of Mississippi, to vote upon ite adoption or rejection.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 16.—Governor Bullock is before the Reconstruction Committee to-day. The committee also gave the Mississippi Republican delegation a concluding hearing.

Resolved, That the President of the United States be charged with the duty of communicating this resolution to the government of Spain.

SUFFRAGE AMENDMENT IN A MINORITY.

The special Washington correspondent of the St. Louis Republican, in his dispatch of the 13th, says:

The national suffrage amendment is not likely to pass Congress. A canvass of the House by some of its supporters shows that it will not get a majority vote, to say nothing of the required two thirds. The proposed amendment is pending before the Judiciary Committee of both houses. That of the Senate ie expected to report adverse to it at an early day. Among those who oppose the amendment are some of General Grant's strongest supporters.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT OF BANKING LAW

The House Committee on Banking intend, the present week, to bring up a bill proposing certain amendments to the national banking law, which will prevent, among other things, the mischievous syetem in vogue in New York of certifying depositors' checks in excess of depoeits.

DELIGHT OF THE FENIANS AT THE RELEASE OF TRAIN.

The newe that George Francis Train hae been released, and ie coming home, causes much delight among the Fenians. A meeting will be held this week to arrange for a magnificent reception on his arrival, which will include a procession on Broadway and speech-making at Steinway Hall.

PLEA FOR SIMPLE MELODIES.—It is no wonder that singing has died out from the congregation, when a choir is put to recite words that nobody can understand, to music that nobody knows, and the people are left to listen to newly converted opera airs which last week were brought over by a fresh troupe of foreign singers! And those sweet melodies that stilted propriety has long ago driven from the churchee, but which have gone forth among the people, and rung out gloriously in camp meetings, shaking the forest leaves with the ascending shouts of a mighty people, or which, more gently, have filled rural schools and humble lecture-rooms and village churches, not yet corrupted by the false pretences of "classic music"—those sweet melodies that no one can hear with his ear and not feel his heart beating within his bosom all the faster for the sound—are become the ridicule and contempt of men who think that God must be praised to the sound of Meyerbeer or Rossini, and not to the sweet and humble melodies of our own land.—*H. Destruction of the City of Alamos.

THOUSANDS OF LIVES LOST.

The city of Alamos, situated in the southern portion of Sonora, Mexico, has been swept out of existence by a visitation of nature—namely, a combined attack of two great furies, wind and water. The terrible event occurred during the great sea storm, lasting from the 15th to the 18th ultimo. The New York Herald publishes the following details from a private letter:

On the 15th it commenced to rain, and on the 16th a genuine rain and wind set in, lasting until the 18th. It seemed as if the very floodgates of heaven had opened, and that a second deluge was upon the world. The wind, too, roared with dreadful fury, and all the elements seemed combined for some dreadful carnage. We little thought what was in store for our beautiful city. But soon the tale was told and the destruction complete, or almost complete. The storm lasted until late in the evening of the 18th. During its continuance it appeared as if no human being could live within its reach. The Alamos river was swollen to a great height, and in its wild, headlong course, carried everything before it. Houses were swept away like so many straws, and whole blocks of buildings were thrown down like so many trees. The wind was no less terrible than the water. Houses were unroofed and blown to shatters; tiles and like material were scattered through the air like chaff, and strong trees were uprooted as if they had been cornstalks. The best part of the city is totally destroyed. About the only buildings saved, worthy of mention, are the mint, the church and the old State college. These stood on high grounds, and thie advantage, with their solidity, saved them. Dr. Hill, an American resident, had three houses carried away, and is a loser to the amount of about $10,000 Mr. T. Robinson Bours, an American doing a banking business here, had his banking house swept away. Others have suffered severely. The loss of life has been quite large. Sixty dead bodies have been picked up. Some of them were mangled fearfully, and could scarcely be recognized Many of the bodies were found miles down the river. Undoubtedly the number found will be largely increased by other unfortunate ones. I have written you these few lines hurriedly, but do not attempt to describe or explain this most extraordinary phenomenon of a seventy-two hours' whirlwind and deluge.

The ruined city of Alamos was the Athens of northwestern Mexico, or, at least, had that reputation. Its women were reputed to be the loveliest and most intelligent throughout the republic, and its citizens were highly spoken of as contrasted with those of other populations. There was a great deal of wealth, refinement and luxury among the better classes. It was a sort of sanctified Jerusalem, where the proud Spanish blood and brain held ascendancy and would not be poisoned with contact with Indian and negro mixtures. Alamos, as a city, had fame before the great metropolie of New York was known. It is old among the many old towns of Mexico. Surrounding it have been some of the richest mines in the world, and from which the city has had its chief support. At the time of its destruction it contained a population of about seven thousand souls, though geographical dictionaries place the number at ten thousand, which is at least three thousand too many. Unhappily for its people, the number is lessened through a terrible misfortune, and the "City of Poplar Groves" has fallen to the dust (even as man falls) in its strength.

IS YOUR SOUL IN HEALTH?

"I wish, above all things, that thou mayest prosper and be in health, even as thy soul prospereth." Such a wish seems strange to us, for we oftener have occasion to desire that the souls of our friends may be in as good health as their bodies. We meet with many in the daily walks of life whose physical strength is unimpaired, but their souls are badly diseased. There is no soundness in them.

The disease of the soul is so insidious that men are sick unto death before they are sensible of their condition. It may be the reader is thus diseased. We wish you were in health; but yon will not be till you are convinced that you are sick. We wish to call your attention to some of the symptoms of this soul sickness, and ask you to compare your own feelings with the marks of disease we shall mention, and see if you are not in a dangerous condition.

One symptom of spiritual disease is a want of spiritual appetite. The study of God's word, especially of the devotional parts, and of those which describe the moral character of men, and the way of salvation by Jesus Christ, is not relished. If your spiritual health was good you would say: "O how I love thy law; it is my meditation all the day!" it is "sweeter also than honey and the honey comb!" Say, reader, have you a good appetite and keen relish for spiritual truth?

Another symptom of a diseased soul is that the heart does not beat with warm and generous affections toward the Father, Son and Holy Ghost. As a feeble, intermittent pulse indicates bodily disease, proving that the heart does not well perform its office, so we know the soul must be in a sad condition if your heart does not beat with holy emotions when you contemplate the love of God in the gift of his Son to redeem a world from sin, or the love of Christ in giving himself as a ransom for us.

Another symptom of a diseased soul is the absence of the graces of the Spirit, such as faith, humility, meekness, patience, charity and penitential sorrow for sin. If you are diseased you will find, by comparing the past with the present, that you are less conscientious than you once were, have less religious sensibility and a stronger love for the world. If you are not diseased you will find the graces of the Spirit existing in your soul, and become more vigorous.

Again, a diseased soul soon becomes weary in well doing. If you resolve to study the Bible more carefully, to pray more, you perform it in a slight and careless manner. You do not like to give more time or attention to spiritual religion. Your good resolutions are soon broken.

Have you, dear reader, these symptoms of spiritual disease? If you have do not deny it; be willing to know your true condition. If you are sick apply to the great Physician without any delay. Your disease can be cured, though not by any remedies of your own devising. "There is a balm in Gilead, and a Physician there;" and all who commit themselves to his care and follow his prescriptions are healed.

When you shall have received your health it will be necessary that you, like those recovering from bodily disease, pay particular attention to the diet of the soul. You must feed daily on the "sincere milk of the word, that you may grow thereby." You must also shun infected places. Sit not in the seat of the scorner. Come out from the world, and abstain from the appearance of evil.

BORROWING SERMONS.

The rector and curate of an English parish had been absent for some time; but they were efficiently represented while they were away. They returned to resume duty on the same day. The curate took the morning service, while the rector officiated for a friend in a neighboring parish; but the rector was present in the evening to preach after the curate had read prayers. The sermon in the morning was so good that the members of the congregation congratulated themselves on the effects the change of air had on the preacher's style and powers generally. When the rector ascended the pulpit in the evening, they hoped that a judicious holiday-time had had the same effect upon him; and they felt they would be better able to judge when they heard him give out the same text which had formed the subject of the curate's illustration in the forenoon. Very soon, however, they found that it was not only the same text, but the same sermon; and then the faces of the congregation assumed a variety of expression that might have defied Herr Schultz himself to represent. There was but one placid countenance in the whole church; and that was the preacher's, who went on quite unconscious of the day's history and its consequences. There was but one face besides that did not bear an expression of fun, or comic surprise, or laughable perplexity and puzzlement; and that was the curate's. He, good man! looked the more concerned and abashed as he tried to look otherwise; the more he strove to assume a guise of indifference, the more intensely horrified he grew.

In short, the worthy personages had, unknown to each other, purchased a dozen or so of lithographed manuscript sermons; and they had the ill-luck, without communication with each other, to select the same sermon wherewith to inaugurate their return to their old pasture. The people, however, were good natured people. The two clergymen were worthy men, and, beyond a harmless joke or two, no harm came of this little misadventure.

It is more dangerous, perhaps, to preach the printed than the written sermons of other people. I remember an illustration of this in the case of a "popular preacher." On leaving his church, where he had delivered a very original discourse, he asked a clerical friend who had been present, what he thought of the sermon. The friend spoke of it in terms of the warmest praise, and then the subject was dropped. In the course of the following week, however, the friend, for purposes of his own, purchased three volumes of sermons delivered and printed in America a dozen years before. In the second volume, opening it by chance, he came on the very original sermon his friend had preached, and asked his opinion on, the previous Sunday. He quietly put that volume in his pocket, and went down to the chapel. "Jack," said he—they were both of the free and easy style of popular preacher—"Jack! what rascals these Yankees are. Here (taking out the book) they have taken the excellent sermon I heard you preach last Sunday and printed it a dozen years ago!"—Jack laughed, hummed a tune, offered his friend a cigar, and walked away to one of the theaters!—Dr. Stone's Saints and Sinners.

SPURGEON ON ROMANISM.—Here are the Roman Catholics. They are the successors of the apostles; but, I think, if Peter and Paul were to come and see their successors, they would think there was a mighty difference between them. By way of parable, suppose the Virgin Mary, Peter and Paul should come down some Sunday, and go to a cathedral. Well, when they enter, the Virgin hears them singing something to her honor, and praise, and glory; she says to Peter: 'What are those people after? They are worshiping me. My Son said to me, Woman, what have I to do with thee? He never worshiped me; let us leave this place.' They stopped a little longer, and heard a priest say that the Apostle Peter was the head of the church; and his successor, the pope, was therefore the head.

Peter jogged the Virgin Mary and said: 'What a lie that is; I was never at the head of the church at all. Did I not fall into sin? I head of the church—a pretty head was I!' Soon afterward Paul heard them preaching justification by works. 'Come out,' said he, 'there is no Gospel here. I preached justification by faith without works, and they are preaching justification by works.' And so, upon that, all three of them went out. By and by they came to a place where they heard them singing: 'Glory, honor, praise and power be unto the Lamb that sitteth on the throne;' and they heard them speak of those who were kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation. 'Ah,' said Peter, 'this is the place for me—here I will stay.' Those are the successors of the apostles who are like the apostles.

GOOD FOR EVIL.—Euclid, a disciple of Socrates, having offended his brother, the latter cried out in a rage: 'Let me die if I am not revenged on you some time or other.' Euclid replied: 'And let me die if I do not soften you by my kindness, and make you love me as well as ever.'

A CHANCE MEETING.

Two ships upon life's boundless sea
We meet; we hold the self-same way,
A few short days, then compasses
Compel our parting—we obey.

Yet for some time we miss the ship
That by us used to heave and bound
Upon the waves, nor o'er them catch
From off that deck the welcome sound

Of captain speaking to his men,
Of voices answering to our cheer;
Nor creak of rope, nor flap of sail,
Speak sympathy unto our ear.

Away the friendly vessel cleaves,
And we hold on our naval course;
A little sad our heart-strings feel,
Our pulses lack their wonted force.

Though never more, perchance, we meet
That stranger ship upon the main,
Is there no port which—peril past
Of winds and waves—we hope to gain?

Where, lying safe from angry storm,
We find at last that ship once more,
And greet her inmates heart to heart,
As if old friends, upon the shore?

Surely, O friend, it may be so;
Though thou and I have parted hands,
We meet again with firmer clasp,
Life's ocean crossed, on Heaven's sands.

COMING AND GONE.

The sun shines in the eastern sky,
On the sea its splendor pours,
And a ship is sailing into sight,
And it comes from distant shores.

Sweet music make the flapping sails,
As into port it steers,
And from the shore the pleasant sound,
A welcoming of cheers.

A little life is welcomed in,
A bark from unknown shores;
Upon the world it casts its freight
Of precious goods and stores.

Sweet music make the welcome words—
"To thee a child is given."
We hail it, as the ship is hailed,
A blessing sent from heaven.

The sun sinks in the western sky,
The evening faints in night,
As the ship sails out to the unknown seas,
And soon is lost to sight.

Sad music make the flapping sails,
As seaward far it steers,
And dimly faint the shadowy masts,
Seen through a mist of tears.

A weary life goes sinking out,
And it drifts to a distant sea,
And its goal is the everlasting shores
Of wide eternity.

A voyage made by ships and men,
Across an ocean vast—
The goods and ills of life and death,
The future and the past.

WHY ARE CHRISTIANS KEPT IN THE WORLD?

In Christ's prayer for his disciples, recorded by St. John, he says:—"I pray not that thou shouldst take them out of the world, but that thou shouldst keep them from the evil." It would seem, at the first view of the case, that so soon as we are pardoned and regenerated, we should be at once removed from earth, and introduced to the security of our heavenly home, because we have received the legal and moral fitness, and because this earth is not our rest or permanent abode, and because this earth is a scene of suffering, of moral conflict and spiritual peril. Why not, then, remove us at once, so soon as "renewed in the spirit of our minds," to the purer associations, the nobler joys and more exalted exercises of the saved and glorified? There must be a reason or reasons, "holy, just and good," why our all-wise and all-powerful Saviour did not pray for our removal from earth to heaven.

We may gather, from what God has been pleased to reveal, what at least are some of the reasons that make it better—make it best—that we should continue for a little season, until the voice divine shall say: "It is enough; come up higher; enter ye into the joy of your Lord." The first we notice is this, that we may be coworkers, together with God, in the great work of instructing and helping men to heaven. This, it has been said, is the highest and most honored responsibility God can, in our circumstances, impose upon us—greater than to be coworkers in the creation of another globe, or kindling the fires of another sun. If there were no God-fearing people on the earth, if the world was a scene of unmingled and unrelieved wickedness, we should have the strongest reason to apprehend, from the developments of the divine government in the past, as displayed in terrible judgments, that the divine justice would sweep the earth of its guilty population. So, we know, God served the antediluvian world when the number of the righteous was reduced to "eight souls." So it was in the cities of the plain, when there were not found in all their crowded streets "ten righteous" persons. So it was when all the righteous fled from Jerusalem; and so we know it would have been in the wilderness, in the day of provocation, had not the power of interceding and believing prayer stayed the swift descent of the avenging arm. Good men must remain as "the salt of the earth"—the mighty conservative power, without which human society must sink to decay and ruin.

Christians remain on earth a season to let their "light shine," that men may be constrained to glorify God, and turn from darkness to light." Christians are here to show forth the spirit of their Lord—his tempers, his gentleness—in our words his truth and wisdom, and in our acts the justice and charity of Christ, that men everywhere may be led to love and serve "the Lord Christ." If the good shepherd left the ninety and nine sheep in the wilderness—all beings in all worlds—and went after the "one sheep that was lost," shall we not feel that if we may "convert one sinner from the error of his way," and save one soul from death, that it amply vindicates the wisdom of our stay upon earth, even until our heads are gray and graced with three score and ten?

The church has never done all she might have done, yet she has done much. She has built tens of thousands of churches, sustained tens of thousands of faithful ministers and missionaries; she has published millions of Bibles, and other good books and useful periodicals. Each successive generation of believers is training millions for Christ and heaven. Now all this honor which God hath put upon the church would have been lost, and all this vast sum of good left undone if Christians, immediately after their adoption, were translated to heaven.

Another great reason for our continuance a season on the earth is the moral discipline it affords us. We cannot live on the earth and mingle in its scenes without constant spiritual exercise, and as a consequence, without spiritual growth. Under the delays, disappointments, injuries and afflictions of life, patience is continually exercised and promoted. So, too, the great conflict with evil—the constant labors of Christian life call for zeal, and by the necessity of the case zeal increases. Our ignorance of the future, our incapacity to comprehend the vast and complicated scheme of eternal providence, compels us to walk and to live by faith, and so our faith is increased. As discipline is good for the young—improves their character and makes their future better—so it is best for Christians. It increases their likeness to Christ—the highest attainment and greatest good of man.

Our stay on earth is made the means of exalting and heightening our bliss in heaven. That which is most hardly won is most dearly prized. It is true that those who die early escape the toils and tears, the pains and perils of life. This is their gain. A system of just compensations is maintained everywhere throughout the divine government. Those who bear the burdens and weep the tears and brave the dangers of this life shall thereby heighten and enhance the joys of the better life to come. Those who have been useful here, God hath specially promised shall be honored there. "They shall shine as the stars." They who go up to God "through great tribulation shall be arrayed in white, and abide nearest the throne." They shall rest from their labors, and their works shall follow them.

We all know that our happiness is much enhanced by comparison and by contrast. The sailor, in the safety of his home, "when storms are o'er," speaks with pleasure of the dread perils of the seas, when skies were dark and winds were high, and old ocean roamed in the terror of its glory. The soldier, when the din of battle and strife of war are past, surrounded by plenty, security and peace, loves to tell of the hair-breadth escapes and the imminent deadly breach—to shoulder his crutch and show how fields were won. So the saved and blest in heaven shall contrast their peace and rapture with the perils and sorrows of time, and feel that the experiences of earth have enriched the blessedness of heaven.

LETTER FROM CALIFORNIA.

HEALDSBURG, Cal., Nov. 20, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: To communicate with absent friends we must resort to pen, ink and paper. Some things must be hinted at, others the bare outlines given, others explained at full length. Two thousand miles away from your city, among strangers, and surrounded by varied circumstances, with some hesitation I assume the character of a correspondent.

The Pacific Conference convened at Sacramento, on the 7th of October, and adjourned on the 17th, after a session of eleven days. Five days of this time were employed in the investigation of charges brought against certain brethren. After a full and thorough trial, according to the law of the church, it was ascertained that all the difficulties might have been amicably adjusted by making a few explanations and concessions at the proper time. So much for misunderstandings and the intermeddling of third parties.

Bishop Marvin, though present, was in feeble health. His presence, wholesome counsels and powerful sermons gave new life to the preachers. His opening prayer was sublime. His addresses, at various times, were fully equal to his reputation. He exercised great patience during the session, though surrounded by the most perplexing circumstances. He announced to the brethren that he wanted it distinctly understood that from that time the word if had to be ostracised on this coast. His visit will, no doubt, be attended with good to the church in the bounds of this Conference.

Most of the preachers were present, and deeply alive to the general interests of the church. Most of them are in the vigor of manhood. The heads of six or eight have grown gray with the lapse of time. As a body they compare favorably with any other in the State. Bros. Fisher, Gober, Fitzgerald and Johnson are acknowledged by the brethren as their greatest lights. Dr. Fisher has written a work on Baptism, of considerable merit. Bros. Gober and Johnson have figured largely as controversialists. Our church and doctrines have been successfully vindicated by them against the attacks of the Camphellites.—Rev. O. T. Fitzgerald is the present editor of The Spectator, the organ of the Pacific and Columbia Conferences.

There are fifty members in the Conference, forty-seven of whom received appointments at the hands of the bishop. The older members have been heroes in the strife.—While many have been in "the crisis" ever since the organization of this Conference, they have stood as firmly upon the principles they promulgated as the founder of Methodism himself. This Conference, eighteen years ago, was organized with six members. Now it has more than eight times that number. Nine of their number have been buried—others transferred back to other Conferences. Out of this one the Columbia Conference has grown up. The crisis of the war was successfully endured, and, like gold purified, they now appear before the people free from political corruption, and, with new zeal, are preaching the gospel of God to offending sinners, and building up the membership in the doctrines and principles of the Christian religion. With such men leading the followers of Christ, success will attend every effort to advance the Redeemer's kingdom.

A few extracts from the minutes may not be uninteresting. The membership is two thousand eight hundred. The increase the past year reported is two hundred and sixty—supposed to be three hundred and sixty. The missionary collections amounted to $340 40, and the Conference collections to $492.42. The value of churches is $56,0000; parsonages, $13,000. There are fifty Sabbath schools, three hundred and forty-five officers, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-one scholars, seven thousand nine hundred and fifty-three volumes in library, and seven hundred and forty-nine visitors taken; collections, $1,489 80. Sixty-six conversions were reported. This is the most striking feature of this enterprise.

The congregations during the session were small, but very attentive. The preaching was such as to convict the sinner, and to inspire the members of the church with bright anticipations of a heavenly home. Good was done.

Almost universal satisfaction was manifested at the appointments, and every one went to his new field of labor with renewed zeal, and resolutions to be faithful to the flock committed to his care.

LETTER FROM OPELOUSAS.

THE CALM AFTER THE STORM.—ABUNDANT CROPS.—CHURCH MATTERS.—THE OTHER SIDE OF "POST OAK."—SURPRISE PARTY AT THE PARSONAGE.—ANOTHER WATCHMAN.

MR. EDITOR: Knowing your predilections for this place and the regions round about, I cannot let the year go by without telling you somewhat of our affairs—secular and religious.

Since the political tragedy which occurred here early in October, we have had great quiet in this parish. Of late the colored people have been working more diligently in the corn and cane and cotton fields than at any other period since the close of the war. They seem to have learned wisdom, and are letting politics alone. Indeed they have found at last what a little sagacity would have enabled them to discover long ago, that it is just as dangerous for Africans to meddle with American politics as for children to play with fire-arms. In each case they are almost sure to get hurt.

The crops harvested here this season have been quite abundant. Of corn and cane the yield has been very good. Corn is so plentiful that it sells at twenty-five cents per bushel. From some of the cane fields in this neighborhood as much as two and even three hogsheads of sugar have been made to the acre. The amount of land devoted to sugar cane the present year was very limited in this parish, owing to the scarcity of seed; but a much larger area will be planted therewith the coming year. It is the crop for this country. Cotton has turned out better than was anticipated early in the fall. On some plantations near this place an average of a bale per acre has been gathered. With such results the planters will be enabled to overcome much of their financial embarrassments this year, and they already feel strong with hope that the tide of prosperity has set in upon the country again. May they have grace to make a right use of all the increase with which the Lord of the harvest may bless their labors, so that times of war and pestilence and famine may not again be visited upon us, for God "doth not afflict willingly."

In church matters, I am glad to be able to report we are prospering. During the current year we have had an accession of thirty-five to our membership in this station—many of them the very best material to make a church strong and influential for good. Of course the monetary stringency of the year has greatly affected our church finances, and we shall not be able to do as well for all the interests of the church as we would wish; but the stewards are working manfully in the closing effort, and whatever may be the result, I can say for this church: "She hath done what she could." I verily believe that there are as few of the "stingy sort" in our membership as in that of any station or circuit in the Conference. I could enumerate cases of self-denial, in order to help in supporting the church, which would rank with that of the widow who cast her all into the Lord's treasury. I mean to keep a record of such Scriptural givers as I pass from station to station, and from circuit to circuit, as an itinerant. Their names and deeds I must never forget. The memory of them will be to me an element of strength during my ministry. By the by, would it not be well, Mr. Editor, to get up a book giving the other side of "Post Oak?" I believe in my soul that if the generous side of the church were wrought to life with as much of a master hand as has the stingy side in Post Oak, such a book would stir the heart of the church to its depths, and vibrate upon a chord that would make more melody in the Lord's treasury than the one touched by that "Red River Conference" man.

Let me tell you of a surprise party which called at the parsonage last Saturday. Dinner was scarce over when we heard the gate open, and then a knock at the door, when in came trooping two, three, four ladies, each with a package in her hands. I saw at a glance I was to be victimized in some way; and sure enough, they had me covered from head to foot in the finest broadcloth before I could get breath to remonstrate. What could I do? Now, sir, if you see me at Conference looking too grand for a Methodist preacher, especially in his minority, you will understand the wherefore. Nor is this all. The same day a clever friend rode up to the gate, and handed me a bundle, with his wife's compliments. Therein was a splendid overcoat, suggestive of elegance and warmth. Did you ever have the luxury, Mr Editor, of wearing a handsome suit of clothes presented to you by the ladies? If so, you are qualified to rejoice with me, and I pray you do so. These clothes may wear out—I suppose they will in the ordinary course of events; but the memory of them never. Would that there were such ladies in every pastoral charge of the Louisiana Conference.

Our neighboring quarterly conference is sending up an excellent young man for admission into the itinerancy. His name is Gilbert Guillot—he is very young, but very promising. The Lord, he feels, has called him to the spiritual vineyard, and he hastens to obey. From what I have seen and heard of him, I have reason to believe that the Holy Ghost has touched his lips with fire; better authority this to preach the Gospel than all "the laying on of hands" of all the "succession" bishops in Christendom. OPELOUSAS, La., Dec. 7, 1868.

SAGACITY OF A HORSE.—An old family horse that had been running at will through the streets and commons, lost one of his shoes recently, and with the intelligence of a human being the old horse walked up to the blacksmith shop where he had been shod for the last twenty years, and to the best of his ability asked the smith to shoe him, by raising his foot and stamping the ground. The smith being busy, drove him away several times during the day, and thought nothing of it. The next morning, on going to the shop, he found the old horse at the door. Again he drove him off, but the horse came back, and, entering the shop, walked up to the anvil, and there raised his foot; thus attracting the particular notice of the smith, who examined the foot, and finding it worn off to the quick, kindly picked up an old horse-shoe, and fitting it to the foot, nailed it on, when the grateful animal, frisking his tail by way of thanks, trotted off contentedly. Madison (Ohio) Courier.

MOBILE CONFERENCE.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

The Committee on Books and Periodicals beg leave to report:

That they have heard with much gratification the exhibit made of the condition of the Publishing House, by Dr. A. H. Redford, agent, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868. The unexampled success which has resulted from his efforts, and those of his able coadjutors, in the liquidation of $30,000 of the old debts of the House, reducing these debts from $79,000 to about $49,000 in two years, in connection with the rapidly increasing circulation of its books and periodicals, calls for devout thankfulness to God, and induces the belief that with the returning prosperity of the South and the continued zeal of the church, the remainder of the debt can and ought to be discharged before the next meeting of the General Conference.

The Nashville Christian Advocate occupies a commanding position, and we are gratified to learn that it is receiving a deservedly increasing patronage. The ability with which it is edited commends the paper to the cordial support of our people. The large circulation of the Sunday School Visitor is some evidence of its appreciation, though we do not think it meets fully the demands of the church. The committee are gratified to learn that it is in contemplation to publish it weekly, and hope that its size and scope will be enlarged, so as to meet all the wants of our Sunday schools in that direction. The plan of our Publishing House for supplying the church with the best of Northern publications for children is heartily commended.

The Home Monthly, though not strictly one of our church periodicals, is edited by Prof. A. B. Stark, a gentleman of fine literary culture and a member of our church, and published at our Publishing House. It is justly entitled to the favorable consideration of our people.

The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE is especially commended to the support of this Conference. As the organ of the Conference, through which our presiding elders give notice of their appointments, as well as the medium through which are made other important publications affecting the interests of the church, it should be in every family within our bounds. Another and stronger claim which it offers for our support is the ability with which it is conducted, which, we are gratified to learn, has freed it entirely from debt, and must result in a continued increase of patronage.

Our other Advocates, together with the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist, are papers of excellent character, some of which have achieved a deservedly high reputation.

We cannot too strongly urge upon our ministers the importance of circulating among our people the Discipline and hymn book, which we are credibly informed has been sadly neglected.

The committee offer for adoption by the Conference the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we give our hearty co-operation to Dr. Redford, agent, in his laudable efforts to relieve the Publishing House entirely of debt, and pledge ourselves to renewed efforts to circulate our books and periodicals.

Resolved, That the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE is eminently deserving of our support as the organ of this Conference, and as a religious paper, of whose high character we will endeavor to show our appreciation by adding largely to its subscription list during the ensuing Conference year.

BE WATCHFUL.—With double vigilance should we watch our actions, when we reflect that good and bad ones are never childless; and that in both cases the offspring goes beyond the parent—every good begetting a better, every bad a worse.

A LADY asked her little girl, on returning from church, if she remembered the text. 'Oh! yes,' said she, 'it was this: 'The Ladies' Sewing Society will meet at Mrs. McCracken's house on Monday evening next.''

LOSSES.

Upon the white sea sand
There sat a pilgrim band,
Telling of the losses that their lives had known,
While evening waned away
From breezy cliff and bay,
And the strong tides went out with weary moan.

One spake, with quivering lip,
Of a fair-freighted ship,
With all his household to the deep gone down;
But we had a wilder woe
For a fair face long ago
Lost in the darker depths of a great town.

There were who mourned their youth
With a most loving truth
For its brave hopes and memories ever green;
And one upon the west
Turned an eye that would not rest
For far-off hills whereon its joys had been.

Some talked of vanished gold,
Some of proud honors told,
Some spoke of friends that were their trust no more;
And one of a green grave
Beside a foreign wave
That made him sit so lonely on the shore.

But when their tales were done,
There spake among them one,
A stranger, seeming from all sorrow free:
"Sad losses have ye met,
But mine is heavier yet,
For a believing heart hath gone from me."

"Alas!" these pilgrims said,
"For the living and the dead,
For fortune's cruelty, for love's sure cross,
For the wrecks of land and sea!
But, howe'er it came to thee,
Thine, stranger, is life's last and heaviest loss."

The Girls' House of Refuge, New Orleans.

MR EDITOR: Do the readers of the ADVOCATE know anything of this institution—of its management? As good citizens and as Christians it is our bounden duty to keep ourselves informed on this subject. The City Council nominate thirteen citizens to serve for one year, or until their successors be nominated. These constitute the board of commissioners for the management of the Houses of Refuge, and these appoint a committee of five ladies for the girls' department, who may be changed every three months, at the discretion of the board. Judging from the former board, these citizens have hitherto been chosen from among the Protestants and Roman Catholics. This fall the latter only have been appointed, with one exception, and in turn four Roman Catholic ladies were nominated for the Girls' House of Refuge. The intention was to have this committee composed entirely of Roman Catholics, but one of the gentlemen, not being priest-ridden, consequently not in the secret, gave in the name of a Protestant as his choice—his selection for his district. Now this committee was elected and put over the heads of the former committee without even showing the latter the respect due to their long and devoted services in the cause of our Saviour by giving a written notice of their dismissal. This was particularly grievous in the case of Mrs. M. E. Randall, the very founder of the institution, who, before any one, remembers and practices our Lord's injunction to go into the by-ways and gather in all unto him. She saw girls vagabondizing in the streets; she induced them to put themselves under her care. She solicited the charity of the benevolent to support these children.—When the city took the work out of her hands, by founding the Houses of Refuge, she was elected president of the ladies' committee, and for seventeen years she presided at their meetings and devoted herself to the Christian reformation of the inmates, who in return have given her their love. What is the object of this change of administration? In what did the old committee offend?—The object to be accomplished is to increase the power of the priests of Rome, to give a shelter and a home to their innumerable swarm of Sisters of Charity, who should be taught to make an honest living, instead of being an incubus on the industry of others, who follow St. Paul's example to be a charge to no one. This is the object of the gentlemen's board, and of the four Roman Catholic ladies, who have already intimated the wish to introduce their priests, and would pursue the Romish idea of reforming by stigmatizing the girls even in the House. The proposal to introduce priests was met by the argument "that the city has no religion, the State has none; the taxpayers who support the institution are largely Protestant; that no distinction should be made among the girls; that they should be treated alike; that their instruction was Christianity, no book being used but the Bible."

Of course this answer gave great offense, and complaint was made to members of the gentlemen's board, and was discussed by the board, it is presumed, from the notice taken afterward of the matter. The question now is: Shall we Protestants suffer our city to be governed by the priests of Rome? Shall we aid these, our enemies, and the enemies of souls, to accumulate property upon property, and to take our public institutions? Look at Italy, at Spain, at Mexico, where in self-defense the people have confiscated the property of the priests, abolished monasteries, banished Jesuits.

NOVEMBER 16, 1868.

Two Churches in Two Conferences Made One.

SOUTHERN METHODIST AND METHODIST PROTESTANT.

The most remarkable event during the session of the Memphis Conference was its acceptance of the proposition for union, made by the North Mississippi Annual Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church.

On Saturday morning, November 28, the session having been indefinitely prolonged, the Rev. A. A. Houston, fraternal messenger and commissioner of the North Mississippi Annual Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church, was introduced by the bishop, and made an address on the objects of his visit, which was heard with much interest.

The following documents, presented by the Rev. A. A. Houston, were read, viz:

Resolutions adopted by the North Mississippi Annual Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church on the reception of Brother A. C. Allen, and the appointment of Brother A. A. Houston Fraternal Messenger:

The Rev. A. C. Allen, fraternal messenger, bearing Christian salutations and fraternal greetings from the Memphis Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South to our Annual Conference, being introduced, proceeded to address the Conference upon the subject matter of his mission, at the hour of ten o'clock A. M., on the third day of our session.

After a brief response by the president of the Conference, the following resolutions were passed:

Resolved That it is with feelings of pleasure that we acknowledge the attendance of Brother A. C. Allen, fraternal messenger from the Memphis Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and hope that like Christian and brotherly intercourse may be continued.

Resolved, That although the proposed union of the two churches has not been effected, as we sincerely hoped, yet we still cherish the hope that so reasonable a result may yet be satisfactorily accomplished.

Resolved, That our brothers, A. A. Houston and R. A. Roach, ministers of our body, be appointed fraternal messengers to the Memphis Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, to be held at Paris, Tennessee, commencing on the 25th of this month, who will be pleased to aid in the continuance of the interchange of Christian salutations between the two Conferences.

Resolved, That our publishing committee furnish a transcript hereof to the editor of the Memphis and Arkansas Christian Advocate for publication.

A true copy.

JOHN M. McDANIEL,
Secretary North Mississippi Annual Conference Methodist Protestant Church.

Resolution adopted November 7, 1868:

Resolved, That the fraternal messenger to the Memphis Annual Conference be authorized to propose a union of the North Mississippi district of the Methodist Protestant Church with the Memphis Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, if in his judgment he deem it prudent.

Extract from the minutes.

J. M. McDANIEL, Sec'y.

Thereupon the following resolutions were adopted, viz:

Resolved, That we welcome the presence of the Rev. A. A. Houston, fraternal messenger and commissioner of the North Mississippi Annual Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church, and would be much pleased to continue fraternal relations with that body.

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed, to whom shall be referred the subjects presented by Brother Houston, including the documents received from the North Mississippi Annual Conference, and that he be invited to confer with said committee.

Resolved, That the committee, if terms can be agreed upon with Bro. Houston for uniting the North Mississippi Annual Conference with the Memphis Conference, be instructed to report a plan for such union, in the interests of our common Christianity.

A. C. ALLEN.
W. C. JOHNSON.

On Monday afternoon the committee made the following report, viz:

The committee who were appointed to confer with Rev. A. A. Houston, fraternal messenger and commissioner of the Annual Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church of the North Mississippi district, beg leave to report:

That whereas, The last General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South appointed commissioners to confer with a convention of the Methodist Protestant Church, held at Montgomery, Alabama, May, 1867, for the purpose of forming a union between the two churches; and whereas, said commissioners presented the following plan of union, viz:

"The commissioners of the Methodist Episcopal Church South submit the following proposition:

"We propose a formal and corporate union of the Methodist Episcopal Church South and the Methodist Protestant Church. The separation originally took place because lay representation was denied.—This principle being now conceded and incorporated into the economy of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, we thought there was no inseparable bar to such union of the two bodies. * * * *

"We propose a union with your ministers, itinerant and local, and your members, each in their several relations, and entitled to all the rights and privileges common to our own ministers and members, under the Discipline of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

"G. F. PIERCE.
"H. N. McTYEIRE.
"LEROY M. LEE."

And whereas, Said plan of union, though not accepted by a majority of said convention, has been accepted by the Annual Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church of the North Mississippi district; and whereas, said Conference has sent Brother A. A. Houston to this Conference, with full powers to effect a union between that Conference and this; and whereas, said commissioner proposes a union of the said Conference—embracing twenty-two ministers, one thousand three hundred members, and forty-three churches—with this Conference, upon the plan of union of the commissioners of our General Conference; therefore,

Resolved, That the said proposition be accepted, and the members and ministers of the Methodist Protestant Church, within the limits of said Conference, be recognized as members and ministers of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

Resolved, That the presiding elders who may be assigned to that portion of our territory embraced by said Conference be directed to carry out the details of this union in their several districts.

A. C. ALLEN.
L. C. GARLAND.
J. H. BROOKS.
THOS. F. WILSON.
A. B. FLY.

The report having been read, Bro. Houston, upon invitation of the bishop, addressed the Conference; and then, after candid and careful inquiry, and a thorough weighing of legal questions—the bishop and all agreeing thereupon—the report was adopted unanimously, and with a rising vote. Every member, clerical and lay, favored the union, and at the same time all desired that it should be effected in accordance with the Book of Discipline and the action of the late General Conference. Commissioner Houston being clothed with plenary powers, and the Memphis Conference formally and ex animo accepting his proposition, the union became a fixed fact.—Thereupon the members, clerical and lay, indulging the happy emotions of brotherly love and Christian communion, extended, one by one, the hand of fellowship to Bro. Houston personally, and as the representative of the clergy and laity, now made one with us. The bishop, in the chair, deputed Prof. Garland, of the laity, to shake hands for him with Brother Houston—a well timed and happy stroke, keenly relished by those whose minds dwelt upon the historical controversy between the two churches. But Bro. Houston, not satisfied with an act done by proxy, made his way through the crowd, grasping outstretched hands as he went, up to the chair; and there closing the war about the episcopacy, no less than about the laity, the representative men of the two bodies, now one, signalized the fellowship of kindred minds. Such a scene as that hour witnessed was worthy of heavenly as well as earthly notice. May it be renewed speedily all over the land! The precedent gives ground for hope that, though the majority of the convention at Montgomery, Alabama, did not accept the proposition of the commissioners appointed by the General Conference at New Orleans, the Annual Conferences of the two churches will yet unite upon the terms of that proposition.

By reference to the appointments of the Memphis Conference it may be seen that preachers connected with us by this union have received appointments, and still others will be appointed to work in due time. Meanwhile our presiding elders in North Mississippi will proceed to take action, as it may be necessary, to perfect the details of the union in their several districts.

To urge our people to aid in this good work is not necessary. All will rejoice in the performance of a duty accordant with the sentiments of their hearts, as well as with the teachings of God's word.

LITTLE ROCK CONFERENCE.

The fifteenth session of this Conference closed at Warren, Arkansas, November 24. We give the appointments, as per Arkansas Christian Advocate:

ARKANSAS RIVER COLORED DISTRICT. To be supplied; Jefferson, Henry Hudson; Bellevue, Robert Hill; Arkansas, Jesse Williams; Pine Bluff, to be supplied; Ashley, Jesse Pitts; Drew, John Wesley.

A WORD FITLY SPOKEN.—Job Throgmorton, a Puritan minister, who was described by his cotemporaries "as being as holy and as choice a preacher as any in England," is said to have lived thirty-seven years without any comfortable assurance as to his spiritual condition. When dying, he addressed the venerable John Dod: 'What will you say of him who is going out of the world, and can find no comfort?' replied Mr. Dod, 'who, when he was going out of the world, found no comfort, but cried: 'My God! my God! why hast thou forsaken me?'' This prompt reply administered consolation to the troubled spirit of his dying friend, who departed within an hour after, rejoicing in the Lord.

CROCODILE STORIES.

Don Ramon Paez is a native of Venezuela, but received his education in England, where an acquaintance with Waterton, the naturalist and South American traveler, gave a direction to his thoughts and studies which led him subsequently to undertake extensive travels in his native land, some of the results of which he has, during his political exile, given to the public, under the name of Wild Scenes in South America. It is, as the title-page implies, the first of a contemplated series, and is designed more especially for the young American reader, to whom the introduction is addressed. The motto which Don Ramon has chosen —"nihil arduum mortalibus"—is well verified by his own adventurous life. As we have turned over the pages of this book, we have marked many passages suitable for transcription; but have concluded to confine ourselves to anecdotes of crocodiles and incidents of crocodile hunting, premising, however, that every chapter is full of interest to the lovers of wild scenes and bold adventure:

"The crocodiles of this river—La Portuguesa—are noted for being the most savage and daring in the Llanos. Although usually styled yellow caymans, to distinguish them from the common alligator, which is of a darker hue, they are, in fact, real crocodiles, with an acute snout, like those inhabiting the Nile, and other celebrated rivers of Africa. * * * No person can venture near the water without danger from their attacks, being so treacherous that they approach their intended victim near enough to strike him with their powerful tails before he is even aware of their proximity. The bubbling sound of a gourd being filled in the water by some imprudent person specially attracts them. To obviate this danger, a calabash-bowl, with a long wooden handle, is usually employed for the purpose; yet even this is not unfrequently snatched from the hands of the water-carrier. If, by accident, a human being falls a prey to this tyrant of the river, the reptile is then called cebodo, which appellation implies everything that is bold, ferocious and treacherous in an animal of the species, as, from that time, they not only waylay persons, but follow them in the canoes, in hopes of again securing this dainty morsel"

CUNNING OF THE CROCODILE.

"I was told several incidents in relation to the cunning and instinct of these saurians, one of which appeared to be most remarkable in an animal of the reptile tribe. The ferryman here possessed, at one time, a great many goats. One day he perceived that several of them had disappeared, and, not being able to account for it in any other way, he at once laid the blame on the hated crocodile, although these creatures seldom carry their attacks beyond their own element. His suspicions, he discovered in the end, were well founded, having witnessed the destruction of one of his goats in a very singular manner. It appeared that a crocodile had, in some mysterious way, discovered that goats delight in jumping from place to place, but more especially from rocks or mounds. Rocks, however, being rather scarce in the country, their treacherous enemy undertook to gratify their taste for this innocent pastime, and, at the same time, cater to his own. Approaching the water's edge to within a few feet from the bank, he swelled out his back in such a manner as to give it the appearance of a small island or promontory. The stupid goats perceiving this, varied their gambols by jumping from their scene places on shore upon the seeming island, which they, however, never reached, for the crocodile, tossing up his head at the right instant, received them into his open jaws, and swallowed them without difficulty."

A BOLD ENCOUNTER.

"There are, however, men bold enough to meet the enemy face to face in his own element. The man who makes up his mind to this encounter is well aware that this must be a conflict to the death for one of the antagonists. The ferryman related to us a feat of gallantry worthy of a better cause, performed here by a Llanero with one of these monsters. The man was on his way to San Jaimo on a pressing errand. Being in haste to get there the same day, he would not wait for the canoe to be brought to him, but prepared to swim across, assisted by his horse. He had already secured his saddle and clothes upon his head, as is usual on similar occasions, when the ferryman cried out to him to beware of a caiman cebado, then lurking near the pass, urging upon him, at the same time, to wait for the canoe. Scorning this advice, the Llanero replied, with characteristic pride: 'Let him come; I was never yet afraid of man or beast.' Then, laying aside a part of his ponderous equipment, he placed his two edged dagger between his teeth, and plunged fearlessly into the river. He had not proceeded far, when the monster rose and made quickly toward him. The ferryman crossed himself devoutly, and muttered the holy invocation of Jesus, Maria y Jose! fearing for the life, and above all, for the toil of the imprudent traveler. In the meantime, the swimmer continued gliding through the water toward the approaching crocodile. Aware of the impossibility of striking his adversary a mortal blow unless he could reach the armpit, he awaited the moment when the reptile should attack him to throw his saddle at him. This he accomplished so successfully that the crocodile, doubtless imagining it to be some sort of good eating, jumped partly out of the water to catch it. Instantly the Llanero plunged his dagger up to the very hilt into the fatal spot. A hoarse grunt and a tremendous splash showed that the blow was mortal, for the ferocious monster sunk beneath the waves to rise no more.

"Proud of this achievement, and scorning the tardy assistance of the ferryman, who offered to pick him up in his canoe, he waved his bloody dagger in the air, exclaiming, as he did so: 'Is there no other about here?' and then, turning, he swam leisurely back to take his horse across."—The Methodist.

A NIGHT IN A LIFEBOAT.—Macmillan's Magazine gives the following account of a night in a lifeboat: "The lifeboatmen were glad, after their night's watch and morning's work, to rest a few hours; but plenty of boatmen remained on watch, ready at any moment to make up a crew. The cold became, hour by hour, more intense, and the fresh breeze steadily grew into a gale. The sea at high tide broke in flying volumes of spray against the pier, thundered down upon it and poured over it in foaming cascades into the harbor. As the evening grew on the gale became terrific in force; heavy snow storms went sweeping by; showers of freezing sleet came rushing along, and the night was dreary and dismal—dark and cold in the extreme. At about quarter after ten o'clock the storm was in full fury, and the sea a very howling wilderness of raging waters. At that moment, 'mid the roar of the wind and sea, the signal guns were heard, and rockets were seen in the direction of the Gulf lightship. 'The lifeboat was manned with dispatch,' would be the short report the coxswain of the boat would afterward make to the harbor master. This means that the boatmen, in spite of the piercing cold and the terrific gale, rush along the pier, hurry down the harbor steps and into the boat to face the dread peril of the wild sea, as readily as school boys bound down the school stairs and out on to the common for the joy of a summer holiday.

It takes the steamer and lifeboat one hour and a half to urge their way out to the Gulf lightship.—They speak her about one in the morning, and are told that the men on board saw some time since a large light burning southeast by south, but they lost it about twenty minutes ago. The steamer at once tows the boat in the direction, a careful lookout is kept, the snow storms come down more wildly than ever, the cold is very bitter, the sea running mountains high; still on, and no signs of a light. The crew hold a consultation as to what is best to be done. There appears no possibility of one of the crew of the vessel being still alive clinging to any floating wreckage; still some other vessel may be in danger; they will wait and watch for any light or signal of distress, and not seeing it, remain there until daylight that they may be sure they are not leaving behind them any who may be perishing for want of their aid; and so, while most, if not all of you, my readers, were comfortable in your beds, (the wakeful ones of you perhaps having your hearts moved with pity and to prayer for the poor fellows at sea,) these brave men—from choice, not for hope of money or reward, but for the far dearer hope of saving life—wafted on and by those gloomy sands, a prey to all the fierceness of the gale, the raging seas and deadly cold. Time after time, the mad rushing waves break over the boat, burying her in clouds of spray and foam; or, coming in heavier volume still, put the men for a moment or two completely under water. The sufferings of the crew become very severe. They encourage each other, and still let the boat lay to. Willing as every man is to endure to the utmost, they soon feel that it is getting beyond their strength; they are frozen through and through, and rapidly getting numbed and exhausted with the continual wash of heavy seas, and at last they are compelled to make a signal for the steamer, and towed back to Ramsgate, arriving between four and five in the morning."

MOBILE CONFERENCE.

The following resolution, offered by John Elsworth, lay representative from the Mobile district, and adopted by the Conference, was referred to in our issue of last week:

Resolved, That, believing as we do in the institution of class meetings as an element of Methodism and a means of grace, we hereby recommend to the members of this body to revive them where they have been discontinued, and urge their observance on our members generally.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THE BABE OF BETHLEHEM.—A fine steel engraving, very beautifully representing the nativity of our Saviour. B. B. Russell & Co., publishers, 55 Cornhill, Boston.

All will be pleased with the manner in which the artist has treated this interesting subject. It seems impossible for art to exhaust itself in the grouping and expression of the characters. The price is low for such a picture—only $2 per copy.

GARDENING FOR THE SOUTH, or How to Grow Vegetables and Fruits. By the late William N. White, of Athens, Georgia. With additions by Mr. J. Van Buren and Dr. James Camak. Revised and newly stereotyped. Illustrated. New York: Orange Judd & Co., 245 Broadway.

Time does not permit us to speak of this work as it deserves. We have been able only to glance at its pages, table of contents and copious index. Completeness has been aimed at, and we think very nearly attained. Something of this sort, adapted to the South, should be in the hands of all our country readers, and of those in town who are fortunate enough to have a garden spot.

RUBY'S HUSBAND. By Marian Harland. New York: Sheldon & Co., 1869.

The author is well and favorably known. This volume we should judge not inferior to anything hitherto written by her. We are indebted for a copy to Mr. George Ellis, opposite the post office, New Orleans.

MONTGOMERY CONFERENCE.

FIFTH SESSION.—FIRST DAY.

GREENVILLE, Ala., Dec. 9, 1868.

This Conference met this morning in this thrifty town, Bishop H. N. McTyeire presiding. By an arrow-like motion Dr. Redford and I came down the Mobile and Ohio Railroad to Mobile. There we remained but an hour, and then took passage on the steamer for the terminus of the Mobile and Montgomery road.—Hence to this place was only an uneasy sleep of eight hours. What an improvement upon the horse-locomotion, the plunging, drenching, creek swimming style of going to Conference in the olden time! And then it used to be no small thing to provide for the Conference menage. Horses, bridles and saddles gave more trouble than getting the preachers comfortably lodged Now whole Conferences move with the ease and precision of a single person. Every place on a railroad is at the center of commercial life. Its streams of travel run with equal facility every way, and towns are therefore springing up far inland, away from the sea or the river, and great cities will henceforth grow up in regions that were once thought hopelessly inaccessible. This place is growing like a ship bearing full from the horizon. It is in the heart of a fertile country, abounding in good water, and a fine variety of pine and oak. The streets are full of teams and wagons, and cotton comes in from a long distance still farther inland. The shops are crowded with solid-looking farmers in homespun—men who have grappled with the times in good earnest, and mastered all difficulties by making at home their own clothing and food. These are the wealth producers, the real gold-makers, of the South.

I was soon introduced to a most comfortable home—the family of Colonel Minnis—where, in company with the bishop and other brethren beloved, I am most hospitably entertained. The Lord reward all who minister of their substance to the friends of the Saviour!

In entering the Conference I saw, for the first time, Bishop McTyeire presiding over an Annual Conference. He looked as if he had been at it all his days. He handles a body of Methodist preachers as if he knew all the springs of itinerant life. I looked at him with admiration as an ex-editor of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and remembered that I was in the true succession. The bishop introduced me as "one of the fathers." Seeing some old men about, and many young ones much my own age, I concluded that he referred only to the ancient nature of our mutual friendship.

This is a vigorous offshoot of the old Alabama. It is full of men strong to labor and mature in Christian experience. They are equal to the grand work of cultivating this, as fine a territory as there is in the Southern world. Among the lay delegates are the Hon. William Garrett, ex-secretary of State, Dr. Dowdell, president of the East Alabama College, Daniel Pratt, W. W. Allen, and other influential citizens of the State.

At night Rev. O. R. Blue preached from the text, "And what wilt thou have me to do?" a spiritual and forcible sermon—just such an one as should introduce a Conference session.

SECOND DAY.

The officers of the Auburn College were presented by its able president. This noble institution is struggling with adverse waves; but, like all of our educational interests, will doubtless find relief in the improved crops of the present season. It is the great enterprise of this Conference—one worthy of it—one which will require all the energy of its strong will and active hands. A college is the fountain which supplies all the other sources of knowledge to the people. The common school and the academy derive their existence from the college. Just as efficient teachers abound common schools will multiply. The church will be amply paid for its liberality and care in the improvement of its ministry, for it is a fact in the history of Methodist literary colleges that they have yielded a large number of educated preachers. It is a vital interest. It must be sustained at all cost. The Conference is fully awake to it. We commend to it the policy which the Louisiana Conference adopted in regard to the Mansfield Female College: 1. Very few trustees. 2. Take away from them all power to pledge any part of the college lands or buildings, for any purpose whatever, so as to remove the possibility of endangering or destroying its existence. Let the professors know beforehand that in no event can they look to the permanent property of the institution for the payment of their salaries. 3. Give the entire management of the institution, and the election of president and professors, to the trustees. 4. The trustees to hold office at the will of the Conference, to which they are to make an annual report of the condition of the college.

The bishop made an admirable address, previous to the examination of character, upon the fact of its peculiarity to Methodist Conferences, and the reason of its origin and continuance—that where men were to be sent to congregations with whom they were wholly unacquainted, it was due to them to send those only whose characters had passed under a rigid review by holy men competent to judge of ministerial qualities and fitness. The minuteness of inquiry brought out some new and valuable items. Among them one was, a comparison instituted between the amount paid per member for the support of the preacher on a very poor station—of which it had been said, "If you want to kill out a minister send him to it"—and the sum paid upon an average district, per member. The poor station paid $5 90; the district paid $2 06 for each member; but a poor district—the one the speaker was on—had paid only $1 37 per capita! This sort of digesting and careful induction of facts is the way to arrive at a solution of the financial maze in which the church is now groping its perplexed way. A single spark on this theme will set off any considerable body of Methodists. Immediately the whole subject of support and stewards blazed forth. It was thought that the trouble lay in the stewards; but the laymen thought it lay in the preachers, because they, from false modesty or real timidity, failed to teach the people their duty. One preacher had received, "all told, $115, counting the oranges and the honey, and Sarah and the children must live on that!" Just here some one gave notice of a meeting of the "Gospel Extension Society." Its name seriously impressed me.

At night there was a good congregation at the church. The night was cold. The house was comfortable, but badly lighted. These accessories of place, light and heat have much to do with a Conference session. They affect its temper and its expression. The sermon was by the Rev. W. M. Motley—"If our gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost"—an excellent sermon.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

Read the advertisement of J. A. Braselman & Co., 586 and 588 Magazine street, corner of St. Andrew. This is the great dry goods house of the Fourth District, and much resorted to by country as well as city buyers. They are good men, and worthy of patronage.

Rice Bros. & Co., 89 and 91 Camp street, advertise the famous Charter Oak stove this week. It appears, from all we can gather, that this is the stove. The keeper of our house says no other will do, and we hear a great deal of testimony to the same effect. These enterprising dealers are selling thousands of these stoves every year, and those who use them never wish for any other. When we are able to buy a new stove it shall certainly be a Charter Oak.

Pitkin, Pierson & Co. Look at their card before you buy your clothing. We know these gentlemen and a great many of their customers, and their clerks. What can we say more? Only that we would like to patronize them much more than we do. There is a large variety of men's, boys' and youths' clothing, and at reasonable prices, at their establishment, Nos. 13 and 15 Camp street.

D. H. Holmes, 155 Canal street. This is an old house—a dry goods palace, and a place of excellent stock and fair dealing. We need only to say to our friends that that model Christian and gentleman, J. D. Parker, is one of the oldest and most widely known employees of this store. We can safely recommend the house from long acquaintance with their manner of transacting business.

Tulane Buildings. Messrs. Garthwaite, Lewis & Stuart have a card in another column, where they give notice of clothing and furnishing goods at reduced prices. Their stock we know from personal inspection to be large, well assorted and cheap. The quality we know to be good from the best test in the world—the actual wear. Nos. 31 and 33 Camp street, New Orleans.

Darby's Prophylactic Fluid. This world-renowned article is extensively advertised this week. A cloud of witnesses attest the wonderful value of the Fluid. Read the whole advertisement, and the great and honored names, in Church and State, who indorse the claims of Messrs. Darby & Co.

Emory and Henry College. We know several of the patrons of this institution, and all are pleased. Parents and guardians seeking a school of high grade for their sons and wards will do well to read the card of the president, Dr. E. E. Wiley.

MEMPHIS CONFERENCE STATISTICS.—The report of the statistical secretary gives the number of preachers and members in each charge in the Conference, also the number of baptisms, infant and adult, and of professions of religion, during the past year. The aggregates are thirty-six thousand eight hundred and fifty-one white members, being a net increase of seven hundred and forty-three during the past year; only three hundred and thirty-five colored members, the great body of these having been transferred to the Colored Conference, which now numbers ten thousand and more; and three hundred and ninety-five local preachers—three hundred and ninety-nine reported last year. Of infants baptized there were reported eight hundred and twenty-seven; adults, two thousand two hundred and sixty-three; and of professions of religion, four thousand two hundred and seventeen. The statistics of members in the church are, we think, unusually accurate; the others quite imperfect.—Memphis Christian Advocate.

PERSONAL.—Rev. Dr. Mattison died suddenly at his residence, in Jersey City, on Wednesday, November 25. Dr. Mattison was one of our ablest polemics, very earnest for the truth as he understood it, and doing at this hour especial service in lifting up before the American people the dangers of the system of popery. His loss will be greatly felt by all the Christian church. He was in the fifty-fourth year of his age, and though not of rugged health, yet seemed destined to a long life. The sympathies of the church will go forth toward his most afflicted household.

THE temperance cause in Massachusetts lost one of its best men very suddenly on Sunday, 22d, in the death of Hon. Nehemiah Boynton, of this city. He had held many offices of public trust, but his chief offices were his faithful devotion to the church and to the cause of temperance. He was a prominent member of the Baptist church, and has long been active in this best of accomplished reforms. The State Temperance Alliance, of which he has been one of the leading officers, was in session the day of his burial, and attended his funeral in a body. Rev. Dr. Eddy and other clergymen conducted the services before a crowded and sympathetic house.

REV. DR. LABAN CLARK, of Middletown, the oldest minister in our church, except Henry Boehm, lies at the point of death. He is in a state of unconsciousness. Of great age, it is not probable that he will recover.

P. S.—He died on Saturday.—Zion's Herald.

CAPITAL punishment is at an end in Sweden, the king having declared that he shall uniformly refuse to execute the death penalty, until the legislature sees fit to abolish it legally.

PEACH blossoms are now seen in every portion of Florida.

The transferred preachers are reckoned with those of the Conferences to which they now belong. The nine bishops are not counted. Their addition would make the number of traveling preachers, including those on the superannuated list, two thousand five hundred and forty. The preachers who located this year (eighty-one) are not counted; on the other hand, the preachers who were admitted on trial (one hundred and sixty seven,) and those who were readmitted (sixty,) are counted among the traveling preachers, though many of them are also reckoned with the local preachers. There are some members in China who are not counted, not being officially reported. There are defects in the minutes of some of the Conferences, which the editor vainly endeavored to supply. The preachers and members of the separate colored connection, which the bishops are organizing, agreeably to the provisions of the General Conference, are not counted here, as they have their own minutes. The large decrease in the Florida Conference is due to a change of its boundaries.

INDIAN SCHOOLS.

Of Indian schools we get some interesting information—as concerns the government schools—through the report of the Anglo-Indian government on the progress and condition of India for 1866 and 1867; as to the American missionary schools, from a correspondent of the Boston Journal, writing at Allahabad. The English authorities, it would appear, have favored the universities at the expense of more modest institutions. But that the desire for education is increasing, is evinced by the fact that within a short period the students of the English language in the northwest provinces have increased from nine thousand seven hundred and fifty-seven to thirteen thousand three hundred and fifty-five. There are many conservatives who attempt to withstand this desire, but the inducement of obtaining government employment, in the army, the railways, the bar, etc., is too great to be opposed. In Bengal much is looked for from the projected night schools, of which one hundred are to be established experimentally, and five hundred if the event warrants it. In Ajmere and Kumaon widows are being trained as teachers In Bombay local taxes are being contributed to the school funds. The government has added a new stimulus by aiding the trustees of certain trusts to send annually meritorious students to the University of London and of Edinburg. The American missionaries—the Rev. Messrs. Walsh and Owen, the latter well known as a translator of the Bible—are of course without these adventitious aids, yet their success has been very great "I have about four hundred boys," said Mr. Walsh, while showing his school to the correspondent, "of all ages, shades and castes. You will see for yourself what they are and what they promise. The only trouble is, I can't graduate a class, for there is such a demand for English-speaking natives that they are snapped up as soon as they can say 'How do you do?' and 'Good morning.' A great many who have gone out from this school are getting far greater pay than I am." In moral studies the progress of the Hindoos is described as slow and difficult; but they excel in mathematics, and command high salaries as clerks and accountants. Many who have obtained an education in this school are having a salary of $1,200 per annum. "This," says the writer, "is the stimulus to the native mind, and there is no need now of urging parents to send their boys to the mission schools, which are preferred to those established by the government, notwithstanding the missionaries make the Bible a text-book, and teach the doctrines of the Christian religion as laid down in the catechism of the Westminster divines."—Round Table.

WORK FOR JESUS.—Perhaps you are especially anxious for the soul of a parent, a brother or sister, or some dear bosom friend. Take that soul in the arms of faith to the throne of grace. Pray earnestly, and in confidence, that the promise, "Whatsoever ye ask in my name, believing, ye shall receive," is for you. But let not your labor cease here; strive to show that friend that you long to bring him to heaven with you. Seize every opportunity to speak of Jesus, and entreat him to be reconciled to God.

If you have grown cold and lost that sweet communion with Christ which you once enjoyed, here is an efficient means of banishing your lukewarmness. Set yourself about praying for some soul who has never tasted the joys of pardon; forget self; throw your whole soul into the effort to bring that friend to God, and he will surely bless you in your own soul. Your heart will be made glad; the cloud will vanish, and you will once more bask in the rays of the Sun of Righteousness. Work for Jesus. Live for him, and you shall live with him when your work is done.

ENCOURAGEMENT. — The late Dr. Bogue said: "A minister of inferior talents, who labors to improve them by study, exercise and prayer, will far surpass one of much superior gifts, who allows them to languish for want of culture."

GEOGRAPHICAL RESEARCHES.

THE "ROOF OF THE WORLD." — DR. LIVINGSTONE.

The address of Sir R Murchison, at a recent session of the Royal Geographical Society in London, contained the following interesting matter, as reported by the London Times:

The attention of the society had been strongly drawn of late toward central Asia, and particularly to the vast regions which bordered the northeastern and the northwestern frontiers of British India. The principal region in the northeast embraced the country lying between Assam and Szechnen, the most westerly province of China. A warm desire was expressed by a committee of the British association, as well as by their own council, that the intervening space of about two hundred and fifty miles only should be explored, in order to ascertain if there be practicable passes through the high mountains and wild tracts which separated the upper waters of the Yangtse-kiang from the Brahmaputra at its great bend near Sudiya. Although as yet no positive effort had been made to solve the important problem, endeavors were being carried on by the Indian authorities to open a route of traffic along the more southerly line between British Burmah and the Chinese province of Yunnan, now essentially independent of Chinese rule, and most desirous of establishing a trade with our settlements on the Irawaddy.

Of still more pressing importance, however, than an acquaintance with the regions just alluded to was an exploration of the vast and unexamined tracts on the northwest, far beyond the tributaries of the upper Indus, or between Peshawur and Jellalabad on the south, and the centers of trade and population at Yarkand and Koshgar The main object was to define the physical character of the vast elevated plateau called Pamir, or "Roof of the World," from which the lofty chains, the Kuen-Lun, the Himalaya and Hindoo Koosh, radiate. In a former address he, in 1867, dwelt upon the essential importance of such knowledge to be acquired equally by the Russian government and by our own; and he then said that this great table land or watershed ought to be constituted the neutral ground between the two empires, and to be considered as a broad zone to be forever interposed between eastern Turkestan—toward which Russia has now advanced—and the most northern limits of our Indian possessions. With a view to taking a first step in this desirable exploration, the council of the society sent out last spring a practiced traveler, Lieutenant Hayward, to traverse this region from Peshawur.

It was not, of course, in his power to announce to them as yet many of the subjects which would be brought before them in the course of the session now commenced; but he might inform them that they had in hand, besides papers on various parts of central Asia, a memoir on Abyssinia by Dr. Blanc, the companion in captivity of Mr. Rassam, describing the western part of that region, which was not visited by the British army; also a well digested account of the geography, statistics and natural production of Manchuria—the great northeastern province of China—by Mr. Williamson, a missionary. In concluding his few anticipatory remarks he might say that, besides the results of the explorations of Livingstone in South Africa, to which they looked forward so anxiously, he had received a map of the lake regions of equatorial Africa from their medalist, Dr. Petermann, which he had elaborated from data recently received from the travelers, Carlo Piaggia and Ambroise and Jules Poncet, who had pushed their researches across a portion of central Africa, hitherto unexplored, extending to twenty three degrees and twenty-four degrees east longitude, and to a little more than one degree north of the equator.

He would only add that he hoped the session now commenced might be one of as great interest as many of those by which it had been preceded. (Cheers.)

Sir R. Murchison again rose, and stated that he had that evening received, through the foreign office, letters from Dr. Livingstone, which, though not of later date than others which had been already published, would, he was sure, be listened to by those present with interest.

The secretary of the society then read one of the letters, dated Casembe, September 14, 1867, in which Dr. Livingstone, writing to Dr. Seward, represented himself as being well, and as standing in more need of stores for the purpose of his journey than anything else.

EXCELLENT SECURITY.

THE FIRST MORTGAGE
THIRTY-YEAR SIX PER CENT.
GOLD BONDS
—OF THE—
CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

These Bonds are the only authorized and accredited obligations of one of the most responsible Corporations of the American continent, and are secured by an absolute first lien upon the valuable grants, franchises, railroad equipment, business, etc., of the best portion of the extending eastwardly from the navigable waters of the Pacific coast to the lines now rapidly building from the Eastern States.

Great National Pacific Railroad Line,

They bear Six per cent. interest per annum, in gold, and both Principal and interest are expressly made "payable in United States Gold Coin."

The semi-annual Coupons are payable July 1 and January 1, in New York city.

The purchaser is charged the accrued interest from the date of the last paid Coupon, at the Currency rate only.

This issue of Bonds constitutes one of the largest and most popular Corporate Loans of the country, and therefore will be constantly dealt in.

The greater portion of the Loan is now in the hands of steady investors; and it is probable that before many months, when the Road is completed and the Loan closed, the Bonds will be eagerly sought for at the highest rates.

They are issued only as the work progresses, and to the same extent only as the United States Subsidy Bonds granted by the government to the Pacific Railroad Companies.

NEARLY FIVE HUNDRED MILES

Of the Road are now built, and the grading is well advanced on two hundred and fifty miles additional.

THE THROUGH LINE ACROSS THE CONTINENT

Will be completed by the middle of next year, when the Overland travel will be very large.

The local business alone, upon the completed portion, is so heavy and so advantageous that the gross earnings average

More than a Quarter of a Million in Gold Per Month,

Of which 35 per cent. only is required for operating expenses.

The net profit upon the Company's business on the completed portion is about double the amount of annual interest liabilities to be assumed thereupon, and will yield

A SURPLUS OF NEARLY A MILLION IN GOLD

After expenses and interest are paid, even if the through connection were not made.

The best lands, the richest mines, together with the largest settlement and nearest markets, lie along this portion of the Pacific Railroad, and the future development of business thereon will be proportionally great.

From these considerations it is submitted that the

CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD BONDS,

Secured by a First Mortgage upon so productive a property, are among the most promising and reliable securities now offered. No better Bonds can be made.

A portion of the remainder of this Loan is now offered to investors at

103 Per Cent. and Accrued Interest,
IN CURRENCY.

The Bonds are of $1,000 each.

☞ The Company reserve the right to advance the price at any time; but all orders actually in transitu at the time of any such advance will be filled at the present price. At this time they pay

More than Eight Per Cent. upon the Investment,

and have, from National and State laws, guarantees peculiar to themselves.

We receive all classes of Government Bonds, at their full market rates, in exchange for the Central Pacific Railroad Bonds, thus enabling the holders to realize from five to ten per cent. profit and keep the principal of their investments equally secure.

Orders and inquiries will receive prompt attention. Information, descriptive pamphlets, etc., giving a full account of the organization, progress, business and prospects of the enterprise, furnished on application. Bonds sent by return Express at our cost.

Subscriptions Received by Banks and Bankers,

Agents for the Loan, throughout the United States, Canada and Europe.

TRUE MERIT vs. HUMBUG.

THE CHARTER OAK COOKING STOVE.

Why More Charter Oaks are Sold.

They have won the confidence of every housekeeper, after years of kitchen service, and not at State Fair trials of forty minutes' duration.

Their REPUTATION is not of MUSHROOM growth, or newly made. Thousands of children born in New Orleans have never eaten any other Bread except that baked in the Oven of a

CHARTER OAK.

The Flues of the Charter Oak are patented, and used in no other stove. It is here where the Charter Oak differs from all other stoves, and for these reasons a Charter Oak Stove will have a better DRAFT, and will DRAW well in any chimney.

THE HOT AIR FLUE
OF THE
CHARTER OAK.
ITS GREAT IMPORTANCE WHEN BAKING.

A thermometer placed in the Oven of a Charter Oak will show the same temperature of heat under the fire box as at any other point of the Oven, thus showing the great importance of FILLEY'S HOT AIR FLUE to equalize the heat in the Oven, so necessary to bake Wholesome Bread.

A CHARTER OAK STOVE

will cost but $2 or $3 more than the ordinary Cooking Stoves of the day. It will last, in a well regulated kitchen, from twelve to fifteen years, and no reflecting housekeeper would think of saving $2 and risk the entire purchase money upon a worthless Cooking Stove, whose only recommendation may be that it is $2 cheaper.

Every CHARTER OAK guaranteed, or the money refunded.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

THE UNFINISHED PRAYER.

"Now I lay"—say it, darling!
"Lay me," lisped the tiny lips
Of my daughter, kneeling, bending
O'er her folded finger-tips.

"Down to sleep"—"To sleep," she murmured,
And the curly head dropped low;
"I pray the Lord"—I gently added,
"You can say it all, I know."

"Pray the Lord"—the words came faintly,
Fainter still—"My soul to keep;"
Then the tired head faintly nodded,
And the child was fast asleep.

But the dewy eyes half opened,
When I clasped her to my breast,
And the dear voice softly whispered,
"Mamma, God knows all the rest."

O the trusting, sweet confiding
Of the child heart! Would that I
Thus might trust my Heavenly Father,
He who hears my feeblest cry.

Sarah and the Piece of Calico.

'I shall never forget,' said a lady one day to me, 'my first, and I think I may justly say, my last theft.' I entreated her to tell me the circumstances, which she did; and I will try to tell them to you as nearly in her own language as my memory will allow.

When I was between seven and eight years old I went to a day school in the neighborhood; and nearly every morning, on my way there, I used to step in at Mrs. Bennett's, to see her little girl, Lizzie, a darling child, about three years old.

One morning I found Mrs. Bennett making a dress for Lizzie, of the most beautiful calico. I thought it the prettiest I had ever seen. I had read about fairies, princes and genii, and I thought it must have taken many of those fabulous beings to have composed and created such a lovely fabric. I wished I had a piece of it to put in a patchwork quilt which I was making; but did not like to ask for any.

Oh, how pretty it was! The longing grew intense. Mrs. Bennett's back was turned. I picked up a three-cornered piece from the floor, and hid it in my bosom.

In two or three minutes I was on my way to school, every now and then looking at my calico, and thinking how cleverly I had managed to get it. But all at once it struck me that I had stolen it! and I began to feel very badly. At school I could not attend to my lessons; there seemed to be great lumps in my throat, and the three-cornered piece of calico, in my bosom, felt as if it were piercing me with every point.

My teacher asked me if I felt sick. I was going to reply 'Yes,' but fortunately I thought in time: 'No, I will not tell a lie, besides stealing.' So I answered that I felt badly.

She very kindly told me to go out in the play-ground for a little while. Oh, how I wished she had not been so kind. I said to myself: 'If she only knew what a wicked girl I was, would she speak to me again?'

I went out, and determined to get rid of the calico; but where to put it! Everybody would be sure to see it, and know I stole it. I spied a hole in a post, and thought that would do for a hiding place. I squeezed it in, and fancied that I felt happier, but the bright and beautiful colors haunted me yet. The children would see it. I must find some more secure place. I got it again, and tried to chew and swallow it. But it would not do. Oh, how wretched I was beginning to feel!

On my way from school I had to cross a bridge over a running stream of water, and there I thought I could get rid of it. I threw it over, and watched it slowly floating along. Now it whirled in a little eddy; and now came swimming back again.

Would it never float out of sight? and if it did, where would it go? Wouldn't it be sure to float right in front of some one who would know that it was Mrs. Bennett's calico, and that I had stolen it?

While I leaned over the bridge, and watched it with all the agony of childish remorse, it caught against the root of a bush which grew upon the bank. Yes, there it stuck, where every one would see it. I was sure they couldn't and wouldn't see anything else. I heard wagon-wheels coming—coming toward the bridge.

I felt certain that Mrs. Bennett was in that wagon, and all my uncles, and aunts, and playmates, and every one that knew me. They would all see the calico, and know I had been stealing. I climbed over the bridge at the risk of breaking my neck, crept down the bank, and hid until the wagon had passed.

When all was quiet I came out of my hiding place and tried to reach the calico; but my arm was too short. I took off my shoes and stockings. Oh, if any one should see me now! With a desperate effort I reached the calico. But what should I do with it now I had got it? While putting on my shoes and stockings I determined what to do. I ran along toward home. I reached Mrs. Bennett's. She was sitting near the open window. I opened the gate, went up to the window, threw in the piece of calico, and was running away when she called after me.

'Sarah, my dear child, what ails you?' I hardly dared to turn back; but she called again. I went in slowly.

'Why, Sarah, what is the matter with you? You look quite pale. What did you throw the piece of calico in the window for?'

'I stole it!' said I, desperately, expecting that she would tell me never to come into her house any more; that she couldn't have such a wicked girl play with her dear little Lizzie. She put down her work, laid hold of my hand, drew me toward her, put her arm around me, and said, pitying: 'My poor child!'

I had not shed a tear all the day; but my head felt as if it would split, and my throat ached. These three words opened the flood gates of my poor little heart. I leaned my head on her bosom, and burst into tears. 'Sarah, dear,' she said, as she held me close to her, 'tell me all about it.'

I did tell her, and my heart grew lighter and lighter. When I had finished she said: 'I am sure I need not say a word to add to your sorrow; you have suffered enough to-day, and I don't think you will ever be tempted to be dishonest again. Take some of these pieces of calico and put them in your patchwork, and whenever you see them remember this day.'

My own children now sleep under the bed quilt which I was then making. And the brilliant pieces of calico given me that day by Mrs. Bennett, and which I placed conspicuously in it, are to them and me silent but unfailing monitors.

Quick as the apple of mine eye,
O God, my conscience make!
Awake my soul when sin is nigh,
And keep it still awake.

O may the least omission pain
My well-instructed soul;
And drive me to the blood again,
Which makes the wounded whole!

FARM AND GARDEN.

PLANT FOOD.

The intrinsic value of all articles of food is measured by the proportion of nitrogen contained in them. If we take wheat as the standard of comparison, and call the proportion of nitrogen in it one hundred, corn will be forty, potatoes thirty, beans two hundred and fifty, beef three hundred, cheese three hundred and fifty, etc. The actual value of these, as articles of food, will maintain about these proportions; and with a proper allowance for the variations produced by the operation of the law of supply and demand, these figures will very nearly represent the commercial value of these articles for a series of years. But while nitrogen is the most valuable element of a crop, it is at the same time the most difficult to obtain. This may sound strange to persons who remember that plants grow in an atmosphere four fifths of which is nitrogen. But this is simple, uncombined nitrogen, and plants cannot use an atom of matter until after it has been subjected to the action of the chemical force.

Food for vegetables must be prepared by the process of chemical combination before it is fit for use. More than half the labor of cultivation in producing farm crops is devoted to furnishing the ammonia necessary for their vigorous growth; for it is from this compound that plants derive nitrogen. Porous substances absorb ammonia and retain it, unless the temperature be considerably elevated. To make the soil a good absorbent, the farmer labors to pulverize the earth and make it as fine and porous as possible, and that the ammonia, once absorbed, may not be driven off by the heat of the summer sun, he extends his pulverizing process as deeply as possible.

Animal and vegetable matter containing nitrogen, when decaying, give off the nitrogen in the form of ammonia. From this source the air is constantly supplied with ammonia—to breathing animals an impurity, but to plants an indispensable article of food. This ammonia, floating in the atmosphere, is common property and belongs to the man who catches the largest quantity of it, by making his soil the best absorbent.

Many of the ingredients of soils are valuable only for their absorbent properties. For example, clay does not, in any form, enter into the composition of vegetables, and yet no soil can be highly productive without at least twenty per cent. of clay. It acts, not as food for plants, but as an instrument for collecting and holding moisture and the fertilizing gases. The finer its state of division the more perfectly it answers this end. Carbon is even a better absorbent of gases than clay. Fresh burnt charcoal, which is nearly pure carbon, will absorb and retain, at low temperatures, as much as ninety volumes of gaseous ammonia. By this expression I mean to say that one cubic foot of carbon will take up and hold ninety cubic feet of ammonia in the form of gas. It also absorbs carbonic acid in the proportion of thirty-five volumes to one, and of other gases in various proportions. Now the vegetable mold, which every good farmer regards as the index of a rich soil, consists chiefly of carbon, and its great value is in its power to absorb and hold ammonia and carbonic acid as a supply of food for growing plants.

The idea commonly entertained by farmers that the black vegetable mold, which is the distinguishing characteristic of all rich soils, is itself the food of plants, is evidently a mistaken one. The food of plants must be presented to them in either a liquid or gaseous form. But carbon, whether in the form of charcoal or of vegetable mold, is not capable of being dissolved in water, or in any other way liquified, and therefore cannot be used by growing plants. Exposed to the air and sunshine, it is slowly oxydized, and thus converted into carbonic acid, it becomes a source of supply for the demands of the growing crops. The importance of vegetable mold as a source of carbonic acid is not lightly to be estimated, yet this is certainly not its chief use. To absorb ammonia from the air, and to retain it, subject to the use of plants, is its true office. A soil consisting of clay and vegetable mold has the mechanical composition, therefore, of the highest absorbent power.

But this is not all that is necessary—a state of fine mechanical division is also an essential quality of a good absorbent, and a compound of clay and vegetable mold is apt to be compacted into a solid mass which the air cannot penetrate, or baked, by the sun, in clods as hard as adobes. From forty to sixty per cent. of sand will most effectually remedy this defect, and render the soil easily pulverized and maintained in a state of fine division. Such a soil will always have on hand an ample supply of food for the use of plants, at least so far as the organic elements are concerned, and if the inorganic elements—the alkalis and phosphates—are furnished in proper quantities, we have all the conditions of fertility pertaining to a perfect soil.

But a soil may absorb plant food most perfectly and yet hold the gases but feebly. In the last number of these papers I spoke of the effect of plaster of Paris as a means of holding ammonia by forming of it an involatile salt. This secures it more effectually than any other method, and but for the high price of plaster, it would soon come into general use. There is an article which may be used as a substitute for plaster, which is abundant in supply, and will cost but little to procure it. Under the common yellow clay, which, everywhere in central and northern Indiana, forms the subsoil, there lies a bed of clay of a dark lead color, very hard and compact. This "blue clay," as it is commonly called, lying at depths varying from ten to twenty five feet from the surface, is often exposed in the banks and beds of our streams. It owes its peculiar color to a combination of sulphur and iron. Now if this material be thrown up in heaps, so as to expose it to the air, it crumbles down into an ash-colored mass. On examining this earth, now, it will be found that the sulphur has combined with the oxygen of the air, and thus been converted into sulphuric acid, (oil of vitriol,) which has united with the lime and iron of the clay, forming sulphates of these bases. This clay, thus prepared, will act as a fertilizer on the same principle that plaster acts. Of course it will require much more per acre than would be required of plaster, as but a small per cent. of it is the sulphates of lime and iron, the mass being clay.

A soil not shaded by any vegetation, or protected by any covering from the direct rays of summer sun, loses its ammonia very rapidly.—Naked fallows exhaust a soil more than a summer crop. Much of the fertilizing effect of clover is to be accounted for on this principle; for no crop so completely covers the ground and secures the absorbed ammonia from the exhausting effect of sunshine, as does clover. Every observing farmer has noticed how rapidly an old fence row or a dense brier thicket acquires fertility.—Even covering the ground with boards for one season will greatly increase its productiveness the next year. Mulching trees and plants promote their growth, not merely by keeping a constant and uniform supply of moisture, but much more by retaining the absorbed ammonia. Dr. R. T. Brown, in Northwestern Farmer.

GETTING READY FOR HEAVEN.—When Ben's master died, they told him he had gone to heaven. Ben shook his head, 'I 'fraid massa no gone there.' 'But why, Ben?' 'Cos when massa go North, or go a journey to the springs, he talk about it a long time, and get ready. I never hear him talk about going to heaven; never see him get ready to go there.'

IMPORTANCE OF SPIRITUAL THINGS.—We are sometimes told of the mighty doings which go on within the walls of an exchange, where the bargains that are made from week to week, the commercial transactions which are there settled, bear on the state and fortune of whole classes of society; or within the walls of a university, where the lessons daily given are deposited in the minds of assembled youth, who, in the coming age, are to fill the highest departments of public usefulness; or within the walls of a court house, where sentences are passed by which character, and property, and life, the dearest of all earthly interests, are disposed of; or within the walls of a Parliament, on whose votes and decisions hangs the fate of nations, and these great events which figure on the arena of this world's large and visible history. But to a man of larger vision, who has an eye and a comprehension for things still larger than these, all that we have now spoken of is eclipsed and cast into the shade by the might and the magnificence of those doings which take place within the walls of a church, and which concern a far sublimer history than that of nations—even the history of souls subsisting in immortal vigor after all the empires of earth shall have fallen; and on the high scale and reckoning of eternity, the annals of our entire species, from the creation of Adam to the day of judgment, shall appear like a tale that is told, or but a brief evolution in the progress of an administration that never ends. They are words of eternal life which are spoken here; and on your reception of these words it depends whether that life is to be laid hold of, or that life of blessedness and glory is to be forever forfeited. They are the seeds of an unfading vegetation which are falling abroad and being scattered here; and it will depend on the soil of your own hearts whether they shall germinate into the briers and thorns whose end is to be burnt, or into trees of righteousness, to be afterward transplanted into the paradise of God.—Chalmers.

HOOKER.—This capacious soul was lodged in one of the feeblest of bodies. Physiologists are never weary of telling us that masculine health is necessary to the vigor of the mind; but the vast mental strength of Hooker was independent of his physical constitution. His appearance in the pulpit conveyed no idea of a great man. Small in stature, with a low voice, using no gesture, never moving his person or lifting his eyes from his sermon, he seemed the very impersonation of clerical incapacity and dullness; but soon the thoughtful listener found his mind fascinated by the automaton speaker; a still, devout ecstacy breathed from the pallid lips; the profoundest thought and the most extensive learning found calm expression in the low accents; and, more surprising still, the somewhat rude mother-tongue of English men was heard for the first time from the lips of a master of prose composition, demonstrating its capacity for all the purposes of the most refined and most enlarged philosophic thought. Indeed, the serene might of Hooker's soul is perhaps most obviously perceived in his style—in the easy power with which he wields and bends to his purpose a language not yet trained into a ready vehicle of philosophical expression. It is doubtful if any English writer since his time has shown equal power in the construction of long sentences—those sentences in which the thought, and the modifications of the thought, are all included in one sweeping period, which gathers clause after clause as it rolls melodiously on to its foreseen conclusion, and having the general gravity and grandeur of its modulated movement pervaded by an inexpressibly sweet undertone of individual sentiment. And the strength is free from every fretful and morbid quality which commonly taints the performances of a strong mind lodged in a sickly body. It is as serene, wholesome and comprehensive as it is powerful. Atlantic Monthly for December.

THE CENTRAL HEAT OF THE EARTH.—As to the silver mines in that State, a Nevada paper says: "The increase in the heat of our mines is now beginning to give many of mining companies more trouble, and is proving a great obstacle to mining operations in those levels lying below a depth of one thousand feet, than any veins or 'pocket' deposits of water yet encountered. A number of the leading companies on the Comstock are now engaged in putting in engines, to be used expressly for driving fans for furnishing air to the lower levels, forcing it through large tubes of galvanized iron.—With this great increase of heat in our mines comes a great decrease of water; in fact, in our deepest mine—the Bullion, which has attained the depth of one thousand two hundred feet—not a drop of water is to be seen; it is as dry as a lime kiln and as hot as an oven. In the lower workings of the Chelar Potosi mine, which are a perpendicular depth of one thousand one hundred feet below the surface, the thermometer now stands at one hundred degrees—a frightful heat to be endured by a human being engaged in a kind of labor calling for severe muscular exertion. Here, also, we find the water to have decreased till there is at the present time a very insignificant amount, it being necessary to run the pumps but four hours out of the twenty-four."

This tends to corroborate the theory of some geologists that the interior of the earth is a molten mass.

NEW PATENT PIANOS.
RAVEN & BACON, (established in 1829.)
Warerooms, Nos. 644 and 646 Broadway, NEW YORK.
Manufacturers of Piano Fortes, with the patent Combination Sounding-boards,
Patented August 14th, 1860.
This invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affects the sounding-board, the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a pure liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. The sounding-board released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding-boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection, and its vibratory quality increased.
Our Pianos are first-class in every respect, and purchasers will have not only our own guarantee as to their quality, but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument, obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

GOOD IN WINTER AS IN SUMMER.
A HOUSEHOLD NECESSITY.
DARBY'S PROPHYLACTIC FLUID.
It will purify the most offensive atmosphere.
It will cleanse and cure Erysipelas, all sorts of sores, ulcers, boils, cuts, wounds, etc.
It will prevent gangrene.
It will cure burns, scalds and bruises.
It is a perfect pain-killer.
It will destroy and neutralize all animal and vegetable poisons.
It will, therefore, cure stings or bites of insects.
It will cleanse and purify the breath, and hence is an excellent tooth wash and healthful cosmetic.
It will cure diarrhœa, even the worst chronic case.
It will instantly relieve horses of the colic.
It will, owing to the bleaching properties of chlorine, remove all ink spots, mildew, vegetable stains, etc.
It will cure Catarrh.
It will remove rancidity out of butter and lard.
It will, properly used, be more effectual than any other agent in preventing the spread of contagious diseases, and has frequently done it.
It will, used in bathing, keep the skin healthy, soft and white.
We pledge whatever reputation we may have as honest, truthful gentlemen for the performance of all here claimed for this article, and more too.
It is used everywhere by the medical profession as fast as it is introduced, and we respectfully refer to all prominent men of the profession, from very many of whom we have the highest testimonials of praise for the Fluid.
As a convenient article for constant family use it has no superior.
It has a beautiful color, due to the Permanganic Acid, and when the color is gone the virtues of the Fluid are lost. Hence be careful not to get the cork in the bottle, or any animal or vegetable substance, and always keep the bottle stopped. After the Fluid has acted the laudanum is perfectly inert and harmless.
It is taken internally, as well as applied externally.
In substantiation of our claims for this wonderfully useful article, we ask attention to the following testimony:
NOVEMBER 1, 1868.
We very cheerfully unite our testimony in favor of the great merits of the valuable disinfectant manufactured by Professor Darby, known as Darby's Prophylactic Fluid. From the reputation of Professor Darby as a scientific gentleman, from our own knowledge of this preparation, and from the general esteem in which it is held wherever known, we have no hesitation in recommending it as one of the most valuable household articles with which we are acquainted.

Letter from Hon. Alex. H. Stephens, of Ga.
CRAWFORDSVILLE, Ga, Sept 22, 1868.
Darby's Prophylactic Fluid is an article of little cost, but great value. Its domestic as well as medicinal uses are numerous, while its specialties are most wonderful. I have not been without it for ten years, and no head of family who can afford to have it should ever be without it.
ALEXANDER H STEPHENS.
Letter from Rev Jefferson Hamilton, D D, Mobile, Ala, minister M E Church South:
My family have used Darby's Prophylactic Fluid for several years for various purposes and esteem it very highly. Indeed, I know of no article within the whole range of chemical preparations so generally and highly recommended by acquaintances as this.

From Rev John Mathews, pastor M E Church South, at Montgomery, Ala.
MONTGOMERY, Ala, Oct 20, 1868.
Darby's Prophylactic Fluid is the only medicine kept in my family. We use it for almost everything—burns, bruises, stings, ears, sour stomach, etc, etc. My children, when hurt or bruised, always call at once for Darby's Fluid. We cannot get along well without it.
JOHN MATHEWS.
These are but few of the most recent testimonials received in behalf of the preparation.
It is as useful in winter as in summer, for its disinfecting quality is the least of its really valuable uses.
It is neatly put up in half pint bottles, and sells at Fifty Cents per bottle.
All Druggists keep it.

CENTENARY COLLEGE, Jackson, Louisiana,

was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the special patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war; but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually, in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month.

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution the Southern States.

The past history of the College is the pledge its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the institution, are requested to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

THE HOME MONTHLY, New Orleans, for 1867.

The HOME MONTHLY will contain forty-eight pages of reading matter, printed upon fine paper and in clear type, and will, from time to time, be accompanied by elegant steel-plate engravings. The subscription price will remain $3 per annum, or $1.50 for six months, invariably in advance. In order to build up a still larger circulation, we have concluded to offer the following

Liberal Inducements to Agents.

To any person sending us three yearly subscriptions, with nine dollars, we will send the MONTHLY six months, or allow them, if they prefer, to retain One Dollar and Twenty-five Cents of the amount.

To any person sending us six subscriptions, with eighteen dollars, ($18,) we will send the MONTHLY one year, or allow them to retain Two Dollars and Fifty Cents of the amount.

On amounts for subscription less than nine dollars, agents will be allowed to retain ten per cent.

Ministers, it is hoped, will act as agents, not so much from pecuniary considerations as from a laudable desire to assist in building up a home literature worthy of a place among the families of the South and on the center-tables of a Christian people.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as the means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

At Least Thirty per Cent. as Compared with any other Stove.

and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally known as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to The Good Samaritan, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. That meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, The Good Samaritan to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

For sale only by the undersigned.

In addition to the above, I also have a large and complete assortment of Cooking Stoves, comprising all of the leading Stoves of the day, equal to any offered in any other house in this city.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY, AT Greensboro, Alabama.

The next session of this institution begins the first Wednesday in October, and is divided into two terms.

TUITION.

Academic Department, per term.....$35 00
Preparatory Department, per term..... 30 00
Contingent fee, per term..... 2 50

A fee of $5 is charged those who attend the schools of Chem. and Nat. Phil.

Board, exclusive of washing and lights, $16 to $20 per month. By messing it can be obtained even cheaper than at these rates.

Sons of ministers of the Gospel in the regular work, and those studying for the ministry, are admitted free of tuition.

The whole expense for the scholastic year, including everything except books and clothing, will be $250, payable one-half at the opening of the session and the remainder on the 15th of February. If the student wishes to board in a private family it will be $280. This great reduction in the price of board and tuition will bring the advantages of the University within the reach of those whose limited means have heretofore placed the highest scholastic training beyond their reach, as well as secure the patronage of those who, on the score of economy, are sending their sons out of the State to be educated.

Especial attention is called to the fact that preparatory students are taught exclusively by the Faculty.

The Law School has been organized under the management of Hons. Judge Coleman and A. Bonner.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general movement of the market has been interrupted since our last issue by unfavorable weather, a protracted rain nearly suspending outdoor operations on Monday. There has, nevertheless, been a moderate amount of business in various branches of the wholesale trade—continued activity in molasses and considerable animation in sugar. Our leading staple has been in steady request, and notwithstanding discouraging telegrams from Liverpool, prices have been fully maintained. The movement in Western produce has been limited, but the market has shown some speculative feeling, predicated on the interruption to navigation in the upper river, under which prices of some articles have advanced, while others have been buoyant in consequence of diminished supplies.

The late freeze is supposed to have cut off whatever cotton had not yet opened, and some parties are reducing their estimates, contending that we shall not have over 2,600,000 bales, if the yield be not even less. As the Liverpool circulars generally admit that 2,600,000 bales will not more than supply the demand, the feeling is becoming general that prices will be maintained, if they do not still further advance.

The river has risen one foot since our last report, and is now ten feet six inches below high water mark.

Cotton.—The following are the arrivals since the 11th instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi ..... bales.	17152
Lake	5
Tennessee and Alabama	140
Arkansas	350
Mobile	844
Texas	70
Total	18587

On Saturday operations were restricted by the difference between the views of factors and buyers, the latter claiming concessions which the former would not admit, and the business was accordingly confined to 4,200 bales, while, under the discouraging tenor of the Liverpool telegrams, prices were barely maintained, but without showing a quotable decline. On Monday, notwithstanding dark, rainy and inclement weather, the demand was much more active, and factors were enabled to recover the slight falling off of Saturday, prices closing firm at Friday evening's quotations. The sales summed up 6,800 bales, which may be regarded as a large business, the weather being considered. On Tuesday the market opened with considerable looking around, but to a great extent by purchasers who, on the discouraging tenor of the early Liverpool telegrams, claimed concessions to which factors would not submit. At a later hour, however, the demand became more lively, and although there was some unsteadiness and irregularity in prices, yet on the whole there was no quotable variation. Strict low middling for the New York market commanded 22⅝ to 22¾c. The sales comprised 5,200 bales.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 16,200 bales.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Sugar.—The demand continues good, especially for the better grades, and the supplies sell readily at advancing prices. On Saturday about 460 hogsheads, all the receipts, sold at 7 to 8c. for inferior, 8½ to 9¼c. for common, 10 to 10¾c. for fair and good fair, 11 to 11¾c. for fully fair, 12¼ to 12¾c. for prime, 12¾c. for choice, 10¼ to 10⅝c. for seconds, 12 to 12¼c. for centrifugal, 12½ to 12⅞c. for yellow clarified, and 13¾ to 14¼c. for white. On Tuesday the demand was active, and about 1,300 hogsheads were sold, at prices showing an advance of ¼c. per pound.

Molasses.—An active demand has prevailed since our last review, and the receipts were all sold at full prices. Some 3,200 barrels, all the supplies, were sold on Saturday and Monday, at 45 to 50c. per gallon for common, 52 to 56c. for fair, 57 to 60c. for prime, and 62 to 63c. for choice. On Tuesday the sales embraced all the receipts, about 500 barrels, at prices ruling with an upward tendency for the different grades.

Flour.—Interruption of navigation has caused prices to stiffen.

SYNOPSIS OF CHARTER.

The plan proposed by the Mutual Aid and Benevolent Life Insurance Association is as follows:

1. Each person, upon enrolling himself or herself as a member, shall pay into the Treasury a membership fee, if between the ages of

16 to 30, inclusive, the sum of	$10 00
31 to 40, inclusive, the sum of	15 00
41 to 50, inclusive, the sum of	20 00
51 to 60, inclusive, the sum of	25 00

which payment constitutes him or her a life member.

2. A Life Insurance Policy is issued for a sum equal to one dollar for each enrolled member appearing on the books of the Association, at the decease of said member.

But in no event shall the amount paid on said policy exceed $5,000.

3. On the death of any member an assessment is made upon each policy holder for one dollar and twenty-five cents, payable at the office of the Association, within thirty days after notification thereof, by publication in one daily newspaper published in the city of New Orleans, in English and one in French, for five consecutive days, and if the policy holder resides out of New Orleans he shall be notified in writing.

4. Should the number of members exceed five thousand, the assessment of $1 25 will be reduced in proportion to the number of members exceeding five thousand.

5. Should any member fail to pay the assessment in the time specified, he forfeits all previous payments or credits.

6. All accumulations from whatever source, such as forfeitures, interest, etc., shall be credited upon the books of the Association to the members pro rata, to be withdrawn in lieu of assessments. oct17 1y

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, AT Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

ELEVENTH SESSION.—TERMS REDUCED.

The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first-rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar, etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.

SPECIAL CAUTIONS.

Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health.

A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket-money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.

It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

Terms—Board and Tuition per session, $300.

Payments—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.

Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

VOLUME XIV.—NUMBER 43. WHOLE NUMBER..... 711.

NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 26, 1868.

$3 00 A YEAR IN ADVANCE. OFFICE—113 CAMP STREET.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINOTON, Dec. 21.—The President has recalled the nomination of Mr. Johnson to be collector of the third district of Louisiana, and today nominated H. O. Lofland to be collector of the first district, vice General Steedman; C. Bonchard to be collector and James Hart to he assessor for the third district, vice, respectively, Tisdale and Norcross.—New Orleans Times.

LONNON, December 21.—Gladstone, Bright and Lowe bave been re-elected to Parliament. Gladstone announced himself not wholly in favor of the ballot; but if free voting was impossible without such safeguard, he was for the ballot. Bright also spoke before re-election, saying he declined tho secretaryship for India on account of tho severe labor of that position, and also because the popular views on the Indian policy were not sufficiently far advanced. He argued that the recent elections furnish fresh evidence in favor of the ballot, denounced the profligacy of the Tory party, and promised on the part of the cabinet an economical administration of the government.

The Times, in an article on the recent proceedings in the American Congress concerning the national credit, fears the ambiguity of purpose apparent in the resolution against repudiation, and argues if the world was certain the United States would surely pay the interest on the debt in gold, as England and France do, the annual burden of the country might be reduced one-half, for England pays no more interest than the United States, although her debt is twice as large.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.— Lofland, nominated for collector, vice Steedman, was formerly mayor of Memphis He will probably be rejected by the Senate.

MEMPHIS, Dec. 22.—Last night two of the pickpookets infesting the Mobile and Ohio Railroad were caught robbing, and taken by the passengers and citizens to Carroll station and hung to a tree.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—There are a hundred large cotton cases pending before the Court of Claims, some involving $200,000, aggregating several millions. The Treasury Department takes great interest in the matter. Mr. Hale, of New York, has been regularly employed to defend these cases. Facts are carefully sifted, and the loyalty of claimants carefully scrutinized.

The Secretary of the Treasury has issued a circular to collectors, allowing merchandise to be exported to Mexico by way of Indianola, Texas.

Ransloof, the Danish minister of war, is here, it is stated, on business relative to the sale of Saint Thomas.

Judge Underwood is here, preparing for the defense of his judicial conduct before the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Secretary McCulloch has ordered the reinstatement of the recently discharged employees at the New Orleans custom house. This action is taken in consequence of complaints from merchants that the recent decrease of force involves delay and neglect of business.

Supervisor Creecy has suspended E. M. Bonligny, collector of the second Louisiana district, for alleged malfeasance in office.

Senator Sprague has purchased Cumberland Island, on the Georgia coast, near the mouth of St. Mary's river. It contains nine thousand acres.

The Treasury agent at Mobile telegraphed Secretary McCulloch, reporting the discovery of $1,000,000 in gold belonging to the Confederate government, which parties were endeavoring to get out of the country. McCulloch telegraphed to the agent to take an escort and get possession of the property.

It is ascertained, upon good authority, that prior to adjournment for the holidays the Radical Senators agreed among themselves that no nominations should be confirmed until after the 4th of March next.

Hon. Nelson Tift, of Georgia, has addressed a circular letter to all the judicial officers of the State, calling for their opinions as to the present condition of affairs, and as to the policy of the Congressional proposition to reconstruct reconstruction.

PARIS, Dec. 22.—It is reported that the Austrian government has instructed Prince Metternich to act in concert with France on the Eastern question.

The Presse represents the war feeling in Constantinople intense. The Russian flag is said to have been publicly burned.

VALLETTA, Dec. 22.—The eruption of Mount Etna is rapidly subsiding.

LONDON, Decem. 22.—Dispatches from the coast say that many Russians are voluntoering in the Greek service.

MADRID, Decem. 22.—The United States envoy to purchase Cuba is daily expected.

All monarchical candidates of this city have been elected. The republicans carried Sevillo and Barcelona.

It is stated on official authority that up to this time six thousand troops have been sent to reinforce Cuba, and that more will soon follow. The government announces its determination never to abandon a Spanish province.

LISNON, Dec. 22.—A cabinet crisis has occurred. DaSilva resigned and Count Cavalioros has accepted provisionally the ministry of finance, and the Marquis Bandeira that of foreign affairs.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Dec. 21. — The sultan to-day extended the time three weeks for the departure of the Greeks from Constantinople.

The czar of Russia has authorized all Greek vessels carrying refugees to bear the Russian flag.

Hahart Pasha is blockading Syria with seven vessels.

The late Turkish minister at Athens has returned to Constantinople.

PARIS, Dec. 22.—Monstier, late minister of foreign affairs, is seriously ill.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—The Secretary of the Treasury received a dispatch to-day announcing that a band of robbers in Clarksville, Texas, had attacked the office of the Inspectors of Customs, and killed two inspectors, Phelps and Armstrong, and wounded a third.

WASHINOTON, Dec. 23.—The President has prepared a proclamation of general amnesty, to be issued on Christmas day, to illustrate "peace on earth and good will toward men." This proclamation will include all against whom political offenses are charged, and of course releases Davis, Breckinridge, and others.

MEMPHIS, Dec. 23.—The Avalanche's Little Rock special says that Governor Clayton has issued a proclamation restoring Little River county and part of Lafayette, east of Red river, to the civil authorities.

It is believed that such is the ignorance of the Governor and his advisers that he was not aware of the difference between calling out the military to enforce the civil law and declaring martial law.—New Orleans Times.

KANSAS CITY, Dec. 23.—An army guide, just in from the plains, reports that Kansas volunteers joined Sheridan in his march to Fort Cobb. Many soldiers are badly frozen.

LONDON, Dec. 23.—The Morning Telegraph prints a telegram from Berlin, announcing that Prussia has called a conference of the great powers to settle peaceably the Turkish-Grecian question.

One hundred members of Parliament have signed a memorial to Reverdy Johnson, to urge his government to adopt the penny postage between England and the United States. The Times prints the memorial, and comments favorably thereon.

MADRID, Dec. 23.—The country is entirely tranquil.

EARNESTNESS IN RELIGION.—Unless I make religion my great and engrossing concern, I shall be a stranger to all solid peace and satisfying enjoyment. I have at times caught a glimpse of the comfort which it yields the spirit—when I merge my will into God's will—when I resolve to have no will of my own separate from God. I feel quite assured that this entire renunciation of self and entire devotion to God's service would give a simplicity and grandeur to my existence, would throw an unclouded sunshine over all my ways, would raise me above the cares and provocations of this life, would enhance even my sensible gratifications, and superadd those gratifications of a higher order which constitute the main and essential blessedness of heaven. O my God, may it be thus with me! Call me out of nature's darkness into thine own marvellous light.—Give me to aspire after the grace, and hold forth to my acquaintances, and, above all, to my children, the example of all righteousness. Conform me to the gospel economy under which I sit—that as Christ died for sin, I may die to it—that as he rose again, I may rise to newness of life, and feel it my meat and drink to do thy will.—Dr. Chalmers.

A SINGULAR CIROUMSTANCE.

REMARKABLE COINCIDENCE.—SOLUTION OF A MYSTERY AND IDENTIFICATION OF A CORPSE BY SCIENCE.

Among the victims of the recent heart-rending and terrible river calamity on the beautiful Ohio were Mrs. Commodore Thompson, a young married lady of New Orleans, on her way back to the Crescent City, and a companion named Mrs. Griffin, who had resided in the same place. The day following the awful night of the accident the bodies of both these ladies were found, as it was thought, and taken charge of by grief-stricken friends for interment. They were placed in the Episcopal Church at Madison, Indiana, not far from the scene of the wreck, and the ladies of the parish very kindly rendered the remains every proper attention, and prepared them for the grave. Their funeral took place in Christ Church, Rev. James Rouse, D. D., officiating. The graves were prepared and the interesting funeral services had progressed nigh to an end when a message was received from Commodore Thompson, directing that the bodies of his wife and Mrs. Griffin be forwarded to Philadelphia for interment there. At the same moment Mr. Wolf, cousin of Miss Fahnestock, who was also lost in the disaster, appeared in the church and laid claim to the supposed body of Mrs. Thompson as that of his unfortunate relative. The friends of Mrs. Thompson insisted that the charred corpse belonged to her, and in order to prove that they were not mistaken produced evidences to show that their deceased friend owned and wore a plain gold ring on her finger with the name of "Grace" engraved inside, and it was by this ornament that they had succeeded in identifying the body.

Mr. Wolf was surprised at this announcement, as it was just on such a ring of that identical shape, and bearing the very same simple legend, "Grace," that he depended on making good his claims to the corpse as that of Miss Fahnestock. He had positive knowledge of her owning and wearing such a ring in life, and was doubly assured of the fact by telegrams from Pittsburg, asserting that while here, just a few days before her terrible death, the young lady had on her finger such a ring. Here was a dilemma. The friends of Mrs. Thompson were equally positive with those of Miss Fahnestock, that the ring found on the corpse had been worn by her, and beyond doubt fixed identification. After a calm discussion the friends determined to forward the body to Philadelphia, and there endeavor to solve the mystery. The two lost ladies were about the same size and build, and as the clothing had all been burned away, and the features horribly mutilated, the confusion arising from the remarkable coincidence of both having rings on their fingers of exactly the same kind and bearing the same legend, was quite natural, and, of course, sorely distressed the respective friends.

The corpse arrived in Philadelphia, and the question of identification still remained unsettled. As a last resort, several gentlemen of the medical profession were called to bring science to solve the perplexing problem. A post mortem examination revealed the fact that the disfigured body was not that of a married lady, and the friends of Mrs. Thompson willingly acquiesced in the decision, and the corpse was surrendered for burial to the relatives of Miss Fahnestock. The coincidence of the rings was very remarkable, and had both the lost ladies occupied the same relations in life, the identification, perhaps, never could have been made, unless, indeed, the body of Mrs. Thompson be yet dragged from the river in such preservation as to render the features recognizable.

The Madison Courier of the 16th says: A body was brought to the city yesterday for medical examination, supposed to be that of Mrs. Commodore Thompson, of New Orleans. It was consigned to Dr. W. Collins for examination, who has expressed his belief, from other corroborative evidence, that it is her remains. The body was terribly burned and charred, and was left in the hands of Mr. C. Vail, undertaker, to await the arrival of her brother from the wreck.—Pittsburg Gazette, December 15.

RESIST BEGINNINGS.—The trees of the forest held a solemn parliament, wherein they consulted of the innumerable wrongs which the ax had done them; therefore they enacted that no tree should hereafter lend the ax wood for a handle, "on pain of being cut down." The ax travels up and down the forest, begs wood of the cedar, oak, ash, elm, even to the poplar; not one would lend him a chip. At last he desired so much as would serve him to cut down the briers and bushes, alleging that those shrubs did suck away the juice of the ground, hinder the growth, and obscure the glory of the fair and goodly trees. Hereon they were content to afford him so much. When he had gotten his handle he cut down themselves too.

These be the subtile reaches of sin; give it but a little advantage on fair promises to remove the troubles, and it will cut down thy soul also. Therefore resist beginnings; trust it not in the least. Consider a sin, as indeed it is, a crucifying of Christ; wilt thou say, I may crucify Christ a little? I may scourge his flesh, wound his side, pierce his heart a little. What man loves the Lord Jesus who would either say it or do it? Consider it a casting thyself into unquenchable fire; wilt thou say, I may burn my soul and body a little? As suffering we think the least misery too great, so sinning let us think the least iniquity too great.—Thomas Adam.

THE MANUFACTURE OF PINS.

A correspondent of the New York Post thus describes pin making:

"The pin machine is one of the closest approaches that machines have made to the dexterity of the human hand. A small machine about the height and size of a lady's sewing machine, only stronger, stands before you. On the back side a light belt descends from the long shaft at the ceiling that drives all the machines, ranged in rows, on the floor. On the left side of our machine hangs on a peg a small reel of wire, that has been straightened by running through a compound system of small rollers.

"This wire descends and the end of it enters the machine. This is the food consumed by this snappish, voracious little dwarf. He pulls it in and bites it off by inches, incessantly, one hundred and forty bites to a minute. Just as he seizes each bite, a saucy little hammer with a concave face, hits the end of the wire three taps and 'upsets' it to a head, while he grips in it a countersunk hole between his teeth. With an outward thrust of his tongue he then lays the pin sideways in a little groove across the rim of a small wheel that slowly revolves just under his nose. By the external pressure of a stationary hoop these pins roll in their places, as they are carried under two series of small files, three in each. These files grow finer toward the end of the series. They lie at a slight inclination on the point of the pins, and by series of cams, levers and springs, are made to play 'like lightning.' Thus the pins are pointed and dropped in a little shower into a box. Twenty-eight pounds of pins is a day's work for one of these jerking little automatons. Forty machines on this floor make five hundred and sixty pounds daily. These are then polished. Two very intelligent machines reject every crooked pin, even the slightest irregularity of form being detected.

"Another automaton assorts half a dozen lengths in as many different boxes, all at once and unerringly, when a careless operator has mixed the contents of boxes from various machines. Lastly, a perfect genius of a machine hangs the pins by the head in an inclined platform through as many 'slots' as there are pins in a row on the papers. These slots converge into the exact space spanning the length of a row. Under them runs the strip of thin paper. A hand like part of the machine catches one pin from each of the slots as it falls, and by one movement sticks them all through two corrugated ridges in the paper, from which they are to be picked by fingers in boudoirs, and all sorts of human fingers in all sorts of human circumstances. Thus you have its genesis:

"Tall and slender, straight and thin,
Pretty, little, useful pin."

TRUST IN GOD.—Oh, for the blessedness of that man who has been enabled to realize the most entire conviction—and that not as a theory, but as practical truth—that God doeth all things well, and that his work is perfect!

The grinding and low cares of this life have no place with him. He knows that all his affairs are guided by one who cannot err—that he is watched over for good by one, who is never weary. Human friends may weary of him and shake him off, if he becomes troublesome by his wants, but he heeds it little—his God invites, solicits, is gratified by the entireness of his dependence and by the full and undivided burden of his cares.

Strange it is that we are so slow to claim the rights thus given us, and which we ought to regard as inestimable privileges. Yet how few are they known to any of us, who do truly realize the many promises and gracious invitations to do that which can alone make this life tolerable.—Kitto.

HALF-WAY TO CHRIST.—"Half-way to Christ," said a minister, in quoting the remarks of an eminent man; "half-way to Christ is a dreadful place."

Indeed it is. But do you realize the fact when you talk so earnestly on religious topics, and enforce the laws of morality, while your heart is not given to Christ, and you fail to walk in the way of his commandments? There is no neutral ground in Christ's territory. You must either be for or against the establishing of his kingdom; and if your sympathies are not thoroughly enlisted in the right cause, then you belong wholly to the adversary.

Half-way to Christ! Half-way home is to be still excluded from the light, the love and happiness centered therein. If you have been absent some time, parted from those you love best on earth, and are now on the homeward journey, how the heart leaps when some one beside you whispers: "We are on the last half." And the last half is always the longest. Full of imaginary forebodings; apprehending evil that never entered your thoughts before, home becomes each moment dearer, and over the doorpost is inscribed in shining letters, "Peace" and "Safety."

"Almost saved" is—still left to perish! If you are already half-way to Christ, what is to hinder your progress? If you believe with the understanding, why should you not believe with the heart also? How can you wilfully exclude yourself from participating in the delights known only to the true disciples? Why will you halt on the threshold when the door stands invitingly open, and you may enter, if you choose? Are you satisfied with being half-way to Christ? Living at a distance from him, you may realize no present peril, but, dying in that condition, you are lost eternally. Come nearer. The children have no need to stand afar off.—"Half-way to Christ is a dreadful place."—Intelligencer.

GOOD RULE OF CONDUCT.—The rule of conduct followed by Lord Erskine—a man of sterling independence of principle and scrupulous adherence to truth—is worthy of being engraved on every young man's heart. "It was the first command and counsel of my earliest youth," he said, "always to do what my conscience told me to be a duty, and to leave the consequence to God. I shall carry with me the memory, and, I trust, the practice, of this parental lesson to the grave. I have hitherto followed it, and I have no reason to complain that my obedience to it has been a temporal sacrifice. I have found it, on the contrary, the road to prosperity and wealth, and I shall point out the path to my children for their pursuit." And there can be no doubt, after all, that the only safe rule of conduct is to follow implicitly the guidance of an enlightened conscience. Nothing is safer than right doing, and whoever violates his conscience, and parts with his honesty and purity at any price, will find that he has made a wretched bargain, no matter how savory his "mess of pottage" has been, or how large the wages of unrighteousness which he has received.

THE JOURNEY OF LIFE.—Ten thousand human beings set forth together on their journey. After ten years, one-third, at least, have disappeared. At the middle point of common measure of life, but half are still upon the road. Faster and faster, as the ranks grow thinner, they that remain till now, become weary, and lie down and rise no more. At three-score and ten, a band of some four hundred yet struggle on. At ninety, those have been reduced to a handful of thirty trembling patriarchs. Year after year they fall in diminishing numbers. One lingers, perhaps, a lonely marvel, till the century is over. We look again, and the work of death is finished.—Bishop Burgess.

THE pleasure of doing good is the only one that never wears out.

ONE SECRET OF A HAPPY HOME.—We were in company, the other day, with a gentleman, apparently fifty or sixty years of age, who used in substance the following language:

Were I to live my life over again, I should make it a point to do a kindness to a fellow-being whenever I had the opportunity. I regret very much that my habit has been so different, and that I have induced feelings so unlike those which would lead to such a course of life.

It has been too much my way to let others take care of themselves, while I took care of myself. If some little trespass was committed on my rights, or if I suffered some slight inconvenience from the thoughtlessness or selfishness of others, I was greatly annoyed, and sometimes used harsh, reproachful language toward the offender.

I am now satisfied that my own happiness was greatly impaired by this course, and that my conduct and example contributed to the irritation and unhappiness of others.

"It was but the other day," continued the gentleman, "that I was passing along the street, and a coachman was attempting to draw a light carriage into a coach house. He tried once or twice without success, and just as I came up, the carriage occupied the whole sidewalk, and prevented my passing. The fellow looked as though it ought not to be exactly so, and there was something like a faint apology in his smile. It was on my tongue to say, 'In with your wagon, man! and don't let it stand here blocking up the passage.' But an influence prevailed. I went to the rear of the carriage, and said: 'Now, try again, my good fellow!' while, with the end of my umbrella, I gave a little push, and in the carriage went, and out came the pleasant 'Thank you, sir; much obliged.' I would not have taken a twenty dollar banknote for the streak of sunshine that this one little act of kindness threw over the rest of my walk, to say nothing of the lighting up of the coachman's countenance.

"And when I look back upon my intercourse with my fellow men all the way along, I can confidently say, that I never did a kindness to any human being, without being happier for it. So that, if I were governed by mere selfish motives, and wanted to live the happiest life I could, I would just simply obey the Bible precepts, to do good to all men as I had the opportunity."

All this was said with an air of sincerity and deep conviction, which we cannot give to our report of it. And does the experience of the youngest of our readers confirm or contradict the statement? Is there a boy or girl among all of them who can say: "I did a kind act once to my brother or my sister, or playmate, and was afterward sorry for it—I should have been happier if it had been an unkind one?" It is very likely that a kind act has been ill-requited, perhaps misconstructed—but if it was performed with proper feelings, it is as certain to produce happiness as sunshine is to produce warmth.

We counsel our friend, then, to seize every opportunity of contributing to the good of others. Sometimes a smile will do it. Oftener a kind word, a look of sympathy, or an acknowledgment of obligation. Sometimes a little help to a burdened shoulder, or a heavy wheel, will be in place. Sometimes a word or two of good counsel, a seasonable and gentle admonition, and at others, a suggestion of advantage to be gained and a little interest to secure it, will be received with lasting gratitude. And thus every instance of kindness done, whether acknowledged or not, opens up a little well-spring of happiness in the doer's own breast, the flow of which may be made permanent by habit.

PERSONAL INFLUENCE.—Blessed influence of one true, loving human soul on another! Not calculable by algebra, nor deducible by logic, but mysterious, effectual, mighty as the hidden process by which the tiny seed is quickened, and bursts forth into tall stem and broad leaf, and glowing tasseled flower. Ideas are often poor ghosts; our sun-filled eyes cannot discern them; they pass athwart us in thin vapor, and cannot make themselves felt. But sometimes they are made of flesh; they touch us with soft, responsive hands; they look at us with sad, sincere eyes, and speak to us in appealing tones; they are clothed in a living human soul, with all its conflicts, its faith, and its love. Then their presence is a power, then they shake us like a passion, and we are drawn after them with gentle compulsion, as flame is drawn to flame.—Blackwood.

AUTUMNAL.

Can this be sadness? this forebode decay?
Are these the vestments of funereal woe?
Sure, hues that pale like these the dawning glow
The rather deck some dryad's festal day!
Hail, radiant hour! thrice welcome, gladsome ray,
That, kindling through these boughs, with golden flow,
Streams joy and summer to the shades below!

And thou, brown-dappled oak and maple gay,
In rippled waves of many-tinted flame,
Lithe birch gold-hued, thin ash, whose dyes might shame
The trodden vintage reeking on the lees,
And ivied beech with sanguine cincture fair:
As in the long days past, fraternal trees,
With you, whate'er your gladness, let me share!

O'er banks of mossy mold how lightly strewn
All the wan summer lies! The heedless tread
Awakes no sound; and, had not pale leaves fled,
As soft it came, the low wind were not known.
How strange the chary and long-drawn shadows thrown
From lank and shrivelled branches overhead,
While from their wilbered glories, spoiler-shed,
The earthly autumn scene are faintly blown!
Ah! reft and ravaged bowers, the garnish day
Flaunts through the hidings of your dewy glooms!
And thou, in leafy twilights wont to be,
Shy maid, sweet-thoughted Sadness, come away,
And here beneath this hemlock's drooping plumes
With pensive retrospection muse with me."

Why holds o'er my heart this dreamy hour
A sway that spring or summer never knew?
Why seems this ragged gentian, wanly blue,
Of all the circling year the fairest flower?
Whence has each wandering leaf this mystic power
That all my secret being trembles through—
Or sounds the blackbird's note more human-true
Than all the songs of June from greenwood bower?
Deep meanings haunt the groves and sunny glades,
Strange dreamess broods along the hazy slopes:
A vague but tender awe my breast pervades,
That hints of shadowy doubt, yet is not fear;
While musing quiet stirs with drowsy hopes
And nature's loving heart seems doubly near.

THE CHINA MISSION.

TO THE SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

MR. EDITOR: A letter from the Rev. James W. Lambuth, one of our missionaries in China, dated October 12, 1868, says: "We hope to have another school soon at Naziang and Moloki, one of our out stations, under the care of our Brother Young." He is one of the native assistants, and is a very zealous Christian. He is studying for the ministry also. Brother Lambuth proposes to take ten orphan children into that school, that they may be entirely under the control and teaching of the missionaries. To feed and clothe these ten orphans, he says, will cost from $25 to $30 per month. By having these children under their control and teaching they can be brought up in the Christian faith, whereas in the day schools the children are under the influence of their parents, who are heathen. They may continue in the schools for a year or two, and just as the missionary begins to have hope of doing them good, that may be lasting, their parents remove them, and the missionary sees them no more.

Let us, then, help Brother Lambuth in the good work he proposes to do for these little heathen, who are orphans.

I have been thinking that if the Sunday schools would make a Christmas and New Year's gift for the support of this school we could keep all these ten children, and more, at it until they are educated, and learn the truth as it is in Jesus. Will not every Sunday school scholar make some sacrifice this Christmas to help those in that land of superstition? I make a special appeal to the schools in Mississippi and Louisiana. Let the pastors and superintendents of the different schools bring this matter before them and call for their contributions. Send the amounts you get to me at Canton, Mississippi, and I will buy a draft and send it to Brother Lambuth. I shall expect many responses.

H. H. MONTGOMERY.

P. S.—I will send copies of two letters written by two orphan boys Brother Lambuth took in his charge in China twelve or four teen years ago. They are now intelligent Christians.

CHRISTIAN SADNESS.

In its faithful rendering of our life, in its unerring truthfulness, the Bible has not pictured all Christians as very glad and happy in this world. Our Redeemer specially warned the society which companied with him that trials and sorrows lay before it. The life of his followers was to be no path of flowers. Theirs was not to be the victory without the cross. His own life was to be imagined in theirs. In the forcible language of the apostle, they are said to be crucified with him. They are one with him. They share in his death, as they shall be partakers of his resurrection. Unity of his people in his sufferings is the charter of Christ's chosen ones. None can escape from the law of his kingdom. Through suffering, through sadness, through much tribulation, we must reach our home at last. And the church of God wears the marks of this humiliation on her now. Her brow is seamed with care; her form is stained and worn with grief. Her very pitifulness, intensified by the chastening powers of Christian love, has caused the spear to pierce more intimately into her side. So lonely and so painful is her pilgrimage at times that the heavens seem to be brass; and the light being withdrawn, the sense of desolation and weariness finds expression in an exceeding bitter cry. And this is as true of the individual Christian as it is true of the whole church at periods of her history.

But apart from the fact that in his Testament our Lord has told us to expect that it would be so, Christian sadness is in itself a most reasonable thing. It is a law of life that the higher the organism the more complicated its processes, and the more elaborate its functions, the nobler it must be in will, the more sensitive its feeling; starting from the apparently feelingless zoophythes, as we ascend through vital forms we find increased intelligence and sensibility accompanying greater structural nobility. Emotional activity is not equally distributed among the members of the animal creation. The amount of susceptibility to pleasure and to pain depends on the position occupied by the animal in the creative order. The passions in their highest development, in their noblest exercise, are found in the latest and crowning works of Almighty wisdom. It is a common truth that fishes have less feeling than reptiles, reptiles than birds, and birds than the class of mamalia; and if we examine into the members of these several classes, and especially into those of the last named, we become aware that there are infinite varieties and shades of difference in the power for passion with which they are endued.—Some men are of a coarse texture: To others, to whom have been given more penetrative views, life is sad.

Again, men are either practical or reflective, and the amount of feeling developed by these respective classes is unequally distributed. To the latter class, as a rule, Christians may be said to belong. We do not mean to say that Christians are not practical too, but rather that they are not practical without a strong infusion of a reflective character, which we do not find to be possessed by the man who is practical only after a worldly and selfish sort. It is this reflective side to the Christian character which contributes to the strain of sadness which enters so deeply into Christian life. What we mean may be thus illustrated: Imagine a battle field, such as Sadowa. It is the evening of the fight, and the night is deepening down in darkness over the hills torn with shot and defiled with blood. There is seen every form of human grief and pain. There are the dead and the wounded heaped together, and the air is heavy with the stillness that follows a great slaughter. Imagine one to enter that field in search of some lost friend: and tread from pile to pile looking for the old familiar form. His grief is strong, violent, concentrated in its object—it fails in breadth and lastingness. There comes another on the scene, seeking for no friend, but a lover of his country; and as he views the scene of carnage, how his heart is filled with a purer passion, a less selfish sorrow. In thought he travels over desolated hearths and homes—he ponders on the vacant places and the absent forms that a few short hours before were full of radiant, ruddy life. But there comes another still. His is no patriot's grief alone. His feelings are as strong as they are pure—and purity is the measure of strong passion—they are anguished, and sore wounded by the multiplied miseries of the scene. His sorrow is not a father's, or a wife's, or a son's, or a daughter's, nor is it the sorrow that weeps over a national calamity, or a nation's triumph bought with precious blood. His sympathies flow forth in more sweeping circles; within them are comprehended grief and pity for the sin and shame, as well as the suffering and death, born of man's ungoverned will. He has learned to regard the world as God's heritage, and his fellow-men as God's children, made in his image and for his glory. His is an infinite sorrow for an infinite sin, and from his eyes there fall tears of divine compassion, which God alone can wipe away. And in this last visitor we find an illustration of the Christian as he journeys through the world, and a justification of Christian sadness.

The adversaries of the gospel sneer at Christian sadness. It is assumed by them that the sadness of Christians proves the folly of the religion they have embraced. This takes for granted that the truth of a system is to be tested by the amount of mirth which it produces and sustains. We have yet to learn, however, that faith in God, love, joy, peace and holiness, with a reflective sadness, are of less value than pleasure, frivolity, and that gaiety of spirit which is so intimately associated with weak and systematic thoughtlessness. The world mistakes Christian sadness for poverty of interest in life. It is the very reverse. No man has so deep a stake, so strong an interest in life, and so full a sense of its meaning, as the Christian. His awakened tenderness, his quickened compassionateness, his knowledge of the struggle within and around him, as they intensify, so they must in some degree sadden and overcloud a life which is not yet passed in the full sunshine of a Father's presence.

But while the Christian is sad, he is also joyful. He has learned the meaning and truth of that saying, "As sorrowful, yet always rejoicing," and in the heart of grief he clasps a secret joy. The clouds are not always lying on his heart. The veil is rent from time to time, and he is hopeful, and as he passes on his way he is cheered with happy visions of that better land to which he is daily drawing nearer.—People's Magazine.

FADING LEAVES.

Leaves fade preparedly. No leaf falls from the tree—unless wrenched off suddenly and unexpectedly in early growth by external violence—without making due preparation for its departure. Before the slightest discoloration is seen upon it, there is a secret adequate provision made by nature for the inevitable hour of its passing away. Side by side with it, even in its summer beauty and luxuriance, it carries the memorial at once of its death and of a new birth. It bears the young bud that is to usurp its place in its bosom, and nourishes it with its own expiring life. This law of the vegetable kingdom is one that knows no exception. No leaf drops till a new one is prepared to take its place; no flower perishes till its house is made ready and filled with seeds. Provision and preparation for the future is the condition on which vegetable life exists. Go to the forest or the field, and examine every tree or flower in this sad season of decay, you will find to your surprise and delight that "there is as much of life as of death in autumn"—that the elements of future resuscitation and growth are provided for, amid tokens of universal decadence and corruption. Already "another year is hidden along the bough" that hangs its dead discolored leaves in the frosty air; already another summer is secure among the pericarps of the dying flowers that strow the desolate fields. The leaf and flower bud, which appear to burst forth as the offspring of the reviving spring, are in reality the children of a previous season. They are formed; and in these bleak cold days they are wrapped up in swaddling bands to guard them from the frost. Yes! every leaf makes provision for the future, and carries the prophecy of the future in its bosom. Alas, how different is it in human economy! Provision for the future is with man not the law, but the exception of his conduct. The great majority of mankind live for the passing hour—make the passing world their portion, and have no hope or wish for anything beyond. They lead a gay summer life, dance in the breeze and laugh in the sunshine of pleasure, and their only object in existence is to enjoy it, forgetful of the coming blight that is to rob them of their beauty, and of the storms and frosts that are hastening to lay them low in the dust. Well may God appeal against such careless, godless ones, so utterly ignorant of the object and end of their life, to the forms of nature that so perfectly obey the divine laws written upon them—"Hear, O heavens; and give ear, O earth. I have nourished and brought up children, and they have rebelled against me." Nature is sent to teach us by her autumnal parables; and every fading leaf on every tree, with its bud of future growth hid behind it, becomes a solemn text, warning us to "secure, while the leaf is yet green, the germ that shall live when the frost of death has destroyed both fruit and flower." As surely as the leaf fades, so surely shall we fade. We imagine that our fading is not near. We put far away the evil day; and therefore we are not duly impressed by the thought. But fourscore years are soon cut off, and we flee away; and how uncertain is our reaching that lonely verge of life, where the flowry meadows and the golden cornfields slope gradually down into the bare and stony beach that fringes the eternal sea. The coast of death to most is an abrupt precipice; we are cut off in the midst of our days. A thousand unforeseen foes, fatal to life, line our path on either side, and we have to run the gauntlet daily between them. We began to die the moment we began to live. Our very life itself is nothing else but a succession of dying; and every day and every hour, in the changes within and without which we experience, wears away part of it. Should we not imitate, therefore, the example of the leaf in the process of decay? Should we not seek to make daily, life-long preparation for the final, the inevitable consummation of our daily, life-long death? Should we not so count our days that we may apply our hearts to heavenly wisdom?—the wisdom of knowing, and loving, and serving him who alone can redeem our poor perishing life from its vanity, and change it into glory and blessedness of a life hid with Christ in God. Apart from him the industry of a lifetime is but elaborate trifling, "the costly embroidering of a shroud." United to him, our labor is not in vain in the Lord; our works shall endure and follow us. Every leaf on the tree of humanity must fade; but if we are grafted by a living faith in him whose name is the "Branch," his own gracious promise becomes a living truth to us: "I am the resurrection, and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whatsoever liveth, and believeth in me, shall never die."

"On the tree of life eternal,
Man, let all thy hopes be stayed,
Which, alone forever vernal,
Bears a leaf which shall not fade."

UNDER THE SEA.—The greatest depth to which a diver can descend with the present appliances, in safety, is about one hundred and sixty feet, and for this a burden of one hundred weight must be disposed about his person. The average depth at which he can work comfortably is about ninety feet, which was near the depth at which the operations upon the "Royal George" were conducted. In the water from sixty to seventy feet deep, the men can work for two hours at a time, coming up for ten minutes' rest and doing a day's work of six or seven hours.

An English diver, encased in one of Siebe's dresses, went down in the Mediterranean to a depth of one hundred and sixty-five feet, and remained there for twenty-five minutes; and we have heard that Green, the American diver, inspected a wreck in one of the Canadian lakes, at the depth of one hundred and seventy feet; but his experience was enough to convince him that he could not work on it without danger of life.

At this depth the pressure of water on the hands is so great as to force the blood to the head and bring on fainting fits, while the requisite volume of air inside the dress to resist the outside pressure of the water is so great that it would speedily suffocate the diver. Means have been tried to obviate these difficulties, but for the present a limit has been set to the extent to which man may penetrate the secrets of the deep. An ingenious Italian workman has brought to England plans for a sort of scale-armor dress, which would resist the pressure of water; but our submarine engineers think that this would not obviate the difficulties arising from the limits placed to human endurance.—Our Own Fireside.

CHRIST IN THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Fears have been expressed by some that, in the great efforts now making for the improvement of our Sunday schools, the real religious good of the children may be forgotten. The unusual attention which has of late been given to modes of Bible study, to Bible geography, archæology, history, evidences and rules of interpretation, to the grading of Sunday schools, the preparation of lessons, and the training of teachers, has given rise to these fears. Some have thought that they see danger of losing sight of Christ in attending to these accessories to a correct understanding of his word. If this be so, it is time we knew it. Sunday schools should seek to bring children to Christ, not to drive them from him. And if our improved modes of teaching and facilities for teaching, our maps, blackboards, well arranged and well furnished school rooms, graded schools, uniform lessons and Sunday school institutes, are to result only in making our children wiser and worse, they should be abandoned forthwith. It were better to have all of them that is destructible burned to ashes or drowned in the ocean than to have our children brought up Christless. Knowledge they need; but they must have piety with it or it is vain.

If there be ground for these fears, it must be found either in the nature of these improvements or in their use. If it be the inevitable tendency of improved modes of Bible study to drive the heart from Christ, the same tendency must be found in all intelligence and culture, of what kind soever; and we shall be forced to the conclusion that the greater the facilities for knowledge, the greater the danger of impiety; the less knowledge, the more piety—that is, "ignorance is the mother of devotion." We are not quite ready to subscribe to this. If the danger is not found in the nature of these improvements, it must be found, if it exist at all, in their use, or, more correctly speaking, in their abuse. This is a question of fact, which each school must answer for itself. If an instrument be abused for base purposes, the responsibility rests, not on the instrument, but on the one who makes a wrong use of it. Certain we are that all these modern appliances in the Sunday school may be so used as to increase the spiritual good of the children, while they increase their knowledge. If any, in their use, rest satisfied with mere instruction or entertainment, and omit all reference to Christian duty or privilege, on them let the responsibility rest; and a fearful responsibility they will find it.

The question is frequently discussed in gatherings of Sunday school workers, "What is the main object of the Sunday school?" The answer is given by some, "The conversion of the children;" by others, "The instruction of the children in Bible truth." But each of these answers fails for want of completeness. The one is liable to the charge of seeking to convert the children, and there leaving them; the other seems to assume either that conversion is a secondary affair, or else that all the children in the Sunday school are converted, and only need building up. The first answer would be correct in a school of children thoroughly instructed in the Bible, yet unconverted; the other in a school composed of converted children, uninstructed in the Bible. But neither of these schools exist as a reality. But the fact is, that both the conversion of the children and their instruction are legitimate objects of the Sunday school. The main object is their salvation; this includes conversion, and instruction both before and after it. We do not wish to have them converted and there left in ignorance of divine truth, at the risk of losing their souls, after all; nor would we have them simply instructed in the Bible without any reference to their conversion to Christ. The two processes of conversion and instruction should be going on simultaneously in every Sunday school, each working in harmony with the other.

Every agency used in the Sunday school ought to be especially consecrated to the service of Christ. The aim should be, not simply to bring the children to Christ, but to build them up in Christ. All the modern appliances we have referred to, even blackboards and geography, may be efficiently used for this purpose; they are not efficiently used if this purpose is ignored. Christ should be in every lesson. The children are to be taught their relation to the Saviour, their duties toward him, and his love for them. A teacher of ordinary tact can readily find some means of turning any lesson in this direction. Not a Sunday should be allowed to pass without connecting the lesson in some way with religious duties and privileges, and endeavoring to make personal application of the truths taught to the heart of each scholar. The golden hours are too precious to be wasted, and the souls of the dear children too valuable to be trifled with. All over the land there is making a mighty effort to increase the efficiency of Sunday school teachers. With this increased efficiency comes a heavy addition of responsibility. There ought to be every year an increasing proportion of conversions in our Sunday schools and a growing number of intelligent, spiritually-instructed young Christians. A Christless Sunday school can never accomplish such results. With the presence of the Master, there need be no fear, no doubt.—New York Methodist.

THE DUTY OF CHURCH-GOING.—Houses of religious worship have been erected in all countries, and the people in all places consider it a privilege to visit them. It is to be feared that opportunities for church-going are not so highly valued by Christians as they ought to be; yet such benefits may be derived from regular attendance upon the means of grace as can be obtained on no other day.

The example of frequent visitation at the house of God produces good impressions upon others. Many people go to church because others go, and some go because a crowd will be there. It is a silly pretext with which some professing Christians excuse themselves from the church meeting because there will not be many present; but such argument has been urged, and there are those who believe it to be a sound one. Political meetings are interesting not so much on account of what is said as because many people hold similar opinions come together. So the services of the temple are made more attractive by a large concourse of devout worshipers. We ought, then, to attend church to induce others to go.

We will also be profited ourselves. Not only will we become more spiritual, but we will receive instruction which otherwise would not be imparted. It is useless to argue that the general information of the minister does not equal that of his hearers. Grant that this may sometimes be true, the preacher's knowledge on the subject under treatment may be more thorough than that of the people. At least there is no one so ignorant but that something can be learned from his teachings. However limited the learning of any man may be, he knows something to which it is worth while for others to listen, and no gospel sermon is preached without suggesting a new idea, or combination of ideas.

Some, perhaps, imagine that they will receive greater profit by remaining at home on the Sabbath and reading the Bible and devotional books, than by going to church to gain knowledge of divine things. Now we cannot read always, and it is probable that we would at last neglect sacred duty entirely if we were habitually absent from the means of grace. The preaching of the word affords profitable instruction to all, while to many it offers the only opportunity for religious education.—Western Christian Advocate.

DYING WORDS OF WILBERFORCE.—"Come and sit near me; let me look over you," said Wilberforce to a friend, a few minutes before his death. Afterward, putting his arm around that friend, he said: "God bless you, my dear!" He became agitated somewhat, and then ceased speaking. Presently, however, he said: "I must leave you, my friend; we shall walk no further through this world together, but I hope we shall meet in heaven. Let us meet of heaven. Do not weep for me, I am very happy. Think of me, and let the thought make you press forward. I never knew happiness till I found Christ a Saviour. Read the Bible. Let no religious book take its place. Through all my perplexities and distresses, I never read any other book, and I never felt the want of any other. It has been my hourly study, and all my knowledge of the doctrines, and all my experiences and realities of religion have been drawn from the Bible only. I think religious people do not read the Bible enough. Books about religion may be useful enough, but they will not do instead of the simple truth of the Bible."

EVERY BIT OF IT.—One evening at a prayer meeting many newly converted persons, both old and young, arose to tell what God had done for their souls, and their determination to love and serve him. Among the rest, a little girl, about seven years old, jumped up, her face beaming with happiness, and straining her childish voice to speak as long as she could, she said:

"I have given my heart to Jesus, every bit of it."

Was not that a beautiful little speech? I wonder if all the other people who had risen before could say what she did: "I have given my heart to Jesus, every bit of it." And is not this what Jesus wants? "My son, give me thine heart." This is the command of the Bible. Will he be satisfied with having only a part of it? No, indeed; he must have every bit of it.

A POEM.

BY THOMAS BUCHANAN READ.

Come thou, my friend—the cool autumnal eves
About the hearth have drawn their magic rings;
There, while his song of peace the cricket weaves,
The simmering hickory sings.

The winds unkennelled round the casement whine,
The sheltered hound makes answer in his dream,
And in the hayloft, hark! the cock at nine
Crows from the dusty beam.

The leafless branches chafe the roof all night,
And through the house the troubled noises go;
While, like a ghostly presence, thin and white,
The frost foretells the snow.

The muffled owl within the swaying elm
Thrills at the air with sadness as he swings,
Till sorrow seems to spread her shadowy realm
About all outward things.

Come, theo, my friend, and this shall seem no more—
Come when October walks his red domain,
Or when November, from his windy floor,
Winnows the snow and rain.

And when Old Winter, through his fingers numb,
Blows till his breathings on the windows gleam,
And when the mill wheel, spiked with ice, is dumb
Within the neighboring stream.

Then come, for nights like these have power to wake
The calm delight no others may impart,
When round the fire true souls communing make
A summer in the heart.

And I will weave athwart the mystic gloom,
With hand grown weird in strange romance, for thee
Bright webs of fancy from the golden loom
Of charmed poesy.

And let no censure in thy looks be shown
That I, with hands adventurous and bold,
Should grasp the enchanted shuttle which was thrown
Through mightier warps of gold.

Personal Appearance of Jesus.

None of the Evangelists, not even the beloved disciple and bosom friend of Jesus, have given us the least hint of his countenance and stature. In this respect our instincts of natural affection have been wisely overruled. He who is the Saviour of all, the perfect exemplar of humanity, should not be identified with the particular lineaments of one race or nationality. We should cling to the Christ in the spirit and in glory rather than to the Christ in the flesh. Nevertheless there must have been an overawing majesty and irresistible charm even in his personal appearance to the spiritual eye, to account for the readiness with which the disciples, forsaking all things, followed him in reverence and boundless devotion. He had not the physiognomy of a sinner. He reflected from his eye and countenance the serene peace and celestial beauty of a sinless soul in blessed harmony with God. In the absence of authentic representation, Christian art in its irrepressible desire to exhibit in visible form the fairest among the children of men, was left to its own imperfect conception of ideal beauty. The church under persecution in the first three centuries was rather averse to all pictorial representations of Christ, and associated with him in his state of humiliation (but not in his state of exaltation) the idea of uncomeliness; taking too literally the prophetic description of the suffering Messiah in the twenty-second Psalm and the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah. The victorious church after Constantine, starting from the Messianic picture in the forty-fifth Psalm and the song of Solomon, saw the same Lord in heavenly glory, "fairer than the children of men" and "altogether lovely." Yet the difference was not so great as it is sometimes represented. For even the anti-Nicene fathers (especially Clement of Alexandria,) besides expressly distinguishing between the first appearance of Christ in lowliness and humility, and his second appearance in glory and majesty, did not mean to deny to the Saviour even in the days of his flesh a higher order of spiritual beauty, "the glory of the only-begotten of the Father, full of grace and of truth," which shone through the veil of his humanity, and which at times, as on the mount of transfiguration, anticipated his future glory.

The first formal description of the personal appearance of Christ, which, though not authentic and certainly not older than the fourth century, exerted great influence on the pictorial representations, is ascribed to the heathen Publius Lentulus, a supposed contemporary of Pilate and proconsul of Judea, in an apocryphal Latin letter to the Roman Senate, which was first discovered in a MS. copy of the writings of Anselm of Canterbury, and is as follows:

"In this time appeared a man, who lives till now, a man endowed with great powers. Men call him a great prophet; his own disciples term him the Son of God. His name is Jesus Christ. He restores the dead to life, and cures the sick of all manner of diseases. This man is of noble and well-proportioned stature, with a face full of kindness and yet firmness, so that the beholders both love him and fear him. His hair is the color of wine, and golden at the root; straight, and without lustre, but from the level of the ears curling and glossy, and divided down the center after the fashion of the Nazarenes. His forehead is even and smooth, his face without blemish, and enhanced by a tempered bloom. His countenance ingenious and kind. Nose and mouth are in no way faulty. His beard is full, of the same color as his hair, and forked in form; his eyes blue, and extremely brilliant. In reproof and rebuke he is formidable; in exhortation and teaching, gentle and amiable of tongue. None have seen him to laugh; but many, on the contrary, to weep. His person is tall; his hands beautiful and straight. In speaking he is deliberate and grave, and little given to loquacity. In beauty surpassing most men." Another description is found in the works of the Greek theologian, John of Damascus, of the eighth century. It ascribes to Christ a stately person, beautiful eyes, curly hair, "black beard, yellow complexion and long fingers, like his mother."

On the ground of these descriptions and of the Abgar and Veronica legends, arose a vast number of pictures of Christ which are divided into two classes; the Salvator pictures, with the expression of calm serenity and dignity, without the faintest mark of grief, and the Ecce Homo pictures of the suffering Saviour with the crown of thorns. But "no figure of Christ, in color, or bronze, or marble, can reach the ideal of perfect beauty which came forth into actual reality in the Son of God and the Son of Man. The highest creations of art are here but feeble reflections of the original in heaven; yet prove the mighty influence which the living Christ continually exerts even upon the imagination and sentiment of the great painters and sculptors, and which he will exert to the end of the world." (Schaff's History of the Church, vol. iii., p. 571.)—Smith's Bible Dictionary.

THE REPRIEVE.

I had long wished to be the bearer of life to some condemned cell. My wish was granted me. It was on Tuesday night that a poor sentenced criminal was to be hanged. He was within one day of the fatal drop. But on Monday, all unexpectedly, I was summoned to take him his life. This, as I have said, is what I had long wished for. So wonderful a privilege was it to be in a position to give life!

My first thought was, where is the train that can bear me swift enough to the cell? I dreamed not of delay. Delay appeared cruel, until, at the very threshold of the prison, I bethought me thus: How can I tell him? The news will kill him. The man will die if I tell him, so great will be the revulsion. He has died, so to speak. He is dead in the law, and he is already in the bitterness of death. So with life in my hand, I stand before the victim in his cell. His face is wan, his knees feeble. His vacant eyes have no tears, but are red, and look as if, with dry, hot grief, they had burned down into their sockets. Melancholy picture! She who owned him as her husband had just been carried out from the last separation, still, and seemingly a corpse, unconscious of the strange last kiss which a murderer had impressed on her lips. The expectant orphans, after their wretched farewell, were crying over the yet motionless form of their mother.

'My poor man, can you read?'

'Yes,' was the reply.

But fearing to break the royal pardon to him too suddenly, I added:

'Would you like your life?'

'Sir,' he responded, 'do not trifle with me.'

'But life is sweet, is it not?'

'Sir, I would rather you would not speak to me.'

'But would you not like me to procure your life?'

'It is of no use, sir; I'm justly condemned. I'm a dead man.'

'But the queen could give you your life.'

He looked inquiringly at me, but was silent.

'Can you read this?'

And now those hot eyes were directed down upon the paper. As he intently reads, putting his arm around my shoulders, I say:

'There, my poor fellow, there is your life.'

No sooner had I uttered the words than, as I expected, he dropped down at my feet. There he lies, as it were, dead. It was more than he could bear.

What! when a man to whom a reprieve is announced, granting him a few more short years of natural life, falls down as dead, may not a sinner, who finds he is not to be lost, but that on believing he is saved—he has Christ, and heaven, and everlasting life—I say, may not he weep?—yea, cry—cry for joy?

NOT ONE CENT MORE.

A merchant, in a thriving country village, was one day asked to subscribe something for the support of the gospel. 'Not one cent more' was the short and querulous reply.

'Shall I understand, then,' said the solicitor, 'that you are done paying money for ministers?'

'Exactly that you are to understand. The money I have paid for what you call the gospel is so much that I have thrown away, and I am now done!'

'Are you so determined in this matter?'

'Yes, so determined—that's the word.'

'But you pay for insuring your goods.'

'Certainly.'

'What do you insure against?'

'Against fire; nothing else.'

'Upon what do you depend to protect you against thieves and robbers?'

'Upon the laws.'

'Do you think the laws would protect you unless they were enforced?'

'No fool would expect that.'

'Suppose that all the people within six miles of your store were thieves and robbers, do you think in such a case the laws would do you much good?'

'I know they would not. But, then, what is the use of such talk? The people around here are not thieves and robbers, but a wholesome, law-abiding people. I know that if such a thing should happen as that a thief or a robber should meddle with my property, there is virtue enough in this community to enforce the laws and protect me.'

'I believe just as you do in that respect. But what produces the virtue amongst our people?'

'I don't concern myself about that.'

'Can you deny that it is the Sabbath, the Bible, our Sabbath schools, our preaching, our prayer meetings, and whatever is done amongst us to expose sin, and inculcate holiness?'

'Well, what if all that is true?'

'If all that is true, then these moral appliances to the community are making the people a safe people for you to live amongst. And I ask you, as an honest man, whether you would live here a day if all the churches, Bibles, ministers, etc, were taken out of the community, and you had nobody left but the vile elements of society?'

'Well—well—I do not think I should, if I must tell the truth.'

'What, then, does it amount to but this, that the money which other people pay for the support of religion is really so much money paid to insure your property against thieves and robbers?'

'I never saw it so before.'

'And now, I ask, are you the man to wish these people, who support religious meetings, to pay your tax for insurance?'

'Not I. Take this ten dollar bill, and let me know when any farther sum is needed as my part of the insurance which the gospel brings to our village.'—Exchange.

WHAT IT COST HIM.—'What is the value of this estate?' said a gentleman to another, with whom he was riding, as they passed a fine mansion, surrounded by fair and fertile fields.

'I don't know what it is valued at; I know what it cost its late possessor.'

'How much?'

'His soul!'

A solemn pause followed this brief answer, for the inquirer had not sought first the kingdom of God and his righteousness.

The person referred to was the son of a pious laboring man. Early in life he professed faith in Christ, and he soon obtained a subordinate position in a mercantile establishment in the city. He continued to maintain a reputable religious profession till he became a partner in the firm. Labor then increased. He gave less attention to religion, and more and more to his business, and the cares of the world choked the word. Ere he became old he was exceedingly rich in money, but so poor and miserly in soul that none who knew him would have suspected that he had ever borne the sacred name of him who said, 'It is far more blessed to give than to receive.'

At length he purchased the large landed estate referred to, built him a costly mansion, sickened and died. Just before he died he remarked, 'My prosperity has been my ruin.'

O what a price for which to barter away immortal joy and everlasting life! yet how many do it.—'When I have finished this house,' said one man, 'then I will seek the Lord.' 'Years afterward,' said a narrator, 'I passed that way; the house was not finished, but the man was dead!'

'What shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul? Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?' Mark 8: 7, 8.

MAIDEN ASSURANCE.

We hope that no reader will think us so ungallant as to apply the term of "Maiden Assurance" literally. We leave the development of such tendencies to the sensational weeklies of the higher order, that have lately taken it upon themselves to apply the artificial faults of society to woman as a sex. We still have too great a regard for woman, especially for American women, and more especially for those American women who are dear to us, to cast a slur even by inference upon maidenly modesty. By "Maiden Assurance" we simply refer to a new mode of life insuring, which has been successfully put in practice by the Danish people—a people, by the way, from whom much practical good may be learned.

This form of insurance, like all others, was originally organized in companies. The basis of these was property belonging to the old cloisters, afterward secularized. A Danish gentleman, who should wish to secure his daughter against the contingencies of fortune, deposits at her birth, we will suppose, $2,000 in one of these companies. The child receives during her minority four per cent. interest annually; at eighteen she comes into a higher income, regulated according to the property of the company; at twenty five she receives a still higher premium, and rooms and appointments in the buildings of the former cloister, if she desire; and again at thirty-five a still more liberal income, based again on profits.

If she die or marry the deposit reverts to the funds of the association. In certain cases, however, if she marry and becomes a widow, she receives an annual stipend. The probabilities are so great that any given female child will either die or marry, that the company can afford to pay liberal interest (for Europe) on the deposit of the father, and will soon accumulate funds for the survivors who live as single women. A class of persons who are most exposed to hardship in modern society—unmarried women of the cultivated ranks—are thus ingeniously guarded against poverty and loneliness, having a sure income after a certain age, and respectable quarters with others of like position and tastes.

It is a wonder that Yankee speculation, which is as prompt in adaptability as it is quick in invention, should not have before this assimilated the custom of "Maiden Assurance," and advanced it in this country. The form would have to undergo great changes, it is true, before it could attract patronage here. But the example might be imitated with modern improvements. The matter of life insurance is very simple; it is, at present, nothing more nor less than an admirable co-operative association, in which many of the living contribute to the families of the deceased. It is the deposit of a certain sum of money annually, which, in connection with other and like sums, is to be invested to the best advantage, to be repaid in bulk according to certain exigencies.

The Danish method of "Maiden Assurance" is just the reverse of the popular mode of life insurance. A certain sum of money is received in bulk at death for certain other sums that have been paid in periodically, in the one case; in the other, certain sums are paid back periodically in consideration of a certain sum deposited in bulk. In the latter case the great objection would seem to be in the loss of the principal deposited with the company. It would be more like American shrewdness to insure the lives of young women for certain amounts to be paid to the papa or the family, in the event of the young woman's death or marriage. Most business men would hesitate, it is true, before depositing money with the certainty of its being absorbed by a company in the end, even if a higher rate of interest and providing for their daughters were the considerations.

Yet there is no country in the world where some such system would be more acceptable than in this country. The complaints that come from the New England States especially as to the great numbers of females, and the impossibility of finding husbands for them, one would think, would lead to the adoption of a similar plan. It might be modified in such a way that a part of the money should be returned at marriage or death; or that the annuity should be revived in case of the woman's being left a widow. Among all the insurance schemes of the day, it will be strange if this one cannot be so modeled as to make it practical and popular.—Chicago Courier.

EVERY act of sin is more injurious to him who commits it than it can possibly be to any other who suffers by it; it will return into the conscience, and perform a strange work there.

OUR MISTAKES ABOUT EACH OTHER. Not one in ten thousand see those with whom he associates as they really are. If the prayer of Burns were granted, and we could all see ourselves as others see us, our self-esteem would in all probability be much more erroneous than it is now. The truth is that we regard each other through a variety of lenses, no one of which is correct. Passion and prejudice, love and hate, benevolence and envy, spectacle our eyes and utterly prevent us from observing accurately. Many whom we deem the porcelain of human clay are mere dirt, and a still greater number of those we put down in "black books" are no farther off heaven, and perchance a little nearer, than the censors who condemn them. We habitually undervalue or overvalue each other, and in estimating character the shrewdest of us only now and then makes true apprisal of the virtues and defects of even our closest intimates.

It is not just or fair to look at character from a standpoint of one's own selection. A man's profile may be unprepossessing, and yet his full face be agreeable. We once saw a young man, whose timidity was a standing joke with his companions, leap into a river and save a boy from drowning, while his tormentors stood panic-struck on the bank. The merchant who gives curt answers in his counting house may be a tender husband and father, a kind helper of the desolate and oppressed. On the other hand, your good-humored person, who is all smiles and sunshine in public, may carry something as hard as the nether millstone in the place where his heart ought to be.

Such anomalies are common.—There is comfort, however, from misjudgments of their fellow-mortals to lean to the kindly sides. Such mistakes go to their credit in the great account. He who thinks better of his neighbors than they deserve cannot be a bad man, for the standard by which his judgment is guided is the goodness of his own heart. It is only the base who believe all men base—or, in other words, like themselves. Few, however, are all evil. Even Nero did a good turn to somebody, for when Rome was rejoicing over his death, some hand covered his grave with flowers.

Public men are seldom or never fairly judged—at least while living. However corrupt, they are sure to find eulogists. However pure, they cannot escape calumny. History may do them justice; but they rarely get it while living, either from friend or foe.

PRAYER.—The most important things for which you can ask your heavenly Father are not bread, nor clothing, nor health, nor even life in this world. Goodness is more important. Innocence, justice, kindness, truth and honesty—these are the most important things; and not only are they the most important, but God will surely give them to you if you sincerely ask him for them. One reason why so many people are not good is that they do not ask for goodness of God, or if they ask for it with their lips, do not ask for it with the strong feelings of their hearts. Pray to God for goodness, and he will give to you, if you pray heartily and sincerely. When you are about to do wrong, pray to God to keep you from doing wrong. Say in your heart, 'Father, keep me from doing this wrong,' and you will be kept from doing it. When you are going to be violently angry, say in your heart, 'Father, save me from being angry,' and the peace of God will come down into your bosom like a dove, and the bad fire in your eyes will be quenched, and the hot color in your cheeks will cool away. When you feel that there is any danger that a good feeling or a virtuous resolution is going to be taken out of your heart, say to your heavenly Father, 'Father, let not my virtue be taken out of my heart,' and I firmly believe it will not be taken, but will remain. And why? Because God is ready to help his children, and because the thought of God, which you place in your heart by speaking to him, is holy and strong, and will stand in your heart and guard your virtues, which are your heart's best treasures, and will keep them from being stolen away. The thought of God is the best thought, and the strongest thought you can have; and when it really comes into your heart all other thoughts will stay under its protection, and bad thoughts will be driven out.

You are weak, but the thought of God is strong—strong to guard your innocence and virtue, strong to check your anger and pride and selfishness, strong to help your weakness and console your sorrows. Pray to God, your Father, that the thought of God may come into your hearts, and keep and comfort and bless them.

TWO DEER parks in England contain about twenty-one thousand deer.

THE LAST MINISTER.—Every minister who has been a successor can bear witness to the inflictions which must be borne, for some months at least, from the oft-repeated and tedious and unprofitable descriptions of his predecessor. It is a staple of conversation until the subject is worn threadbare. When the weather is "done up," and other topics fail, and conversation drags, then the minister and his wife (if he had one) are brought forward and showed up according to the likes and dislikes of the parish. What he did, and what he omitted to do; what he said, and what he didn't say; how he preached, and how he prayed; how he visited here, and how he didn't visit there; how he attracted, and how he repelled; what time he got up, and what time he went to bed; these, and a hundred other things, are described and discussed and retailed, until the very name palls upon the ear, and the successor wishes that the predecessor had never been born! Now it is kindly and pleasant for the parish to remember its minister, and to speak well of him, if they can, and ill of him as little as they can; but, well or ill, praising or blaming, for or against, let it be done, we pray you, with moderation, and let there be an end of the matter as quickly as possible. To all whom it may concern, then, we say, spare the successor from an over and oft-repeated dose of the predecessor.—Christian Register.

FORETASTE OF HEAVEN.—'It is the earnest of our inheritance, until the redemption of the purchased possession.'

What is this earnest?

It is those graces which Christians possess, and those spiritual comforts with which they are favored in the present earthly life, particularly the latter. Christians now at times have a joy which is a pledge and foretaste of that abundance and fullness of felicity which is their eternal inheritance.

'The men of grace have found Glory begun below,' have a prelibation of it revealed in them, have a present heaven dawning in the soul. Wonderful it is that Christians should partake now, in this mundane sphere, of what they shall be filled with hereafter; but it is nevertheless true that even in this lower world, in the midst of natural and social objects,

'Heaven comes down our souls to greet.'

If we are the believing people of God we understand this. But, oh! how imperfectly! It is our blessed privilege to understand it better, to have not only a joy-inspiring hope of heaven, but in a real foretasting of its substance, its life, love and bliss; to have in our sweet personal daily experience 'the earnest of our celestial inheritance.'

'The more our spirits are enlarged on earth,
The deeper draughts they can receive of heaven.'

THE SABBATH A SAVINGS BANK.—The Sabbath is God's special present to the workingman, and one of its objects is to preserve his life, and preserve efficiently his working tone. In the vital system it acts like a compensation pond—it replenishes the spirits, the elasticity and vigor which the last six days have drained away, and supplies the force which is to supply the six days succeeding; and in the economy of existence it answers the same purpose as the economy of income is answered by a savings bank.—The frugal man, who puts aside a pound to-day, and another pound next month, and who, in a quiet way, is always putting by his stated pound from time to time, when he grows old and frail, gets not only the same pounds back again, but a good many pounds besides. And the conscientious man, who husbands one day of existence every week—who, instead of allowing the Sabbath to be trampled and torn in the hurry and scramble of life, treasures it devotedly up—the Lord of the Sabbath keeps it for him, and in length of days and a hale old age gives it back with usury. The savings bank of human existence is the weekly Sabbath.—Northwestern Review.

THE CONTRAST.—When Joseph Sutcliff was near his last hour he said: 'I have been thinking of the difference between the death of Paul and of Byron. Paul said: 'The time of my departure is at hand, but there is laid up for me a crown.' Byron said:

'My days are in the yellow leaf,
The flower, the fruit of life is gone;
The worm, the canker and the grief
Are mine alone.'

JOHN FLETCHER says: "Gold answers its most valuable end when it is brought to light and made to circulate for charitable and pious purposes; and not when it lies concealed in a miser's strong box, or in the dark bosom of a mine."

IRON, in its various forms, holds the third place in the list of American productions. Clothing, boots and shoes, leather and skins, severally come very near to iron.

CHRISTMAS.

The Son of God—the Son of the Highest—first appeared in this world as a babe lying on the lap of its mother. In the home of the humble the Prince of Love begins his benign reign. Around this holy babe all the families of the earth now gather in all the gladness of an immortal hope. With carols and anthems the earth rolls round on this Christian anniversary. It was in the joy of these songs that the Angels of the Nativity sang in the hearing of the shepherds and the sons of God first shouted: Let earth and heaven rejoice in the high theme forever!

At this season all who are away from home press toward the sacred hearth. O if the simplicity and unfettered glee of childhood could be diffused throughout every house for one happy week! If the Angel of Care could be restrained, nor suffered to visit one couch or throw the shadow of his wing over one spirit, this would be such a holiday as becomes the subjects of the Prince of Peace. And why not? The Saviour has come into the world, the great debt of a revived race has been paid, and the Redeemer offers eternal joy to every child of man.

THE Minutes of the Mississippi Conference are now in the hands of the printer. Those who have not applied and paid for them would do well to apply at once, as the number issued will be divided among the subscribers. R. J. HARP.

THE INTERCESSION OF CHRIST.—Since Christ is an intercessor, I infer that believers should not rest at the cross for comfort; justification they should look for there; but, being justified by his blood, they should ascend up after him to the throne. At the cross you will see him, in his sorrows and humiliation, in his tears and blood; but follow him to where he is now, and then you shall see him in his robes, in his priestly robes, and with his golden girdle round about him. Then you shall see him wearing the breastplate of judgment, and with all your names written upon his heart. Then you shall perceive that the whole family, in heaven and earth, is named by him, and how he prevaileth with God, the Father of Mercies for you. Stand still awhile, and listen; yea, enter with boldness into the holiest, and see your Jesus, as he now appears in the presence of God for you; what work he makes against the devil, and sin, and death, and hell, for you! Heb. x, 9. Ah, it is a brave following of Jesus Christ to the holiest, the vail is rent, you may see with open face, as in a glass, the glory of the Lord. John Bunyan's "Christ a Complete Saviour."

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

By the aid of steam, Tuesday morning found me at the Opelousas ferryboat, in New Orleans, by half-past seven A. M. The morning was a cold, rainy one. The first one who entered the depot that looked like Conference was Bishop Kavanaugh, just from San Augustine, the seat of the East Texas Conference, looking as fresh as when at Vicksburg. Presently here they came, a crowd of strong hearted, sound-limbed Louisiana Southern Methodist preachers. The New Orleans, Opelousas and Great Western Railroad, and the Attakapas Mail Transportation Company had placed in the hands of every one of them a complimentary free ticket to New Iboria and back to the city—not a half-fare ticket, but a full-fare, free passage. The handsomest thing we have known done of the kind—a whole Conference franked to and from the place of its meeting. It gave the railroad ride and the trip upon the beautiful Teche an additional charm. The officers of the road and the "Anna E." were as accommodating and gentlemanly as the companies are liberal. To those who have never visited this Attakapas country we will say, that a friend who has traveled widely throughout the Union gives it as his opinion that "if in this sin-smitten earth there yet remains any fragment of original Paradise, probably this is it—this prairie and woodland, its verdant swells and slopes covered over with flocks and herds, and fruitful in all pleasant things."

A company of preachers on a steamboat, going to Conference, is no place for melancholy. Not to mention the battles which are there fought over, there are usually a few anecdotes distributed, which have been collected during the year and reserved for an appreciative audience. Early in the morning we found ourselves at New Iberia. The town is in the heart of a good sugar region. It is increasing in size and life with the resetting of the cane plant. No one could wish a heartier entertainment than we are now receiving in it—no doubtful symptom of enterprise.

The Odd Fellows' Hall is the place of the Conference. Right over the bishop's head hangs a large broad-ax, doubtless symbolic, and highly suggestive of something to the initiated; but to one ignorant of deeper things, a fearful version of the sword of Damocles. The good bishop presides as among his own sons, with an expression of quiet safety.

The Rev. L. Parker is again elected secretary. Our Conference continues the same persons in its offices—chairmen of committees, etc.—from year to year, that they may become the better posted in the departments they represent. Several lay members were present: J. L. Dunnica and J. J. Lyons from the New Orleans district; J. W. Chevis, J. D. Saint and W. E. Walker from the Opelousas district; Charles B. Stuart and J. W. Franklin from the Shreveport district; and R. Randle from the Ouachita district. After the organization, the reading of communications from the Publishing House, from the missionary secretaries, etc., the Conference adjourned to the church to hear the Conference sermon, which was preached by the Rev. Fisher T. Rawson. Text: Matthew 11: 5.

It was a well-arranged discourse, full of thought, happy in its sentiment and delivery. After the sermon the sacrament of the Lord's supper was administered by the bishop to the Conference and the company of brethren and sisters present.

ON THURSDAY

the Conference was increased by the presence of a few more of its members, who had come down by land through the forests of western Louisiana, and it continued to swell in size until Saturday; but all told, it is as a "flock of kids" compared with older Conferences. The breaking down of our levees, the destruction of sugar houses, and burning of our farm houses, churches and parsonages by the redoubtable Banks, forced some of our preachers to the plow, and others to a transfer. Doubtless by and by these will return, "as doves to their windows."

Two preachers were received into full connection: John Wilkinson and Robert A. Davis. The bishop's talk was to the point. One sentence we note as descriptive of every class of itinerants, "God has seen proper to spice the universe with variety." He alluded to one of those early circuits which he threaded upon a dim path, "where," said he, "if I should miss it I should not have found myself in a week." These grand out door spaces called "circuits" are not wholly extinct; there are yet one or two left in this Conference about the size of England; when the preacher once starts in them he hardly ever gets to the turn.

Reports of trustees of Homer College, and from the managers of Mansfield Female College were read and referred.

ON FRIDAY.

Robert Randal was RECEIVED ON TRIAL, recommended by the Minden quarterly conference; and James M. Franklin, recommended by the Anaeoco quarterly conference, and James M. McKee, by the Keachie quarterly meeting. A letter from J. M. Marshall was read—he is a transfer from the Mobile Conference, whom we most heartily welcome. There is more room here for those who wish a field to develop where there are people calling for preachers, and who are willing to share some present poverty with the prospect of increased usefulness.

The colored people came in review. The papers of William F. Watkins, a colored preacher, were presented to the Conference, and testimony of his fitness for the office of a deacon. The whole was referred to a committee. He was subsequently elected and ordained. During the entire Conference he was present sitting on a back seat; intensely black and wearing silver spectacles, with an open discipline in his hand, he was the cynosure of the assembly. The work among the colored people in the Lake Providence district was represented to be in a better state of forwardness than in any other part of the Conference. It was finally arranged after the old style of placing colored congregations under the immediate care of the preacher in charge, to be supervised by the presiding elder.

ON SATURDAY.

The Bible agent for south Louisiana addressed the Conference—the Rev. J. H. Mims. Of four thousand two hundred families visited, one thousand seven hundred were without a Bible, ninety-nine hundredths of whom were Roman Catholics, and of these seven hundred and eighteen absolutely refused to receive the Scriptures. This is a fact for the Romanists to clear up.—They not only refuse God's word in our version, but they do not distribute it in their own.

Every morning at eleven o'clock, and each evening the pulpit was filled, and the preaching was reported to be the very best. On Saturday night the anniversary meeting of the Conference Missionary Society was held. The reports of the treasurer of the society, and of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Missions, gave about one thousand dollars as the collections of the year. The meeting was instructed and entertained by a very able report read by Dr. J. B. Walker, the chairman of Foreign Missions, and was then addressed in an admirable speech by Bishop Kavanaugh. The collection was about three hundred dollars, which, considering the audience and the times, was more than was expected.

The Sabbath services were introduced by a lovefeast. At eleven o'clock the bishop preached from Col. 1: 28—certainly one of the most eloquent sermons it has ever been our good fortune to hear. It was superior to his sermon at Vicksburg, and probably as good a sermon as he ever preached in his life. Better than all, it was full of the true spirit of preaching—the spirit of love. On Sabbath night the Rev. Dr. Kavanaugh, of the Texas Conference, preached upon the descent of the Holy Spirit on the Day of Pentecost. He is a workman that needeth not to be ashamed. The day was like the entertainment of the prophet by the angel.

THANKS

Resolved, That the Conference, gratefully appreciating the generous conduct of the New Orleans, Opelousas and Great Western Railroad and the Attakapas Mail Transportation Companies, in passing our members over their respective lines without charge, do hereby tender to those companies, and their most obliging and courteous officers, this expression of our gratitude.

Resolved, That we are under special obligations to Messrs. Price, Hine & Tupper, of New Orleans, for favors received at their hands.

Resolved, That our profound gratitude has been awakened by the hospitality of the people of New Iberia and vicinity, and that we hereby tender to them our sincerest thanks for the manner in which they have entertained the members of this body, and that we will ever pray that the richest blessings of heaven may rest upon them.

Resolved, That the Odd Fellows of New Iberia have shown us that kindness and consideration which so eminently characterize their benevolent order in granting to the Conference the use of their hall, and that we hereby tender to them the assurance of our most grateful appreciation.

Resolved, That as a Conference we shall ever gratefully cherish the remembrance of the present visitation of our beloved Bishop Kavanaugh, and that we tender to him our unaffected thanks for the manner in which he has discharged his official and ministerial duties in our midst.

MONTGOMERY CONFERENCE.

FOURTH DAY.

The weather is intensely cold. The morning has been spent in electing candidates to deacon's and elder's orders.

The Rev. Daniel H. Slaton was admitted from the Congregational Methodist Church.

This afternoon the Conference has met, and is now considering the report of the Committee on Education. This Conference has an enterprise worthy of its power and influence in the East Alabama College at Auburn, and the Female College at Tuskegee. A most admirable report on education was read by President Price. This paper will, we hope, be sent forward for publication.

AT NIGHT.

The anniversary meeting of the Missionary Society was opened with reading and prayer by the venerable S. F. Pilley. Excellent speeches were made by Dr. Redford and President Dowdell. The report of the secretary was not a pro forma affair, but an able estimate of the missionary zeal of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. We hope to see it in print. The congregation was suffering the partial paralysis of its pocket nerve. Various quickening expedients were extemporized, but the most striking was a committee of two, one holding a Star candle, who went round the audience, and, looking every man in the face, asked what he would give for the cause of missions? It was as searching as the candle of Diogenes, and well nigh as unsuccessful. This strategy was the more brilliant in its execution from the fact that the house was murky with smoke and dimly lighted. About $250 were sifted, by this process, out of the audience—only the greater part, as usual, was given by the preachers. The treasurer's report gave the sum of $3,000, from all the circuits and stations, for supporting the domestic and foreign work—about twice the sum reported by the treasurer at the Mobile Conference. We know of no sterner evidence of the poverty through which these Gulf States have come the past two years. The war and the failure of crops is the cause, it is said, of the great falling off of our missionary resources. It would take a very good mathematician to distribute accurately, over so large a surface, the responsibility of the non-support of our foreign missionaries. Half a million of church members to support three men at the very center and court of the unbaptized myriads of earth!

SABBATH.

In the morning Bishop McTyeire preached from Acts 2: 46. The audience responded to the sermon with tears. It impressed upon all the duty of family prayer, and the vital power of sound doctrine.

The congregations, both morning and afternoon, in the house where the ordinations took place, were large; and at the Protestant Methodist church Dr. Redford preached to a full audience a sermon of which I have heard many good things spoken by competent judges.

AT NIGHT.

The Rev. W. C. McCarty preached from "I will arise and go to my father"—an excellent sermon upon individual responsibility. It was to have been succeeded by the sacrament of the Lord's supper; but the elements were not there. So I had to bid farewell to my dear brethren of the Montgomery Conference without eating with them the bread and drinking the wine of the Saviour's fellowship. As at the Mobile Conference, I must needs hurry—the meeting of the Louisiana Conference was at hand. It would greatly advance the interests of the Publishing House, the missionary cause, and of the Advocates, if the times of the meeting of Gulf Conferences were thrown further apart, say a full fortnight between each, which would afford the bishops an opportunity to recover from the exhaustion of one session before entering upon another.

The appointments will doubtless be promptly forwarded by the accomplished secretary immediately upon its adjournment.

NOTE.—Colored work is committed to presiding elders of each district. They must organize circuits and districts preparatory to holding an annual Conference during the ensuing year.

A COMPARISON.

Dr. Prime, in the New York Observer, remarks this difference between Christians in this country and in Europe:

Christians abroad are more disposed to converse freely and often on personal religion than Christians are in the United States.

When we meet in the daily walks of life or in the social circle, it is not common to make religious subjects the theme of conversation. On the contrary, by a tacit consent, perhaps under the control of a delicate sense of the sacredness of the subject, and of the right of every one to preserve his own spiritual life for the divine contemplation only, American Christians refrain from sharing with others their religious exercises. Some will insist that this delicacy is the highest refined Christian sensibility, and that only the coarser natures would expose their private religious experience to the ears of another.

My remark is simply this: that without the slightest violation of the most sensitive delicacy, but in harmony with the sweetest graces of the Christian character, the subject of personal religion is more frequently and fully conversed upon by the good people in foreign lands than in our own. They glide into it as naturally as our men do into politics and business, or our women into the prices of dry goods and the fashions of the season.

It is not of set parties, or meetings, or tea drinkings, though these are delightful reunions among Christian people, that I am now speaking. It is of the every-day meeting, or the walk in the street on the way to business, or the chat in the car, or the friendly half-hour call. Foreign Christians are more apt to improve such occasions to refresh one another's souls with spiritual communion. They have a sense of being pilgrims meeting casually for a moment, soon to part, and they love to talk of that which to them is the life and strength and highest joy of their souls. They do converse on religious subjects more freely than we do.

I do not say that they are more religious. But I believe they enjoy themselves in their religion more. They live in it, for it, by it, more than we. They do not thrust it upon others. Indeed there is a consideration for the feelings and opinions of others that we might imitate to our advantage. But they speak out of the abundance of their heart. Their conversation is of heaven, because their heart and treasure are there. Are ours also? And would we not help each other in the divine life if we put our hearts more closely together, and often talk of the progress we are making, of the obstacles in the way and means of overcoming.

I meet many Christian bankers and merchants and heavy business men from America, who are driving over Europe in search of lost health. They pursued the world too steadily, too anxiously, too intensely. They broke down. It would have saved them if they had confined business to business hours. It would have saved them if they had kept the religious life warm, bright, beautiful, by daily intercourse with Christian friends. I believe that thousands of our countrymen would find joy in such companionship day by day, if they knew that their desire would meet a cheerful response from congenial hearts. It would. Try it and see.

The Silence of the Arctic Night.

In his new work, "The Open Polar Sea," Dr. Hayes thus describes the fearful solitude and stillness of the Arctic night:

"I have gone out in the Arctic night, and viewed nature under varied aspects. I have rejoiced with her in her strength and communed with her in repose. I have seen the wild burst of her anger, have watched her sportive play, and have beheld her robed in darkness. I have walked abroad in darkness, when the winds were roaring through the hills and crashing over the plain. I have strolled along the beach when the only sound that broke the stillness was the only dull creaking of ice-tables, as they rose and fell lazily with the tide. I have wandered far out on the frozen sea, and listened to the voice of the icebergs bewailing their imprisonment; along the glacier, where forms and falls the avalanche; upon the hill-top, where the drifting snow, coursing over the rocks, sang its plaintive song; and again I have wandered away to some distant valley where all these sounds were hushed, and the air was still and solemn as the tomb.

"And it is here that the Arctic night is most impressive, where its wonders are unloosed to sport and play with the mind's vain imaginings. The heavens above and the earth beneath reveal only an endless and fathomless quiet. There is nowhere around me any evidence of life or motion. I stand alone in the midst of the mighty hills. The tall cliffs climb upward, and are lost in the gray vaults of the skies. The dark cliffs, standing against their slopes of white, are the steps of a vast amphitheater. The mind finding no rest on their bold summits wanders into space. The moon, weary with her long vigils, sinks to her repose; the Pleiades no longer breathe their sweet influence. Cassiopea, Andromeda and Orion, and all the infinite host of unnumbered constellations fail to muse one spark of joy into this dead atmosphere. They have lost their tenderness, and are cold and pulseless. The eye leaves them and returns to the earth, and the trembling ear awaits something that will break the oppressive silence. But no footfall of living thing reaches it, no wild beast howls through the solitude. There is no cry of birds to enliven the scene; no tree among whose branches the wind can sigh and moan. The pulsations of my own heart alone are heard in the great void; and as the blood courses through the sensitive organization of the ear, I am oppressed as with discordant sounds. Silence has ceased to be negative. It has become endowed with positive attributes. I seem to hear and see and feel it. It stands forth as a frightful spectre, filling the mind with overpowering consciousness of universal death—proclaiming the end of all things and heralding the everlasting future. Its presence is unendurable. I spring from the rock upon which I was seated, I plant my feet heavily upon the snow to banish its presence, and the sound rolls through the night and drives away the phantom. I have seen no expression on the face of nature so filled with terror as the silence of an Arctic night."

What Every Young Man Should do.—1. Every young man should make the most of himself, intellectually, morally, socially and physically.

2 He should depend upon his own efforts to accomplish these results.

3. He should be willing to take advice from those competent to give it, and to follow such advice, unless his own judgment or convictions, properly founded, should otherwise direct.

4. If he is unfortunate enough to have a rich and indulgent father, he must do the best he can under the circumstances, which will be to conduct himself very much as though he had not those obstacles to overcome.

5. He should remember that young men if they live, grow old; and that the habits of youth are oftener than otherwise perpetuated in the mature man. Knowing this fact, he should "govern himself accordingly."

6 He should never be discouraged by small beginnings, but remember that all great results have been wrought out from apparently slight causes.

7. He should never, under any circumstances, be idle. If he cannot find the employment he prefers, let him come as near his desire as possible—he will thus reach the object of his ambition.

8. All young men have "inalienable rights," among which none is greater or more sacred than the privilege to be "somebody."

Mirrors in the House.—How many a parent has found in his child the glass for his own vices! Happy, indeed, if any one be so wise as to see the reflection before it is too late for both himself and child!

A laboring man, who was extremely addicted to swearing, was one day at work, with a yoke of oxen near his house. The oxen not working to suit him, he began to whip them severely, at the same time uttering volleys of blasphemous oaths. The oxen, breaking loose from their harness, ran away; while the man, in a passion, pursued them, and coming up with them at the house, began to whip them again, and to swear as horribly as before. His little boy, who was just old enough to talk, began to prattle his profane oaths after him. No sooner did the father hear this, than his feelings were powerfully wrought upon. He paused for a moment, dropped his whip, and sat down and wept bitterly. A flood of keen recollections at once rushed upon his conscience, which produced such an effect that he found peace where forgiveness can only be had—at the footstool of mercy.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

HEARTH AND HOME,
EDITED BY DONALD G. MITCHELL
AND
HARRIET BEECHER STOWE.
On the 26th of December will be issued the first number of a new Rural and Family Paper with the above title.
It will be published weekly, on sixteen large, handsome pages, printed from new type, on clear, white book paper, abundantly illustrated by the best artists.
It will be largely devoted to AGRICULTURE.
It will not go to the farmer with any airs of superior knowledge, for its conductors are well aware that every man knows many things in his own special calling better than they; but it will aim to aid the farmer in his peculiar difficulties, and to help him where he needs help. To this end a large number of scientific men, and men of practical experience, will tell in its columns, from week to week, what they know about Soils, Tillage, Drainage, Irrigation, Special Crops, Manures, Stock Breeding, Poultry Raising; the Arrangement of Fields and Buildings, all new Implements, Seeds, and Plants of value.
It will carefully report to him all public discussions, at home and abroad, of matters pertaining to his calling, and no pains will be spared to induce the best farmers and planters all over the country to state in its pages the methods by which they reached the best results.—What its writers have to say will smell of the soil and not of the dictionary, and their object will be to protect the farmer from humbugs, help him out of wrong ways into right ways, and to make the least work produce the most profit.
THE FRUIT GROWER
will find in this journal all new fruits of value figured and described, and improved methods of treatment of established sorts, subject to the observations and criticisms of professional and accomplished cultivators. This paper will not be a party in the wars of the pomologists; no outside pressure shall cause it to speak well of an inferior fruit, or badly of a good fruit.
THE FLORIST
will find due space given in this journal to flower culture, whether in summer or winter. The conservatory of the rich and the flower patch of the day laborer will be both subjects of consideration and of such suggestions as experienced flower growers or inventive amateurs can supply. This department of the journal will be under the supervision of a practical gardener and accomplished botanist.
ORNAMENTAL GARDENING,
whether relating to parteries of flowers, or to the laying out of an estate, will be subject to special attention, and every number of the journal will have some one or more illustrations to further and to inform taste in this direction.
RURAL ARCHITECTURE
will be represented by a design each week, and in the course of the year we shall hope to give tasteful examples of every style of Rural Building, from a rustic arbor to a village church.
PLANS OF COUNTRY HOMES
which are noted for their attractiveness will be given from time to time, as also of Cemeteries, Parks, Village Greens, and such directions with respect to details—whether of planting or road-making—as shall make them worthy of study.
TO THE FAMILY CIRCLE.
It will bring all that can interest the household: plain rules for healthy living and domestic management, from the folding of a napkin and the cooking of a good dinner to the education of children. It will make record of all that relates to new industries, progress in science, domestic comfort and fireside art. Here new books and favorite authors will have due notice, with choice items of domestic and foreign news. It will also bring to the Hearth the entertainment of adventures by sea and land, the cheer of good stories and the melody of sweet songs. In these features it will be strong, original and pure.
Mrs. Stowe,
Grace Greenwood,
Mrs. Mary E. Dodge, will contribute to every number, and many of the best writers of the country will constantly enrich this department.
A NEW STORY
BY
MR. J. T. TROWBRIDGE, ENTITLED
"IN THE ICE," written expressly for Hearth and Home, will begin with the first number, to be immediately followed by an original novel from the powerful pen of
MRS. REBECCA HARDINGE DAVIS,
Authoress of "Life in the Iron Mills."
THE BOYS AND GIRLS
will not be forgotten, but will find their own page always lighted with such fun in pictures, and such fun in stories, as shall make them look sharply every week for the coming of Hearth and Home. There will be riddles, and puzzles, and games; and many pleasant women and cheerful men, who love the little people, will have much to say for their entertainment. And all the fun will be so tempered with good teaching that we shall hope to make them wiser and better, while we make them merrier.
TO ALL WHO LIVE IN THE COUNTRY we shall hope to bring entertainment, sound teaching and valuable suggestions.
Finally, we are aware that it is easy, and not unusual, to indulge in large promises in a prospectus. We rely, however, upon the actual merit of our paper to make good all we have said, and to that end we shall confidently ask the attention of every reading person to its ample and beautiful pages.
BEGIN WITH THE BEGINNING.
NOW IS THE TIME TO SUBSCRIBE.
TERMS FOR 1869.
Single copies, $1, invariably in advance; three copies, $10; five copies, $15. Any one sending us $45 for a club of fifteen copies (all at one time) will receive a copy free.
Drafts or money orders preferred, to prevent chances of loss by mail. Postage on Hearth and Home, to all parts of the country, is only twenty cents a year, or five cents a quarter, payable at the office where the paper is delivered. A specimen copy of the first number sent free.

TRUE MERIT vs. HUMBUG.
THE CHARTER OAK COOKING STOVE.
Why More Charter Oaks are Sold.
They have won the confidence of every housekeeper, after years of kitchen service, and not at State Fair trials of forty minutes' duration.
Their Reputation is not of Mushroom growth, or newly made. Thousands of children born in New Orleans have never eaten any other Bread except that baked in the Oven of a
CHARTER OAK.
The Flues of the Charter Oak are patented, and need in no other stove. It is here where the Charter Oak differs from all other stoves, and for these reasons a Charter Oak Stove will have a better Draft, and will Draw well in any chimney.
THE HOT AIR FLUE
OF THE
CHARTER OAK.
ITS GREAT IMPORTANCE WHEN BAKING.
A thermometer placed in the Oven of a Charter Oak will show the same temperature of heat under the fire box as at any other point of the Oven, thus showing the great importance of Filley's Hot Air Flue to equalize the heat in the Oven, so necessary to bake Wholesome Bread.
A CHARTER OAK STOVE
will cost but $2 or $3 more than the ordinary Cooking Stoves of the day. It will last, in a well regulated kitchen, from twelve to fifteen years, and no reflecting housekeeper would think of saving $2 and risk the entire purchase money upon a worthless Cooking Stove, whose only recommendation may be that it is $2 cheaper.
Every Charter Oak guaranteed, or the money refunded.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

THE CROSS OF LIGHT.

Last evening I saw an angel
His great white pinions wave,
And he passed through a quiet church yard
And stopped at an infant's grave.

And taking a ray of sunshine
Out of his pinions bright,
He laid it among the violets,
And it formed a cross of light.

This morning I went to the church yard,
All through the soft spring air—
The angel had flown to heaven,
But the sunshine still was there!

HOE OUT YOUR ROW.

The youngest son stood with his fair bride upon the threshold of the old farm house. He was the last of four brave boys who had gone forth from that humble roof to work their way up manfully to a place of honor and usefulness in the world. Perhaps there was a little dimness in the old man's eye, and may be a little tremor in his voice as he spoke the farewell words. But he took from the old side cupboard his parting gift—a bright new hoe—and as he placed it in the hand of the youth, the accompanying admonition sounded cheerily on the ear:

'Hoe out your row.'

It was the fourth time a similar presentation had been made in the old homestead.

'Everybody will find his row to hoe in this world, George—and sometimes it's a mighty tough one; but it's only cowards that shirk it. 'Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might,' and never forget to look up.'

The old man wrung the hand of his son, and stooped down to kiss the cheek of his fair new daughter; while mother busied herself with the dozen 'last things' which every one but a mother forgets. The lingering farewells were all said at last, and the old coach rolled away with the two hopeful, sunny hearts just entering life's bright and beautiful summer.

The old homestead seemed deserted and drear as a last year's nest. The aged pair sat down by their old hearthstone alone, as when they began life together. How these old walls had rung to the sound of childhood's mirth and childhood's step, and in the after years had echoed with the tread of manly feet. Now they must live more in the buried past.

But to George and Ellen life seemed all one bright future, with the rainbow of hope arching all their plans and projects.

Their western home was a humble one, and a plenty of work for willing hands within it. The young farmer's chief capital was his strong arm and stout heart, and the sound working principles he had been taught from childhood. Sometimes he grew discouraged at the prospect of paying for the place he worked—but he was sure to meet with hearty encouragement and words of cheer from Ellen; a glance, too, at the parting gift of his father, as it stood on the mantle in the family room, was as good as a sermon any day. There it stood, ever ready to give encouragement and admiration, as the case might be. Strangers might think it a curious ornament for a chimney piece, but it was soon regarded as one of the household treasures. Dust or rust were never suffered to mar its brightness.

'Ellen, it is no use of trying,' said George one evening, quite despondingly, as he turned away from some figures he had been making on a scrap of paper. 'I can't make out the payment this week, and I may as well give it up.'

Ellen looked up cheerfully from her work and nodded at the mantle

'I have hoed and hoed, but this row is too much for me. The wool will pay the next instalment, and the crops the next; but where this fifty dollars is to come from, that I need in addition to what I can make out, is more than I can see.'

'Sell the cow, George,' advised Ellen. 'You were offered sixty dollars for her, you know.'

'But what can we do for butter, and cream in our coffee, and all that?'

'Do without for a time, dear. A house is a great deal more important to us now than any table luxury. Besides, you shall not suffer. These little self-denials, you know, are almost unavoidable, if we would fairly hoe out our row.'

George, like a sensible man, took his wife's advice, and the satisfaction he felt as he paid down the money and took his receipt, far exceeded that which any table enjoyment could have given him.

Ellen ransacked her memory for economical sances and gravies to take the place of old Debby's golden butter and yellow cream; and she never forgot to stir a well-beaten egg into the coffee, so improving its richness that George scarcely missed his favorite luxury.

Steadily onward he hoed his row till the place was all his own. The old home had put on a new face, out doors and in. There were shrubs and rose bushes in abundance in the once tangled and briar grown door-yard, and a fine young orchard was blossoming on the sunny slope toward the south.

There were files of agricultural papers on the broad shelf in the little library, and a choice selection of miscellaneous books above them. There were little tasteful appointments here and there about the cheerful sitting room, but the bright hoe was never displaced by any gem or crystal. The pretty shell-frame pictures looked down upon it, if they chose, but it could not be looked out of countenance.

George was known and respected by all his neighbors, and a stranger who shared for a night the generous hospitality of his broad hearthstone, went away to speak, years after, of the pleasant hours he spent there; and the kindly attention of the gentle wife, whose wide heart took in every suffering, sorrowing one on earth. The blessing of the Lord was upon the household, and it is that alone 'which maketh rich, and that addeth no sorrow with it.'

Years sped apace, when one ruddy October a circular autograph letter went round the circle of brothers, bidding them all to come to the golden wedding. And the call gathered them in from their distant homes.

There was a racket of merry, youthful voices as the grandchildren romped through the old halls; but grandfather's face was brimful of smiles; and grandma's pet and namesake, gentle and dignified little Grace, took the reins of government into her hands; so all moved on most harmoniously, relieving mother of all care, and leaving them to chat to their heart's content.

Carrie was the daughter-in-law who lived nearest home, so the care of the feast fell upon her. Grandma must not stir from her rocking-chair until all was upon the table Indeed it would be hard for her to accomplish much with so many little runaways under her feet all the time, whose manifold perfections must continually be observed and commented on.

The evening lamp was lighted and a little fire was burning in the open fire-place, as all were seated in the old home room.

William, the eldest born, stepped forth from the little group, and advancing to the gray-haired father, said:

'It is twenty-two years since the first of us went forth from this roof to make his way in the world. As each, in turn, took his departure, you presented him with a bright new hoe, with the injunction, 'Hoe out your roe.' How well we have followed out your directions, and the lessons of industry, perseverance and integrity and self-denial you have always taught, by your words and by your life, it remains for you to judge. As a token that we have not forgotten your teachings, in the name of my brothers and myself, I present this hoe to you,' and with a bow he laid it down upon the little round stand before him.

The old man dropped his head, and the thin hair fell around his temples as he simply said:

'God bless the boys!'

'Mother,' said Ralph, advancing to her side, 'we all know that you would not desire any gifts of jewels and golden ornaments, such as are common on these occasions. But we thought the contents of this little box might add some comfort to your life, which we should delight to bestow, if we were not so widely separated.' He placed in her hands a beautiful casket, containing four of the broadest pieces the mint turned out, with a liberal sprinkling of smaller yellow drops from the little grandchildren.

'Now, father,' said Dominie Ned, as he walked up to the stand, 'I must give you my wedding present,' and he laid before him a beautiful copy of the Testament and Psalms, printed in very large, clear type, so grateful to the failing sight of age. In bright gilt letters, on the side, were stamped these words: 'I love the commandments above gold; yea, above fine gold.'

'Now perhaps we had better sing our evening hymn, and after worship let the little ones tramp off to bed.'

The patriarch knelt among his flock, and the prayer from his full heart for God's blessing upon them was as if he had entered within the veil. There were tears on their cheeks when they rose, and a subdued tone ran even in the 'good nights' of the merry children.

They all drew up about the fire, and told over the tales of other days. William told how he had hoed out a pretty hard row in the new place where he had sought to establish himself as a physician. But after one waiting the first patient came at last, and the second, and so on, until now he was 'old physician' of the place, with two young men in the office with him

Dominie Ned (otherwise Rev. Edward Kent) detailed some of the 'shady side' experiences of his first charge, but they were pleasantly relieved by the many 'sunny side' incidents his wife took care to suggest.

George and Ralph compared farm notes, and altogether the evening passed as only such gatherings, by such a hearthstone, ever can. It is only such training that can produce such results. If you wish your boys and girls to grow up useful, honorable and happy, teach them faithfully to 'hoe out their row.'

WHAT A CHILD CAN DO.—'Pa, I have signed the pledge,' said a little boy to his father, on coming home one evening; 'will you help me keep it?'

'Certainly,' said the father.

'Well, I have brought a copy of the pledge; will you sign it, papa?'

'Nonsense, nonsense, my child! What could I do when my brother officers called'—the father had been in the army—'if I was a teetotaler?'

'But do try, papa.'

'Tut, tut; why, you are quite a little radical.'

'Well, you won't ask me to pass the bottle, papa?'

'You are quite a fanatic, my child; but I promise not to ask you to touch it.'

Some weeks after that, two officers called in to spend the evening.

'What have you to drink?' said they. 'Have you any more of that prime Scotch ale?'

'No,' he said, 'I have not, but I shall get some.'

'Here, Willy, run to the store and tell them to send some bottles up.' The boy stood before his father respectfully, but did not go.

'Come, Willy; why, what's the matter? Come, run along.' He went, but came back presently without any bottles.

'Where's the ale, Willy?'

'I asked them for it at the store, and they put it upon the counter, but I could not touch it. O pa! pa! don't be angry; I told them to send it up, but I could not touch it myself!'

The father was deeply moved, and, turning to his brother officers, he said: 'Gentlemen, you hear that? You can do as you please When the ale comes, you may drink it, but not another drop after that shall be drunk in my house, and not another drop shall pass my lips Willy, have you your temperance pledge?'

'O pa! I have.'

'Bring it, then!'

And the boy was back with it in a moment. The father signed it, and the little fellow clung around his father's neck with delight. The ale came, but no one drank, and the bottles stood on the table untouched

Children, sign the pledge, and ask your parents to help you keep it. Don't touch the bottle, and try to keep others from touching it.—Temperance Banner.

A YOUNG MAN'S HISTORY, IN BRIEF.

I first saw him in a social party; he took but a single glass of wine, and that at the urgent solicitation of a young lady to whom he had been introduced.

I next saw him, when he supposed he was unseen, taking a glass to satisfy the slight desire by his sor did indulgence, and thought there was no danger.

I next saw him, late in the evening, in the street, unable to walk home. I assisted him thither, and we parted.

I next saw him reeling out of a low groggery; a confused stare was on his countenance, and words of blasphemy were on his tongue, and shame was gone.

I saw him once more. He was cold and motionless, and was carried by his friends to his last resting place. In the small procession that followed, every head was cast down. His father's gray hairs were going to the grave with sorrow; his mother wept that she had ever given birth to such a child.

I returned home musing on his future state. I opened the Bible and read: 'Drunkards shall not enter the kingdom of heaven.'

This is a sad story, dear children. When a boy, our poor friend was as happy and bright as any of you. More than once, when students together, did he sneer at my teetotalism; when I urged him to sign the pledge, he laughed at me and scouted at the bare suggestion of danger. Poor Fred! his father had the glass on the table, and there the appetite was formed. Beware of the first glass!—Temperance Banner.

FARM AND GARDEN.

ABOUT PICKLES.

Although "Aunt Hattie" had a great deal to say about pickles last month, it seems from the inquiries we have had that she did not touch all the points, and we will endeavor to answer a number of correspondents in a sort of mixed pickle article, in which each must pick out his or her own answer.

Almost any vegetable used as food will make pickles; if it has no character itself, one can be imparted by the use of spices. In pickling it seems to be necessary that the vegetable should, as a general thing, first be placed in salt and water. Most things put directly into vinegar do not make good pickles. A pound of salt to two quarts of water is the average strength, and in this the article to be pickled may remain a few hours, or over night; then drain and add hot or cold vinegar, plain or spiced, as may be. Articles for pickles that have been put down in salt for keeping need a great deal of soaking, in order to freshen and plump them. The water should be repeatedly changed, until the pickles are fresh enough, and the process is hastened if warm water be used Complaint is made that stores will not buy "home-made" pickles, but send a long distance for those put up in factories. Storekeepers buy what will sell. Most people purchase an article that is attractive in appearance in preference to one that is not so. Pickles put up in whisky vinegar look better than those in cider vinegar, and consequently sell more readily. Good cider vinegar gives the best flavor. Many ask us about the clear vinegar with which the bottled pickles are prepared. This is whisky vinegar; when good, it is perfectly wholesome, and being colorless, pickles made with it look well, but they lack the aroma of those made with cider vinegar. This whisky vinegar is sold under the name of white wine vinegar. Pickles are always best kept in glass jars or in wooden vessels. In boiling the vinegar, use a glazed kettle or a tin one; in the latter case, let it remain as short a time as possible. If the pickles are green, all right, but do not trouble about the color, if they only taste well. They can be made green by the use of copper vessels—but don't do it. A kind of pickle is imported under the name of Picalilly, Chowchow, etc, which consists of cucumbers, cauliflowers, onions, beans, etc., in a thick, rich, yellow pickle. One English concern is celebrated for the manufacture of this, and we have had several inquiries for directions to prepare it. We have tried several recipes without producing an article equal to the imported. We give the last recipe we have received for Picalilly from an English source. "Take a pound each of ginger root, garlic, black pepper and mustard seed, three-fourths of an ounce of tumeric root, some cay nne pepper, and one quart of vinegar. Soak the ginger in salt and water one night, and slice it; peel the garlic, slice it; salt for three days, and drain it dry; bruise the tumeric, black pepper and mustard, put all together into a jar, and pour the boiling vinegar over them. Keep the pickle for a month, and then put into it cucumbers, cauliflowers, or any other vegetable that has been previously salted." We have not tried this.—American Agriculturist.

TOAST.—How to Make It.—Did the reader ever ask for toast at a hotel? If so, he probably was served with a piece of fresh bread, burned before the fire, the charcoal mostly scraped off, and served under the name of toast. Now there is a little science involved in making toast. It should always be made of stale bread; the heat drives off whatever acids may have formed in the loaf; but more than that, the starch of the flour is more or less converted by the heat into a more digestible substance, dextrine. By nicely toasting a slice of bread we save the digestive organs a certain amount of labor; hence toast is usually acceptable to invalids and those of impaired digestion. So much for the philosophy of the thing; now for the practice. Make the toast from a stale home-made loaf. Bakers' bread will make an imitation of toast, but not the thing itself. Slice moderately thin, and place on the toasting fork, or in some of the wire toasters, and hold it near the fire until it is well warmed through. Then—here comes the rub—bring it near the fire, where it will quickly become of a light brown, or rather of a deep golden yellow; turn and treat the other side the same, and serve. If buttered toast is desired, apply butter in moderate quantity while hot. Toast should not be piled upon a plate, as in that case the crispness is lost. If there is no toast-rack, lay the slices lapping over one another, shingle fashion, so that the moisture of the lower slices may escape, and not be absorbed by the others.—American Agriculturist.

NEW PATENT PIANOS.
RAVEN & BACON, (established in 1829.)
Warerooms, Nos. 644 and 646 Broadway, NEW YORK.
Manufacturers of Piano Fortes, with the patent Combination Sounding-boards,
Patented August 14th, 1860.
This invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affects the sounding board, the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a pure liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. The sounding-board released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding-boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection, and its vibratory quality increased.
Our Pianos are first-class in every respect, and purchasers will have not only our own guarantee as to their quality, but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument, obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

GOOD IN WINTER AS IN SUMMER.
A HOUSEHOLD NECESSITY.
DARBY'S PROPHYLACTIC FLUID.
It will purify the most offensive atmosphere:
It will cleanse and cure Erysipelas, all sorts of sores, ulcers, boils, cuts, wounds, etc.
It will prevent gangrene.
It will cure burns, scalds and bruises.
It is a perfect pain-killer.
It will destroy and neutralize all animal and vegetable poisons.
It will, therefore, cure stings or bites of insects.
It will cleanse and purify the breath, and hence is an excellent tooth wash and healthful cosmetic.
It will cure diarrhea, even the worst chronic case.
It will instantly relieve horses of the colic or persons of heartburn.
It will, owing to the bleaching properties of chlorine, remove all ink spots, mildew, vegetable stains, etc.
It will cure Catarrh.
It will remove rancidity out of butter and lard.
It will, properly used, be more efficacious than any other agent in preventing the spread of contagious diseases, and has frequently done it.
It will, used in bathing, keep the skin healthy, soft and white.
We pledge whatever reputation we may have as honest, truthful gentlemen for the performance of all here claimed for the article, and more too.
It is used everywhere by the medical profession as fast as it is introduced, and we respectfully refer to all prominent men of the profession, from very many of whom we have the highest testimonials of praise for the Fluid.
As a convenient article for constant family use it has no superior.
It has a beautiful color, due to the Permanganic Acid, and when the color is gone the virtues of the Fluid are lost. Hence be careful not to get the cork in the bottle, or any animal or vegetable substance, and always keep the bottle stopped. After the Fluid has acted the residuum is perfectly inert and harmless.
It is taken internally, as well as applied externally.
In substantiation of our claims for this wonderfully useful article, we ask attention to the following testimony:
NOVEMBER 1, 1868.
We very cheerfully unite our testimony in favor of the great merits of the valuable disinfectant manufactured by Professor Darby, and known as Darby's Prophylactic Fluid. From the reputation of Professor Darby as a scientific gentleman, from our own knowledge of this preparation, and from the general esteem in which it is held wherever known, we have no hesitation in recommending it as one of the most valuable household articles with which we are acquainted.

Letter from Hon. Alex. H. Stephens, of Ga:
CRAWFORDSVILLE, Ga, Sept 29, 1868.
Darby's Prophylactic Fluid is an article of little cost, but great value. Its domestic as well as medicinal uses are numerous, while its specialties are most wonderful. I have not been without it for ten years, and no head of a family who can afford to have it should ever be without it.
ALEXANDER H STEPHENS.

Letter from Rev. Jefferson Hamilton, D D, Mobile, Ala, minister M E Church South:
My family have used Darby's Prophylactic Fluid for several years for various purposes, and esteem it very highly. Indeed, I know of no article within the whole range of chemical preparations so generally and highly recommended by acquaintances as this.

MOBILE, Ala, Sept 23, 1868.

From Rev John Mathews, pastor M E Church South, at Montgomery, Ala.
MONTGOMERY, Ala, Oct 20, 1868:
Darby's Prophylactic Fluid is the only medicine kept in my family. We use it for almost everything—burns, bruises, stings, earache, sour stomach, etc, etc. My children, when hurt or bruised, always call at once for Darby's Fluid. We cannot get along well without it.
JOHN MATHEWS.
These are but few of the most recent testimonials received in behalf of the preparation.
It is as useful in winter as in summer, for its disinfecting quality is the least of its really valuable uses.
It is neatly put up in half pint bottles, and sells at Fifty Cents per bottle.
All Druggists keep it.

BRITISH PERIODICALS.

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW (Con.)
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW (Whig.)
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW (Radical.)
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW (Free Church)
AND
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE (Tory.)

These foreign periodicals are regularly published by us in the same style as heretofore. Those who know them and who have long subscribed to them, need no reminder; those whom the civil war of the last few years has deprived of their once welcome supply of the best periodical literature, will be glad to have them again within their reach; and those who may never yet have met with them, will assuredly be well pleased to receive accredited reports of the progress of European science and literature.

TERMS FOR 1867.

THE HOME MONTHLY, New Orleans, for 1867.

The HOME MONTHLY will contain forty-eight pages of reading matter, printed upon fine paper and in clear type, and will, from time to time, be accompanied by elegant steel-plate engravings. The subscription price will remain $3 per annum, or $1.50 for six months, invariably in advance. In order to build up a still larger circulation, we have concluded to offer the following

Liberal Inducements to Agents.

To any person sending us three yearly subscriptions, with nine dollars, we will send the MONTHLY six months, or allow them, if they prefer, to retain One Dollar and Twenty-five Cents of the amount.

To any person sending us six subscriptions, with eighteen dollars, ($18,) we will send the MONTHLY one year, or allow them to retain Two Dollars and Fifty Cents of the amount.

On amounts for subscription less than nine dollars, agents will be allowed to retain ten per cent.

Ministers, it is hoped, will act as agents, not so much from pecuniary considerations as from a laudable desire to assist in building up a home literature worthy of a place among the families of the South and on the center-tables of a Christian people.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as by means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

At Least Thirty per Cent. as Compared with any other Stove.

and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally known as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. That meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

For sale only by the undersigned.

In addition to the above, I also have a large and complete assortment of COOKING STOVES, comprising all of the leading Stoves of the day, equal to any offered in any other house in this city.

T. K. PRICE, ESQ., Vendor of "Price's Patent Texas Tonic," or Vegetable Medicine:

DEAR SIR—After a fair and deliberate use and experiment of your Vegetable Medicine, known as PRICE'S PATENT TEXAS TONIC, we give it as our decided opinion, that it is the best recipe that we have ever known, for Indigestion, Torpor of the Liver, Constipation of the Bowels and Dyspepsia. We consider your Vegetables Medicine worthy of all commendation, and therefore feel no hesitation in recommending its use to all our friends, as well as the public at large, and that in doing so we are contributing to all the afflicted. Many of us have been suffering from these evils from ten to fifteen years, and have been greatly benefitted.

Wishing you great success in introducing this valuable medicine,

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY, AT Greensboro, Alabama.

The next session of this institution begins the first Wednesday in October, and is divided into two terms.

TUITION.

Academic Department, per term.....$35 00
Preparatory Department, per term..... 30 00
Contingent fee, per term..... 2 50

A fee of $5 is charged those who attend the schools of Chem. and Nat. Phil.

Board, exclusive of washing and lights, $16 to $20 per month. By messing it can be obtained even cheaper than at these rates.

Sons of ministers of the Gospel in the regular work, and those studying for the ministry, are admitted free of tuition.

The whole expense for the scholastic year, including everything except books and clothing, will be $250, payable one-half at the opening of the session and the remainder on the 15th of February. If the student wishes to board in a private family it will be $280. This great reduction in the price of board and tuition will bring the advantages of the University within the reach of those whose limited means have heretofore placed the highest scholastic training beyond their reach, as well as secure the patronage of those who, on the score of economy, are sending their sons out of the State to be educated.

Especial attention is called to the fact that preparatory students are taught exclusively by the Faculty.

The Law School has been organized under the management of Hons. Judge Coleman and A. Benners.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

We have again to notice a fair degree of animation in the general market, every department of the wholesale trade participating in the prevailing activity. Buyers for the country have continued to operate freely, and there has been a good demand from the city trade. Our leading staple has been in animated request at advancing prices, but the market closed rather easier on Tuesday. Sugar and molasses took an unfavorable turn on Saturday, but partially recovered on Monday. The movement in Western produce has been of inconsiderable extent, there being no stock to afford scope for more than a jobbing business. Provisions have ruled higher, in consequence of the general advance at the West and scant supplies.

The weather has been seasonable, with some indications of rain. We have nothing to add to our remarks of last week with regard to the accounts from the country.

The river has risen three inches since our last report, and is now ten feet three inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the 18th instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi, bales	16134
Lake	1
Tennessee	200
Arkansas	2770
Mobile	355
Texas	123
Total	19583

On Saturday, under the stiffening influence of a falling off in the receipts at all the ports, a moderate supply, active competition among buyers, an improvement in foreign exchange, and more encouraging accounts from Liverpool, factors successfully raised their pretensions, the sales summing up 8,200 bales, at an advance of ⅛ to ¼c., closing at outside figures. On Monday buyers came forward with unabated spirit, and although they were met by still higher claims from factors, yet 7,350 bales changed hands, at an additional improvement in the higher qualities, low middling closing at 23c. and middling at 23½c., while good ordinary showed little or no variation. On Tuesday the market opened with a fair inquiry, at previous rates, and a moderate business was done at prices showing no decline; but after the receipt of the discouraging 1.20 P. M. telegrams from Liverpool buyers showed much less disposition to go on, and with this falling off in the demand prices were hardly maintained, while the business was confined to 4,500 bales.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 20,050 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 389,206 bales, against 210,399 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 150,650 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 16,599 bales to Great Britain, of 73,732 to France, and of 3,412 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Low	— to —
Ordinary	21¼ to 21½
Good ordinary	22½ to 22¾
Low middling	22¾ to 23
Middling	— to 23½
Strict middling	— to 24

SUGAR.—The supplies have been more liberal since our last review, and without a correspondling increase in the demand prices have fallen ¼ to ½c. per pound. There were sales on Saturday and Monday of 2,000 hogsheads, at 7¾ to 8c¼. per pound for inferior, 9 to 9½c. for common, 9¾ to 11c. for fair, 11¼ to 11¾c. for fully fair, 12 to 12¼c. for prime, 12½ to 12¾c. for choice, 9½ to 11½c. for seconds, 13 to 13¼c. for yellow clarified, and 14 to 14¼c. for white. On Tuesday the demand became active, and prices were decidedly fuller, though without any quotable advance. About 1,200 hogsheads, all the supplies, sold at the foregoing prices.

MOLASSES.—With more liberal receipts, somewhat exceeding the demand, prices have declined about 3c. per gallon since our last review. The sales on Saturday and Monday embraced 4,500 barrels, at 45 to 47½c. per gallon for inferior, 50 to 55c. for common, 58 to 60c. for prime, 62c. for strictly prime to choice, and 62 to 64c. for choice.

SYNOPSIS OF CHARTER.

The plan proposed by the Mutual Aid and Benevolent Life Insurance Association is as follows:

1. Each person, upon enrolling himself or herself as a member, shall pay into the Treasury a membership fee, if between the ages of

10 to 30, inclusive, the sum of $10 00
31 to 40, inclusive, the sum of 15 00
41 to 50, inclusive, the sum of 20 00
51 to 60, inclusive, the sum of 25 00

which payment constitutes him or her a life member.

2. A Life Insurance Policy is issued for a sum equal to one dollar for each enrolled member appearing on the books of the Association, at the decease of said member.

But in no event shall the amount paid on said policy exceed $5,000.

3. On the death of any member an assessment is made upon each policy holder for one dollar and twenty-five cents, payable at the office of the Association, within thirty days after notification thereof, by publication in one daily newspaper published in the city of New Orleans, in English and one in French, for five consecutive days, and if the policy holder resides out of New Orleans he shall be notified in writing.

4. Should the number of members exceed five thousand, the assessment of $1 25 will be reduced in proportion to the number of members exceeding five thousand.

5. Should any member fail to pay the assessment in the time specified, he forfeits all previous payments or credits.

6. All accommodations from whatever source, such as forfeitures, interest, etc., shall be credited upon the books of the Association to the members pro rata, to be withdrawn in lieu of assessments. oct17 1y

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, AT Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

ELEVENTH SESSION.—TERMS REDUCED.

The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first-rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar, etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.

SPECIAL CAUTIONS.

Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health.

A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket-money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.

It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

TERMS—Board and Tuition per session, $300.

PAYMENTS—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.

Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

FRANKLIN SEMINARY.

THE subscriber would inform his friends and the public that he has in charge FRANKLIN SEMINARY, and has a good school, which is designed to be permanent, in successful operation, and that he is prepared to receive any number of pupils that may be entered to his care. He would board, in his own family, some eight or ten pupils.

His experience enables him to assure patrons and friends that the education of their children and wards will be secured by confiding them to his institution.

The following are his terms of tuition, payable in advance, per session of five months:

Elementary Branches	$20 00
Higher Branches	25 00
Latin, Greek, etc.	30 00

French, extra.

Board can be had, in good families, for $15 per month, exclusive of lights and washing. Present session ends on the 7th of February, and the next ends on the 10th of July. No vacation until July. Pupils can be entered at any time. For further particulars apply to

EMORY AND HENRY COLLEGE, VIRGINIA.

On the 14th of January, 1869, the Spring session of this Institution begins. One Hundred and Fifteen Dollars will pay the expenses of Tuition, Board, Room rent, Fuel, Contingent fee and Washing, for a session of five months. We have accommodations for more than one hundred and seventy-one students already matriculated, and hope for a large increase the ensuing session.

The chair of English Literature and Modern Languages, now vacant, will be filled by the Joint Board at their annual meeting in June next. Applications can be made through the undersigned to the Board.
